LORD TWEEDMOUTH: Last year it was £2,017,000. I should like to have, if possible, some further explanation with regard to this Home Army, as to which, in principle, most of us are agreed. There is a general consensus of opinion that this country must have an Army for foreign service whose conditions of service will be somewhat different from those of the Army which is to serve at home. But is it held, as has been put forward by many Army reformers, that the Militia would form the very best nucleus that could be used for a form of short-service Army, primarily for service at home, but which might be called upon in time of war? There is a great deal to be said for such a proposal—that it is possible so to revivify the Militia, so to improve its conditions of service, and to give it such attention and care, that it would form the nucleus of your Home Service Army, and in that way expand into a very useful part of His Majesty's troops. Everybody agrees that the Militia cannot remain in its present condition; nobody holds the opinion more strongly than distinguished Militia officers. But I would add to the War Office a second agent of mischief to the Militia, and that is the Regular Army itself. You have sacrificed the Militia to the Regular Army and you go on sacrificing it. When you get your Militia recruits what do you do with them? You send them to the depots of the regiments, where they are drilled by sergeants whose first duty it is to endeavour to get the recruit to leave the Militia and enter the Regular Army. That is not the way to obtain a strong branch of the service. The Under-Secretary of State seemed to be afraid that the noble Duke was going to set up a sort of competition between the Regular Army and the Militia in the matter of recruiting. If you are going to recruit men for two different services under different conditions there must be a certain competition. But, my Lords, I think that it will be a wholesome competition. The man who is willing to serve for a limited time, and under limited conditions of service, will not really be a competitor with the man who is willing to serve abroad, to serve for a longer period, and to serve under more stringent and rigid conditions. But if you are to have your Army divided into two parts subject to different conditions of service, you must have a certain competition between the recruiting for the two branches. I can only say—and I am sure my noble friends beside me will agree with me—that we should be ready to consider fully the proposals His Majesty's Government may have to make on the subject of the future of the Militia. At this moment we do not consider that we are in a position to give a final opinion on what has been proposed to-night, but the Government may be sure that, so far as is possible, it will be our endeavour to make our view favourable to a proposal that is likely to be of advantage to the country.

Lord BURGHCLERE: My Lords, I do not wish to make a speech; I merely want to supplement my noble friend's remarks by asking a question. My noble friend said that he did not know exactly what the position of the Militia was to be in the future. I have no doubt that when the Under-Secretary of State brings in the Bill he has promised we shall be able to understand more clearly what the position of the Militia is to be. My question deals with a portion of the Under-Secretary's promises which, to my mind, is most important, namely, with regard to the future service of the Militia abroad. If any Member of the Government is to reply to my noble friend, will he tell us whether the service of the Militia abroad is to be at all times, or only in the case of a great war. That is a very important distinction which must be in the mind of the noble Earl opposite, and I shall be very glad if he will tell us the exact position in that respect.

The FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY (The Earl of SELBORNE): My Lords, I do not intend to make a speech, because I do not think that this is the occasion on which we can discuss the proposal at length. But there is no difficulty in answering the question of the noble Lord opposite. When the Bill is printed it will be seen that the Militia are liable to be sent abroad only when they are embodied. That does not cover the ordinary annual training. It covers occasions such as the late South African War, the Crimean War, and all past wars in which the services of the Militia have been called upon.

SERVICE OF MILITIAMEN BILL [H.L.].

A Bill to amend the law relating to the area of service of the Regular Militia when embodied. Was presented by the Viscount Hutchinson (E. Donoughmore); read 1ª; and to be printed. (No. 13.)

House adjourned at five minutes past Six o'clock, to Thursday next, half-past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, 21st February, 1905.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

LIVERPOOL CORPORATION BILL.

Petition for additional Provision; referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT PROVISIONAL ORDERS (No. 1) BILL.

"To confirm certain Provisional Orders of the Local Government Board relating to Ashton-in-Makerfield, Burslem, Newbury, Southport, and Ulverston," presented by Mr. Grant Lawson; supported by Mr. Walter Long; read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, and to be printed. [Bill 48.]

PETITIONS.

AGRICULTURAL RATES, CONGESTED DISTRICTS, AND BURGH LAND TAX RELIEF (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1896.

Petitions for continuance; from Forres; and Morayshire; to lie upon the Table.

JUVENILE SMOKING.

Eight Petitions from Edinburgh, for legislation; to lie upon the Table.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS (SUNDAY) BILL.

Petitition from Melksham, in favour; to lie upon the Table.

VOLUNTARY SCHOOLS ACT, 1897.

Petition from Brighton, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION (IRELAND) (OFFICIALS).

Return [presented 14th February] to be printed. [No. 48.]

PRISONS (ENGLAND AND WALES).

Paper [presented 20th February] to be printed. [No. 49.]

COMMITTALS (IRELAND).

Copy presented, of Returns from the Clerks of the Crown and Peace of the number of persons committed for trial in 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

PARLIAMENTARY CONSTITUENCIES (ELECTORS, ETC.) (UNITED KINGDOM).

Return presented, relative thereto [Address 15th February; Sir Charles Dilke]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 50.]

POLLING DISTRICTS (COUNTY OF SOUTHAMPTON).

Copy presented, of Order made by the County Council of the County of Southampton altering Sarisbury Polling District in the Fareham Parliamentary Division [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

PRISONS (ENGLAND AND WALES).

Copy presented, of Draft Rules proposed to be made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department under the Prisons Acts, 1877 and 1898, with respect to the constitution of the Visiting Committee of Borstal Prison [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

FACTORY AND WORKSHOP ACTS (SPECIAL EXCEPTION—NIGHTWORK).

Copy presented, of Order, dated 18th February, 1905, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department in pursuance of Section 54 (4) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, extending the special exception in that section to male young persons of the age of sixteen years and upwards employed in the process of continuous wire drawing carried on in non-textile factories [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

NAVY ESTIMATES, 1905-6.

Estimates presented, for the year 1905-6, with Explanation of Differences [by Command]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 51.]

NAVY (STATEMENT EXPLANATORY OF ESTIMATES).

Copy presented, of Statement of the First Lord of the Admiralty explanatory of the Navy Estimates, 1905-6 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

WAGES AND EFFECTS OF DECEASED SEAMEN.

Account presented, of the Sums received and paid in respect of the Wages and Effects of Deceased Seamen in the year ended 31st March, 1904 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

SEAMEN'S SAVINGS BANKS (MONEY ORDERS AND TRANSMISSION OF WAGES).

Accounts presented, of all Deposits received and repaid during the year ended 20th November, 1903, and Statement as to Money Orders issued and paid from 1855 to 31st March, 1904, and of Receipts and Payments in connection with the Transmission of Seamen's Wages from 1878 to 31st March, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 52.]

RAMSGATE HARBOUR.

Copy presented, of Statement of the Receipts and Payments for the year ended 31st March, 1904, together with an Account of the Receipt and Issue of Stores [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 53.]

RAILWAYS (CERTIFICATES) (CORRINGHAM LIGHT RAILWAY COMPANY).

Copy presented, of Draft Certificate of the Board of Trade authorising the Corringham Light Railway Company to raise additional Capital [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

TREATY SERIES (No. 4, 1905).

Copy presented, of Convention between the United Kingdom and Mexico respecting Postal Rates upon Letters passing between New Zealand and Mexico. Signed at Mexico, 1st February, 1904. Ratifications exchanged at Mexico, 12th January, 1905 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

PUBLIC REVENUE (INTERCEPTION).

Return ordered, "of the amounts of all Public Revenue derived from Taxes levied by Parliament, and from any other sources, which are not paid into His Majesty's Exchequer, for the years 1873–4, 1883–4, 1893–4, and 1903–4, respectively, with the totals in each case."—(Mr. Gibson Bowles.)

NATIONAL DEBT.

Return ordered, "showing the amounts of (1) the Funded Debt; (2) the Unfunded Debt; (3) the estimated capital value of Terminable Annuities on the 31st day of March, 1874, 1884, 1894, and 1904 respectively, with the totals for each year; (4) the estimated liability in respect of sums borrowed under the head of other capital liabilities; (5) the total amount on the same dates respectively, of the Contingent or Nominal Liabilities of the State; and (6) the total amount outstanding on the same dates respectively in respect of Loans guaranteed by the British Government."—(Mr. Gibson Bowles.)

LOCAL AUTHORITIES (LIABILITIES).

Address for "Return showing the total amount of the outstanding Balances of the Loans of Local Authorities in England and Wales, Scotland, and Ireland, respectively, at the close of the financial years 1873–4, 1883–4, 1893–4, and 1903–4, with the totals for the three countries on those dates."—(Mr. Gibson Bowles.)

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Return ordered, "showing for the Army, Navy, Civil Service, and Revenue Departments, respectively, the total amount of Supplementary Estimates for the years 1873–4, 1883–4, 1893–4, and 1903–4, respectively, with the totals for each year."—(Mr. Gibson Bowles.)

JURORS' EXPENSES (IRELAND) BILL.

"To provide for the Payment of Expenses to Jurors in assize and county courts in Ireland"; presented by Mr. O'Dowd; supported by Mr. McHugh, Mr. Conor O'Kelly, Mr. William McKillop, and Mr. Cullinan; to be read a second time upon Friday, 7th April, and to be printed. [Bill 49.]

ACCESS TO MOUNTAINS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

"To secure to the public the right of access to Mountains and Moorlands in Scotland"; presented by Mr. Bryce: supported by Dr. Farquharson, Mr. Thomas Shaw, Mr. Black, Colonel Denny, Mr. John Sinclair, and Mr. John Dewar; to be read a second time upon Friday, 31st March, and to be printed. [Bill 50.]

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

Meritorious Service Rewards for Petty Officers in the Royal Navy.

MR. REGINALD LUCAS (Portsmouth): To ask the Secretary to the Admiralty whether any provision exists for bestowing rewards for meritorious service upon petty officers in the Royal Navy, corresponding to those granted to non-commissioned officers in the Army and Marines; and, if not, whether he can hold out any hope of considering the matter.

(Answered by Mr. Pretyman.) There is no such provision made for petty officers in the Royal Navy. This is one of many differences between the conditions of service and privileges in the Army and the Navy, and it is not proposed to make any change.

Preferential Rates for Foreign Produce.

MR. FIELD (Dublin, St. Patrick): To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will cause inquiries to be made, and issue a report upon the subject of preferential rates granted to foreign importers by the carrying corporations.

(Answered by Mr. Gerald Balfour.) I assume the hon. Member's Question relates to rates charged on railways, and I would refer him to the reply to a similar Question on 11th February, 1904.† The hon. Member is no doubt aware that the alleged preferential treatment accorded to imported agricultural produce is engaging the attention of a Departmental Committee appointed by the Board of Agriculture.

---

† See (4) Debates, cxxix., 1028.

Live Stock Transit.

MR. FIELD: To ask the hon. Member for North Huntingdonshire, as representing the Board of Agriculture, whether he is aware that a patent humane cattle car has not been allowed by the railway companies of Great Britain to be used; and. if so, whether he will take steps to secure that the great carrying corporations shall not be permitted, against the public interest and the improved carriage of live stock, to prevent a trial of a more humane method of live stock transit.

(Answered by Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes.) We were not aware that the railway companies in Great Britain had refused to allow the cattle car referred to in the Question to be used on their lines. It is, I presume, the car patented by Mr. John Rooth in 1894 and 1895, and now the property of the Humane Cattle Car and Shipping Fittings Company, Limited. The matter is not one in regard to which we have any power to intervene, but I may refer the hon. Member to the provisions of Section 117 of The Railway Clauses Act, 1845, which prohibits the use of carriages on a railway which are not constructed according to the company's regulations.

MR. FIELD: To ask the hon. Member for North Huntingdonshire, as representing the Board of Agriculture, whether he can state what measures the President of the Board of Agriculture has taken, or if he intends to make recommendations, to ensure the more speedy, safe, and humane transit of live stock on land and cross-channel journeys; whether he will take into consideration the need of insisting on a minimum rate of speed on railways, and improved cattle trucks, also better accommodation and ventilation on ships.

(Answered by Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes.) The carriage of live stock in Great Britain and coastwise is regulated by The Animals (Transit and General) Order, 1895, supplemented by an Amendment Order passed last year. These Orders, copies of which I shall be glad to supply to the hon. Member, have for their object the safeguarding of cattle from all unnecessary hardship during transit by land or sea, and contain amongst their requirements special provisions dealing with the construction of vessels and cattle trucks. A further amendment of the Order is not contemplated at the present time, but we are always very ready to inquire into any specific complaints of delay or injury which may be brought to our notice.

Expenditure on Military and Naval Works in the West Indies.

MR. BUCHANAN (Perthshire, E.): To ask the Secretary to the Treasury what has been the expenditure for each year since 1895 on military and naval works and barracks from Votes on Supply, under the Naval or Military Works Act, Barracks Act, or other sources, in each of the following Colonies: Halifax, Bermuda, Jamaica, St. Lucia, and other West Indian Colonies.

(Answered by Mr. Victor Cavendish.) The actual expenditure on military and naval works for the period 1895 to 1904 is as follows:—

Military Works.

Year.	Halifax.	Bermuda.	Jamaica.	St. Lucia and Barbadoes.
	£	£	£	£
1895–1896	13,000	14,200	10,300	19,100
1896–1897	17,100	16,600	11,400	12,200
1897–1898	14,900	19,200	14,200	22,500
1898–1899	26,300	30,500	34,500	53,500
1899–1900	44,900	45,300	14,600	64,600
1900–1901	24,500	55,300	35,200	59,700
1901–1902	54,400	80,900	22,100	81,200
1902–1903	44,000	46,000	21,200	95,300
1903–1904	42,500	47,900	29,500	62,000

Naval Works.

Year.	Bermuda.	Halifax.	Jamaica.	St. Lucia.	Antigua.
	£	£	£	£	£
1895–1896 . . .	11,968	10,922	6,364	—	50
1896–1897 . . .	15,253	7,333	6,792	4,380	50
1897–1898 . . .	21,339	8,067	9,645	45	57
1898–1899 . . .	24,914	8,033	8,326	27	79
1899–1900 . . .	32,099	8,282	4,933	343	40
1900–1901 . . .	104,938	10,467	6,574	465	—
1901–1902 . . .	175,307	9,110	7,847	118	—
1902–1903 . . .	135,597	9,591	6,710	1,330	—
1903–1904 . . .	88,826	9,745	10,538	1	—

The Licensing Act.

MR. CORBETT (Glasgow, Tradeston): To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he can state when the charges which are leviable under Clause 3 of the Licensing Act, 1904, and which, if imposed in the present year, are due to be paid by licensees on 10th October, will, in fact, be received by the various compensation authorities; and when the rules to be made by the Treasury under Clause 3 (2) will be published.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Akers Douglas.) I am informed by the Board of Inland Revenue, as regards the first part of this Question, that it is their intention to pay over to the compensation authorities the bulk of the moneys levied under Section 3 (2) of the Licensing Act, 1904, in the month of November in each year, and the remainder as soon as possible afterwards. It will be remembered that these charges are payable at the same time as the Excise licence duties, i.e., on 10th October. As regards the second part of the Question, the Treasury inform me that the rules to be made by them under the enactment quoted will be issued shortly.

Publication of Abstract of the Mowat Committee Report.

MR. BUCHANAN: To ask the Financial Secretary to the War Office when the Abstract of the Mowat Committee Report, as promised on 29th June, 1904, will be issued.

(Answered by Mr. Bromley-Davenport.) This document was circulated as a Command Paper (Cd. 1903) on 30th July, 1904.

Railway Construction in Cutch.

SIR JOHN LENG (Dundee): To ask the Secretary of State for India whether he is aware that representations have been made by the Cutchi inhabitants of Bombay, the Karachi Chamber of Commerce, and the Municipality of Hyderabad in favour of linking up, by a broad-gauge railway line, the province of Sind with the Bombay Presidency; and that the Rao of Cutch has visited the Governor at Bombay and intimated his intention to visit the Governor-General at Calcutta for the purpose of preventing this line passing through Cutch; and, if so, will an opportunity be given to the memorialists in its favour to reply to the Rao's objections.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Brodrick.) I am aware of the first of the three classes of representations referred to by the hon. Member. The Government of India will no doubt give due consideration to any substantial objections to the line that may be urged by the Rao of Cutch; but, as I stated in reply to a Question on the same subject on the 25th April[†] last year, I see no reason at present for doubting that the connection between Bombay and Sind will be carried out when funds are available. In their programme of railway construction for the year 1905–6 the Government of India have included an allotment of six lakhs for a line from Viramgam to Malia, which forms part of a projected connection with Sind through Cutch.

[†] See (4) Debates, cxxxiii., 1036.

Grievances of Sea Post-Office Employees on the Aden-Bombay Service.

MR. SAMUEL SMITH (Flintshire): To ask the Secretary of State for India whether he is aware that in 1890 the number of mail bags between Aden and Bombay was under 600, and that in 1904 it was nearly 1,800; that the reduction of time occupied in the passage increases the number of hours of work; and that complaints have been received from the employees of the sea post-office as to the work, the pay and promotion, and the unhealthy conditions on board the mail ships; if so, whether, seeing that since 1890 nearly 100 of these employees have left the service, he will make inquiry as to the reasonableness of the amount and conditions of the work.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Brodrick.) A similar Question was asked by Sir W. Wedderburn in 1899, and a Report was obtained from the Government of India, who considered that there was no reason to suppose that the work imposed on the sorters was excessive since, although the pressure for short periods is necessarily severe, the sorters have for the greater part of their time little or nothing to do. I will ask for a further report on the subject.

Newman Estate, County Cork.

MR. FLYNN (Cork, N.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is in possession of any information respecting the proposed sale of the Newman Estate, Dromore, Mallow, county Cork, showing that the Estates Commissioners are prepared to sanction the advance to the vendor notwithstanding his desire to exclude from the transaction a tenant named Timothy O'Callaghan, who holds under a judicial term and who is prepared to purchase on similar terms to the other tenants; and, if so, whether the Estates Commissioners will delay completion of the sale until this judicial tenant is included in the transaction.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) Mr. Newman has expressed his intention of resuming possession of this holding on the expiration of the statutory term, under Section 21 of the Act of 1881. He has also undertaken, in case he fails in his application for resumption, to sell to Callaghan on the same terms as to the other tenants. Under these circumstances the Commissioners have not required the owner to include the holding in the estate.

Irish Lights Board.

MR. FIELD: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the Clyde Shipping Company's Steamer "Garmoyle" went aground at Ballyquinton Point, county Down, some months since, and that a lighthouse erected by the Irish Lights Board many years ago has never been lighted, although standing within a mile of the place of the "Garmoyle's" stranding; and, if so, whether, in view of the dissatisfaction existing respecting the administration of the Irish Lights Board and the non-representative character of its composition, he will introduce a Bill to reform and reconstitute it.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) As I have stated on previous occasions, the Commissioners of Irish Lights do not consider the lighting of Rock Angus advisable unless made in conjunction with an extensive system of lights to guide vessels up Strangford Lough to the anchorages of Audley and Cross Roads. Such a system of lighting would be solely for the benefit of local trade, and the Commissioners are of opinion that it should not be carried into effect at the expense of the general lighthouse fund. As to the "Garmoyle," I am informed that the Court of inquiry which investigated the casualty found that the stranding of the vessel was caused by the courses steered from the Codling Light Vessel for the South Rock Light Vessel not being made good, and by failure to use the lead. I have no evidence before me to show that a light on Rock Angus would have saved the vessel. I do not propose to introduce a Bill dealing with the Irish Lights Board.

Staff of Irish Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction.

CAPTAIN DONELAN (Cork, E.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that dissatisfaction exists owing to the inequality of treatment of the staff of the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction, especially as regards the Catholic clerks in the Veterinary branch; and whether steps will be taken with a view to rectify the grievances complained of.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) Many Questions of similar import were answered by me last session. I can only repeat that there is not the slightest foundation for the suggestion that the position of the clerks referred to has in any way been prejudiced in consequence of their religious beliefs.

Ireland—Public Bodies Order, 1904.

CAPTAIN DONELAN: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that protests have been made by the Midleton, County Cork, Urban District Council, and many other urban district councils in Ireland, against the Public Bodies Order, 1904, as made by the Local Government Board for Ireland on 17th December, 1904, on the grounds that the Order proposes to unnecessarily increase the work of the urban councils and their officers, and that the said Board have in their Order exceeded their powers by prescribing duties for members and officials, prescribing the manner in which the general minutes are to be kept, requiring copies of such minutes to be sent to the Board, and in various other respects; and what steps it is proposed to take in the matter.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) I would refer to my replies to the Questions put to me on this subject on the 16th † and 20th ‡ instant.

Changes in Army Uniform.

MR. CHARLES HOBHOUSE (Bristol, E.): To ask the Secretary of State for War if he will state the changes made in the uniform of officers and men of the Regular Forces since April, 1902, and of the cost of each of such changes.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Arnold-Forster.) The Return is as follows:—

Return of all Changes (and their cost) in the Uniform of the Regular Forces since April, 1902.

Non-commissioned Officers and Men.

Subject.	Annual.
	Increased Cost.	Saving.
	£	£
Reversion to khaki drill at Colonial Stations -	4,000
Addition of roll collar for khaki drill frock - -	1,610
Shoulder cords instead of coloured shoulder straps for service dress jackets - - - - -	—	9,375
Adoption of plain shoulder straps with metal titles instead of embroidered designations on sleeve of service dress jackets - - - - -	—	6,200
Carried forward - -	5,610	15,575

---

† See page 322.
‡ See page 613.

Subject.	Annual.
	Increased Cost.	Saving.
	£	£
Brought forward—	5,610	15,575
Simplification of new pattern drab greatcoat - -	—	19,139
New pattern grey great coat and cape for Foot Guards - - - - - - - - -	744
New pattern flat topped forage cap and cover for all services - - - - - - -	4,271
Simplification of service dress jackets - -	—	2,803
Girdles for Royal Field Artillery - - - -	618
Chevrons and badges of rank not to be worn on left arm of full dress - - - - - -	—	6,000
New pattern badges for best shots, etc. - - -	340
New pattern badges Royal Artillery headdress -	200
Chin straps for new pattern caps, mounted men -	219
Black buttons for Rifle Brigade for wear on service dress - - - - - - - -	68
Regimental buttons for Foot Guards, service dress -	80
Cap with removable bands, Foot Guards - -	—	189
New titles for Rifles, service dress - - - -	20
Drab spats for Highlanders - - - - -	21
Rubber soled shoes for Royal Army Medical Corps	190
Change of facings, Cheshire, Dorset, and Hants Regiments - - - - - - -	36
Clothing for Motor Car Drivers - - - -	40
Caps for Mechanical Transport Drivers - - -	38
Buttons for tunic skirts of Foot Guards - - -	103
New pattern full dress frock abroad - - -	60
Kilmarnock bonnet for Royal Scots and Scottish Borderers - - - - - - -	358
Wolseley helmets - - - - - - -	88
Alterations to tunics, Army Service Corps - -	185
Blue clothing instead of drill or s.d. clothing for sub-miners - - - - - - -	—	458
Duck clothing for proof party, and cord pants, and puttees for range sergeants, Woolwich - -	25
Plumes for Inniskilling Fusiliers - - - -	10
Surgical slippers for use in hospitals - - -	5
Plumes for Royal Welsh Fusiliers - - - -	9
Artillery Clerks clothed as Royal Garrison Artillery	69
Badge for new pattern forage cap, Royal Engineers	16
Crown and wreath Badge for Army Pay Corps -	2
Plumes for Royal Scots Fusiliers - - - -	9
Girdles for Royal Artillery Mounted Band - -	2
New pattern badges for 12th Lancers - - -	3
Change of facings, Durham Light Infantry - -	9
Alteration of Badges for Notts and Derby Regiment consequent on change of title - - - -	40
Carried forward - -	13,488	44,164

Subject.	Annual.
	Increased Cost.	Saving.
	£	£
Brought forward—	13,488	44,164
Blue tartan suits for clerks in lieu of service dress	67
Pea jackets for drivers mechanical transport	23
Plumes for Royal Munster Fusiliers	9
Improved pattern of Highland sporrans and making them public clothing	—	543
New pattern oiled dress jackets, Submarine Miners	8
Silver granades instead of gold, Band Foot Guards	—	5
Helmets, West India Regiment in lieu of s.d. hats	—	265
New pattern caps, Staff and Band Foot Guards	—	92
Alteration to service dress jackets for kilted regiments	108
Total	13,703	45,069

Officers.

Subject.	Annual.		Remarks.
	Increased Cost.	Saving.
*Adoption of the Atholl grey great coat by Foot Guards.
Adoption of the Atholl grey great coat by Field Marshals, General Officers, and Staff Officers not on the Cadre of a unit.	—	—	No expense, as old pattern coats may be worn out.
*Adoption of white drill jacket by Officers of Highland Regiments.
Introduction of khaki Wolseley helmet in lieu of white helmet for wear in the Colonies.	—	—	No expense, as old helmets may be worn out.
*Alterations of badges of rank on sleeves of service dress jackets.

* Cost cannot be computed as it varies according to the tailors employed.

Revenue and Expenditure of Transvaal and Inter-Colonial Council.

MR. SYDNEY BUXTON (Tower Hamlets, Poplar): To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies what are the latest figures in regard to the revenue and expenditure of the Transvaal and of the Inter-Colonial Council respectively.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) The information desired will be found, as regards the Inter-Colonial Council, in reply to a similar Question answered yesterday.† Corrected figures since received give the revenue and expenditure of the Transvaal up to 31st December as £1,860,400 and and £1,974,700 respectively.

Amount Paid for Purchase of South African Railways.

MR. BUCHANAN: To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies what has been the total amount paid for the purchase of the South African railways under the Loan Act of 1903.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) Up to 30th November, 1904, the amount paid was £12,804,759. No later figures are available.

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

Obsolete War Vessels.

MR. WHITLEY (Halifax): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Admiralty can he state the number of ships to be broken up under the naval reorganisation scheme, together with their first cost, and the amount subsequently spent on them in repairs.

*THE SECRETARY TO THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. PRETYMAN, Suffolk, Woodbridge): The hon. Member for Dundee is moving for a Return which substantially covers the information asked for, and which will be better given in that form than in answer to a Question, as the figures will take some time to prepare.

MR. WHITLEY: Will the hon. Member add to the Return the amount subsequently spent on these ships for repairs.

*MR. PRETYMAN: The Return of the hon. Member for Dundee does not ask for the total amount, but only for the sum spent on large substantial repairs, and it would entail great labour to get out the whole cost of repairs as some of the vessels are of great age.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): Will the hon. Member add to the Return a statement of the dates at which these ships were found to be non-effective.

*MR. PRETYMAN: The date would be the date when they were ordered to be placed on the sale list.

MR. BUCHANAN (Perthshire, E.): But without really increasing the labour could not the Return give the total amount spent on repairs? The ships are not of such very great age.

*MR. PRETYMAN: I will consider that.

MR. WHITLEY: If I can get the repairs for the last ten years I shall be satisfied. But the term "large substantial repairs" is too vague.

*MR. PRETYMAN: I will communicate with the hon. Member on the subject.

Military Convicts from the South African War.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN (Kilkenny): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War whether he can say how many military prisoners convicted of offences in connection with the late South African War are at present confined in Great Britain and Ireland respectively; whether he can state the names, the charges upon which they were convicted, the tribunals by which they were tried, and the sentences imposed in each case, of all such prisoners sent to prisons in Ireland; whether any such prisoner is now confined in Ireland; whether any such prisoners sent to Irish prisons since the South African War have been discharged; and whether he favours the release of any other such prisoner.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. ARNOLD-FORSTER, Belfast, W.): Of the military prisoners convicted of offences in connection with the war in South Africa thirteen are confined in Great Britain and one in Ireland. The latter was convicted by Court-martial of desertion and treason and was condemned to penal servitude for life. Seven prisoners who were convicted by Court-martial of offences in connection with the South African War and were awarded varying sentences of penal servitude, were confined in Ireland and have since been discharged. The reply to the last sentence of the Question is in the negative.

---

† See page 591.

Mr. PATRICK O'BRIEN: Why keep one man in gaol while six or seven others convicted of the same offence have been discharged?

[No Answer was returned.]

Chinese Labour in South Africa.

Mr. BAYLEY (Derbyshire, Chesterfield): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies if he will state the number of Chinese indentured labourers employed at the South African gold mines, up to 31st January last, together with the numbers in hospital, and the death rate prevailing among them each month for the six months ending on that date; and also the death rate prevailing among the natives employed at the South African gold mines during the same period.

The SECRETARY of STATE for the COLONIES (Mr. Lyttelton, Warwick and Leamington): I am not able to give the numbers in hospital, but the numbers employed at the end of each month are as follows:—July, 1,388; August, 4,945; September, 9,020; October, 12,965; November, 17,469; December, 20,885. For the months for which I am able to give the comparative death rate per 1,000, the figures show a much smaller mortality among the Chinese than among the natives.

1904.	Natives.	Chinese.
August	37	14
September	40	25
October	51	22
November	56	28
December	53	27

Transvaal Commissioner of Mines.

Dr. MACNAMARA (Camberwell, N.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether a successor to Mr. Wybergh has been appointed as Commissioner of Mines in the Transvaal; and, if not, will he explain why.

Mr. LYTTELTON: No appointment has been made as yet, as I understand Lord Milner has experienced much difficulty in making a selection for this important appointment.

Labour Statistics for the Transvaal.

Dr. MACNAMARA: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he can say for the months of November and December, 1904, and for January, 1905, how many white men, Kaffirs, and Chinese coolies respectively were engaged in actual mining operations in the Transvaal.

Mr. LYTTELTON: The numbers are:—For November—Whites, 14,944; Coloured, 81,673; Chinese, 17,469. For December—Whites, 15,023; Coloured, 83,639; Chinese, 20,885. The official figures for January have not yet been received.

Proposed Changes in the Transvaal Government.

Mr. BUCHANAN: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies what is the form under which the proposed changes in the existing form of government in the Transvaal will be made, whether by Bill, by Order in Council, or otherwise; and whether, before final assent is given to these changes, he will undertake that there will be an opportunity for discussion in this House.

Mr. LYTTELTON: (1) It is proposed to advise His Majesty to issue Letters Patent defining the broad features of the constitution of the new Legislature, leaving details for further local discussion and investigation to be settled hereafter. (2) It would not be in accordance with precedent to submit the Letters Patent to Parliament before they are issued; but I propose to lay Papers in due course so soon as I am in a position to do so. (3) Questions as to opportunities of discussion in the House should of course be addressed to the Prime Minister.

Cancer in India.

Mr. WEIR (Ross and Cromarty): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether the Government of India are yet in a position to provide statistics in regard to the prevalence of cancer in the respective provinces.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA (Mr. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford): Medical officers in India are now required to record every case of cancer coming under their observation and to send a copy of the record to the Cancer Research Fund. The reports of the fund will show the prevalence of the disease in the different provinces, so far as this can be ascertained from the data thus collected.

Treatment of Egyptian Pilgrims at Suez.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he is aware that the Khedivial Mail Steamship Company, which posseses the monopoly of carrying Egyptian pilgrims, kept them waiting upwards of ten days at Suez without food or shelter before allowing them to embark; and will he consider the desirability of representing to the Government of Egypt the expediency of communicating with the steamship company on the subject, with a view to prevent a similar cause for complaint in future pilgrimages.

THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Earl PERCY, Kensington, S.); If the hon. Member will furnish me with full particulars inquiry will be made, but matters of this kind primarily concern the Egyptian authorities, and do not seem to call for the intervention of His Majesty's Government.

Income-Tax Collection.

MR. McCRAE (Edinburgh, E.): I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether complete uniformity has now been established in the collection of income-tax in England and Scotland; and whether ten days notices for the recovery of income-tax under penalty have been issued simultaneously in England and Scotland.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN, Worcestershire, E.): Complete uniformity as between England and Scotland is not possible, owing to divergences in certain respects between the systems of assessment and collection in the two parts of the Kingdom. But it may be said that, allowing for these, substantial uniformity now exists. The ten days notices have been issued simultaneously in England and Scotland.

MR. McCRAE: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that since this Question has been put on the Paper seven days notices have been issued in Scotland to the effect that if the taxes are not paid then action will be taken by warrant of the sheriff officer, and cannot be received after that time by the collector of taxes; and whether, that being so, he will issue similar instructions to the Inland Revenue authorities in Edinburgh as those issued to Somerset House?

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: I do not know what has taken place within the last few days, but the hon. Member will see that I ought to have notice of so long a Question. If he will give me reasonable notice I shall be prepared to answer.

MR. McCRAE: Will the right hon. Gentleman issue to the Edinburgh authorities instructions similar to those given to Somerset House?

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: That has been done.

Cost of the Somaliland Campaign.

MR. BAYLEY: I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Supplementary Estimates for the campaign in Somaliland will be presented to the House.

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: I understand that these will be presented towards the end of this week.

Income-Tax Exemption.

MR. HAYDEN (Roscommon, S.): I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer if, where an individual in response to a demand for income-tax submits through his solicitor a statement, the Commissioner of Inland Revenue is entitled to refuse to supply exemption forms; and if, in spite of the knowledge so conveyed as to the applicant's income, which is under the statutable amount, the Commissioner issues an order for distraint, he will state what action he will take in the matter if the papers in a case in which this has been done are laid before him.

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: If the hon. Member will send me full particulars of the case he has in mind I shall be glad to have inquiry made and to send him a reply. At present I must confess that I am unable to understand the Question as it stands on the Notice Paper.

Customs Boatmens' Grievances.

MAJOR EVANS GORDON (Tower Hamlets, Stepney): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether any decision has been arrived at in regard to the alleged grievances of the Customs boatmen which were brought to his notice last year, and as to which he promised that an inquiry would be made.

THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY (Mr. VICTOR CAVENDISH, Derbyshire, W.): I have made careful inquiries on this matter, but I am not yet in a position to make any statement.

Physical Deterioration—Children and Tobacco.

DR. MACNAMARA: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his attention has been called to the recommendation of the Physical Deterioration (1904) Committee to the effect that a Bill should be brought before Parliament at an early date having for its object the prohibition of the sale of tobacco and cigarettes to children below a certain age; and whether he is now in a position to say that this recommendation will be acted upon in the present session.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Mr. AKERS-DOUGLAS, Kent, St. Augustine's): I am aware of the recommendation in the Report of the Physical Deterioration Committee, and I have given the question very careful consideration; but I do not see my way to introduce any Bill on the subject during the present session. The public attention which has been called to the evils of juvenile smoking is likely, I think, to do good, by arousing parents to exercise more control over their children in this respect.

Physical Deterioration Committee's Report.

DR. MACNAMARA: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Board of Education whether he has considered the various recommendations of the Physical Deterioration (1904) Committee; and whether, if so, he is in a position now to say how far the Board finds it expedient and possible, without further legislation, to carry out those recommendations.

THE PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY TO THE BOARD OF EDUCATION (Sir WILLIAM ANSON, Oxford University): I have considered the recommendations referred to, some of which would need legislation to bring them into effect, while others might be carried out through the agency of local or central administration. But I think that the hon. Member will see how impossible it is for me to state in answer to a Question the view of the Board as to what is expedient or possible in respect of recommendations which are fifty-four in number, and which, in some cases, touch on topics of a highly controversial character.

Underfed School Children.

DR. MACNAMARA: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Board of Education whether he has considered the recommendation of the Physical Deterioration (1904) Committee to the effect that definite provision should be made by the local education authorities for dealing with the question of underfed children; and whether he is in a position to say whether proposals embodying that recommendation will be laid before Parliament in the present session of Parliament.

SIR WILLIAM ANSON: It is not intended to make any proposals for adding to the existing powers of local authorities in the matter referred to.

Electrification of Railways—Board of Trade Inspection.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the Board of Trade inspectors will take steps to satisfy themselves that when railways are electrified proper arrangements are made for the protection of the lives of the surface men and other employees.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. GERALD BALFOUR, Leeds, Central): The Answer is in the affirmative.

Penalties for Illegal Trawling.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord-Advocate if he will consider the expediency of introducing legislation at an early date such as will render the penalties for illegal trawling of a more deterrent nature than at present.

THE LORD-ADVOCATE (Mr. SCOTT DICKSON, Glasgow, Bridgton): I am in general sympathy with the object the hon. Member has in view, and would give consideration to any Bill he may prepare, but I cannot at present undertake to introduce a Bill on behalf of the Government.

MR. WEIR: If I introduce a Bill will the right hon. Gentleman give facilities for passing it?

MR. SCOTT DICKSON: I am afraid I cannot make any promise as to that.

MR. WEIR: Then I give notice I will ask the Prime Minister.

Orpen Estate, Cork.

MR. FLYNN (Cork, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been called to the action of the police in connection with recent arrests arising out of proceedings on the Orpen Estate, near Millstreet, county Cork, and to the fact that two young men, named Corcoran, were brought handcuffed into Millstreet, lodged in the local police barrack, and subjected to private magisterial inquiry at the barracks, from which every one was excluded, including the father of the accused; and, if so, whether the constabulary authorities sanctioned these proceedings in regard to untried prisoners.

THE CHIEF SECRETARY FOR IRELAND (Mr. WYNDHAM, Dover): Under Section 9, Sub-section 2, of the Petty Sessions Act, 1851, the presiding magistrate, in all cases of proceedings for indictable offences, is empowered to exclude the public if he considers that the ends of justice will thereby be best served. The charge against the accused in the present case was an indictable one, and the magistrate was of opinion that in the interests of justice the public should not be admitted. The police had reasonable grounds for apprehending an attempted rescue or violence, and they considered it necessary, in consequence, to take the precaution of handcuffing the prisoners.

MR FLYNN: What right had the authorities to march these untried prisoners through the streets handcuffed?

[The Answer was inaudible.]

Cork District Lunatic Asylum.

MR. FLYNN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he has received a copy of a resolution from the managing committee of the Cork District Lunatic Asylum calling attention to the state of law which enables insane patients belonging to other counties to be committed and remain chargeable to the local rates if they become insane when about to embark at Queenstown, and to the grievance of patients being deported from England and Scotland after several years of residence in these countries; and, if so, whether the Irish Government will take any steps, by legislation or otherwise, to remedy the alleged grievance.

MR. WYNDHAM: The resolution has been received. Legislation would be necessary to remedy the grievances referred to, but I am unable at present to give an undertaking to introduce such legislation.

MR. FLYNN: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that under the present system the Finance Committee of the Cork Asylum is losing £1,200 a year?

MR. WYNDHAM: I am not aware of that.

MR. FLAVIN (Kerry, N.): Is it not the fact that a large percentage of these insane people are a result of the South African War.

[No Answer was returned.]

Case of Daniel M'Goohan.

MR. WILLIAM McKILLOP (Sligo, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that a man named Daniel M'Goohan, of county Leitrim, who was convicted on the evidence of Sergeant Sheridan, was released by the Irish Government after serving close on two years imprisonment with hard labour in Sligo Prison, and that the only compensation given to M'Goohan was £100; and will he, in view of the recent decision in the case of Adolf Beck, who has received £5,000 compensation, reconsider the case of M'Goohan, with a view to adequately compensating him for false imprisonment.

MR. WYNDHAM: The case of Daniel M'Goohan was very fully discussed in this House two years ago. The reply to the second inquiry is in the negative.

Drummeel Bog Turbary.

MR. J. P. FARRELL (Longford, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that on signing his agreement to purchase his farm, James Archbold, of Soran, county Longford, was guaranteed a supply of turbary on the Drummeel Bog; whether there is any record of this guarantee on the original agreement form; and, if so, will the turbary be now ordered to be given him.

MR. WYNDHAM: I am informed by the Land Commission that the holding in question was vested in Archbold in the terms of the purchase agreement, which provided for the right of cutting turf on certain parts of the lands of Drummeel, county Longford.

Leitrim Magistracy—Mr. Youell's Appointment.

MR. P. A. McHUGH (Leitrim, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland on whose recommendation Mr. Brearton J. Youell, an ex-constable of the Royal Irish Constabulary, has been appointed a justice of the peace for the county of Leitrim; is he aware that in the district of Ballinamore, in which Mr. Youell resides and adjudicates, there are at present eight magistrates, of whom only one is a Catholic, although Catholics constitute at least nine-tenths of the population, and although several Catholic gentlemen in the district have been recommended for appointment to the Commission of the Peace.

MR. WYNDHAM: Mr. Youell was recommended for the Commission of the Peace by the Lieutenant of the county. For many years he held the position of clerk of petty sessions. Four of the justices in the district are Catholics.

Ecclesiastical Disorders Commission.

MR. AUSTIN TAYLOR (Liverpool, E. Toxteth): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he can state when the Royal Commission on Ecclesiastical Disorders will issue a Report.

THE PRIME MINISTER AND FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): In answer to my hon. friend, I have to say that I have communicated with the chairman of the Commission, and he hopes that the Report will be in the hands of the public before the end of the year. There will be no interim Report.

MR. AUSTIN TAYLOR: Will it be issued before the general election?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I neither know when the Report will be out nor when the general election will take place. It is therefore extremely difficult to give a specific Answer, and I am not in a position to give it.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE (KING'S SPEECH, MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the proceedings on the Address in answer to His Majesty's Speech shall, until concluded, have precedence of all other Orders of the Day and of Notices of Motions at all Sittings for which they are set down."—(Mr. A. J. Balfour.)

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis) asked a little consideration on this matter from the Prime Minister. He pointed out that the consequence of the Motion would be to deprive private Members of several days of their time, and he asked the First Lord to give an assurance that opportunity would be found for the discussion of such subjects as the financial arrangements of the country and the Sugar Convention, if the Amendments relating to them were not reached during the debate on the Address. He wanted an undertaking that the right hon. Gentleman would not closure the debate until these subjects had been debated; and he would point out——

MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! It is irregular to debate the closure beforehand.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES said that in his opinion there would be no opportunity for discussing these questions in the House except on the Address.

MR. SPEAKER: The hon. Member is not entitled to argue the question of the closure.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: Of course, Sir, I bow to your decision, but I do trust the right hon. Gentleman will exercise some discretion before bringing the debate to a conclusion, and I make this appeal to him.

THE PRIME MINISTER AND FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.) said he did not quarrel with the appeal of the hon. Member, but he must demur to the suggestion that the Government were taking private Members' time during the discussion of the Address. No doubt, in a formal sense, it was Government business; but the whole debate was a discussion by private Members of questions that interested private Members; and in every respect, from the private Members' point of view, it was a fuller and more convenient opportunity for discussing such matters than those which commonly presented themselves in the session. The Motion with regard to national expenditure would clearly be relevant to the Budget, and he sincerely hoped that, within proper limits, every question which hon. Members desired to discuss might be discussed before the termination of the Address.

Question put.

The House divided:—Ayes, 203; Noes, 145. (Division List No. 5.)

AYES.

Agg-Gardner, James Tynte
Agnew, Sir Andrew Noel
Allhusen, Augustus H. Eden
Allsopp, Hon. George
Anson, Sir William Reynell
Arkwright, John Stanhope
Arnold-Forster, Rt. Hn. H. O.
Arrol, Sir William
Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
Bagot, Capt. JoscelineFitzRoy
Bain, Colonel James Robert
Baird, John George Alexander
Balcarres, Lord
Balfour, Rt. Hon. A.J. (Manch'r
Balfour, RtHn Gerald W(Leeds
Barry, Sir Francis T.(Windsor)
Bartley, Sir George C. T.
Bhownaggree, Sir M. M.
Blundell, Colonel Henry
Bond, Edward
Boscawen, Arthur Griffith
Boulnois, Edmund
Bowles, T. Gibson (King'sLynn
Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John
Brymer, William Ernest
Bull, William James
Campbell, Rt. Hn.J.A.(Glasgow
Campbell, J.H.M. (DublinUniv.
Carlile, William Walter
Carson, Rt. Hn. Sir Edw. H.
Cavendish, R. F. (N. Lancs.)
Cavendish, V. C. W (Derbyshire
Cecil, Lord Hugh (Greenwich)
Chamberlain, Rt. Hn.J A.(Worc.
Chapman, Edward
Cochrane, Hon. Thos. H. A. E.
Cohen, Benjamin Louis
Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
Colomb, Rt. Hn. Sir John C. R.
Colston, Chas. Edw. H. Athole
Corbett, T. L. (Down, North)
Craig, Charles Curtis (Antrim, S
Cripps, Charles Alfred
Cross, Alexander (Glasgow)
Crossley, Rt. Hon. Sir Savile
Dalrymple, Sir Charles
Davenport, William Bromley
Davies, Sir Horatio D(Chatham
Denny, Colonel
Dickson, Charles Scott
Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers
Dyke, Rt. Hn. Sir WilliamHart
Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
Elliot, Hon. A. Ralph Douglas
Fardell, Sir T. George
Fergusson, Rt. Hn. Sir J(Manc'r
Finlay, SirR. B.(Inv'rn'ssB'ghs)
Fisher, William Hayes
Fison, Frederick William
FitzGerald, Sir Robert Penrose
Fitzroy, Hn. Edward Algernon
Flannery, Sir Fortescue
Flower, Sir Ernest
Forster, Henry William
Galloway, William Johnson
Gardner, Ernest
Garfit, William
Gordon, Hn. J. E.(Elgin & Nairn
Gordon, J. (Londonderry, S.)
Gordon, Maj Evans (TrH'mlets
Gore, Hon. S. F. Ormsby-
Gorst, Rt. Hon. Sir John Eldon
Goulding, Edward Alfred
Graham, Henry Robert
Gray, Ernest (West Ham)
Greene, Sir EW(B'ryS.Edm'nds
Greene, Henry D. (Shrewsbury)
Grenfell, William Henry
Hamilton, Mar. of (L'nd'nderry
Hardy, Laurence(Kent, Ashford
Hare, Thomas Leigh

Haslam, Sir Alfred S.
Haslett, Sir James Horner
Heath, Sir James(StaffordsNW
Heaton, John Henniker
Henderson, Sir A. (Stafford, W.
Hermon-Hodge, Sir Robert T.
Hoare, Sir Samuel
Hobhouse,Rt. HnH(Somers'tE
Hogg, Lindsay
Hope, J.F.(Sheffield,Brightside
Hornby, Sir William Henry
Horner, Frederick William
Houldsworth, Sir Wm. Henry
Houston, Robert Paterson
Howard, J. Midd.,Tottenham)
Hozier, Hn. James Henry Cecil
Hunt, Rowland
Jessel, Capt. Herbert Merton
Kennaway, Rt. Hn.SirJohn H.
Kenyon-Slaney, Rt. Hn.Col.W.
Kerr, John
Kimber, Sir Henry
Lambton, Hn. Frederick Wm.
Laurie, Lieut.-General
Law, Andrew Bonar (Glasgow)
Lawson, Hn.H.L.W. (Mile End
Lawson, John Grant Yorks.NR
Lee, ArthurH. (Hants.Fareham
Legge, Col. Hon. Heneage
Leveseon-Gower, FrederickN.S
Lockwood, Lieut.-Col. A. R.
Long, Col. CharlesW(Evesham
Long, Rt.Hn. Walter(Bristol, S.
Lonsdale, John Brownlee
Lowe, Francis William
Lowther, C. (Cumb., Eskdale)
Loyd, Archie Kirkman
Lucas, Col. Francis (Lowestoft)
Lucas, Reginald J (Portsmouth
Lyttelton, Rt. Hon. Alfred
Macdona, John Cumming
M‘Arthur, Charles (Liverpool)
M‘Calmont, Colonel James
M‘Iver, Sir Lewis (Edinburgh W
Majendie, James A. H.
Marks, Harry Hananel
Maxwell, RtHnSir H.E.(Wigt'n
Milvain, Thomas
Mitchell, Ed. (Fermanagh, N.)
Montagu, G. (Huntingdon)
Montagu, Hon. J. Scott (Hants
Moon, Edward Robert Pacy
Moore, William
Morpeth, Viscount
Morrell, George Herbert
Morton, Arthur H. Aylmer
Mount, William Arthur
Mowbray, Sir Robert Gray, C.
Murray, Charles J. (Coventry)
Nicholson, William Graham
Palmer, Sir Walter (Salisbury
Pease, Herbert Pike(Darlington
Peel, Hn. W. R. Wellesley
Percy, Earl
Pierpoint, Robert
Pilkington, Colonel Richard
Platt-Higgins, Frederick
Plummer, Sir Walter R.
Pretyman, Ernest George
Purvis, Robert
Pym, C. Guy
Randles, John S.
Ratcliff, R. F.
Reid, James (Greenock)
Renshaw, Sir Charles Bine
Ridley, S. Forde
Roberts, Samuel (Sheffield)
Robertson, Herbert (Hackney)
Rolleston, Sir John F. L.
Rollit, Sir Albert Kaye
Round, Rt. Hon. James
Royds, Clement Molyneux
Rutherford, John (Lancashire)
Samuel, Sir H. S. (Limehouse)
Sandys, Lieut.-Col. T. Myles
Scott, Sir S. (Marylebone, W.)
Seton-Karr, Sir Henry
Sharpe, William Edward T.
Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
Sloan, Thomas Henry
Smith, Abel H. (Hertford, East)
Smith, H.C(North'mb.Tyneside
Smith, RtHnJ Parker(Lanarks
Smith, Hn. W. F. D. (Strand)
Stanley, Hn. Arthur (Ormskirk
Stanley, Rt. Hon. Lord (Lancs.
Stewart, Sir Mark J. M‘Taggart
Stone, Sir Benjamin
Talbot, Lord E. (Chichester)
Taylor, Austin (East Toxteth)
Thornton, Percy M.
Tomlinson, Sir Wm. Edw. M.
Tuff, Charles
Tufnell, Lieut.-Col. Edward
Tuke, Sir John Batty
Turnour, Viscount
Valentia, Viscount
Vincent, Sir Edgar (Exeter)
Walrond, Rt. Hn. Sir William H
Wanklyn, James Leslie
Warde, Colonel C. E.
Welby, Lt-Col. A.C.E.(Taunton
Welby, Sir Charles G.E.(Notts.
Wharton, Rt. Hon. John Lloyd
Whitmore, Charles Algernon
Williams, Colonel R. (Dorset)
Wilson, John (Glasgow)
Wilson-Todd, Sir W.H.(Yorks.
Wodehouse, Rt.Hn.E.R. (Bath
Worsley-Taylor, Henry Wilson
Wortley, Rt. Hn. C. B. Stuart
Wyndham, Rt. Hon. George

TELLERS FOR THE AYES—Sir Alexander Acland-Hood and Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes.

NOES.

Abraham, William (Cork, N. E.
Asher, Alexander
Ashton, Thomas Gair
Barry, E. (Cork, S.)
Bayley, Thomas (Derbyshire)
Black, Alexander William
Blake, Edward
Brigg, John
Bright, Allan Heywood
Buchanan, Thomas Ryburn
Burke, E. Haviland
Buxton, Sydney Charles
Caldwell, James
Campbell, John (Armagh, S.)
Campbell-Bannerman, Sir H.
Channing, Francis Allston
Cheetham, John Frederick
Churchill, Winston Spencer
Clancy, John Joseph
Cogan, Denis J.
Condon, Thomas Joseph
Crean, Eugene
Crombie, John William
Cullinan, J.
Delany, William
Devlin, Chas. Ramsay(Galway
Devlin, Joseph (Kilkenny, N.)
Dewar, John A. (Inverness-sh.
Dilke, Rt. Hon, Sir Charles
Dillon, John
Dobbie, Joseph
Donelan, Captain A.
Doogan, P. C.
Douglas, Charles M. (Lanark)
Duffy, William J.
Ellice, CaptEC(SAndrw's B'ghs
Ellis, John Edward (Notts.)
Emmott, Alfred
Esmonde, Sir Thomas
Evans, SirFrancisH.(Maidstone
Farrell, James Patrick
Fenwick, Charles
Ferguson, R. C. Munro (Leith)
Ffrench, Peter
Field, William
Findlay, Alex. (Lanark, N.E.
Flavin, Michael Joseph
Flynn, James Christopher
Foster, Sir Walter (Derby Co.)
Fuller, J. M. F.
Goddard, Daniel Ford
Grant, Corrie
Griffith, Ellis J.
Hammond, John
Hardie, J. Keir(Merthyr Tydvil
Harrington, Timothy
Hayden, John Patrick
Healy, Timothy Michael
Hemphill, Rt. Hon. Charles H.
Higham, John Sharpe
Holland, Sir William Henry
Hope, John Deans (Fife, West)
Hutchinson, Dr. Charles Fredk
Johnson, John
Jones, William (Carnarvonshire
Jordan, Jeremiah
Joyce, Michael
Kearley, Hudson E.
Kennedy, P. J. (Westmeath, N.
Kennedy, VincentP.(Cavan, W.
Kilbride, Denis
Labouchere, Henry
Law, Hugh Alex. (Donegal, W.
Layland-Barratt, Francis
Leese, Sir JosephF.(Accrington
Levy, Maurice
Lough, Thomas
Lundon, W.

Lyell, Charles Henry
Macnamara, Dr. Thomas J.
MacNeill, John Gordon Swift
MacVeagh, Jeremiah
M'Crae, George
M'Fadden, Edward
M'Hugh, Patrick A.
M'Kean, John
M'Kenna, Reginald
M'Killop, W. (Sligo, North)
Mooney, John J.
Murnaghan, George
Murphy, John
Nannetti, Joseph P.
Nolan, Joseph (Louth, South)
Norton, Capt. Cecil William
O'Brien, James F. X. (Cork)
O'Brien, Kendal(TipperaryMid
O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
O'Brien, P. J. (Tipperary, N.)
O'Connor, John (Kildare, N.)
O'Connor, T. P. (Liverpool)
O'Donnell, John (Mayo, S.)
O'Dowd, John
O'Kelly, Conor (Mayo, N.)
O'Kelly, James (Roscommon,N
O'Mara, James
O'Shaughnessy, P. J.
O'Shee, James John
Parrott, William
Perks, Robert William
Pirie, Duncan V.
Power, Patrick Joseph
Rea, Russell
Reddy, M.
Redmond, John E. (Waterford
Reid, Sir R. Threshie (Dumfries
Robertson, Edmund (Dundee)
Rose, Charles Day
Runciman, Walter
Russell, T. W.
Samuel, Herbert L. (Cleveland
Shaw, Thomas (Hawick B.)
Sheehy, David
Shipman, Dr. John G.
Slack, John Bamford
Soames, Arthur Wellesley
Spencer, Rt. Hn. C. R(Northants
Strachey, Sir Edward
Sullivan, Donal
Taylor, Theodore C. (Radcliffe)
Thompson, Dr. EC(Monagh'n,N
Thomson, F. W. (York, W. R.)
Toulmin, George
Trevelyan, Charles Philips
Waldron, Laurence Ambrose
Warner, Thomas Courtenay T.
Weir, James Galloway
White, George (Norfolk)
White, Luke (York, E. R.)
White, Patrick (Meath, North)
Whitley, J. H. (Halifax)
Williams, Osmond (Merioneth)
Wills, Arthur Walters(N. Dorset
Wilson John (Durham, Mid.)
Woodhouse, Sir J T. (Huddersf'd
Young, Samuel

Tellers for the Noes—Mr. Charles Hobhouse and Mr. Soares.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [20th February] to Main Question [14th February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But humbly represent to Your Majesty that the present system of Government in Ireland is in opposition to the will of the Irish people, and gives them no voice in the management of their own affairs; that the system is consequently ineffective and extravagantly costly, does not enjoy the confidence of any section of the population, and is productive of universal discontent and unrest, and has proved to be incapable of satisfactorily promoting the material and intellectual progress of the people.'"—(Mr. John Redmond.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

Sir JAMES HASLETT (Belfast, N.) said that on the previous night, when his speech was interrupted by the rules of the House, he was drawing attention to the fact that though the Amendment stated that the government of Ireland had interfered with the material prosperity of the country, yet throughout the entire debate they had not heard a single word as to where or how that interference had taken place. In many districts of Ireland the Nationalists had had the practical management of local government; the administration of county affairs had fallen entirely into their hands and they had been omnipotent, yet it was not possible to point to a single industry they had improved and promoted the prosperity of. Their attention had been almost exclusively confined to farming and to the agitation connected with the land question Indissolubly connected with that was the question of emigration. But was the Government the cause of that emigration? Was it not due to the lack of employment and to the absence of industries in which the mass of the people could exercise their skill and brain power. It was the opportunity of earning a fairly reasonable wage that attracted the people to other countries. It should be borne in mind that at the time of the Union the population of Ireland stood at practically the same figure as it was to-day. After the Union it increased enormously, until by 1845–46 it had risen to nearly 9,000,000, and it was that increase which was responsible for the state of affairs that caused the emigration. A man who farmed twenty or thirty acres married and had sons for whose energy there was no outlet except in farming. Consequently the man divided his holding among them, thus lessening the chances of prosperity. Then came the famine which drove thousands of the people to seek a livelihood in other lands. In those lands they retained their Irish characteristics and their love for home, and he well remembered how, in his early business days, when he travelled the country, a very large portion of the money he collected consisted of American money orders. Surely, then, it could not be said that the Government were responsible for the people emigrating.

With regard to education he was bound to admit that in no department of the State was there a greater leakage, but, at the same time, there had been a strong and vigorous effort, largely moulded by the present Government, to promote technical instruction, to improve the handicrafts in the cities and towns, and to help the farming classes by awakening them to the commercial aspect of their undertaking. Now, the Amendment meant nothing more and nothing less than Home Rule for Ireland, and Home Rule entailed the complete separation for fiscal, domestic, and administrative purposes of Ireland from Great Britain. Geographically, Ireland would remain beside this country, but in all matters affecting her she would be absolutely separate from the sister kingdom. Were hon. Members prepared to vote for the Amendment, with the distinct knowledge that that would be its effect? Representing, as he was proud to do, the great city of Belfast, which had carved out its own course in life and built up its own industries, he offered the strongest possible opposition to the Amendment.

He must make a brief reference to one painful subject connected with the administration of the Chief Secretary and the action of the Under-Secretary. He was not prepared to join in the hounding down of that man, but he was bound to say in analysing the position that great mistakes had been made. In Sir Antony MacDonnell, the Chief Secretary had acquired the services of a very eminent man, but he seemed to have overlooked the fact that that eminence had been attained under totally different conditions to those which prevailed in Ireland. It was a mistake to give Sir Antony MacDonnell carte blanche. They could not have divided responsibility in connection with the Chief Secretaryship. But the mistakes which had been made dwindled into nothing compared with the importance of maintaining the Union. He accordingly opposed the Amendment and intended to give his support to the Government.

MR. DILLON (Mayo, E.) said the noble Lord the Member for Greenwich on the preceding night told them with child-like innocence that all the facts in relation to the latest crisis in Irish affairs were before the House, and they had only now to make up their minds to arrive at a decision. But he thought he would be able to show that the House was not yet in possession of all the facts necessary to enable it to form a judgment. The whole matter was still to a large extent mysterious. He thought the House ought to be told on what terms Sir Antony MacDonnell accepted the office of Under-Secretary, and they ought to see the letters in which those terms were registered. Again, it appeared strange, and indeed incredible, that, in two years of constant consultation on the matters specified by the Chief Secretary, the right hon. Gentleman should have failed to make it clear to Sir Antony MacDonnell that he was opposed to a partly-elected financial board. The essence of the programme of the Reform Association was a financial board partly elected. They were told that throughout the two years after Sir Antony MacDonnell came to Ireland there were frequent consultations between him and the Chief Secretary on the question of financial control, and that Sir Antony MacDonnell referred to Indian precedents. Was it conceivable that the Chief Secretary never thought of inquiring what was the constitution of the Indian bodies referred to? The thing was almost past human credulity. Could any one in the House believe it? And if any one did, what was to be said of a Minister, responsible for so difficult and delicate a task as the government of Ireland who enlisted the services of a man of Sir Antony MacDonnell's high eminence in the work of reorganising the government, and who did not take the trouble to ask on what precedents he was basing his action. He for one could not accept that explanation. The Chief Secretary professed to be so guilelessly innocent that he never knew the councils in India were semi-elective, and he never asked about it. Sancta Simplicitas! What a guileless Chief Secretary they had. Why, was not the only object of setting up a financial board in Ireland to emancipate the Irish Government from Treasury control? That was the object of the Chief Secretary's own scheme, and he therefore could not accept the explanation now offered by the right hon. Gentleman.

The Chief Secretary urged that he was away on a well-earned holiday when the first document of the Reform Association was published on August 31st, 1904. He did not grudge the right hon. Gentleman his holiday, but it was a curious coincidence that this scheme should be launched during his first holiday for a period of five years. Why did not the right hon. Gentleman, before going on his holiday, tell Sir Antony MacDonnell not to have anything to do with the matter until he returned, seeing that he knew that Sir Antony MacDonnell had been in close consultation with Lord Dunraven for months before, and had, in fact, received a letter from him on the subject—a letter the disappearance of which was most remarkable? One would certainly have supposed that the right hon. Gentleman would give orders that things should be maintained in statu quo until he returned. And, again, when he read the announcement in The Times, as he said, in an otiose manner, why did he not telegraph to Sir Antony MacDonnell and tell him to stay his hand until he returned? Why did the right hon. Gentleman feel called upon to take the very unusual course of writing a letter to The Times to dissociate himself from proposals put forward by private gentlemen?

Let him turn for a moment to the explanation given by Lord Dunraven of these transactions with the Chief Secretary. Lord Dunraven said—

"The publication of the first report on August 31st led to a great clamour, in Ireland at any rate, for fuller particulars. He wrote to Sir Antony MacDonnell and asked him to draft out the heads of a more elaborate scheme on the lines of that first report. Sir Antony MacDonnell very kindly did so, and sent them down to him in Kerry. Shortly afterwards Sir Antony MacDonnell paid him a visit, on his way to stay with the Marquess of Lansdowne, and spent two days with him. They had plenty of time for going very thoroughly into the matter, and they drafted out a report."

Lord Dunraven went on—

"He was curious to know whether any communication passed between the Chief Secretary and Sir Antony MacDonnell on the subject of the first report. He could only say that he received a letter from Sir Antony MacDonnell on September 25th. He must have written to Sir Antony MacDonnell about the dead set that was being made against him in Ireland, because Sir Antony MacDonnell wrote to the effect that a friend had told him that the strongest and most persistent effort was being made to force the Government to get him to resign his place."

Now, it should be remembered that that letter was written by Sir Antony MacDonnell between the first and second reports.

"And," he added, "I am bound to say that my relations with Mr. Wyndham are such that I attach very little importance or credence to these rumours."

Really they were left to the very painful alternative either to conclude that Sir Antony MacDonnell was not only disloyal and dishonourable, and was deceiving Lord Dunraven as well as his chief, or were forced to maintain that in all those matters the Chief Secretary, as well as Lord Dudley, was thoroughly informed of all that was going on, and that the Chief Secretary's action was for the purpose of allowing a balloon to be floated and of seeing where it would turn.

Now, this was rather a painful story; but there was another matter on which he was bound to press for an explanation. He had asked the question before, and repeated it now—Why was Sir Antony MacDonnell censured by the Government? Never the slightest reason had been given why Sir Antony MacDonnell's action should have been censured. He could not imagine a more cruel, insulting, and painful blow to a man who had given forty years of illustrious service to the Crown than that he should be made the subject of the answer given out from that box on the second day of the session. And until the debate which took place in another place completely turned the tide, he thought the feeling of Sir Antony MacDonnell must have been one of very great bitterness indeed. Why did the Government not take steps in time to prevent the publication of these proposals, or if they did not why should they censure him? The Chief Secretary was for ever speaking of the loyalty of Sir Antony MacDonnell in the whole of these transactions. "I did defend him," the right hon. Gentleman exclaimed, and "I do defend him." Well, all he could say was that Sir Antony MacDonnell might surely say, "Defend me from my friends!" In the whole course of his life he had never heard such a defence made of a public servant.

What had been the history of the last few months? For nearly a year a campaign of unparalleled bitterness had been organised against Sir Antony MacDonnell in Ireland. The whole of that campaign was in full swing in the Unionist Press, inspired and conducted by the Unionist Members of Parliament, and not one word of defence of Sir Antony MacDonnell had been uttered by the Chief Secretary against the attacks of the Ulster men. Not only so, the Government kept absolutely secret from the people of Ireland the conditions under which Sir Antony MacDonnell had occupied his office, and allowed him to remain the target for every form of abuse without saying one word in his defence. He acknowledged, and he thought it was to the credit of the House of Commons, the handsome way in which the hon. and learned Member for North Antrim, when he found out the truth of the case, had come forward and as a gentleman had apologised. That was no humiliation but an honour to the hon. and learned Member, as every gentleman ought to know. But what were they to say of the Government and Sir Antony MacDonnell's political chief, who could by one single word have rescued him and protected him from abuse, but never uttered that word? That was not all. When one of his colleagues in the Government whose mouth was open when the right hon. Gentleman was silent—when the Solicitor-General went down to the country, and with unparalleled audacity and cruelty attacked a colleague in the Civil Service, who from his peculiar position was unable to reply, he must have attacked Sir Antony MacDonnell in the knowledge of the real facts, as it was almost inconceivable that the Solicitor-General did not know the terms of Sir Antony's appointment. But until Parliament met and the Government were compelled to speak, not one member on the Bench opposite said a word in defence of Sir Antony MacDonnell. They, on the Irish Benches, had been assailed and condemned over and over again because they had attacked permanent Civil servants in Ireland who had acted cruelly and unjustly to the people of Ireland. Ministers had sprung up at that box and denounced them for it. Very different was it in the case of Sir Antony MacDonnell. When a colleague of their own, and their own supporters in Ireland, acting, as they must have known, under a totally false conception of the facts, attacked Sir Antony MacDonnell, whose mouth was closed, they were silent.

But he came to the most extraordinary point in the whole treatment of Sir Antony MacDonnell, and it was one which he hoped the House of Commons would insist on being completely cleared up. A Cabinet Council was held, at which the insulting and offensive answer given last week with reference to Sir Antony MacDonnell was agreed upon.

THE PRIME MINISTER AND FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): That is quite inaccurate. It never was dealt with in the Cabinet at all.

MR. DILLON: We were given to understand that it was. I think that is a splendid illustration of——

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: There is some confusion.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.): Where is the Chief Secretary?

MR. FLAVIN (Kerry, N.): Away on another holiday.

MR. DILLON: There is some confusion, and my desire is that the confusion should be cleared up, and that we should know what happened. There cannot be the slightest doubt, no hon. Member in any part of the House will controvert, that the impression conveyed to the House was that this censure was settled in the Cabinet.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I must be mistaken as to what the hon. Member said. I thought he said that the answer which the Chief Secretary gave on the second day of the session was discussed in the Cabinet. So far as my recollection goes that is not the fact. It is a fact that the censure upon the Under-Secretary which was referred to in that answer was discussed last autumn.

MR. DILLON: Here is the only part of the answer I am concerned with—

"The matter was considered by the Cabinet and the Government expressed, through me, their view that the action of Sir Antony MacDonnell was indefensible."

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: It may have been that I misheard the hon. Gentleman, but what I thought he said was that the answer given on the second day of the session was the answer which had been considered in the Cabinet. That is not so. What was considered, as is stated in the answer, was the censure passed by the Cabinet.

MR. DILLON said that that was rather a fine-drawn distinction, because if the answer were examined it would be found that the only part of it of any real interest was the expression of censure on Sir Antony MacDonnell, and that it was considered in the Cabinet. To return to his point. A Cabinet Council must have been held some time. When was it held? The Chief Secretary stated, when cross-examined on the point, that when the Cabinet passed that censure they were not aware that Lord Dudley was a party to this transaction. Was not that an amazing statement? Was the Chief Secretary aware that Lord Dudley was a party to it? If not, had he taken any means of ascertaining whether he was or not? Surely, if the Chief Secretary had any sense of loyalty to Sir Antony MacDonnell, or to any subordinate, the first question he would have asked before taking any steps, before he wrote to The Times or took any other step, much less bringing it before the Cabinet, would have been to inquire whether Sir Antony MacDonnell had had the assent and co-operation of Lord Dudley in all these transactions. Was Sir Antony MacDonnell asked for an explanation before the Cabinet censure? That was a pertinent question, and one which must be answered before the debate concluded. Was it conceivable that a Cabinet in this country would censure a great public officer without listening to his explanation; and was it conceivable that Sir Antony MacDonnell, when called upon for an explanation, would keep back the fact that he was acting under the authority and with the full knowledge and approval of the Chief Secretary and the Viceroy? How were the Government going to get out of that dilemma? Because—they were told that the Cabinet did not know—he could not for a moment admit the notion that the Cabinet proceeded to censure a great public servant, and insult him. It was not easy for any man who was a Member of that House to appreciate the agony suffered by a great public servant when he was censured by the Government of the country. The Irish Members cared little for censure, they could hit back when they were struck; but a great public officer who for forty years had served the Government loyally and whose whole life was bound up in the approval of his political superiors—to be censured in silence, to be brought face to face with the agony of having the whole record of his life wiped out by the Government, was a blow so cruel that it was hard for them to understand it. And it was inconceivable that any body of English gentlemen would inflict that blow without first hearing the man and asking for an explanation. He hoped that he had shown that the noble Lord opposite was a little previous when he said that the whole facts of the case were before the House. The facts were not before the House or the country, and this debate would not conclude the matter. When it was over it would not be Sir Antony MacDonnell who would be in the dock. There was something, after all, higher than the censure of the Cabinet, and that was the censure of public opinion, which those who were responsible would yet have to face.

There was another matter on which he desired information. It also had been treated evasively and mysteriously by the Chief Secretary. There was a mysterious dinner-party arranged in 1903 which never came off. What were the facts? According to the Chief Secretary, not in the year 1904, but in 1903, after the Land Act had been passed amidst general applause, at a time when Lord Dunraven received compliments which he had so well earned from all sections of public opinion, and at the time when the hon. Member for Cork City had converted an organ hostile to the Government into an organ for conciliation, it was then that Lord Dunraven came to him and discussed the chances and prospects of a Moderate Unionist Party in Ireland. Mark the introduction of the word "Unionist." There was a Unionist Party already. What was the idea of this new Party in Ireland. Was it to be composed of Unionists—that was the essence of the question—or was it to be composed of a section of Unionists and a section of Nationalists? They had one of the most innocent Chief Secretaries God ever created! Then the right hon. Gentleman went on to say that the subjects proposed to be discussed at that dinner-party were subjects on which all men in Ireland were agreed. That appeared to be a very lame explanation of that intended dinner-party. It was a matter which ought to be probed to the bottom. What was Lord Dunraven's description? He said that he had many long informal conversations with Mr. Wyndham and Sir Antony MacDonnell on all kinds of subjects and topics connected with Ireland. That was another peculiarity of Irish government. They had not only the Chief Secretary and the Under-Secretary, but also Mr. Wyndham and Sir Antony MacDonnell, who carried on operations which did not in the least commit the Chief Secretary. Lord Dunraven proceeds that, among other subjects, they had discussed the condition of what he might call moderate opinion in Ireland the possibility of, in any way, making that opinion articulate, and the possibility, in fact, of creating something like a Moderate Central Party. He thought it perfectly useless to start or to help to create a Moderate Party on a purely academic basis. He thought it absolutely essential to have a positive, constructive democratic policy—the policy which had been wrought out in their proposals for devolution. That was Lord Dunraven's description. It was a dinner to form a Moderate Party on a basis already discussed, and yet the Chief Secretary, in his extreme baptismal innocence, never heard anything of a new Unionist Party to discuss a subject on which everyone was agreed. Sir Antony MacDonnell's view was that the Chief Secretary saw no particular objection to a general scheme of administrative reform, proposed by perfectly independent and private individuals, being put forward for public criticism. That had reference to 1903, and yet they were told that the Chief Secretary knew nothing of devolution. Then in October, 1903, Sir Antony MacDonnell said—

> "I have been thinking over our conversation the other day."

He abandoned the idea of asking the gentlemen to meet him because, as he said—

> "The business would speedily become known, and it would be said that Lord Dunraven was forming a new Irish Party."

To that Sir Antony MacDonnell could not see any particular objection, but he went on to say—

> "If the first meeting were held in my house, or at my invitation, every one would say that Mr. Wyndham was a prime mover in the business."

He should like to know who were the gentlemen who were going to be invited to that dinner-party. Were they Nationalists or Nationalists and Unionists? In Lord Dunraven's statement there was not one single word about its being a Unionist Party. It was, on the contrary, a Moderate Central Party having for its basis the devolution proposals. Therefore, that dinner-party was indissolubly connected with all that took place afterwards. These questions were all exceedingly pertinent, and they ought all to be frankly answered if they were to form a really well-informed judgment of the present crisis in Ireland. Was the Chief Secretary aware of the advances and proposals that were being made to some of the Nationalists in the autumn of 1903? It would be a very interesting thing to know whether the right hon. Gentleman was aware of them. He was speaking only for himself, he was approached not at all on behalf of Sir Antony MacDonnell, but on behalf of the friends of Lord Dunraven with regard to this new policy, and he would say that for any man who had lived in Ireland to imagine that he was going to get out of this business by simply hiding his head in the sand was most absurd. There was no secrecy, it was known everywhere; it was the common talk in every room and in the streets. He said, therefore, that the evidence was overwhelming, that Sir Antony MacDonnell in all the negotiations he carried on, and the assistance he gave to Lord Dunraven, was acting with the full assent and under the supervision of Lord Dudley, and the evidence was overwhelming that he had the full approval of the Chief Secretary himself. He wished to read to the House a brief extract from the London Globe, which had made itself the semi-official organ in London of the anti-MacDonnell crusade. The correspondent of the Globe in Dublin, a very well informed gentleman, he had no doubt, said on Saturday last—

> "At an early date I propose to lay before the readers of the Globe some interesting details as to the manner in which the Chief Secretary set himself to bring about a settlement of the Irish question. For the moment I may say that it is useless for any Minister, short of buying a newspaper outright, to hope to influence its policy by the acquisition, through a third party, of such of its shares as may for the time being be on the market."

That was a very cryptic saying to people here, but they in Dublin understood it perfectly, and they looked forward with considerable interest to the details which might be published in the Globe in the next few days. This affair had assumed such proportions that it had obscured and overshadowed the Amendment. But if it had overshadowed it, it afforded such an argument for the Amendment that it was unnecessary for them to support it. After twenty years of resolute Unionist government in Ireland what had these gentlemen got to say? They stated that government in Ireland to-day was carried on in a maze of clerical intrigue. Very well, then what had they got to say for Unionist government? Where were they going to look for a Government? He would tell them what was the modest request of the Ulster Unionist Members. In order to maintain the Union and to look after the interests of loyalty in Ireland, they must clear out this Government and put those gentlemen from Ulster in control of the Empire. That was the only solution; there was no other way.

The point they brought to the attention of the House was that the present system of government in Ireland had broken down. No man, not even the hon. Member for Greenwich, had stood up to defend the miserable old system of Irish government. Nobody had or could defend it, and the hon. Gentlemen from Ulster who, for over twenty years, with the perfect loyalty that fed a great deal on hope, had battled for this Government, had now come forward to declare that it was impossible to conceive that any government of Ireland could be worse. Hon. Members opposite complained of broken pledges, and could not understand why the bluster of Ulster Members had had no effect. He could tell them why. It was simply because the Chief Secretary never believed in its reality. The hon. Member for North Antrim and his friends had been blustering as to what they would do for five years, but nothing had come of it. Let the hon. Member, and those who thought with him, take the advice of an old Parliamentary hand. Let them vote for the Amendment that day and then they would get something for themselves. What the Amendment said was that the present system of government in Ireland had broken down; no one would gainsay that. That it was ineffective and extravagantly costly; could anyone deny that? That it was productive of universal discontent and unrest; was there any single Irish Member who had a word to say in favour of it? And that it had proved incapable of satisfactorily promoting the material and intellectual progress of the people. On all those grounds they asked for the verdict of the House, and he felt confident that if every Member voted according to his conscience they would carry the entire House with them.

COLONEL KENYON-SLANEY (Shropshire, Newport) said that with regard to the incident now called the MacDonnell incident he was not competent to form an opinion, as he did not know enough of its inner history to offer judgment upon it either in one interest or the other, but he was sorry to hear the hon. Gentleman who had just spoken cast reflections, on three different occasions, on the honour and good faith of the Chief Secretary. He thought the speech of the hon. Gentleman would have been a better one if he had left those innuendoes out. He would take the liberty of reminding him that he was one of the last in the House who should make these insinuations, because he had himself made mistakes. He (Colonel Kenyon-Slaney) remembered the hon. Member recollecting an incident before it occurred.

MR. DILLON: I wish to say that on that occasion, when I was betrayed into an error, I came down to the House next day and apologised: will the right hon. Gentleman the Chief Secretary do the same?

COLONEL KENYON-SLANEY said he only meant to say that the hon. Member ought to have been careful how he spoke. The hon. Gentleman thought the Amendment was very moderate indeed and there was nothing in it that could not be supported by hon. Gentlemen on the Unionist side of the House, but should they not read into that Amendment the speech which had been made by the hon. Member for Waterford, and if they did, then they found the Irish Party demanding Home Rule which, in their view, consisted of an Irish Parliament supreme in international affairs and finance. That, he thought, was a fair definition of what the hon. and learned Member for Waterford meant, and it was consistent with the aims and aspirations of the Nationalist Party. That was a matter that did not concern the Unionist Party, but what did interest and concern them was the attitude of the Leader of the Opposition towards this question. The Leader of the Opposition had lately come out as the apostle of criticism and monosyllabic answers. Was the right hon. Gentleman now in favour of Home Rule as defined by the hon. and learned Member for Waterford? Was he or was he not entitled to speak for Lord Spencer? If he was, would he give a monosyllabic answer as to whether the noble Lord supported Home Rule in the way put forward that night. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Fife was not in his place, but would the right hon. Baronet the Member for Berwick give a monosyllabic answer to those questions.

MR. FLAVIN: Will you ask Mr. Horne's opinion?

COLONEL KENYON-SLANEY said he was aware that he would never get a monosyllabic answer from any of the right hon. Gentlemen, and assumed, therefore, that this was a doctrine to be applied by the Opposition to the Government but never to themselves. If it were so applied, it would have the effect of detaching from their Party many Members whom they could ill afford to spare. There was one matter which perhaps would throw a little sidelight on this matter. He had noticed in the papers a telegram to the effect that the Irish American Party sent their best wishes to the Nationalist Party in Parliament and expressed the hope that they would smash the Tory Party in this country as the Irish in America had smashed the Arbitration Treaty with England in the Senate. It was a matter of universal knowledge that the Irish Nationalist Party drew a certain amount of supplies from the Irish American Party, and what he desired to ask hon. and right hon. Gentlemen opposite was how far their alliance with the Nationalist Party went? Was it to go only as far as smashing the Tory Party or further? Were they to bind themselves to the Party who were responsible for arbitration arrangements between this country and America being rejected by the Senate. The people of this country were deeply interested in the question of arbitration, and looked forward to a great development of the principle. Consequently if the Liberal Party, when they came into power, were to be largely dependent for support upon the Irish Nationalist Party, who in turn drew their supplies from the "Smash-Arbitration Party" in America, how could they help being smirched with the pitch of that alliance? His object in speaking was to make it perfectly clear to the country that the Leader of the Opposition could not give a candid and definite answer to the questions he had put, that the Liberal Party would be largely dependent on the support of the Irish Nationalists, and that they were not in a position to define their attitude towards Home Rule. Unless some leader, competent to speak for a fairly united section of the Liberal Party, distinctly and concisely repudiated Home Rule, the country would have to recognise that the granting of Home Rule on the lines laid down by the hon. Member for Waterford would dominate the policy of any future Liberal Administration of which right hon. Gentlemen opposite were prominent members.

MR. CHARLES CRAIG (Antrim, S.) said he was glad to have an opportunity of explaining and justifying the position which he and his colleagues had taken up with regard to Sir Antony MacDonnell. It was totally untrue to say that Unionists objected to Sir Antony MacDonnell's appointment on the ground that he was a Roman Catholic. At the time of his appointment Sir Antony MacDonnell was practically unknown in Ireland, having spent forty years in India, where he had won a great reputation as an able and devoted public servant. It soon became known that he had a brother in the ranks of the Nationalist Party, that he came of a Nationalist family, and that his views must be in sympathy with the policy of hon. Gentlemen opposite; but it was absolutely untrue that at the time of his appointment Unionists distrusted him on that account. Had they had any suspicions as to his uprightness they would have been removed by the remembrance of the fact that the Under-Secretaryship was a Civil Service appointment, the holder of which had to act under the instructions of his superior and was not allowed any initiative, and that Sir Antony MacDonnell was appointed by a Government the basis of whose existence was the maintenance of the Union. About six months after the appointment, affairs in Ireland had come to such a pitch that everybody had made up their minds that the land question must be settled, and all other Irish questions were practically put on one side, so that few controversial matters came before the House. It was understood that Sir Antony MacDonnell had been appointed to his position partly for the purpose of lending his valuable assistance towards the passing of the Land Act, and a certain portion of the credit attaching to the passage of that Act belonged to him.

At the end of the session of 1903, it began to be rumoured that Sir Antony MacDonnell was usurping many of the functions of the Chief Secretary, interfering in matters which had hitherto been regarded as outside the province of the Under-Secretary, and disregarding the fundamental rule of the Civil Service which prohibited Civil servants from taking an active part in politics. The first cause of uneasiness was a speech at a large dinner-party in Dublin, in which the Under-Secretary made some highly controversial references to a Roman Catholic University, and Irish Unionists wondered how an Under-Secretary, responsible to the Chief Secretary, could make such statements. They were suspicious, however, of the attitude of the Chief Secretary himself on that question, and were inclined to believe that Sir Antony MacDonnell had some approval from the right hon. Gentleman in making that speech. The second occasion on which the Under-Secretary transgressed was at Belfast, when the question of University education was discussed. By this time the Unionists of the North of Ireland were suspicious of Sir Antony MacDonnell, and realised that he was a Nationalist, and rumour stated that when appointed he frankly avowed his agreement with the aspirations of the Nationalist Party. That being so, was it any surprise that Irish Unionists began to wonder what sort of person they had got in the position of Under-Secretary? Up to three days ago there was absolute silence on the part of the right hon. Gentleman. They were given no information. Had the Chief Secretary come forward and laid the whole case before them and told them he was trying a new experiment, he did not say that they would have acquiesced, but, at any rate, they would have known how things stood. Had that course been adopted the Chief Secretary would not have found himself in the position in which he found himself to-day, nor would the Unionists from Ireland have had to find fault with his conduct. As it was the feeling existed amongst Irish Unionist Members that the Chief Secretary had not played his part fairly with his fellow Unionists in Ireland. At the end of last session they had fully come to the conclusion that this matter must be pursued to the bitter end and that Sir Antony must be removed from his post in Ireland. He was glad to say that they had demonstrated that to several of their colleagues, and he was also glad that they had by that time by the justice of their cause enlisted the sympathies of a considerable portion of the London Press. He had no hesitation in saying that they owed a debt of gratitude to The Times [NATIONALIST cries of: "So did Pigott"], the St. James's Gazette, and the Globe, to each of which papers he returned their hearty thanks, because they had enabled them to bring the justice of their cause before the English people. He had said he thought Sir Antony MacDonnell was their worst enemy in Ireland. He was opposed to their ideas in every direction in Irish politics, and furthermore, he was placed in a position where he could be an injury to the cause of the Union, and that being so, they were justified in attacking him on that point. They had been charged with attacking him when he could not reply. His answer had always been that in considering him as everybody did, as an ordinary Under-Secretary, he was behaving in a way in which no Under-Secretary had ever done before. But it was absurd to say that he was attacking him without giving him the opportunity of replying, because the Chief Secretary was always in the House, and it was clearly his duty to stand by his subordinate officer. Indeed, it was the duty of the right hon. Gentleman to face these matters.

Now he came to the most important part of his speech, viz., the devolution scheme of Lord Dunraven. He had no intention of discussing either Lord Dunraven or the scheme with which he was connected farther than to say that Lord Dunraven was not in any way representative of Irish Unionist opinion. The whole coterie who agreed with him was not more than twenty or thirty souls out of 1,500,000 Unionists in Ireland. He thought hon. Gentlemen opposite would admit that that was a small proportion. Lord Dunraven had a perfect right to ramble into the region of Home Rule. In that respect they did not find fault with him. But they maintained that he had brought forward a proposal which, even looked at from the point of view of hon. Gentlemen opposite, was impracticable. From the Nationalist point of view it was a rotten scheme, and from the Unionist point of view it was nothing but a step towards Home Rule. If the Unionist Members had not taken that attitude and had kept silent, the Liberal Press would have said that they saw in the scheme an indication of a change of feeling on the part of the Unionists of Ireland, and so they felt it was their duty to make it clear that their opinions upon Home Rule had not changed one iota. Lord Dunraven's scheme was brought forward on September 26th last, and soon after that date they began to discover in it the handiwork of Sir Antony MacDonnell and the work of an Indian official. The Unionist papers criticised the scheme as adversely and harshly as the most advanced Orangemen could desire, but the Nationalist papers were careful to hide their light in regard to a scheme which meant such a long step in the direction of Home Rule. The Liberal papers in this country were delighted to see this scheme brought forward, because in it they saw a way out of their difficulty in regard to Home Rule.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: Hear, hear!

MR. CHARLES CRAIG: But the question they had now to consider was the action of Sir Antony MacDonnell and the Chief Secretary for Ireland, and everybody soon became convinced that the former was not only connected with Lord Dunraven's scheme but was really the prime mover in it; and he was not quite sure, in spite of what had been said to the contrary, that that was not still the correct view of it. They asked for information, but a dead silence was maintained.

The rumours became more specific and the Attorney-General for Ireland made two very remarkable speeches in his constituency in which he challenged the authors of this scheme to come forward and reveal themselves. These rumours became so strong that when Parliament opened they determined to get as much information by Question and Answer as they could, and he put a Question on the first day upon which the House met, the Answer to which created a very great sensation. [A NATIONALIST: Was it inspired ?] Yes, it was, and it was concocted by his hon. friend the Member for North Antrim and himself. He did not think he was exaggerating when he asserted that the Answer given to that Question fell like a thunderbolt. The Answer was a frank avowal of the position the Under-Secretary held in the Irish Office. It also gave the specific information they had been asking for during the past six months, to the effect that Sir Antony MacDonnell did assist in formulating Lord Dunraven's proposals. The Chief Secretary had stated that he saw those proposals for the first time in The Times on September 26th. When the matter was placed before the Cabinet the right hon. Gentleman was instructed to inform Sir Antony MacDonnell that his action was indefensible, but that the Government were satisfied that his conduct was not open to the imputation of disloyalty. Those were very remarkable revelations. Up to that point, therefore, the campaign they had been conducting against the Under-Secretary was absolutely justified. A discussion took place in the House of Lords, and further facts were added to those they already possessed, which made the whole affair more remarkable still. They found that powers were given to this Under-Secretary such as were never given to an Under-Secretary before. What these powers were was a matter they had not got to the bottom of yet, but he fully believed that those powers justified him in giving what assistance he did to Lord Dunraven in formulating these proposals. He asked the House to consider whether it was constitutional for such powers to be given to an Under-Secretary, and whether those powers were given him by order of the Cabinet of the country or solely by the Chief Secretary. To his mind it was inconceivable that a Chief Secretary for Ireland should take upon himself to engage an Under-Secretary and to give to him such powers as would enable him to take part in these devolution proposals and to take a leading action in numerous other cases. That was utterly unconstitutional, and, what was more, there was practicallyn o reason why the Chief Secretary should give him these powers without consulting the Cabinet.

MR. FLAVIN: Why did not the Cabinet censure the Chief Secretary ?

MR. CHARLES CRAIG said there were numerous other points in reference to this question. Most of them had been thoroughly thrashed out, but there were one or two on which he desired to get some information from the Chief Secretary. In the matter of apologies to Sir Antony MacDonnell, he was sorry if he had said anything which, in the mistaken knowledge of the facts under which they had laboured, might have in any way hurt his feelings. But he still maintained that Sir Antony's position in Dublin was absolutely impossible. The fact that Sir Antony MacDonnell acted with the knowledge of a superior officer did not alter the fact that he was an avowed Nationalist. Sir Antony had been permitted to give vent to Nationalist feelings, and that was a position which no self-respecting Irish Unionist could tolerate for one moment. They had heard him described not as a subordinate, but as a colleague of the Chief Secretary. Such a state of affairs had never been known before, and could not be tolerated for a moment. He was quite sure that all Unionist Members in the House, if they had been in the position of Irish Unionists, would have experienced precisely the same feelings and taken exactly the same action as he and his colleagues had done. The Chief Secretary had said that he knew nothing about the specific proposals which appeared in the newspapers on September 26th, and that they came to him as a surprise, but it was admitted that the Lord-Lieutenant knew of these proposals. How was it that neither the Lord-Lieutenant nor Sir Antony MacDonnell enlightened the Chief Secretary on the subject. He would not say that these two Gentlemen were working behind the Chief Secretary's back, but it was remarkable that these two officers of the Government might discuss these important matters without thinking it necessary to take their chief into their confidence. It was absurd to say that this was a trifling matter. He was afraid there were signs of disloyalty there. The Chief Secretary said he knew nothing of the proposals, and he accepted the right hon. Gentleman's word, but they had the startling fact that the two other gentlemen knew about them. He wished more information on that subject.

There was another matter, and it was the most serious aspect of this most unfortunate affair. That was, that Lord Lansdowne in the House of Lords on Friday made a speech which, from beginning to end, seemed to justify Sir Antony MacDonnell in what he did—and at the same time to justify all that the Chief Secretary had done. It was a very serious state of affairs that one of the most distinguished Ministers in the Government, the whole basis of whose existence, and the whole inception of whose being was the maintenance of the Union, should have openly given his approbation to a scheme such as that published on September 26th—a scheme which, the Cabinet had said was indefensible and which the whole Unionist Press in the country had scouted as absolutely impossible. He hoped he had approached this subject, which was the most important Irish Unionists could discuss in that House, with as impartial a mind as it was possible for Irish Unionists to have on that subject. He had not imported any undue heat into his remarks. [A NATIONALIST MEMBER—Because you have got such a bad case.] Hon. Gentlemen on the Nationalist Benches had invited them to go into the lobby with them in order to show their indignation against the Government at what had happened. Irish Unionists could not do that. They were Unionists, but they were so profoundly dissatisfied with the conduct of Irish affairs that it had been their intention to abstain from voting on this Amendment.

MR. FLAVIN: I will win my cigars if you are going to vote to-night.

Mr. Charles Craig

MR. CHARLES CRAIG said he sincerely hoped the hon. Gentleman would win his cigars, and if they could vote he would give the hon. Member a few more. He hoped that the First Lord of the Treasury, in the speech he was expected to make, would indicate to them a way out of their difficulty. He needed not to tell the House that Irish Unionists would feel the greatest pain in abstaining from voting if that course was unfortunately forced upon them. They claimed to be as loyal to the Government as any Unionist. If the Government would rectify the present state of affairs they would go into the lobby with them, but if not they must unfortunately abstain from voting. He appealed to the First Lord of the Treasury to make it possible to save them from the situation in which they found themselves.

MR. T. M. HEALY (Louth, N.) said the hon. Gentleman who had just sat down had appealed to the First Lord of the Treasury to save the Ulster Unionists from the present situation, but he had not indicated what kind of salvation he desired. Would the hon. Gentleman kindly state which official of the Irish Government was to be jettisoned for his satisfaction? Would Sir Antony MacDonnell do? Would he rather the Lord-Lieutenant, or would he prefer the Chief Secretary? Was Lord Lansdowne to go, or were the whole four, the entire quartette, and not one Jonah, to be thrown to the waves for the satisfaction of Protestant Ulster? He could bring an impartial mind to bear on this subject. He had never read the devolution proposals before. He had never read Lord Dunraven's letters. He only read what he was obliged to read. He never read anything except it was practical. He confessed he was very much struck with the able speech of the hon. Member for East Mayo that afternoon, which had put an entirely new perspective on the present situation. He did not understand what was going on; he did not quite follow the Dunraven Treaty because he was not in a position of confidence in the Party, having been expelled from the Party at the instance of the hon. Member for Cork, whose absence he greatly regretted. When he heard in the debate an allusion to the case of Mr. Thomas Drummond and the fact that the Irish Secretary of to-day had not done what Lord John Russell and Lord Morpeth then did, he was curious enough to turn to the history of that period to see if he could find any explanation for the circumstance. He found in Leslie Stephen's Biographical Dictionary, at page 42 of the 16th Volume, a passage which perhaps might shed some light on the reason why the Irish Secretary of to-day was not in quite as strong a position to defend his subordinate as Lord Melbourne, in the face of the fiat of the House of Lords, was able to defend Mr. Thomas Drummond. He read—

> "After the general election of 1835 O'Connell held the balance between the two great English Parties, and finally threw his weight into the scale in favour of the Whigs. With his aid the Whigs, under Lord Melbourne, came into office, and a compact was practically made between the Government and the Irish leader. The basis of this compact—known as the Lichfield House compact—was that O'Connell should suspend the demand for repeal, and that the Government should pass remedial measures for Ireland and administer the affairs of the country on principles of justice and equality. The Irish administration was nominally entrusted to Lord Mulgrave the Lord-Lieutenant, and Lord Morpeth the Chief Secretary, but Drummond was really in command . . . Drummond had to grapple with political agitation as well as social disorders and religious feuds. O'Connell had long been the enemy of every Irish Administration. But Drummond conciliated the great agitator, and while he ruled the cry of repeal was silent. O'Connell felt that no ruler responsible to an Irish Parliament for the administration of the country could govern with more ability and justice than Drummond. Accordingly he lent the weight of his authority to the support of the Executive, and the extraordinary spectacle was for the first time seen of Irish agitators and English administrators working hand in hand to maintain order and uphold the law."

Well, that passage convinced him that the right hon. Gentleman the Irish Secretary could not, in the face of the attack made upon him from the Irish-Unionist side of the House, achieve anything satisfactory to the majority of the Irish people, unless he had from that side of the House support at least equal in vehemence and indignation to that given against him on the other side. Now, he did not approve of the attitude taken throughout by the hon. Member for Cork in reference to the Dunraven Treaty. He did not understand it, but he confessed he was beginning to understand it now; and he understood also the remarkable letter written by Mr. Davitt, whose name was entitled to be received with every respect, in which he declared that Sir Antony MacDonnell was the decoy-duck of the Tory Government, and that he hated him far more because his position and appointment were calculated and intended to reconcile Nationalists and to appease the minds of those who were in antagonism to the Government and the Tory Party. He certainly had been most anxious for many years to see whether they could not bring some measure of detachment to bear on their relations to English Parties. If they went back twenty years or so they would find that the circumstances of to-day remarkably resembled those connected with the Kilmainham Treaty. They all remembered the great scene in 1882. The Irish Members were then in greater antagonism to Mr. Gladstone's Government than to any Government since, and when Mr. Parnell's letter, in which he promised cordially to co-operate with the Liberal Party in advancing Liberal principles, was read to the House, it would be remembered what a shudder and gasp, almost of consternation, it created in Irish Nationalist circles. From that moment till 1885, when they put out Mr. Gladstone's Government, they had the same relations with the distinguished noble Lord, whose son he was glad to see was likely to achieve the same distinction as his great father. When they had these same relations with the noble Lord the same endeavour was made to bring about the appeasement and advancement of the country. They were taunted by the Liberals with the Maamtrasna Alliance. There had been some terrible murders in Ireland, and they demanded some inquiry in regard to certain convictions that had been obtained, and Sir William Harcourt said he would leave the Tory Party to stew in its Parnellite juice.

They did not succeed in returning the Tory Party in sufficient numbers in 1885, and the hon. Member for the Scotland Division issued a manifesto couched in magniloquent language, to which their names were signed without asking for their authority, in which they were made to attack the Tory Government with a bitterness and ferocity which could not be exceeded. Then came in Mr. Gladstone with his Home Rule scheme, and they supported him loyally and cordially. But in this, as in the long struggle and endeavour generation after generation, a small Party, self-concentrated, disinterested, and zealous, they were beaten and baffled by an Orange Party, backed by a few powerful newspapers and a few powerful families in Ulster. Mr. Gladstone's effort in 1886 was defeated, and then Lord Salisbury came into office with the promise of twenty years of resolute government. How absurd it all seemed now. Twenty years of resolute government! What was the first thing this resolute Government did? A whole number of gentlemen, including the hon. Members for Mayo and Cork, had been imprisoned and cruelly treated because they demanded that the leaseholders should be admitted to the benefits of Mr. Gladstone's Land Act. That was denounced by Lord Salisbury as a breach of contract and a revolution; but in the course of six months the leaders of this Party of resolute government came down to the House of Lords with a Bill breaking all those sacred contracts and throwing the Irish landlords to what he was pleased to call the sub-confiscators under Mr. Gladstone's measure. Then they had the Prime Minister, who was then Irish Secretary. They learned to respect him, if they did not love him, and he bore himself like a man in the debates. He wondered if the right hon. Gentleman now thought that he was always right and that the Irish Members were always wrong, for the first note of doubt that came into his character was after he had made his famous tour in the West of Ireland and saw for himself the misery of the inhabitants for whom the Irish Members had been combating so long. What then happened? They defeated the resolute Government and brought in Mr. Gladstone again in 1892, and he passed in the House with great difficulty his great Home Rule Bill, which, however, was rejected elsewhere.

Then the Tory Party, apparently for the first time, began to turn different eyes upon the affairs of Ireland, because they brought in in 1896, without pressure he was bound to say, a measure which he regarded as extremely valuable—the Irish Land Bill of 1896; and what was of still greater value, the Local Government Bill of 1898. Now, the chief charge against him was that he cheered Mr. Gerald Balfour when that right hon. Gentleman brought in the Local Government Bill. He did cheer Mr. Gerald Balfour, and the position he had taken up was that he would cheer either side of the House which brought in any Bill favourable to his native country. What happened to Mr. Gerald Balfour, who was then Irish Secretary? This was important, because they had here the genesis of the attack upon Sir Antony MacDonnell. Mr. Gerald Balfour had passed the Local Government Bill, the Irish Land Bill, and the Agricultural Board Bill, and had put Mr. Horace Plunkett and Mr. J. P. Gill into office to administer these two latter measures. No sooner had the general election of 1900 taken place than a dead set was made upon the brother of the present Prime Minister and the nephew of the late Prime Minister by the very gang who were attacking Sir Antony MacDonnell to-day. What was his crime? Who was then the scape-goat of the Orange Party? Sir Horace Plunkett. It was said that that right hon. Baronet had been put forward by the present Prime Minister as a decoy-duck, just as it was said to-day that Sir Antony MacDonnell had been. He was to woo the Irish Members from the paths of Nationality. What did the Orange gang do? Sir Horace Plunkett sat for South Dublin; he was a Unionist; his one crime, so far as he could see, was that the right hon. Baronet took an interest in milk and butter, and was striving, by improving the methods of the farmers of Ireland, to put more rent into the landlords' pockets. What happened? The Orange clique put up against Sir Horace Plunkett a gentleman of the name of Ball, and they preferred that a Nationalist should be returned for South Dublin rather than that the President of the Board of Trade should have the satisfaction, as the result of three or four years of honest and disinterested efforts, of having a single supporter throughout the length and breadth of the land. The faction who were now giving away the secrets of the Cabinet went to Hatfield and told Lord Salisbury that he must withdraw the Chief Secretary, Mr. Gerald Balfour, and the Lord-Lieutenant, Earl Cadogan, because they were hand in glove with the Nationalists! The then Chief Secretary had probably never had any relations whatever with the Nationalists, but such was the power of this faction that the great Prime Minister, the man of "twenty years of firm and resolute government"—as Abraham preferred to sacrifice Isaac—preferred to throw over his own nephew, and to put him into a subordinate position. Ought not that to have some lesson for both Englishmen and Irishmen? What did these men want? They were Loyalists, and they were continually advertising their loyalty. If the Monarch was a Catholic would they be loyal to him? They compelled the King to take an oath which declared the dearest beliefs of the Irish people to be blasphemy. The only man to whom they denied liberty of conscience was the King himself. They complained that Irish Loyalists and Protestants were oppressed. By whom? Let hon. Members refer to "Thom's Directory" and see how these Loyalists, like worms under the harrow, were writhing in poverty and powerlessness, whilst the Nationalists dominated every sitation in Ireland, and the priests pulled the strings of Government in Dublin Castle!

The noble Lord the Member for Greenwich professed not to know what nationality was. He would tell him. Nationality was something one was willing to die for. Even the noble Lord would not die for the meridian of Greenwich. Let the House see what these Loyalists had to complain of, and then ask themselves what chance there was of anything like contentment in Ireland so long as this faction were allowed to ride on the necks of the people. The Loyalists failed to get the rate-collectorship of Cavan! The Protestant candidate offered to collect the rates at 2d. in the £, while the Catholic's price was 3d., and the Catholic received the appointment, the reason being that the appointing authority had been reading the speeches of the Member for Birmingham in which that right hon. Gentleman declared that cheapness was not everything. But what had they got instead of the rate-collectorship of Cavan? There were sixty Privy Councillors, four of whom were Catholics; thirteen Judges, three Catholics; sixty sub-Commissioners, eleven Catholics; twenty-one County-Court Judges, seven Papists; in the police, of which the head was a Protestant—there were thirty-six county inspectors, one Catholic; 170 district inspectors, ten Catholics; sixty-five resident magistrates, fifteen Catholics; and in every other public department the proportion of Protestants to Catholics was as four to one, although the Protestants were not one-fourth of the total population. In addition, the Irish Loyalists had sent a Solicitor-General to England, and two Judges to India. What more did they want the Chief Secretary to do? Was it a part of English policy that this miserable system should go on? The hon. Member for Newport had thrown in the teeth of the Nationalists the fact that their faithful countrymen in America had such influence that the Senate of the United States refused to ratify the Arbitration Treaty with England. God bless the Irishmen in America! Faithful to their country, and regardful of her interests, they were determined that an abiding treaty of peace should be made with Ireland. The Chief Secretary could have no answer to the speech of the hon. Member for East Mayo, but, at any rate, he had the consolation that if he had failed he had only gone the way of scores of others.

But the House should note the weapons the Tory Party were prepared to use. Long before the Dunraven devolution scheme was heard of, this House rang with the case of a constable who had been dismissed for a charge of immorality. Any stick was good enough to beat a dog with. Constable Anderson was good enough last year, and this year it would have been Bann Drainage if devolution had not come up. The whole object and aim of the policy of hon. Members opposite was to keep Ireland discontented in order that they might pose as the Government Loyalist faction who, in face of every temptation, and in spite of all the attraction that Nationalists could hold out to them, remained faithful to the Union and to the Government. The one charge against the right hon. Gentleman, the Chief Secretary, was that he had brought over one Irish Nationalist, a man of distinction, from India, which was a good thing to do, and the only thing in which the right hon. Gentleman had been wrong was that, in the face of the attacks upon him in the St. James' Gazette and from the Orange Party, he had not been able to stand up for his subject as he should have. That was the whole head and front of the right hon. Gentleman's offending. He (Mr. Healy) would rather that the right hon. Gentleman had stood up for Sir Antony MacDonnell; he would rather the Chief Secretary had acted as Lord Dudley had done. What would have happened then? He might have resigned, but whom would they have got in his place? Perhaps Mr. William Moore! There was an old proverb, "Never throw out the dirty water till you get in the clean." The hon. Member for North Antrim, in order to hold something in terrorem over the Government, in order that something should happen, said that on March 3rd he would call out his reserves. His reserves! They were all there in the House laagered behind the Mace. He (Mr. Healy) really did not know there were five Ulster men in the Government in this House, he did not count Lord Londonderry, who was in the other House. There was the Attorney-General, the Solicitor-General, the English Solicitor-General, the Secretary of State for War, and the noble Lord who sat for Derry, the name of whose job he (Mr. Healy) was sorry to say he could not remember; and the hon. Member for North Antrim had only to blow the horn on March 3rd and they would all trip and dance to the tune of "Whistle and I'll come to ye, my lad." He had known all these gentlemen for a very long time, and the hon. Member for North Antrim might take it from him that they all preferred the atmosphere of Westminster to that of Sandy Row. The hon. Member might call spirits from the vasty deep, but they would not come. The Secretary of State for War would be thinking out the details of his short rifle, and so far as the other Gentlemen were concerned, he did not know what they would be doing, but he did not think any darksome awe would come over them on that great day.

Was it not time that this humbug was done away with, and that these Gentlemen from Ulster came down with their programme. What was their programme? They could not repeal Catholic Emancipation, the Church Act, the franchise, the Ballot Act, or the Land Act of 1881, and they did not want to repeal the Purchase Act of 1903. Let these Gentlemen tell the Government what they were to do. He put it to the Government, did they think it was part of the scheme of Toryism that there should be no measure of appeasement for Ireland? He granted to the full the great difficulty in which the Conservative Ministry found itself, but was that their scheme, and was Ireland to continue to wait? The present Government had been in office for practically nineteen years. Was Ireland to wait always for the Liberal Party to come into office in order to see every measure passed by the Liberal Party rejected by the House of Lords? The Liberal Party could not legislate for Ireland, and the Conservative Party would not legislate for Ireland, and therefore the country which needed legislation and attention more than any other portion of the three Kingdoms was by reason of the attitude of the same faction to be deprived of its due share of the government of the country.

He put it to the Ulster Members of that House, men who had gone through scenes like this before, and had seen each Administration attacked in turn because of some little thing which produced some little understanding with Irish feeling, whether they thought that in a century of time from now the position was to be the same? What became of Empire and statesmanship? British statesmanship had broken down in Ireland, the great business qualities which had shown themselves in every other department of life had been bent and broken in the sister island. Let them give Ireland liberty in this matter, the liberty granted to the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands, and which was shortly to be given to the Boers, who were taken with arms in their hands, and who were now to be trusted with self-government in Johannesburg and Pretoria. Ireland was the one spot in the British Empire which had to battle with the Empire for its life, which had no hope in the centuries to come. The descendants of the men who now represented her were to be engaged in this eternal wrangle with English Ministers for what, from a comparative point of view, was of absolute unimportance to England; and would it not be something to the Empire in international affairs to insure that the British policy should not be lassoed, so to speak, by Ireland? Was it not rather a reproach to English statesmanship that the Irishmen in America were able to defeat the Arbitration Treaty in the Senate. Was the Tory Party, the Party of Empire and jingoism, the Party which boasted its alliance with Japan, prepared to sacrifice power and place rather than give a Catholic University to Ireland. Was the Government which had the control of the Army, of the Navy, of the international policy of the Empire, prepared to sacrifice the whole of that in order to force him to send his children to a Protestant college. If the whole thing was summed up, it came to this, that the Government, in the midst of most important international negotiations, might go out that night because they had appointed Sir Antony Macdonell, and the hon. Member for North Antrim would not have him. That was the great Imperialist Party! Let hon. Members go into the lobby with them if they liked. The Nationalists, until a peaceful compact was made with them, would offer an opposition equivalent to the miseries which had been inflicted upon Ireland.

*MR. GORDON (Londonderry, S.) said he was not surprised at the amount of abuse which had been heaped on the Irish Unionists by the hon. Member who had just sat down. The hon. Gentleman had great experience in giving and receiving abuse, but he could assure him that the Irish Unionists cared as little for his abuse as did the Members of the Party to which the hon. Gentleman formerly belonged. The Irish Unionists had always honestly and fearlessly made clear their position in that House both through their predecessors and those who, at present, sat in the House to defend their principles, and also through the Unionist Press of Ireland which voiced their views. The hon. Member came there, flung epithets across the floor of the House, and used arguments with all the power he had at his command, which he must have known to be unjust. As to any Roman Catholic because of his religion, or any Nationalist because of his political opinion, being excluded from appointments in the Royal Irish Constabulary, the hon. Member must have known that the entrance to those appointments was by examination. They knew and the hon. Gentleman knew that it was not because of any oppression that Roman Catholics were subjected to by the Unionist Government in Ireland that larger numbers of them did not hold the position of inspectors in the Royal Irish Constabulary. He must know that the entrance to these positions was by examination. The hon. Member pointed to the fact that eleven out of sixty were Roman Catholics. That showed and clearly demonstrated what they knew, that it was not a fair way to look on this question to count heads. They must count amongst other things education. If they found in any pursuit of life, the test of which was a competitive examination, that only one-sixth of the appointments were secured by Roman Catholics, apply it all round and it explained amply and clearly everything connected with the appointments in Ireland. It might be that the Protestant body in Ireland was smaller in numbers, but in proportion to its numbers it produced a far greater number of suitable candidates than the Nationalists or Roman Catholics. Nobody coming into power, whether it be the Opposition or even the Nationalists themselves, could alter that if they appointed men suitable for the posts.

He quite agreed that the real issue had been overshadowed by the question of Sir Antony MacDonnell. But let them see how it was dealt with by hon. Members opposite. One hon. Member put it forward as a reason why the Government were to be censured and abused, and because they were so blameworthy they were to be turned out of office. Another hon. Member put it forward as the greatest merit of the Government that they should send a man like Sir Antony MacDonnell to try to conciliate the people of Ireland, whom it was impossible to conciliate. Those were two opposite views. Which was right? Those divergent views ought to be taken into consideration by the Members of the House. What was the real thing they were discussing. The position the Unionists of Ireland took was this. They did not say that the existing system of government was perfect, but they were satisfied with the system of government if it was fairly carried out, the system of government to which the Unionists of England, Scotland, and Ireland had given their approval. What they asked for was—carry it out fairly. What they complained of in this matter was that it had not been carried out fairly. That was not the position laid down by the on. Member for Waterford, who moved the Amendment, and his friends the Nationalists. What they meant was this—and let there be no mistake about it—especially he hoped the Opposition would remember what they were voting for in voting for the Amendment—that the present system of government must be got rid of. It was not an Amendment saying, "It is a very good system of government, but you are not carrying it out well." No, they not only insisted that the present system should be got rid of but they went a step further and said they must substitute something in its place. What was that to be? Was it not clearly and unmistakably set forth in the Amendment, although the Amendment was carefully worded for the purpose of catching the votes of the Radical Members, who if they saw Home Rule mentioned in it would shy at it because their constituents would not tolerate their voting for Home Rule. It was carefully worded—not to catch Unionist votes —although it had succeeded in getting one Unionist Member who was returned by his constituency as a Unionist, the hon. Member for South Tyrone, to say without consulting his constituents that he would vote for the Amendment. The Home Rule question was the issue at every northern election, and without reference to those who returned him the hon. Member had announced his intention of voting for the Amendment. Let there be no mistake about it. It was Home Rule, and if the Opposition voted for that Amendment they would be reminded of what they had done if they came into power. Every hon. Member who voted for this Amendment pledged himself to substitute for the present system of government in Ireland that Home Rule which the hon. Member for Waterford had described in the House, and which Nationalists stated they would never rest satisfied until they got. Let the Opposition, official or unofficial, bear in mind what they were doing when they voted for this Amendment. One of the hon. Members who spoke yesterday pointed out as an instance of the inefficiency of the Government that they did not give a Roman Catholic University or College to Ireland. That was the interpretation Irish Home Rule Members placed on part of this Amendment—to get rid of an inefficient Government because it would not give them a Roman Catholic University or College, and get its place supplied by a Government that would give them.

MR. T. W. RUSSELL (Tyrone, S.): My charge was that the Government desired to give them, but that hon. Members on that side would not let them.

*MR. GORDON said his answer to that was that the Unionist Party as a whole would not have it. The Unionist Party had refused to set up a Roman Catholic University or any denominational University in Ireland which they knew would be a retrograde step. The hon. Member was perfectly willing to do that, but one of the pledges he had to give to his constituents was that he would take no steps in the matter. Were the Radical Members willing to pledge themselves to give a Roman Catholic University or College and maintain it by State aid? Were they prepared to vote for this simply for the purpose of dishing the Unionist Party. This was not an Orange question. Several of them were not Orangemen, and represented the views and opinions of a vast number of people who were not Orangemen. They represented a vast body of opinion that was not composed of members of the Orange Society, and those who were not members of that society were just as strong in their antagonism to Home Rule now as they were at any period since the question arose. They were opposed to that Amendment because they were opposed to anything approaching Home Rule, and the strongest proof of the position they took up was that they attacked the Government itself for having done anything that would lend colour to the idea that even the Lord-Lieutenant was going to a half-way house in the direction of Home Rule.

What was the position regarding the question of Sir Antony MacDonnell? Sir Antony MacDonnell was a great public servant who had worked well in India, but the methods he adopted there of necessity utterly unfitted him for dealing with matters in Ireland. They might govern 46,000,000 of people by finding out what was the opinion of 10,000 of them in India, but they could not do this in a country with free institutions like Ireland. He heard the Under-Secretary for Ireland make a statement at a public dinner last November twelve months which he was sure the Chief Secretary or the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland would never have made, for he said that there was only one thing that legislation could be expected then to do for Ireland, and that was to settle the University question, and he added, "that would be settled within the next twelve months." He thought the Chief Secretary would not have gone so far, but would probably have said, "The Government will endeavour, and hope to be able to settle it within the next twelve months." That showed the disposition and character of Sir Antony MacDonnell, and why should the Chief Secretary leave matters so much in his hands? Why should he treat the Under-Secretary as a colleague, and give him powers co-ordinate with his own, which he allowed to some extent to override his own? Why did not the Chief Secretary, when he knew of these matters, and at the earliest possible moment, make a clean breast of it, and not wait until they had been compelled to fish out this information by Questions in the House of Commons? Why did he not at once put forward the exact situation as he had put it forward now? He had heard a good deal about the loyalty of Sir Antony MacDonnell. The Chief Secretary said he did not hear of these matters until the 26th of September, and that he was not aware that Sir Antony MacDonnell's action had the approval of the Lord-Lieutenant. Why did the Under-Secretary not tell his immediate chief? Upon one occasion, at a public meeting, Lord Dunraven was asked who was the author of this scheme, and he replied, "Oh! that is a conundrum." Then his Lordship's youthful secretary made a speech in which he said it was only because of Lord Dunraven's modesty that he had not told them that he was the author of the scheme. He did not think it was a creditable position for a gentleman in the position of Lord Dunraven to be placed in. He first signed a document in reference to the education question, which was prepared, settled, and arranged in Dublin Castle with the knowledge of the Chief Secretary. He afterwards put his name to a document which had to be sent two or three times to Sir Antony MacDonnell, put in a more complete form, and type-written in the Castle. And he allowed that to appear as if it were his own unaided work. He disliked the idea of a Unionist Government, or of anyone connected with a Unionist Government, making themselves a party to such a discreditable transaction as that.

They had to thank their Unionist fellow-Members and the Unionist people of Great Britain for the support which they had always given them, and for the protection which they had always afforded them against what Unionists regarded as the greatest injustice which could be inflicted upon them or upon their country. They felt the greatest possible regret at being unable on an occasion of this kind to give their support to the Government. Under no circumstances would they associate themselves with an Amendment which embodied the principle of Home Rule. They would prefer to support a Government of which they were loyal supporters, but they were entitled to have an authoritative pronouncement that this sort of thing would not be repeated, that Home Rule would not be brought in by any back door, that they would not have an official at the Castle, directly or indirectly, meddling in a matter of this kind; and that if Sir Antony MacDonnell did not think right to remove himself from Dublin Castle, or was not relieved of his duties, that at all events from henceforth it should be clearly defined that he occupied a position which every other gentleman previously occupied when he held office as Assistant-Secretary. They had a right to those assurances. They asked for them, and he believed that their Unionist friends would see that they were not doing more than they were justified in doing when they asked that either the Prime Minister or some responsible member of the Government should give them those assurances before the division took place.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL said that anyone who summarised, with an unbiassed mind the conclusions with respect to Irish government which had been expressed in the debate upon this Motion would be entitled to say what he once heard the late Sir William Harcourt say, that Irish government was the very worst in the whole world. He recollected that Sir Donald M'Farlane once made a speech on the Irish Estimates, and Sir Charles Russell said to him at the end of his speech, "Well, M'Farlane, you have given us the best description of Castle government I ever heard." Sir Donald M'Farlane's illustration was that Lord-Lieutenants and Chief Secretaries were like making changes in the dial of a watch instead of the works—as long as the works remained the watch would remain as it was before; and as long as the present system of government remained in Ireland there would be maladministration and bad government. The introduction of Sir Antony MacDonnell was an alteration in the works, with the result that they now had those gentlemen, in whose interests Irish administration had been exploited ever since the time of the Union, in revolt or intended revolt against the Government. Throughout the debate there had been a great deal of animadversion and criticism of Castle boards. They now knew that these Castle boards were to be what was called "co-ordinated." He recollected that twenty years ago a Minister of the Crown delivered a speech which made a great impression at the time. That Minister stated that the system of government in Ireland was corrupt and despotic—that it was more despotic than the system pursued by Russia in Poland, and that pursued by Austria against Venice; that, however much they might disguise the fact, it was supported by 130,000 British bayonets, and that it was a scandal and a sham. This debate showed that the system still continued, but he supposed the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, who made the speech to which he had referred, would vote against the Amendment that night.

He would give a few statistics in reference to the position of the "loyal minority" from Ireland in the House of Commons. At the time of the Union those who voted for it were remunerated and rewarded, and the Union was maintained by giving remuneration and rewards. The support of the loyal minority was not obtained nowadays by means of bribes, but they were rewarded by honours and posts. Every third man in the Irish Parliament was a placeman, and what was true at the time of the Union was true now in regard to the Unionist Members from Ireland. Out of fifteen there were no fewer than five who held Government places. Everyone knew that there was in Ireland no loyalty unless it was measured by the cheque which the individual hoped to get from the Castle. Loyalty was an improper word to use in this connection. Burke had said that when loyalty did not mean patriotism it was only another word for corruption. Since 1885, irrespective of the present representatives from Ulster, and the Members for Trinity College, there had been twenty-two Members of the House representing Ulster constituencies, and only four of these had left the House without office or title. Of the four, one was expelled, two left on account of pecuniary circumstances, and one left on the death of his father, a Peer, who got his elevation as a reward of his adherence to the Union. It was said "Union is strength." It was strength to some of the Unionist Members, but it was not strength to their constituents. There had been some references of late to the necessity for the drainage of the Bann, but the Government had left that river undrained while some of the representatives of Ulster had been draining the pockets of the Government to their own advantage. When the Chief Secretary addressed the House yesterday and employed his rhetorical graces of style, his words fell on friends sitting in stony and desperate silence—a silence which was only accentuated by the mechanical "Hear, hear!" of the Prime Minister, which reminded him of the "Amen" of the clerk in a very small congregation.

.Everything went to show that Sir Antony MacDonnell had acted a straightforward, honourable part, but an attempt had been made to make him a decoy-duck, as had been done in times of old in the case of Lord Fitzwilliam. They knew what the game was; it was an attempt to capture weak-kneed Home Rulers and to crush out every enthusiasm and honest effort for the benefit of Ireland. Who was going to resign? Would the Chief Secretary stick to his post when there was not a single Member of the House who would get up to defend him? There was now no one so mean as to do him reverence, not even the Ulster Unionists. He believed the Lord-Lieutenant would stick to his post, and Sir Antony MacDonnell to his; but the gentleman who ought to go was the Chief Secretary. Whether the right hon. Gentleman went or remained was another matter. Of course public recollection was short, but this he knew, that an exposure of this kind could not be forgotten, and the right hon. Gentleman's name would be for ever associated with the Dunraven proposals, which, having been tried to see whether they would succeed, were denounced, and Sir Antony MacDonnell was left in the lurch; he was almost going to say betrayed.

He wished to give his humble adherence to the protest contained in the Amendment against the Union. Every word in that Amendment of his hon. friend was absolutely and perfectly correct. It was stated that the administration of Ireland was shockingly expensive, that the destitution of the people was great, that the administration of the country was hateful, and was there any doubt of any of those statements? He looked with horror at the terrible combination of perjury and wrong by which Irish affairs were conducted; he was horrified but not surprised at it. He knew everything about the Wyndham-Dudley-MacDonnell arrangement, and it was only a counterpart of three or four similar arrangements, beginning from 110 years ago, when Lord Fitzwilliam had been sent over to Ireland as a decoy-duck to promise Catholic Emancipation. The Chief Secretary was not a highly literary man, although he had a good taste in literature, but his speech the previous night was not one of his most artistic efforts, and was badly received even by his own friends. No speech of the right hon. Gentleman would be complete without a quotation, and towards the end of his somewhat elaborate prelection he made use of an observation employed by a statesman 110 years ago—"We must make the best of it." Where did the right hon. Gentleman get that quotation? It had been used 110 years ago by Mr. Edward Cook, Under-Secretary for Ireland, and chief agent for corrupting and polluting the Irish Members of that time. Among the reasons for carrying the Union, it was said that it was in order to protect the prosperity of Ireland which had been becoming too dangerous to England. That could not be said now, because the prosperity of Ireland had been destroyed, and everything had been done to rouse the religious prejudices of Ulster, while lavish emoluments had been heaped on the Ascendency Party in order to keep up the present rotten system. He thoroughly agreed with the right hon. Member for Montrose when he said that a free Government might be a strong Government, that a despotism might be a strong Government, but that a Government which assumed the form of a free Government with the methods of despotism was the worst of all Governments. He denounced the present Government in all its ways, and that had been a bad day for it. It would be found out before they were much older that the Chief Secretary had not done much for the advancement of the principles which he professed.

MR. COHEN (Islington, E.) said he was obliged to join issue with the hon. Gentleman who had just spoken, and to express his regret that throughout the debate there had been more personalities than argument. The personal arguments which had been used seemed to him to obscure, and not to illumine, the issue, and, in his opinion, the House was not discussing the propriety of the appointment of Sir Antony MacDonnell, though on that issue he might be of a different opinion to that of his right hon. friend the Chief Secretary. Sir Antony MacDonnell did not require from him any tribute as to his capacity; but he was bound to state that he thought the appointment was ill-judged, because there was an amount of control exercised over our Indian fellow-subjects by Civil officers which would not be possible or desirable in Ireland. He did not think that Ireland would stand that, and it would be indiscreet to attempt it. Therefore, to his mind, all the experience which Sir Antony MacDonnell had obtained in India was no qualification for the position to which he was appointed by his right hon. friend. The issue raised by the Amendment was not, however, the fitness of Sir Antony MacDonnell; it was a question of Home Rule or no Home Rule. It had been sought to introduce the side issue of devolution. Personally, he did not know what it meant. He had heard it described as a modified form of Home Rule, and that was another reason why, in his judgment, the appointment of Sir Antony MacDonnell was not a wise one. He himself was strongly opposed to Home Rule; and had, therefore, no sympathy with devolution. It would not be in the best interests of Ireland. Only two years ago the Irish Members had the advantage of British credit in connection with the Land Act, for which they were insufficiently grateful. He had always held that the Irish Land Bill would involve absolutely no charge on the British Exchequer, and if hon. Members on the Nationalist Benches were only acquainted with the resources which were placed at their disposal, though they would not be less ardent advocates of Home Rule, they would find they had an advantage they did not appreciate, and which, in his opinion, would meet their case. They had asked hon. and right hon. Gentlemen opposite whether they were prepared to give to Ireland that Home Rule upon which the hon. Member for Waterford insisted, but they had evaded answering that question. Those who sat on the Unionist side had decided that there should be no ambiguity so far as they were concerned; they would not have Home Rule or vote for anything which might be likely to bring it about. And because he thought the Amendment of the hon. Member might strengthen the agitation in favour of Home Rule, he should give an emphatic negative when the Question was put from the Chair.

MR. HARWOOD (Bolton) said that many who had been watching the debate from the position of outsiders must often during the last few days have thought of one fact—how curious it was that every thoughtful Englishman who went to Ireland began to move more or less in the direction of Home Rule. They might call it "devolution," but it was only a Latin word for Home Rule. Here was Lord Dudley. A more unlikely man to be taken with enthusiasm for an idea of this kind he could not imagine. But Lord Dudley went and had to take a part in the practical government of Ireland, and what was the result upon this English aristocrat's mind? They found him taking part in a conference, participating in proposals which were a move towards Home Rule. And there was the Chief Secretary himself. Many of them suspected that if they knew the truth—they probably never would—the Chief Secretary was really in his heart very much in sympathy with this devolution scheme. He who had most to do with the government of Ireland practically acknowledged by the attitude he had taken that the only way of dealing with the Irish problem was by moving in the direction of Home Rule. This debate must make Liberals think very seriously of a practical problem which was facing them in the near future. He spoke as an English Liberal, because he thought they ought to be very frank about this matter and look it in the face, for there had been a good deal of shilly-shally, and much said about their timidity towards Home Rule. Were they of the mind of Lord Dudley, of Lord Dunraven, and the Chief Secretary? Did they also believe in their hearts that the only solution must be some form of Home Rule? No one could deny the difficulty of the problem of Irish government. Every year during his Membership of the House there had been burnt deeper and deeper into his heart the fact of the misgovernment of Ireland—he did not say corrupt government, because he did not think it was corrupt, but it was clumsy, inefficient, and incapable. The failure to find a system of adequate government for Ireland was a great reproach to the English name and reputation.

It was not true to say that they were Home Rulers simply because they were blindly following a great leader. Long before Mr. Gladstone brought forward his Bill many Liberals had made up their mind that Home Rule was the only policy by which Ireland could be governed. Another alleged motive for their being Home Rulers was that they wanted the Irish vote. The time had gone by for this great question to be dealt with on any such platform as that. It was a question of principle, either one way or the other. It was a principle with them to support Home Rule quite regardless of Irish Members and Irish constituents. They supported it because they believed it was the only policy that could be followed for the good of England and of the Empire. Hon. Members opposite often spoke as though they had a monopoly of patriotism. Patriotism did not consist in singing "Rule Britannia" and waving the Union Jack. The truest patriot was the man who tried his utmost to have his country well governed, and was not afraid of facing any obloquy that might come upon him because he favoured some things which others might think a dangerous change. They were Home Rulers first of all because they were Englishmen and because they knew that the greatest reproach of Englishmen was the bad and incapable government of Ireland. It was not a question of nations. The time had come for this question to be looked at not as an abstract question but as a practical one. It was the question of the practical government of a certain island for which England was responsible, and would always remain responsible by the geographical position. All forms of government for Ireland had been tried and had failed; the only one which had given any ray of hope whatever, in Ireland, was that under Grattan's Parliament. Bad as it was, sectarian as it was, it threw on the Island a gleam of the sunshine of hope such as had never shone on it since. Lord Dunraven, Lord Dudley, and the Chief Secretary for Ireland all practically acknowledged that some movement must be made in the direction of devolution, and had practically acknowledged that the only hope for the good government of Ireland was to be found in some movement in the direction of Home Rule. How far that movement should go they were not committed to.

If he might give his leaders some advice, he would say that it was time they gave out no uncertain note on this matter. He had risen chiefly in order to urge upon those on his own side a little more frankness and a little more courage, even though it might seem at the moment to jeopardise Party success, because there was something even more important than Party success, and that was the success of the country and the Empire. The position of Ireland was a subject of reproach to this country in all parts of the world. While Englishmen boasted of their freedom and capacity, close to their own door was a country they could not govern, with a greatly diminished population, and which at this moment was seething, and he thought rightly seething, with disaffection, and which would never be placed on its proper footing except by a movement in the direction of Home Rule. Surely Liberals spoke somewhat timidly on this matter. The time had come for them to be quite frank and to say that they were convinced that the only hope of good government in Ireland lay in the direction of Home Rule. From the time of his first visit to the House of Commons, when he heard a remarkable speech by John Martin, he had studied as closely as he could Irish history and the problems connected with Irish government, and the conclusion he had come to was that a move would have to be made in the direction of national sentiment. They had always been proud of recognising national sentiment everywhere else, and why upon this matter should they go upon the order, "No Irish need apply." They must meet this national sentiment in the direction of Home Rule, never mind the word or the degree, but that was the direction, and the Liberal Party would be unworthy of itself, its traditions, and its future if it did not take a bold and determined stand on this matter.

*Mr. FIELD (Dublin, St. Patrick) said he was glad that the hon. Member for Bolton had addressed the House in that strain, because he had brought the House back to the main line of argument, for they had been discussing, for the most part, a personal matter for the last two days. The result of this debate showed that a large proportion of what he might describe as the central Unionist opinion in Ireland was turning in the direction of Home Rule. The Nationalists were dissatisfied with the government of Ireland, and the Ulster Members were in revolt ["No, no!"], or at least in pretence they were. The moderate Unionists were also discontented. They had in Ireland nominally a constitutional government, but it was only the shadow not the substance, and it was evident that the first duty of the Unionist Government was to change the system. They were told that the Union meant an equality of government in the three kingdoms, but what were the facts? The people of Ireland were living under a perpetual Coercion Act, and were not allowed the right to bear arms. They were overtaxed by £3,000,000 per annum, and when they asked for equal treatment in regard to taxation the idea was scoffed at. The method of levying taxation in Ireland was entirely different from the English system. The whole machinery of taxation in Ireland was centred in one official, and there were no local assessment committees, as in England, for valuation. This one irresponsible individual had at the present moment almost absolute power in regard to valuations, and taxpayers had practically little chance of appeal from his decision. They had in the debate so far heard very little about the over-taxation of Ireland, whose population had been reduced by one-half within the last fifty years. It was most remarkable that just in proportion as the population decreased taxation had increased, and it was perfectly evident that if this financial oppression went on the result must inevitably be that the people would be taxed out of the country. They were supposed to have in Ireland constitutional government, but they all knew that the non-elected irresponsible Privy Council together with the three gentlemen now sitting on the Treasury Bench, the Chief Secretary, the Attorney-General, and the Solicitor-General, with the help of non-elected irresponsible boards ruled Ireland.

An American friend of his who had recently travelled all over Ireland observed the poverty, apathy, and want of employment generally in the cities, towns, and villages, and the lack of improvement in many urban districts owing to absence of security to town tenants. In his travel right through the agricultural parts he was astonished at the vast number of ruined homesteads, roofless cabins, and grass-grown farmyards, together with lack of population and employment, whilst the slums were over-crowded and the land divorced from labour.

He asked him (Mr. Field) if there had been an invasion in Ireland. He replied—

> "No, except by the crowbar brigade during the eviction campaign."

His American friend went through the West of Ireland and was astonished to find hundreds of thousands of acres there water-logged, and by way of a contrast he said that whilst in Holland he found the people engaged pumping the water out of lakes in order to bring more land under cultivation, in Ireland they turned good land into lakes.

He said—

> "I don't wonder at your people emigrating to a free country like America, where there is some encouragement and a chance of employment."

He reverted to the fact that under the Tzar the Russian birth-rate was the highest in Europe, whilst that in Ireland was the lowest, also that Poland and Finland had increased in population, whilst in Ireland the population had decreased by one-half under what was called constitutional government, and that the ratio of pauper-lunatics, very old and very young, exceeded that of any other country, perhaps, in the world. He went on to describe to hon. Members the extraordinary condition of affairs in the West and in other parts of the country, where there were no trees or forests. In America, and also in European countries forests were looked after, but in Ireland there was no such thing. The physical resources of the country were almost entirely neglected, and this was the result of the Unionist system of government in Ireland. The country was run for the benefit of the English Exchequer. Since the Union England had exacted from Ireland hundreds of thousands of pounds beyond her fair and equitable share of taxation. In the opinion of the financial experts who were appointed by the House to inquire into this question, Ireland was overtaxed to the extent of £2,750,000 per annum. Notwithstanding that verdict, no action had been taken by the House to restore the ill-gotten plunder or to give a readjustment or restitution with respect to the over-taxation of the country. Hon. Gentlemen opposite talked of the value to Ireland of British credit, and of the good it had done to Ireland. Let the Irish people manage their own affairs and they would manage the country at much less expense than the English Unionists could do. Everybody admitted that the country was run on the most expensive lines of any nation in Europe. The so-called constitutional government in Ireland was an infamous fraud. He challenged any of the Gentlemen on the Treasury Bench to deny that statement. Ireland had the shadow of constitutional government but not the substance. The people of Ireland had no power over the Executive. Everything almost was managed by nominated and non-elective boards. It was time for the House to realise that they were not going to submit to this much longer. The common sense of the communities of the world would not allow the misgovernment of the country to go on in this way. A great deal was heard at present about Russian bureaucrats, but he would remind the House that Ireland was governed in a great measure by a bureaucracy. He quite agreed that troops were not sent, as in '98, to shoot down the people, but the Government had other methods not less effective. The people were despairing throughout the land, they were poverty-stricken, and their industries were being destroyed. He trusted that the result of this debate would be to make those responsible for the government of Ireland seriously consider the condition of affairs. It would take something more than a Land Bill to remedy matters. The affairs of Ireland were managed by an alien Government which did not possess the affections of the people. Whether the struggle was to be long or short the people of Ireland were determined that this system should not last, and certainly it would not continue with their consent. This debate had shown that they were all agreed in condemning the present system. Surely it was time for those who were responsible for the government of Ireland to take into account the consensus of public opinion which condemned the union, and to take steps for reforming the Government so as to bring it into accordance with the aspirations of the Irish people.

And, it being half-past Seven of the clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS.

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [February 20th] to Main Question [February 14th], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But humbly represent to Your Majesty that the present system of Government in Ireland is in opposition to the will of the Irish people, and gives them no voice in the management of their own affairs; that the system is consequently ineffective and extravagantly costly, does not enjoy the confidence of any section of the population, and is productive of universal discontent and unrest, and has proved to be incapable of satisfactorily promoting the material and intellectual progress of the people.'"—(Mr. John Redmond.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added.

MR. PURVIS (Peterborough) said he did not propose to join in the wrangle which had taken place over Sir Antony MacDonnell. The two extreme Parties in Ireland were struggling to obtain and exploit the Administration of the day. The point for English Members was far more important than anything connected with either the Chief Secretary or Sir Antony MacDonnell. The essential words of the Amendment asserted that the present system of government in Ireland was in opposition to the will of the Irish people, and, by way of comment on that, the hon. Member for Waterford stated that the Amendment involved the whole question of the government of Ireland, and made clear the fact that hon. Gentlemen opposite were irrevocably committed to Home Rule, and sought to put into the hands of the Irish people the management of their own affairs. Hon. Members from Ireland declared themselves to be the exponents of Irish opinion; but did the hon. Gentlemen go as far as Irish opinion in Ireland itself did. Hon. Members had disclaimed, in the course of that debate, complete separation and spoke of devolution; he was not very sure that the majority of the people of Ireland did not go further than that. Let hon. Members suppose that the majority of the Irish people desired complete separation, would the exponents of Irish opinion in this House defer in such a case to the opinion of the Irish people in Ireland or not? If they did, what became of all this talk of devolution. If they did not, what became of their principles as the champions of the Irish people and the exponents of Irish opinion. If they did not defer to Irish opinion then they were not striving for what the Irish people themselves thought best, but what they thought best for the Irish people. The Unionist Party was in much the same position, they also were striving not for what they believed the Irish people thought best for themselves, but for what they thought was best for the Irish people. The principle of the Nationalist Members and the Unionist Members was the same, the only difference was in its application. Irish Nationalist Members opposite did not argue for complete separation which meant a separate Army, a separate Navy and separate diplomacy, but for separate legislation, and the Unionist Members were of opinion that separate legislation would be dangerous and would lead to all the rest. They believed that with regard to foreign diplomacy and other matters Ireland could not be prosperously separated from the United Kingdom; it was a case of common action for mutual advantage.

He did not wish to enter historically into this question, but he would just remind hon. Members opposite that a Parliament had been tried in Ireland, and that Grattan's Parliament was found to be absolutely intolerable. He could see no reason why the same argument for separation and Home Rule in Ireland should not be applied to England and to Wales. But supposing that were carried into effect the result would be that there would be first, a supreme Convention, next a Federal Parliament, then four subservient Executives, and in such a state of things as that what became of Ministerial responsibility? It would be a state of chaos come again. It seemed to him that devolution was only a device to induce this country to give a concession to Ireland which would necessarily involve further concessions. He was somewhat of an optimist in Irish matters; he believed that the Irish were not irreconcilable. Changes had been made with regard to Ireland which had amounted to a social revolution, and by the various Land Acts which had been passed much had been done to remedy the wrongs from which Ireland had suffered. He was a great admirer of the Irish people, and was not without hope that what had happened to Scotland would eventually happen to Ireland. Scotland for centuries had been a separate kingdom with a national life of its own. It became united to this country and the people of Scotland furbished up their claymores and matchlocks and invaded England, asserting their right to Home Rule vi et armis. Both in 1715 and 1745 they got as far as Derby and frightened the people of London out of their wits, but were then beaten back, and being a sensible people they thought better of the matter, shook hands, and had been prosperous ever since. The sea ran high for a long time after the storm had subsided, and he could not help hoping that after a lapse of time all this old Castle business would have been swept away. The improvements which had been made were not exhaustive, the Government had not reached perfection, nor yet was it in its dotage. It was hard to conceive anything more opposed to the best traditions of modern history than this. During the past fifty years there had been three great political works, Cavour's work of uniting Italy, Bismarck's work of unifying Germany and turning it into the mightiest of Continental countries, and the War of Secession in America, in which the patriotism of the Northerners prevented the dismemberment of the United States. Should Britain wreck an Empire so great that every fourth child born into the world is born a British subject, when she is at the present moment seeking by some system of common defence between herself and her Colonies to bind their young vigour to her ancient strength? Should she introduce the principle of dissolution at her very heart? It could never be, nor would Ireland herself ever wish it when she had her wrongs removed.

*MR. MOONEY (Dublin County, S.) said the hon. Member for South Derry had risen in his place to contradict the statements of fact by the hon. Member for North Louth as to the position in which the Catholics of Ireland were placed with regard to the Royal Irish Constabulary. He did not think the hon. Member for South Derry had attempted intentionally to mislead the House, but rather that he had spoken with an imperfect knowledge of the subject. As a matter of fact the statement that the district inspectorships were filled by competitive examination was only partly true, for, for every vacancy there were five nominations, and after the nominations there was examination. Where the mistake was made, however, was this, that four out of the five nominations went by right to the sons of existing district inspectors, and so the game went merrily on and Catholics were excluded from positions which they would win if they depended on success in competitive examinations. But to leave what was, after all, a small point compared with the larger issues which they had to consider, the right hon. Gentleman the Chief Secretary had, in his opinion, in no way met the case which had been made out in the course of this debate. In spite of the right hon. Gentleman's declaration of his unaltered and unalterable objection to Home Rule, and in spite of his declaration that there was nothing between Home Rule and the present system, he had, no longer ago than the previous day, advocated in that House a radical change in the government of Ireland. The hon. Member for Waterford had given many instances of Englishmen who had gone over to Ireland to govern her according to English traditions, yet when they had a man of distinction attempting to govern Ireland on sympathetic lines they had the remarkable spectacle of the Unionists of Ulster in full revolt. He wondered if the Ulster Unionists had heard of another gentleman who at one time used to make just as fierce attacks on English Members in that House who were willing to do justice to Ireland as any ever made by the hon. and gallant Member for Armagh, or by the hon. and learned Gentleman the Member for North Antrim. Lord Rossmore was not a gentleman in the habit of mincing matters. He was the Grand Master of the Orangemen of Monaghan, and speaking to the Camla Orange Lodge in 1882, he compared Mr. Gladstone to a mad dog, and said that,

> "If a human mad dog came along and wilfully and wantonly destroyed thousands of people, what ought they to do with him? The mad dog ought to be done away with before it injured more people with its snapping and snarling of Home Rule rabies."

But the same Lord Rossmore, with a change of opinion brought about by a wider knowledge of the working of the Orange gang, and the Castle system, wrote a short time ago to his friends in Ulster that it was a source of deep regret to him that Orangemen did not think out matters for themselves. He wrote, and the hon. Member would like to call the attention of the Attorney-General for Ireland to this passage as it appeared to him to have a somewhat personal application—

> "To him they appeared to be following blindly a few professional politicians whose advice seemed to be the result of a contemplation of personal interests."

These were not the observations of a rabid Home Ruler, but of an Orange Grand Master, and when they saw such a change as that in a man of such pronounced views he wanted to know what had caused him to alter his opinion. Was it not that he had had a more intimate acquaintance with the working of Dublin Castle, and that even he had to admit that the system was rotten to the core. They could go on multiplying instances of Englishmen who had gone to Ireland, and who had satisfied themselves about the miserable character of Irish government. A good many Englishmen at the present moment believed that the Irish Members talked bunkum and nonsense, and that Ireland was as well governed as England, but those who had acquired a little experience of Castle government soon became satisfied as to its true character. The hon. Member for Shropshire had deprecated the introduction of personalities and innuendoes into the debates, but did they never do it on the other side, he had some recollection of the personalities indulged in by the Solicitor-General for England and also by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. But there was no question of innuendo here at all. Irish Members made a plain and definite statement and said that the right hon. Gentleman had deliberately sacrificed the permanent Under-Secretary. The right hon. Gentleman had come to give an explanation of what was called the MacDonnell incident, and he had been asked to produce the correspondence which had taken place between him and Sir Antony MacDonnell, and he had not done so. He did not think the right hon. Gentleman had done himself justice in this matter. The right hon. Gentleman was asked on Wednesday last to produce the correspondence alleged to have passed between Sir Antony MacDonnell and himself. He had never answered the request to that moment. He did not wish to do the right hon. Gentleman an injustice, but one fact in connection with the letters struck him. The right hon. Gentleman was challenged in the House as to the extent of his knowledge as to how far Sir Antony MacDonnell was going, and in support of that the charge was made against him that he knew all about the letter which Sir Antony MacDonnell wrote to Lord Dunraven in October, 1903, in which Sir Antony MacDonnell said any help he could give he should be happy to afford by supplying him with facts and information, "but I think, and Mr. Wyndham agrees with me, I had better not appear prominently." The Chief Secretary said that that letter had no reference to the proceedings now under discussion in the House, but the sooner the whole correspondence was produced the better, because if that letter was not written when the negotiations for devolution were going on, it was a very curious thing that the person to whom the letter was sent said, in another place, that it referred to devolution, and that the person to whom it was not written said in this House that it had nothing to do with devolution. The right hon. Gentleman had been asked the previous night if Lord Dudley had been censured by the Cabinet, and his answer was that the Cabinet at that time were not aware that Lord Dudley knew of the negotiations with Sir Antony MacDonnell. What was the position now? There had been a Cabinet meeting that day, he understood, and they were now in full possession of the facts. He wanted to know if the censure of the Cabinet had been now extended to Lord Dudley. The right hon. Gentleman would have appeared in a much better light if he had given a straightforward answer to a straightforward question, instead of having had statement after statement dragged out of him as from a reluctant witness.

The noble Lord the Member for Greenwich had delivered a gratuitous lecture on nationalities, and had said that the Home Rule question was dead and buried. It seemed to him, from the choruses sung on the Benches opposite and on those Benches, that Home Rule, instead of being dead, was very much alive, and that they were assisting at the demise of the Unionist Party, and of the Castle government policy in Ireland. It was not often they wished a speedy death to anyone, or anything, but certainly every Irishmen desired a speedy death to the Castle system of government in Ireland.

The hon. and learned Member for North Antrim had, in a speech which almost everyone listened to, enthusiastically delivered a great indictment against the Government, but it looked as if his courage was evaporating as the division hour approached, and that after all his professions of dissatisfaction with the Government, he would not be found in the Opposition lobby. The colleagues of the hon. Member—the reserves as he called them—were not showing much alacrity in obeying the summons addressed to them, and when the 3rd of March came they would probably be as hard to mobilise anywhere outside the Treasury Bench, as would the paper Army Corps of the Member for West Belfast. As long as the Ulster Members had five of their number in the Government, the Unionists of Ireland would come there and make most violent assaults against the Government, but they would never have the courage of their convictions to vote against it if they thought they might find a chance of a sixth, seventh, or eighth place in the Government of the day.

MR. HERBERT ROBERTSON (Hackney, S.) said that the hon. Member who had just sat down would hardly expect him to follow him into his disquisitions on the MacDonnell affair, which were really addressed to the Chief Secretary. In one portion of his speech the hon. Gentleman had referred to some observations made by Lord Rossmore, and rather inferred that that noble Lord had changed his mind and become a Home Ruler.

MR. MOONEY said he had simply stated that Lord Rossmore had receded from the position which he had taken up in 1882, and was now of opinion that the present system of government in Ireland was impossible.

MR. HERBERT ROBERTSON said that he had gathered from the hon. Member that Lord Rossmore had changed his mind to a greater extent than his Lordship had really done. The hon. Member had given three reasons why Home Rule should be granted—the bad housing in Ireland, the want of drainage, and the fact that there were no forests on the hill territory in that country. He admitted that, to a certain extent, all these things were evils, but only minor evils. They were all agreed that there were bad houses in Ireland, but he did not see how the grant of Home Rule would improve the houses. As to the land being water-logged, he admitted that large schemes of drainage were wanted for some parts of the country which would be of benefit to the Irish people; but for the execution of these works British credit was necessary, and as soon as the British people were assured that Ireland was quiet and governed in an ordinary manner in accordance with those ideas which found favour with the English people who lent the money, it would be discovered that money would flow into the country as it had done in the past. He acknowledged that the re-afforestation of the hills was important, and it was a question in which he had taken a great deal of interest. But his neighbour, Dr. Cooper, an authority on the subject, had never been able to persuade him that the re-afforestation of Ireland would be a profitable matter. No doubt it would improve the beauty of the hills, but it was desirable that that should be left to be done by wealthy people.

The hon. Member for St. Patrick's Division asked whether constitutional government in Ireland was not a fraud? Before that question could be answered they had to explain a number of words. The phrase in itself had no meaning whatever. Taking the words in their ordinary acceptation, Ireland was part of the two islands which formed the United Kingdom, and at the present moment it had a certain amount of constitutional representation as perfect as that of the Isle of Wight. The hon. Member must state what views he held of constitutional government. If he said that Ireland was in itself a nation, and that everything that was a nation ought to have a separate Parliament, then he would establish his proposition. But then the hon. Gentleman must remember that his proposition was not admitted. He did not think that anyone in the House had a right to say that the Chief Secretary had sympathy with the system of devolution promulgated by Lord Dunraven, when that right hon. Gentleman had stated distinctly that he was not, and never had been, in favour of it.

The hon. Member for Bolton, who said he was in favour of Home Rule, had appealed to the Leader of the Opposition to make an authoritative declaration on the question. They on that side of the House naturally sympathised with that wish. They wanted to know exactly what kind of Home Rule it was which the right hon. Gentleman and his followers supported. They might apply the words "Home Rule" to hundreds of different schemes, varying in details and principles. The hon. Member for Bolton had stated that when he was abroad he was always reproached with the British government of Ireland. He did not dispute that entirely, but believed it was absolutely due to ignorance of the real state of that country. People, even on his own side of the House, who lived outside Ireland believed that it was almost a dangerous country to reside in. They thought it was an uncivilised place, and that was the opinion of a very large number of people in England who conceived that there was a certain amount of danger in going about. Of course that view was partly derived from the lurid pictures of the state of Ireland drawn by hon. Gentlemen opposite. It was certainly true that their pictures, drawn from the very worst and most unfortunate districts of the country, were applied to the whole of Ireland, and he was sure that the hon. Member for Bolton had not drawn his gloomy picture from personal experience. He, himself, had always found that there was no pleasanter part of the United Kingdom to live in. It was a misfortune that money was kept from investment in the country by these pictures; for what was wanted more than anything else was that money should be spent in that country. Speaking in the capacity of an Irishman for the moment, although he was not one—hon. Members knew perfectly well what he meant—speaking on the ground of having married an Irish wife, he insisted that what was wanted in Ireland was capital.

He did not wish to enter into the details of the case of Sir Antony MacDonnell. The hon. Member for Donegal had said that Sir Antony MacDonnell had been selected as Under-Secretary to play the part of a decoy-duck. He believed that the Chief Secretary had selected Sir Antony MacDonnell for the post of Under-Secretary because he thought that gentleman would be useful to him in the administration of Ireland, and that the idea that he was to be a decoy-duck had never entered into the mind of the right hon. Gentleman. It was impossible that anyone who had sat in that House for any time could believe for a moment that the Chief Secretary intended to make a decoy-duck of Sir Antony MacDonnell. The reason for his appointment was that that gentleman's experience, obtained in India, might be useful in Ireland. An hon. Member on that side of the House had objected to Sir Antony MacDonnell, had objected to him on that very ground, because he thought his Indian experience, instead of being a benefit, would be a hindrance, as Sir Antony would be inclined to follow lines of administration not applicable to Ireland. He would not enter into that question. The objections of himself and those who agreed with him, who were connected with Ireland, to the appointment of Sir Antony MacDonnell were taken on entirely different grounds. In the first place they had absolutely nothing at all to do with that gentleman's religion. Hon. Gentlemen knew that in Ireland itself Unionists usually had the support of wealthy neighbours who happened to be Roman Catholics. Their objections were based on the fact that Sir Antony MacDonnell apparently held—it was not disputed—views which were irreconcilable with those of hon. Gentlemen on that side of the House—views which were diametrically opposed to those which the Chief Secretary had been placed in Ireland to carry out. It was on that account that they believed the appointment was unwise. The Chief Secretary necessarily could not look into every detail of administration, and these had to be put into the hands of the responsible Under-Secretary. What had occurred had justified the Unionist opinion as to the unwisdom of Sir Antony MacDonnell's appointment. They, however, repudiated the idea that the Chief Secretary was blameworthy in the matter of the Dunraven devolution agreement.

Mr. MACVEAGH (Down, S.): What about the desertion of Sir Antony MacDonnell?

Mr. HERBERT ROBERTSON said that there was no question of the desertion of Sir Antony MacDonnell. The Chief Secretary did not know what was happening, and how could they expect a man to know everything that was occurring behind his back? Suddenly, however, the Chief Secretary discovered that Sir Antony MacDonnell had been going further than he would have authorised had he been consulted. Was it to be said that the Chief Secretary, who merely did not know what was being done, had approved of what had been done? The Chief Secretary had absolutely no option, as soon as he heard of what Sir Antony MacDonnell had done, than to say that he disapproved of it, and that it had not been done with his consent. Without destroying the whole system of government he did not see how anyone could blame the Chief Secretary for having done what he did. As to a Catholic University, that was not thoroughly germane to the Amendment, but was one of the grievances brought in by a side wind.

Mr. DILLON said that the question had been specially mentioned in the Amendment.

Mr. HERBERT ROBERTSON said he had always had the very greatest sympathy with the views expressed many times by the First Lord in regard to Catholic University education. It had been shown that the chief cause of complaint in regard to education in Ireland was the ignorance which existed there among the Roman Catholic population. The Prime Minister felt that that was an evil, and believed that the dispelling of that ignorance would be the very greatest benefit to Ireland and therefore to the United Kingdom. Personally he had always held that any University which could be started in Ireland to enable the Catholic youths of the country to be educated would be of paramount importance. He did not care under what influences it was established. His experience was that the influence exercised over youths in a University after the very impressionable age of, say, thirteen, had very little effect upon them in after life. Indeed, the tendency rather was for a Radical professor to bring up Tory pupils. Therefore he did not place very much stress on the colour of the University; but he felt that the Roman Catholic population of Ireland were in an awkward position. They were told that Trinity College, Dublin, was open to them. That was a perfectly good piece of advice, but——

Mr. SPEAKER said he did not think that a discussion on the kind of education to be given in a Catholic University in Ireland was in order.

Mr. DILLON, on a point of order, said that the Amendment set forth that the Irish Government had proved to be incapable of satisfactorily promoting the material and intellectual progress of the nation, and it seemed to him that the discussion of the provision of University education, acceptable to the majority of the population, was in order.

Mr. SPEAKER said it was quite open to the hon. Member to say that there was a want of a University in Ireland, but to proceed to deal with the kind of education to be given in a Catholic University was a different thing.

Mr. HERBERT ROBERTSON said he apologised for entering into these details and hoped that the final result of this discussion would be the rejection of the Amendment before the House.

Sir H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN (Stirling Burghs): Mr. Speaker, this debate has been very properly and naturally conducted for the most part by Irish Members, and from my particular section of the House there has been a very scanty contribution to the debate; but I think it will be expected and desired that I should say something in the course of the discussion. A few weeks ago there would probably have been—even among those who, like myself, have supported and still continue to support a policy of thorough and fundamental alteration in the whole system of Irish government—a feeling that this Amendment might be regarded almost as inopportune and uncalled for. They might have said that, as during the last two years two great remedial measures have, under the auspices of the Unionist Government, and with the entire and cordial concurrence of all Parties in the House, been carried for Ireland, it would be well to leave the matter of the Irish government until we had a little further experience of those measures, and of the beneficial working of the extension of popular rights in the Irish counties—and I believe that hitherto that system has been most successful—and, on the other hand, of the further operation of that great revolution in the land question which is of more recent origin. There is a great deal to be said for that view, though I do not know that I should have taken it myself. But now the revelations and disclosures of the last week have completely altered the case, and no one can doubt the extraordinary opportuneness of an Amendment calling attention to the character and condition of the present government of Ireland. This has been a most instructive debate, and has thrown a flood of light upon the question. What puzzles me is, who can vote against the Amendment? Of course, there is the barrier we always encounter at this period of the session—the fact that, according to our rules or conceptions of the matter, a vote for an Amendment to the Address must be resisted by the Government and their followers as if it involved a vote of want of confidence in the Government. But, putting that technical rule aside, has any one remarked the extraordinary fact that, to the best of my observation, not a single Member—not a single Irish Member at any rate—has said a word in favour of the present system of government in Ireland?

The Amendment declares that the present system of government is inefficient, costly, and restrictive of the progress of the country, is estranged from the people, and finds no support from that general confidence of the governed which is the rock upon which any good system of government must be based. What reason have the Government on the merits for disputing this declaration? Consider the question in the light of this MacDonnell episode. When Sir Antony MacDonnell was appointed Under-Secretary he was not an ordinary candidate. He did not rise by promotion in the office. He was taken from the outside; but even there he was not the first man in the street. He had had a distinguished career and had achieved a great position. Yet he takes what in itself was a subordinate position with narrow powers. He was selected by the Government with full knowledge of his views and sympathies. It was not that they took an eminent Indian statesman who had done great service to the Empire in his career, and then, when they had appointed him, discovered that he sympathised with the desires of the mass of the Irish people. They knew all that before they appointed him; so that they must have selected him either because they desired to give him an opportunity of doing something, and of taking some serious steps to improve the government of Ireland, or else they must have appointed him with a view of inducing other people to think that that was what they intended that he should do. The former is the more creditable supposition, and I am quite willing to give them the benefit of the doubt. He was appointed, as we know, on special conditions, of which the Government were completely aware, and to which they were parties in every respect. Not only so. He was given freedom of action of a breadth and scope far beyond that of ordinary officials. He was invited and expected to assist them on certain subjects, among others the organisation of the Government departments and the co-ordination of authorities. The Chief Secretary speaks of him as having been taken into his counsels as a colleague rather than as a clerical assistant. The Cabinet, then, must have felt dissatisfied with the system of government in Ireland, or they never would have attached their sanction to such conditions to the appointment. They must have felt that Sir Antony MacDonnell was peculiarly marked out for the work or they would never have entrusted him with such large powers and freedom of initiative. Here we have the Government gravely dissatisfied with the present condition of things, feeling that something must be done, and that he was the man to do it. In my opinion, looking back upon these facts, and considering the present condition of affairs, we are entitled to have a full disclosure from the Government of the policy they intended and intend to pursue in this matter—not only what they objected to in Sir Antony MacDonnell's conduct, but what they themselves had and have now in their minds with respect to the management of Irish affairs. Unless we are in possession of that information, how can we properly appreciate the force and necessity of the censure which has been placed upon him? We want to know their view of what Lord Lansdowne called "the old-fashioned and complicated organisation," how it was to be dealt with, and what was to take its place. Without that how can we judge how Sir Antony MacDonnell deserved the blame put upon him? His action was censured as indefensible, not because he went beyond the functions of an ordinary Civil servant in his high position. He had his commission to act with extraordinary authority. At what point, then, did his proceedings become reprehensible and blameworthy? What was it he did? He proceeded to confer with those likely to assist him in this matter. With whom did he confer? Not with Nationalists. If he had, he would have had the sanction of previous Conservative statesmen. He went to pillars of Unionism, to unimpeachable Unionists, to men of the landlord class in Ireland—to the very men who had been mainly instrumental, or, at any rate, had largely helped, in passing the Land Purchase Bill, the great achievement of the present Irish Government. But his conduct is said to be indefensible. "Indefensible" is a strong and, as I think, a fatal word. "Irregular" I could understand. The whole thing was irregular, and improper much of it. But "indefensible," capable of no defence! That is the word which is applied to a man who was acting, as we know, with the knowledge and consent of his superiors in Ireland. Apparently his offence lay in getting these Unionist gentlemen to take soundings on behalf of the Government in order to see how far the governing classes in Ireland and their friends in England could be got to go in enlisting the confidence of the people of Ireland in the government of the country. That is Sir Antony MacDonnell's real offence. What a terrible offence it is! Did the policy of the Government, as communicated to him, forbid him to consider and examine the bearings of any suggested changes on the wider question of bringing the Government into a new relation with the people? That is not alleged. And yet his conduct is said to be indefensible. What, then, of the conduct of the Viceroy and the Chief Secretary? How and at what point had that which was patriotic in them become indefensible in Sir Antony MacDonnell? If such matters as an elective financial board or statutory authority with delegated legislative powers were forbidden ground, why was he not told so and warned off? He was allowed to range at large. In censuring Sir Antony MacDonnell, as I say, the Government have in effect censured also the Chief Secretary and certainly the Viceroy.

Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman.

The Chief Secretary has explained his relations in the matter, and undoubtedly the right hon. Gentleman was largely cognisant of what was going on. We have no reason to know the particular point at which his cognisance ceased. He has quoted some parts of the correspondence. Let us have the whole of this correspondence. For the information of the House, for the satisfaction of the country, for the vindication of the Government, and also to give Sir Antony MacDonnell a chance of vindicating himself against the reprimand to which he has been subjected, I think the whole of that correspondence ought to be made public. The Chief Secretary said that he was aware of—and I think I gathered that he rather liked the idea of—financial independence in Ireland. He has said and done things in the course of the last two or three years which show that that would not be inconsistent with his general view. But he was brought up sharp by the fact that it turned out that, however desirable the Indian financial system for securing local control over financial expenditure might be, however excellent, it was elective. That was quite enough for the Chief Secretary, anything but what was elective! A system which would do very well in India he first of all thought must be very well applicable to Ireland, two countries governed more or less on arbitrary principles; but when he found it was elective, that was another story. Whether that was the only thing that altered the Chief Secretary's mind I do not know. I make an appeal, and, I hope, a temperate, as it is a serious appeal, to moderate men of all Parties in this House, and of course especially to members of the Party opposite. I regret that the appeal should be received with some small suspicion. I appeal to them not to maintain and carry further old prejudices and old antipathies. Can they support the system of government in Ireland of which this Amendment speaks, and for which apparently no word can be said, at any rate has been said, in this House or any other quarter? Have they considered how singular it is that on one occasion after another capable men, some of them distinguished men, have gone over to Ireland full of prejudices against the ideas prevalent in Ireland, and, after examining for themselves the circumstances of the case, have thrown away their prejudices, and have admitted the whole case? Lord Carnarvon, I think, was an instance some years ago. But the other day we had a declaration by Sir West Ridgeway, which, I think, the hon. and learned Member for Waterford referred to. Sir West Ridgeway was not prejudiced one way or the other, he was chosen on accounts of his merits and experience. He was the right hand of the present Prime Minister while he was ruling Ireland by the system which we, on this side at all events, call coercion; he was with him through all that time and did not flinch in the duties imposed upon him. But he tells us now that in 1889 he wrote a Memorandum, he being then in the position of the Under-Secretary. He says—

> "I advocated in that Memorandum the concession of a liberal measure of local government in provincial as well as county councils; the administration of the education grant and other funds raised for that purpose by a local body at least partially elected, with safeguards for the minorities in the various localities; the decentralisation of finance, and consequently the loosening of rigid Treasury control; the reorganisation of Dublin Castle, and especially the abolition of that chaotic anachronism—administration by semi-independent boards whereby three men do the work of one; and the erection of a council to advise the Chief Secretary, such as that of the Secretary of State for India, and comprising the representatives of all Parties."

Now, I do not say at all that the system, the alterations Sir West Ridgeway sketches out, would be sufficient to meet the desires of many of us, or that they would form an ultimate solution of the question. But it shows at all events that Sir West Ridgeway, from his observation and experience, was satisfied of the truth of this Amendment, and that is the point I wish to make, and that he had not a word to say in defence of the system as it was then exercised.

What is the main cause, after all, of the evils of Irish government? Why is it so inefficient and costly, falling in with no one's wishes, so that even Ulster does not love it? One main reason is that it does not rest on the consent and sympathy of the people. If an official be suspected of being Irish in feeling, as well as perhaps in blood and residence, if he is suspected of sharing the views of the great majority of his countrymen, it is quite enough to bring him the opposition and suspicion of the ruling dominant class in Ireland. Look back, as an instance, to the case of Sir Horace Plunkett and Mr. Gill. Such a system would never be tolerated here. And after all something is due to the feeling of nationality. The noble Lord the Member for Greenwich has disputed whether there was any nationality in Ireland, and has even extended that view to Scotland, Wales, and England. I do not know that there is the same individual feeling of nationality in an Englishman as in a Scotsman—he feels that he is a citizen of the Empire, but I mean as a separate entity. It is natural that feeling in the larger country should not be so keen as in the smaller ones. I can quite understand that the noble Lord does not appreciate the feeling of nationality which pervades the other three countries, but when he said that they had no right to claim any nationality, and gave as his reason that there was such a mixture of blood amongst them, I would put it to the noble Lord whether that argument might not carry him a little too far? There is such a thing as race and family. A man may be very proud of belonging to a family that has held a distinguished place in the country for a good many generations; but why should he have that pride seeing that all the wives that have come into the family have brought an admixture of other blood? There is just as much force in that with regard to family descent as in the noble Lord's argument as to nationality. The fact is, the noble Lord is carried away by a certain love of paradox which appears to run in his family. The truth is that where there is confidence between the Government and the governed there is a healthy circulation of blood, as it were, in the political system; there is progress and activity. In Ireland we have that stagnation and want of enterprise which an arbitrary Government fosters. Is it the fault of the Irish? That is what we used to be told in the early years of this long controversy. They have faults, no doubt, as we have, but if they have why did you give them the control of their local county affairs, and, above all, why did you risk £100,000,000 of your credit upon them? It will not do to talk like that. It cannot be maintained for a moment. Therefore I come to this conclusion, if you realise how you stand after the measures that have been passed, that no dispassionate observer of events can dispute the proposition in this Amendment. They deserve a better government, and a government different in character and of a different order—a government springing from and controlled by the people themselves. Of the existing government in Ireland no defence can be found that I know of. Not even His Majesty's Government can dispute, on its merits, this Amendment, although they must, of course, oppose its formal expression here, because by their action in this very matter, which has come so opportunely to enlighten us, they have admitted as much. Holding these strong convictions, we, at least, will cordially support the Amendment.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: The speech of the right hon. Gentleman has been studiously moderate in tone, but I think, nevertheless, that among all the speeches I have heard from him in recent years it is probably the most important, in view of the issues which are to be put before the country — [OPPOSITION cries of "When?"]—I have heard for a long time. The right hon. Gentleman was bold enough to say that not even one of His Majesty's Ministers had the courage to defend the existing methods of government in Ireland. If he meant by that that none of His Majesty's Ministers was prepared to assert that no part of the fabric of State was absolutely perfect, of course nobody states that. Nobody states that reforms may not be introduced both into the sphere of government in England and into the sphere of government in Ireland. We have given notice in the Speech from the Throne this year of a change we propose to make with regard to the official arrangements of the departments in England. But if the right hon. Gentleman meant that none of His Majesty's Ministers was prepared to say that the broad lines now existing as to the government of Ireland are the lines which should be observed, I tell him that there is not one of His Majesty's Ministers who for a moment doubts the fact. It is quite true that my right hon. friend the Chief Secretary for Ireland did not deal with these issues, or, if he did, not at any length in the speech he made earlier in the debate. And why? Because it is only by the right hon. Gentleman, and perhaps by one or two of his predecessors, that the Amendment has been discussed at all. My right hon. friend was not discussing the broad question of Home Rule. He was compelled by the course the debate had taken to deal with questions of a relatively narrow and wholly personal character—[dissent]—well, of a personal character, and in my opinion he dealt with them adequately. ["Oh!"] In my opinion he dealt with them adequately; and I think that in these two nights debate far too large a portion of time has been devoted to discussing personal questions, and far too little to the greater issues which the right hon. Gentleman has, with such commendable courage, raised almost at the last moment.

I do not propose to detain the House long, but I must say a word upon both the personal aspect and the general aspect of the question which has occupied us through all these hours of debate. Let me say, first, that there is one aspect which has, I think, not been touched upon in any offensive sense, except by one speaker. But one man in the course of the two days debate has cast a doubt upon the word of my right hon. friend the Chief Secretary. The hon. Member for Mayo, and the hon. Member for Mayo alone, in a long and elaborate speech, endeavoured to show that my right hon. friend was concealing the truth.

Mr. JOHN REDMOND (Waterford): We all associate ourselves with that speech.

An IRISH MEMBER: We believe it.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: I am ready to extend to hon. Gentlemen opposite the courtesy they have not extended to my right hon. friend. I accept their statement. I know they believe it, and I say it is not a creditable belief to entertain. The allegation must mean, if it means anything, that my right hon. friend in reality was cognisant of this particular scheme of devolution now known as Lord Dunraven's scheme, that he kept the knowledge of it from the world at large, from the Irish Members, from his supporters in Ireland, from his colleagues in England, from all those who might either agree with him or disagree with him. It must further be held that my right hon. friend was not only betraying the Unionist cause—for that is what it comes to—not only betraying the convictions that through his whole political life he has championed without change, without wavering, without hesitation, but that, having set to work to make this insidious breach in the Unionist cause, he went abroad and left the poison to work, and, on the very first day of his return, publicly repudiated his own handiwork. That is not merely accusing my right hon. friend of deception; it is accusing him of something on the verge of absolute idiocy. Some hypothesis of this sort might be constructed by the morbid ingenuity of hon. Gentlemen opposite. They might, perhaps, say that no doubt the Chief Secretary did intend this scheme to be thrown before the public for discussion and acceptance, but that when it became known his colleagues or his friends pointed out the dangers of the course, and he hastily withdrew from his position, and repudiated his own handiwork. But my right hon. friend made his repudiation, as it were, at the very hour of landing, without communication with any human being, without consulting his colleagues or his friends, merely because he saw how much mischief this unfortunate declaration was calculated to convey. Conscious that it was in absolute antagonism to all his own views, he did what the hon. Gentleman the Member for Mayo said was an unusual thing for a Cabinet Minister to do, he sat down at once and wrote to The Times a full repudiation of the essential elements of the project. That, Sir, ought to be, and I believe is, conclusive, to every candid man, and I do not think that I shall do my right hon. friend the disservice of thinking that it is worth while arguing further to this House, who know him, or ought to know him, upon the absolute candour and directness of his character.

Then, Sir, I have been asked by the right hon. Gentleman whether Sir Antony MacDonnell had not been given such a latitude at the time when he became Under-Secretary as would justify him in starting these projects on his own account without consulting my right hon. friend, and in support of that theory the right hon. Gentleman quoted a phrase, I think, from Lord Lansdowne, or at all events alluded to the debate in the House of Lords and to the debate here. I think that view is based upon a profound misconception.

Mr. JOHN REDMOND: It is the view of the Viceroy.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: With all respect to the Viceroy, I think if the Viceroy has made that statement, which I do not remember at the moment——

Mr. JOHN REDMOND: Lord Lansdowne read a letter to that effect in the House of Lords.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: The hon. Member knows perfectly well, having sat in this House as a Member of the Irish Party for a number of years, that the person primarily responsible for the government of Ireland is the member of the Irish Government who is in the Cabinet and, after him, the Cabinet itself. I say, therefore, that that view is founded upon a misconception. The misconception appears to be this, and I do not believe that Lord Dudley ever gave his countenance to the theory which I think I may justly attribute to hon. Gentlemen opposite—the theory, namely, that Sir Antony MacDonnell, at the time when he became Under-Secretary, was given authority outside his office and irrespective of the Chief Secretary to initiate projects of legislation, or projects which he might consider to be projects of reform. That is the belief, apparently, in which this case has been argued. That, clearly, is entirely inaccurate. After all, what is the status, and what must be the status, of a Civil servant in this country? The person responsible primarily is the Parliamentary head of the office. It depends, no doubt, upon his character and upon the character of the permanent official at the head of his department what shall be the relations between them. In certain cases it may have happened in the administrative history of this country that, either through the fault of the Parliamentary head or through the fault of the permanent head of the department, the relations between them were little more than the relations of a public servant who submitted minutes and recommendations, and a Parliamentary head of the department who considered, commented on, and decided upon those minutes. I do not think that is the best way of conducting an office. I am glad to think it is not the way in which I personally ever conducted an office. But it is a way in which offices have sometimes been conducted, and it is perfectly consistent with the scheme of government in this country. You may go from that extreme case at one end of the scale up through the whole gamut, and you will reach a condition of things, far more satisfactory in my view and according to my experience, in which the Parliamentary head of the department discusses in the freest and most open manner every aspect of the policy connected with his department, in which the permanent head of the department feels that he is on such terms with his chief that he can give advice, make suggestions, and initiate policies for the consideration of his chief. That, I think, is the method, if it can be practised, by which most is got out of that admirable body of men, the Civil Service, and by which the Parliamentary and responsible head is most likely to be well served.

In the case of this great and distinguished Indian official, the Government went outside the ordinary Civil Service, and Sir Antony MacDonnell had the right, as others in a similar condition have had the right—and he was justified in exercising that right, as others have exercised the right—of insisting that if he were temporarily to leave the main line of his career he should, at all events, be in a position of absolute confidence with the man under whom he was to serve. But it has never been suggested that Sir Antony MacDonnell had powers outside the ordinary office of the Chief Secretary. It has never been suggested that those were the terms on which he was asked to serve. They manifestly could not be the terms. It is an impossibility, because what do they amount to? Let the House consider. You have a government of Ireland for which the Chief Secretary is responsible to the Cabinet, and the Cabinet is responsible to this House. But if any Civil servant were placed in the position in which hon. Members have fondly supposed Sir Antony MacDonnell was placed, is it not plain that you would have—or you might have—the Chief Secretary and the Cabinet committed to a policy of which they had never heard, and for which they could not be responsible. And I do not believe that in the wildest dreams of Constitution-mongers it would be suggested that even in the worst form of government—which I suppose in the view of hon. Members opposite would be the government of Ireland—there should be an official not directly responsible to the House, not a member of the Cabinet, not a member of the Government, and nevertheless having the power and the right to initiate great schemes and policies about which the Cabinet had never been consulted.

Mr. DILLON: Will the right hon. Gentleman publish the letter containing the terms of the appointment ?

Mr. A J. BALFOUR: I am stating what I believe to be the fact. [" Oh, oh!"] I am stating what obviously must be the fact. [" Oh!"] Does anybody—can anybody believe after the description I have given of the inevitable relations between the officials and the Government—[" Oh, oh!"]—does anybody believe that a Government would be so insane as to allow policies to be initiated in their name on which they had never been consulted ? [" Oh, oh!"] The proposition has only to be stated for its absurdity to appear.

Mr. DILLON: I am sorry to interrupt the right hon. Gentleman, but the Chief Secretary said he would be desirous that the letter should see the light.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: Then let the hon. Gentleman ask the Chief Secretary. [" Oh, oh!"] I see no reason why the letter should be published. [" Oh, oh!"] I can assure hon. Gentlemen that the Government never would be responsible for so wild a project as that I have described. I suppose I have not taken pains to make myself clear, because otherwise so plain a truth could hardly remain obscure. If there is any hon. Gentleman opposite who has had any converse with the practices of government, or if he has ever thought of the way government is carried on, he will not believe for a moment there could be such a position. I am sure the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Montrose would never, under any circumstances, not even if the Archangel Gabriel offered his services as permanent Under-Secretary for Irish affairs, allow even that angelic Minister to initiate a policy of which he was not to be informed and for which he was to be responsible.

Mr. JOHN MORLEY (Montrose Burghs): I never would have allowed the Archangel Gabriel or any other candidate to hold a position in an office of which I was the head on any special terms at all—it is unconstitutional, novel, and mischievous. I only wish to ask, is not the Lord-Lieutenant part of the Government ?

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: The right hon. Gentleman has travelled by his question to another part of the subject, and I am willing to follow him. He asks whether the Lord-Lieutenant is not part of the Government. Of course the Lord-Lieutenant is a portion of the Government, but when the Chief Secretary is in the Cabinet, and the Lord-Lieutenant is not, the Lord-Lieutenant is not, in any true sense of the word, the head of the Irish Administration. The very last man in the world to deny that proposition would be the right hon. Gentleman himself. That, I think, disposes of the allegation that permission or consent, not given by the Chief Secretary, could be given by the Lord-Lieutenant.

Mr. DILLON: It was given.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: It could not be.

Mr. DILLON: It really was.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: The hon. Member is mistaken; it was not. It is true that the Lord-Lieutenant did discuss the matter with Sir Antony MacDonnell, and he understood from Sir Antony MacDonnell that the Chief Secretary did know what was going on. [" Oh, oh!"]

Mr. DILLON: Does the right hon. Gentleman call Sir Antony MacDonnell a liar ?

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: Sir Antony MacDonnell was mistaken. [" Oh, oh!"] Is that an impossibility ? No man in the House has greater admiration than I have for Sir Antony MacDonnell's administrative achievements; but he is not infallible, and in this instance he made a mistake, and in consequence the Lord-Lieutenant believed erroneously [" Oh, oh!"]—erroneously that my right hon. friend did know of this Home Rule project. [" Oh, oh ! " and " Produce the letter."] I am not criticising either Sir Antony MacDonnell or Lord Dudley in this matter, but I am stating what occurred. One hon. Member asks if I call Sir Antony MacDonnell a liar. He is very fond of making suggestions of that sort, and occupied an hour and a-half this afternoon in making them. [" Oh, oh ! "] I have the profoundest confidence in Sir Antony MacDonnell's ability, and I have the profoundest confidence in his honour ; but have hon. Members never heard of misunderstanding between two men of absolutely unblemished and untarnished honour ? Is that outside their experience ? Has there never been misunderstanding in that happy family ? No, Sir ; I profoundly regret a misunderstanding like that which has occurred, but I refuse for one instant to entertain the suggestion that it touches the honour even in the smallest degree of any one of the persons concerned. I think it will be admitted by all who have listened to this debate that this personal aspect of the affair would not have excited the vehement passion of which we have seen evidence both yesterday and to-day had it not been associated with a cause which is itself calculated to excite, and has excited in our recent political history, the most vehement passions between different Parties, different individuals, and different sections of society. My noble friend the Member for Greenwich, in a very interesting speech made yesterday, told the House that in his judgment Home Rule was dead or swooning.

MR. FLAVIN : It is more alive than himself.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR : He recommended my hon. friends from Ulster to do nothing by their speech or their action to suggest to the British public that this question was still a living one. I agree with a great deal that my noble friend said in his speech, but I do not agree with that particular statement. I think that if he had listened to the debate as it progressed to-night he would have come to the conclusion that Home Rule is not dead, that Home Rule is not even swooning, but that it is in a high state of activity, and, at all events on that Bench, it has a considerable measure of activity still left to it. My memory goes back to the election of 1880 and to the controversies which preceded that election. There was hardly a man in the country carried away by the vehemence of the controversy which Mr. Gladstone had raised on the question of the Near East, there was not an elector whose vote was changed by that mighty storm of impassioned eloquence, who even dreamt that the problem of Ireland was coming upon them in the acutest stage within the next few months. Mr. Gladstone was returned to power ; the Near East was absolutely forgotten as if it had never existed ; and we found ourselves in the middle of an Irish controversy which for its bitterness has never been exceeded even in some of the bitterest years which have succeeded. What happened in 1885 ? In 1885 there was an appeal to the country, and after the controversy on which that appeal was made — an appeal of an electoral kind connected with a Reform Bill—no one dreamt that Home Rule was upon them. It never crossed their imaginations, or those of Mr. Gladstone's colleagues, that he would propose within a few months to attempt to carry a great scheme of Home Rule. I remind my noble friend of these facts, and he has only to listen to what comes from the Benches opposite to know that Home Rule is one of the most living and burning questions that we have got to deal with.

The hon. Member for North Louth in a brilliant speech this afternoon described himself, his Party, and his country as being trodden under the heel of an alien tyranny. In the rest of his speech he explained how they had turned out Mr. Gladstone in 1885, how they had turned out the Tories in 1892—I forget how many other Governments they had turned in. It seems to me that these Government-makers can hardly complain of being trodden under the heel of British tyranny and at the same time boast that they are the makers of British Administrations. The two things are hardly consistent. I believe that of the two statements, neither of which is absolutely accurate, the second is much more accurate than the first. I believe that the political power which these gentlemen wield and boast of using——

Mr. T. M. HEALY: The right hon. Gentleman is quite mistaken in saying that I boasted of it. I did nothing of the kind.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: If the hon. and learned Member will look at the report of his speech he will see that he spoke of the Irish Party turning out Mr. Gladstone here and the Tory Party there; and he quoted a document in which the hon. Member for the Scotland Division of Liverpool requested all Nationalists to vote for the Tory candidates, which, by the way, they did not do.

Mr. T. P. O'CONNOR (Liverpool, Scotland): The right hon. Gentleman is quite wrong. They did, and we expelled from the organisation every Irishman that did not.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: This is an appalling revelation as to the secrecy of the ballot.

Sir H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: You said the same thing.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR dissented.

Sir H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: The right hon. Gentleman said that though the Irish electors were advised to vote for the Tory candidates they did not do so.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: The right hon. Gentleman will know, if he takes any trouble, that the fact whether the Irish vote goes with you or against you is tolerably obvious from the canvassers. [Cries of "Oh!"] But what I want the House, and not least hon. Gentlemen on this side, to realise is that to-night not a new departure, but a new reaffirmation of an old principle, is in the act of being made by the whole of the Party opposite. The hon. Member for Bolton in his speech earlier in the evening adjured his leaders to take a plain, open, and candid course on Home Rule. He said he was a Home Ruler, and that the sympathies of the Party opposite were all for Home Rule, and what they wanted was a lead. I imagine that I am to take the utterances of the right hon. Gentleman this evening as a lead. They were not given in the triumphant tones of a leader assured of his followers; but at all events did state with adequate lucidity that he had been a Home Ruler, that he was a Home Ruler, and that he thought that Home Rule was an impending and immediate question.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: As a matter of fact, I do not think I used a single one of the words attributed to me by the right hon. Gentleman.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I do not profess to be quoting the right hon. Gentleman. Am I, then, to understand that the right hon. Gentleman does not consider Home Rule to be an impending and immediate question? [Cries of "Oh!"] Does he belong to the academic school of the right hon. Gentleman near him?

AN HON. MEMBER: He belongs to the school of MacDonnell."

MR. SPEAKER: This continual running commentary makes it impossible for the right hon. Gentleman to continue his speech.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I make no complaint; but the House will recognise that I have not been treated with the consideration and courtesy extended to the Leader of the Opposition. I do not think that the House has failed to follow the trend of my argument, and my argument is this, that, whereas last night the more sanguine of us might perhaps have taken the view of my noble friend the Member for Greenwich—we might have taken the view that the only object of hon. Gentlemen opposite was decently to bury Home Rule—no man can take that view to-night. No man after the speech of the right hon. Gentleman and after the speeches of other Members below the gangway can doubt that the power of which the hon. Member for Louth spoke is going to be exercised in the future as they have endeavoured to exercise it in the past for driving the not unwilling flock in front of them. [AN HON. MEMBER: What about Wyndham?] Now, Sir, if that be, as I think it is, the situation in which we stand, I would ask my hon. friends from Ulster, who have naturally taken so anxious an interest in this question, whether they think that in this, perhaps the first of the skirmishes in the new combats that are going to take place around this great central and perennial problem, whether they think that in that skirmish they should be found lagging behind. They have made boast not untruly, of the courageous loyalty with which they have served the Unionist Party. We cannot flatter ourselves that the battle in which they have taken so creditable a part is a battle which is over. But I look forward to its consummation without anxiety and without fear if, and if only, the great Party which has ranged itself in favour of the Union remains undivided and undisturbed. [OPPOSITION laughter.] Hon. Gentlemen laugh when I describe it as a great Party. It has hurled them to defeat in the past; it will hurl them yet again to defeat in the future. [Cries of "Try it then."] I trust—and this is the only piece of advice which I shall offer to my hon. friends—I think it absolutely vital, if this contest is to be fought out with success, to sink all smaller causes, and, as we are firmly united to attain the end which we have in view, we should not imperil it by any of these smaller controversies, which sink into absolute insignificance beside the great national and Imperial issues which are before us.

MR. BLAKE (Longford, S.) said that although he agreed that the personal question of Sir Antony MacDonnell had taken too large a part in the debate, yet it had an important bearing upon the vital and main question which was now commanding the attention of the House, because the whole of that fresh and novel incident was a striking exemplification of the truth of the proposition stated in the Amendment. It was also an exemplification and demonstration of the fact that the present system of governing Ireland was intolerable, and not in accordance with constitutional principles. Every one of the propositions contained in the Amendment they had defended and were prepared to defend, and to each of those propositions the assent of a very large body of Members of the House of Commons was about to be given. The Amendment proposed to—

"Represent to Your Majesty that the present system of government in Ireland is in opposition to the will of the Irish people."

Who could deny that? The truth of that proposition had been demonstrated by returns to Parliament at election after election almost without variation, and four-fifths of the representatives of the Irish people had, session after session, and Parliament after Parliament affirmed its truth. The next proposition in the Amendment was that it "Gives them no voice in the management of their own affairs."

It was true that the present system gave them a voice in the sense of enabling them to register their protest against the mismanagement of their affairs, but it gave them, in the spirit in which that voice was accepted and regarded by the majority in this House, no effective voice in the management of their own affairs at all. They often protested, but their protests were disregarded. Quite a different spirit was manifested with reference to the affairs of Scotland. Scotland might find progress slower than she desired in regard to her reforms, but there was no attempt made in the House of Commons to legislate for her in opposition to the will of the people, and Scotch legislation was in accordance with the views of the majority of the representatives for Scotland. Why was Ireland treated differently? The fact that any proposal had the support of the Nationalists generally caused it to be regarded with suspicion. The Amendment further suggested —

"That the system is consequently ineffective and extravagantly costly, does not enjoy the confidence of any section of the population."

Was that disputed? If so, he would refer hon. Members to the words of Lord Lansdowne, himself an Irish landlord, in his speech in another place, in which he spoke of the condition of Irish government and its defects. That the Irish Government did not enjoy the confidence of any section of the population had been abundantly proved by the speeches which had been made during the debate. The Amendment concluded by affirming that the present system of government in Ireland

"Is productive of universal discontent and unrest, and has proved to be incapable of satisfactorily promoting the material and intellectual progress of the people."

In his opinion Irishmen would be unworthy of their name and fame if they were otherwise than unrestful under such a system of government. With regard to the material and intellectual progress of the people, did any one contend that the present Government was even capable of satisfactorily promoting the material progress of Ireland? If they contrasted the population of Ireland and its resources, its wealth and its poverty in the scale of all things material, with that of their more fortunate neighbours on this side of the Channel; if they contrasted the position of the rulers with those they ruled, he ventured to say that in all these respects they would find that the Irish Government had proved itself incapable of satisfactorily promoting the material progress of the Irish people. The Prime Minister had told them years ago that the Unionist Party would not be doing its duty by the country which it was professing to rule if it did not meet the demand for a Catholic University, which was demanded by fourth-fifths of the population. Although the right hon. Gentleman in his individual capacity held these views and expressed them in the House, he now declared that it was impossible to give effect to them, or to give Ireland that opportunity of promoting her intellectual progress which he admitted was her due.

Why was that? It was because the North-east corner of Ireland was represented by hon. Members opposite, who were opposed to intellectual progress being carried on in accordance with the views of the great majority of their fellow-countrymen. Had it not been proved by the action of the Chief Secretary for Ireland? The right hon. Gentleman participated in the Prime Minister's views, but he declared that it was hopeless to attempt to give effect to these views unless there was the consent of that small minority to which he had alluded. Their veto interposed and prevented for all time, or until their hearts changed, the intellectual progress of the Irish people according to the views professed by the first Minister of the country, and also by the Minister who was mainly responsible for the government of the Irish people. The same statement was true of any of the propositions affirmed by the Amendment.

Those who voted against the Amendment had the responsibility imposed on them to find a remedy for the miseries, the injustice, and the distressing conditions which existed in the government of Ireland. The Nationalist Members had not disguised now or at any time what they believed to be the only effective remedy. He ventured to close the debate by repeating the statement that it was by the acceptance of the view that the Irish people should be free to conduct their own internal affairs according to their own views, suffering for their misconceptions if they did misconceive, profiting by their experiments if they did make them successfully, and undertaking the responsibility for the conduct of their own affairs—in that way and in that alone would they find an effective remedy. The feelings and status of the people must necessarily be degraded so long as they were governed from this House in domestic affairs practically irrespective of their own will, and that degradation would be confirmed and deepened, and the conditions of difficulty and despondency would be made greater, if they were compelled to continue, as they would do, the sacred struggle for the rights of the people. They did not profess absolute wisdom and omniscience as to the remedy. Experiments had been suggested of one kind and another. Half-way houses had been talked of by various politicians, but no definition had ever been given at any time, except the definition given in the Dunraven programme, of what these steps should be. The Nationalists did not enter into them; they were not their proposals. Their views were in favour of self-government, but it was the bounden duty of those who acknowledged the intolerable condition of the present system, and who conceived that amelioration could be found by some minor change, some progressive change, to produce plans, and when such plans were produced they would, no doubt, receive the respectful and attentive consideration of Irishmen, who, in all the heat of this struggle, had pressed for those material ameliorations, which might be made much more effectively by an Irish Parliament. If any honest plan could be devised for ameliorating the condition of the Irish people, in God's name produce it, and they would consider it, and if it was a scheme which showed signs of amelioration, and which was not proposed to them as a finality or as more than a progressive step, why, of course, it would be considered. But if they proposed to give something which substantially did not accord with that which they believed to be vital and essential, it should be understood by anticipation that they, as a self-respecting people having the national instinct of freedom, must meet the proposal with deserved rejection.

He did not agree that the discussion of the question which had been mainly discussed in the debate was irrelevant. On the contrary, he thought it furnished fresh demonstration of the fact that in these days, after all that had been done, the government of Ireland was condemned by those who were attempting the task of governing. Incidentally, personal questions and political questions, all of a constitutional nature of no mean importance, had been raised. He did not think that the experiment which admittedly had been tried on this occasion had met with such results as to be likely to induce a repetition. He did not himself understand, after all that had been said on the subject, what precisely was the novel position which had arisen. He did not understand the precise terms and arrangements with reference to Sir Antony MacDonnell's appointment, nor did he understand the view which was taken of the objects, the attainment of which was to be attempted by his action and the action of the Chief Secretary, without seeing the letters which formulated those views. The Chief Secretary said yesterday—

> "I had talked over Ireland with him before I suggested he should become Under-Secretary, and it was because we were both deeply interested in the possibility of doing something for the good of Ireland that, after a fortnight's consideration, he decided he could undertake the task, and we embodied in our letters the conversations in which we had been engaged; and these letters make it perfectly plain and clear that Sir Antony MacDonnell was invited by me rather as a colleague than as a mere Under-Secretary to register my will. And I was glad to have his advice, to welcome any suggestions from him, and it was made clear, subject, of course, to my control, that he was to enjoy a certain freedom of administrative action. Let me be blamed for that if my hon. friends think I made a mistake in the appointment. I do not think I did. But I made clear to Sir Antony MacDonnell all the subjects which I thought within the conceivable bounds of legislative action. It has been suggested, not here this afternoon, but elsewhere, that when I invited Sir Antony MacDonnell to help me in Ireland I had in my mind, and that I imparted to him, some desire to carry out what is called devolution. That is certainly not the case. Nothing of the kind was ever mentioned by either of us. The letters are extant—they are in Sir Antony MacDonnell's possession—and they show that no such problem was contemplated by me at the time of his appointment. We had proposed to deal, in the first place, with the maintenance of order."

The Chief Secretary had given his version of what the letters contained and did not contain. He had made a statement with reference to documents in writing affecting this political question, and the hon. Member conceived that under the Rules of the House on that subject they ought to be laid on the Table. These letters were now in the possession of the Under-Secretary. Let the letters be produced and they would speak for themselves, and their speech and their silence would be alike eloquent in the elucidation of this subject. What did the right hon. Gentleman say that the subjects mentioned in these letters were? The right hon. Gentleman in his speech yesterday said—

> "Here are the problems we hoped to deal with then, and the order in which they were placed—(1) The maintenance of order; (2) a Land Bill on the lines of voluntary purchase, or, where that was impossible, an automatic and cheap system of fixing rents instead of the existing litigious system; (3) education in the spirit of the Prime Minister's views; (4) the co-ordination, direction, and control of detached boards. The co-ordination, or correlation, as I used to call it, of the various boards in Ireland does not suggest to me, and never will suggest to me, the introducing of another board which is to be of an elective character."

They knew how the suggestion as to education was acted upon, and that there was a communication with the authorities at Belfast on the subject, by Sir Antony MacDonnell; they knew that an effort was made to carry out the Prime Minister's views. But the curious thing was that they were not the Prime Minister's views; they were the views of Mr. Balfour, and he did not entertain those views as Prime Minister. The right hon. Gentleman had declared that he could only speak in his private capacity and in his capacity as a Member of Parliament, but that, as Prime Minister he could not bring forward those views at all. The Prime Minister being debarred from taking legislative action on this question, what did the Chief Secretary do? He made education part of the programme which he and his Under-Secretary were to advance, in accordance with the Prime Minister's views. Sir Antony MacDonnell was therefore encouraged and authorised to go on in the formulation of a programme and a propaganda on education in the sense of the Prime Minister's views. Nothing could more clearly indicate the extraordinary degree of power imparted to Sir Antony MacDonnell, and nothing could better demonstate the absolutely unique and unexampled character of the arrangement between the Chief Secretary and that gentleman. The proposal to co-ordinate the forty-two or forty-three detached boards in Ireland involved an immense problem, and it went to the root of the whole question of administrative reform. It seemed to him that the gravest injustice had been done by the Chief Secretary to Sir Antony MacDonnell. The right hon. Gentleman used these words—

> "I had spoken on these lines to Sir Antony MacDonnell, and he, with his Indian experience, found analogies between my ideas and the views which he had formed in India. But here comes the first source of serious misunderstanding. When Sir Antony MacDonnell has spoken to me of the Indian Budget and of provincial contracts I, who am colossally ignorant about Indian affairs, did not know that in India there is a semi-elective council with a voice in these matters; and therefore it never occurred to me during the conversations I had with Sir Antony MacDonnell that, in pointing out the analogy between Indian finances and some of the ideas I had in my mind, he had in his mind, unexpressed, or at any rate not clear to me, the idea that another board would come into existence partially elective, a board to which I should have to submit my Estimates, in addition to the Treasury and this House."

In view of the arrangement made between the Chief Secretary and Sir Antony MacDonnell and the action of Sir Antony, one could well understand that misunderstanding might arise, but what one could not understand in the face of the conditions disclosed was how such a harsh censure should have been passed upon him as had been when he was told that his conduct was indefensible. He agreed with the noble Lord the Member for Greenwich that the nearer they got to the truth in this matter the better it would be. It was essential to secure efficiency in the public service, but how could they get the best men if they were to be treated as Sir Antony MacDonnell had been in this matter. His conduct was not indefensible. There was a misunderstanding, but that misunderstanding ought to have been stated. He was reasonably justified in believing that he had authority for proposing the scheme which was proposed. The discussion of this question had shown the abnormal character of the Irish Government, and the only way to get out of the situation which existed in Ireland was to let the Irish attend to their own domestic concerns.

Question put.

The House divided—Ayes, 236; Noes, 286. (Division List, No. 6).

AYES.

Abraham, William (Cork, N. E.
Abraham, William (Rhondda)
Allen, Charles P.
Ambrose, Robert
Asher, Alexander
Ashton, Thomas Gair
Asquith, Rt. Hn. Herbert Henry
Atherley-Jones, L.
Barlow, John Emmott
Barran, Rowland Hirst
Barry, E. (Cork, S.)
Bayley, Thomas (Derbyshire)
Beaumont, Wentworth C. B.
Bell, Richard
Benn, John Williams
Black, Alexander William
Blake, Edward
Bolton, Thomas Dolling
Brand, Hon. Arthur G.
Brigg, John
Bright, Allan Heywood
Broadhurst, Henry
Brown, George M. (Edinburgh)
Brunner, Sir John Tomlinson
Bryce, Rt. Hon. James
Buchanan, Thomas Ryburn
Burke, E. Haviland
Burns, John
Buxton, Sydney Charles
Caldwell, James
Cameron, Robert
Campbell, John (Armagh, S.)
Campbell-Bannerman, Sir H.
Carvill, Patrick Geo. Hamilton
Causton, Richard Knight
Cawley, Frederick
Channing, Francis Allston
Cheetham, John Frederick
Churchill, Winston Spencer
Clancy, John Joseph
Cogan, Denis J.
Condon, Thomas Joseph
Craig, Robert Hunter (Lanark
Crean, Eugene
Cremer, William Randal
Crombie, John William
Cullinan, J.
Dalziel, James Henry
Davies, Alfred (Carmarthen)
Davies, M. Vaughan (Cardigan
Delany, William
Devlin, Chas. Ramsay (Galway
Devlin, Joseph (Kilkenny, N.)
Dewar, John A. (Inverness-sh.
Dilke, Rt. Hon. Sir Charles
Dillon, John
Dobbie, Joseph
Doogan, P. C.
Douglas, Charles M. (Lanark)
Duffy, William J.
Duncan, J. Hastings
Dunn, Sir William
Edwards, Frank
Elibank, Master of
Ellice, Capt E C (S. Andrw'sB'ghs
Ellis, John Edward (Notts.)
Emmott, Alfred
Evans, Sir Francis H (Maidstone
Eve, Harry Trelawney
Farrell, James Patrick
Fenwick, Charles
Ferguson, R. C. Munro (Leith)
Ffrench, Peter
Field, William
Findlay, Alexander (Lanark NE
Flavin, Michael Joseph
Flynn, James Christopher
Foster, Sir Walter (Derby Co.)
Fowler, Rt. Hon. Sir Henry
Freeman-Thomas, Captain F.
Fuller, J. M. F.
Gilhooly, James
Gladstone, Rt. Hn Herbert John
Goddard, Daniel Ford
Grant, Corrie
Grey, Rt. Hon. Sir E. (Berwick)
Griffith, Ellis J.
Guest, Hon. Ivor Churchill
Gurdon, Sir W. Brampton
Haldane, Rt. Hon. Richard B.
Hammond, John
Hardie, J. Keir (Merthyr Tydvil
Harmsworth, R. Leicester
Harrington, Timothy
Harwood, George
Hayden, John Patrick
Hayter, Rt. Hon. Sir Arthur D.
Healy, Timothy Michael
Helme, Norval Watson
Hemphill, Rt. Hon. Charles H.
Henderson, Arthur (Durham)
Higham, John Sharpe
Hobhouse, C. E. H. (Bristol, E.
Holland, Sir William Henry
Hope, John Deans (Fife, West)
Hutchinson, Dr. Charles Fredk.
Hutton, Alfred E. (Morley)
Isaacs, Rufus Daniel
Johnson, John
Joicey, Sir James
Jones, Wm. (Carnarvonshire)
Jordan, Jeremiah
Joyce, Michael
Kearley, Hudson E.
Kennedy, P. J. (Westmeath, N.)
Kennedy, Vincent P. (Cavan, W.
Kilbride, Denis
Kitson, Sir James
Labouchere, Henry
Langley, Batty
Law, Hugh Alex. (Donegal, W.)
Lawson, Sir Wilfrid (Cornwall)
Layland-Barratt, Francis
Leese, Sir Joseph F. (Accrington)
Leigh, Sir Joseph
Levy, Maurice
Lewis, John Herbert
Lloyd-George, David
Lough, Thomas
Lundon, W.
Lyell, Charles Henry
Macnamara, Dr. Thomas J.

MacNeill, John Gordon Swift
MacVeagh, Jeremiah
M'Arthur, William (Cornwall)
M'Crae, George
M'Fadden, Edward
M'Hugh, Patrick A.
M'Kean, John
M'Kenna, Reginald
M'Killop, W. (Sligo, North)
Mitchell,Edw.(Fermanagh, N.)
Mooney, John J.
Morley,Rt.Hn.John(Montrose)
Moss, Samuel
Moulton, John Fletcher
Murnaghan, George
Murphy, John
Nannetti, Joseph P.
Newnes, Sir George
Nolan,Col.John P.(Galway,N.)
Nolan, Joseph (Louth, South)
Norman, Henry
Norton, Capt. Cecil William
Nussey, Thomas Willans
O'Brien, James F. X. (Cork)
O'Brien,Kendal (TipperaryMid
O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
O'Brien, P. J. (Tipperary, N.)
O'Connor, John (Kildare, N.)
O'Connor, T. P. (Liverpool)
O'Doherty, William
O'Donnell, John (Mayo, S.)
O'Dowd, John
O'Kelly, Conor (Mayo, N.)
O'Kelly, James(Roscommon,N
O'Malley, William
O'Mara, James
O'Shaughnessy, P. J.
O'Shee, James John
Parrott, William
Partington, Oswald
Paulton, James Mellor
Pease, J. A. (Saffron Walden)
Pirie, Duncan V.
Power, Patrick Joseph
Rea, Russell
Reckitt, Harold James
Reddy, M.
Redmond, John E. (Waterford)
Reid, SirR.Threshie(Dumfries)
Richards, Thos. (W. Monm'th)
Rickett, J. Compton
Roberts, John Bryn (Eifion)
Roberts, John H. (Denbighs.)
Robertson, Edmund (Dundee)
Robson William Snowdon,
Roche, John
Roe, Sir Thomas
Rose, Charles Day
Runciman, Walter
Russell, T. W.
Samuel, Herbert L.(Cleveland)
Schwann, Charles E.
Scott. Chas. Prestwich (Leigh)
Shackleton, David James
Shaw, Thomas (Hawick B.)
Sheehy, David
Shipman, Dr. John G.
Sinclair, John (Forfarshire)
Slack, John Bamford
Smith, Samuel (Flint)
Soames, Arthur Wellesley
Soares, Ernest J.
Spencer,Rt.Hn.C.R. (N'thants)
Stevenson, Francis S.
Strachey, Sir Edward
Sullivan, Donal
Taylor, Theodore C. (Radcliffe)
Tennant, Harold John
Thomas, Abel(Carmarthen, E.)
Thomas, Sir A. (Glamorgan, E.)
Thomas,DavidAlfred (Merthyr)
Thompson,Dr E.C.(Monagh'nN
Thomson, F. W. (York, W. R.)
Tomkinson, James
Toulmin, George
Trevelyan, Charles Philips
Ure, Alexander
Waldron, Laurence Ambrose
Wallace, Robert
Walton, Joseph (Barnsley)
Warner, Thomas Courtenay T.
Wason, Eugene (Clackmannan)
Weir, James Galloway
White, George (Norfolk)
White, Luke (York, E. R.)
White, Patrick (Meath, North)
Whiteley, George (York, W.R.)
Whitley, J. H. (Halifax)
Whittaker, Thomas Palmer
Williams, Osmond (Merioneth)
Wills,Arthur Walters(NDorset)
Wilson, John (Durham, Mid.)
Woodhouse,Sir JT(Huddersf'd)
Young, Samuel

TELLERS FOR THE AYES—Sir Thomas Esmonde and Captain Donelan,

NOES.

Agg-Gardner, James Tynte
Agnew, Sir Andrew Noel
Allhusen,Augustus HenryEden
Allsopp, Hon. George
Anson, Sir William Reynell
Arkwright, John Stanhope
Arnold-Forster,Rt.Hn.Hugh O.
Arrol, Sir William
Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
Bagot, Capt. Josceline FitzRoy
Bailey, James (Walworth)
Bain, Colonel James Robert
Baird, John George Alexander
Balcarres, Lord
Balfour, Rt. Hn. A. J.(Manchr')
Balfour,RtHn GeraldW(Leeds)
Balfour, Kenneth R.(Christch.)
Banbury, Sir Frederick George
Bartley, Sir George C. T.
Bathurst, Hon. Allen Benjamin
Beach,RtHn.Sir Michael Hicks
Bentinck, Lord Henry C.
Bhownaggree, Sir M. M.
Bigwood, James
Blundell, Colonel Henry
Bond, Edward
Boscawen, Arthur Griffith
Bousfield, William Robert
Bowles,Lt.-Col.HF (Middlesex)
Bowles,T.Gibson (King's Lynn
Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John
Brown, Sir Alex. H. (Shropsh.)
Brymer, William Ernest
Bull, Willaim James
Burdett-Coutts, W.
Butcher, John George
Campbell,J.H.M.(Dublin Univ.
Carlile, William Walter
Carson, Rt. Hon. Sir Edw. H.
Cautley, Henry Strother
Cavendish, R. F. (N. Lancs.)
Cavendish, V. C. W. (Derbysh.)
Cecil, Evelyn (Aston Manor)
Cecil, Lord Hugh (Greenwich)
Chamberlain,Rt.Hn.J. (Birm.)
Chamberlain,Rt Hn.JA(Worc.)
Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry
Chapman, Edward
Clare, Octavius Leigh
Coates, Edward Feetham
Cochrane, Hon. Thos. H. A. E.
Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
Colomb,Rt.Hn.Sir John C. R.
Colston, Chas. Edw. H. Athole
Compton, Lord Alwyne
Cook, Sir Frederick Lucas
Corbett, A, Cameron (Glasgow)
Cripps, Charles Alfred
Cross, Alexander (Glasgow)
Crossley, Rt. Hon. Sir Savile
Cubitt, Hon. Henry
Cust, Henry John C.
Dalrymple, Sir Charles
Davenport, William Bromley
Davies,Sir HoratioD(Chatham)
Denny, Colonel
Dickinson, Robert Edmond
Dickson, Charles Scott
Dickson-Poynder, Sir John P.
Dimsdale,Rt.Hn.Sir Joseph C.
Disraeli, Coningsby Ralph
Dixon-Hartland,Sir FredDixon
Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers
Doxford, Sir William Theodore
Duke, Henry Edward
Dyke,Rt.Hn. Sir William Hart
Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
Elliot, Hon. A. Ralph Douglas
Fardell, Sir T. George
Fergusson,RtHn SirJ.(Manc'r.)
Finch, Rt. Hon. George H.
Finlay,Sir RB.(Inv'rn'ssB'ghs.)
Fisher, William Hayes
Fison, Frederick William
FitzGerald, Sir Robert Penrose
Fitzroy, Hon. Edw. Algernon
Flannery, Sir Fortescue
Flower, Sir Ernest
Forster, Henry William
Galloway, William Johnson
Gardner, Ernest
Garfit, William
Gibbs, Hon. A. G. H.
Godson, SirAugustusFrederick
Gordon, Hn J.E. (Elgin&Nairn)
Gordon,Maj Evans-(T'rH'mlets
Gore, Hon. S. F. Ormsby-
Gorst, Rt. Hn. Sir John Eldon
Goschen, Hon. George Joachim

Goulding, Edward Alfred
Graham, Henry Robert
Gray, Ernest (West Ham)
Green, Walford D.(Wednesbury
Greene, Sir EW(B'rySEdm'nds)
Greene, Henry D.(Shrewsbury)
Greene, W. Raymond (Cambs.)
Grenfell, William Henry
Gretton, John
Guthrie, Walter Murray
Hain, Edward
Hall, Edward Marshall
Halsey, Rt. Hon. Thomas F.
Hambro, Charles Eric
Hamilton, Marq. of (L'nd'nderry
Hamilton, Rt. Hn. Ld G(M'd'sex)
Hardy, Laurence (Kent, Ashford
Hare, Thomas Leigh
Harris, F. Leverton (Tyne'mth)
Halsam, Sir Alfred S.
Haslett, Sir James Horner
Hay, Hon. Claude George
Heath, Arthur Howard (Hanley
Heath, Sir Jas. (Staffords. N.W.)
Heaton, John Henniker
Helder, Augustus
Henderson, Sir A. (Stafford, W.)
Hermon-Hodge, Sir Robert T.
Hickman, Sir Alfred
Hoare, Sir Samuel
Hobhouse, Rt. Hn. H. (Som's't, E.
Hogg, Lindsay
Hope, J. F. (Sheffield Brightside)
Horner, Frederick William
Houldsworth, Sir Wm. Henry
Hoult, Joseph
Houston, Robert Paterson
Howard J. (Midd., Tottenham)
Hozier, Hn. James Henry Cecil
Hudson, George Bickersteth
Hunt, Rowland
Jeffreys, Rt. Hn. Arthur Fred.
Jessel, Captain Herbert Merton
Kennaway, Rt. Hn. Sir John H.
Kenyon, Hon. Geo. T. (Denbigh)
Kenyon-Slaney, Rt. Hon. Col. W
Kerr, John
Kimber, Sir Henry
King, Sir Henry Seymour
Knowles, Sir Lees
Lambton, Hon. Frederick Wm.
Laurie, Lieut-General
Law, Andrew Bonar (Glasgow)
Lawrence, Sir Joseph (Monm'th
Lawson, Hn. H. L. W. (Mile End)
Lawson, John Grant (Yorks, NR
Lee, Arthur H. (Hants., Fareham
Legge, Col. Hon. Heneage
Leveson-Gower, Frederick N.S.
Llewellyn, Evan Henry
Lockwood, Lieut.-Col. A. R.
Loder, Gerald Walter Erskine
Long, Col. Charles W. (Evesham
Long, Rt. Hn. Walter (Bristol, S.
Lowe, Francis William
Lowther, C. (Cumb. Eskdale)
Lucas, Col. Francis (Lowestoft)
Lucas, Reginald J. (Portsmouth
Lyttelton, Rt. Hon. Alfred
Macdona, John Cumming
Maconochie, A. W.
M'Arthur, Charles (Liverpool)
M'Iver, Sir Lewis (Edinburgh W.
Majendie, James A. H.
Manners, Lord Cecil
Marks, Harry Hananel
Martin, Richard Biddulph
Maxwell, Rt. Hn. Sir HE(Wigt'n
Maxwell, W. J. H. (Dumfriesshire
Mildmay, Francis Bingham
Milner, Rt. Hn. Sir Frederick G.
Milvain, Thomas
Molesworth, Sir Lewis
Montagu, G. (Huntingdon)
Montagu, Hon. J. Scott (Hants.)
Moon, Edward Robert Pacy
Morgan, David J (Walthamstow
Morpeth, Viscount
Morrell, George Herbert
Morrison, James Archibald
Morton, Arthur H. Aylmer
Mount, William Arthur
Mowbray, Sir Robert Gray C.
Muntz, Sir Philip A.
Murray, Charles J. (Coventry)
Myers, William Henry
Nicholson, William Graham
Palmer, Sir Walter (Salisbury)
Parker, Sir Gilbert
Parkes, Ebenezer
Pease, Herbert Pike (Darlington
Peel, Hn. Wm. Robert Wellesley
Pemberton, John S. G.
Percy Earl
Pierpoint, Robert
Pilkington, Colonel Richard
Plummer, Sir Walter R.
Powell, Sir Francis Sharp
Pretyman, Ernest George
Pryce-Jones, Lt.-Col. Edward
Purvis, Robert
Pym, C. Guy
Quilter, Sir Cuthbert
Randles, John S.
Rankin, Sir James
Ratcliff, R. F.
Reid, James (Greenock)
Remnant, James Farquharson
Renshaw, Sir Charles Bine
Renwick, George
Roberts, Samuel (Sheffield)
Robertson, Herbert (Hackney)
Rollit, Sir Albert Kaye
Rothschild, Hn. Lionel Walter
Round, Rt. Hon. James
Royds, Clement Molyneux
Rutherford, John (Lancashire)
Sackville, Col. S. G. Stopford
Sadler, Col. Samuel Alexander
Samuel, Sir Harry S. (Limehouse
Sandys, Lieut.-Col. Thos. Myles
Sassoon, Sir Edward Albert
Scott, Sir S. (Marylebone, W.)
Seely, Charles Hilton (Lincoln)
Seton-Karr, Sir Henry
Sharpe, William Edward T.
Shaw-Stewart, Sir H. (Renfrew)
Simeon, Sir Barrington
Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
Skewes-Cox, Thomas
Smith, Abel H. (Hertford, East)
Smith, HC (North'mb. Tyneside
Smith, RtHn JParker (Lanarks.
Smith, Hon. W. F. D. (Strand)
Spear, John Ward
Stanley, Hon. Arthur (Ormskirk
Stanley, Rt. Hon. Lord (Lancs.)
Stewart, Sir Mark J. M'Taggart
Stirling-Maxwell, Sir John M.
Stock, James Henry
Stone, Sir Benjamin
Stroyan, John
Strutt, Hon. Charles Hedley
Talbot, Lord E. (Chichester)
Taylor, Austin (East Toxteth)
Thorburn, Sir Walter
Thornton, Percy M.
Tollemache, Henry James
Tomlinson, Sir Wm. Edw. M.
Tritton, Charles Ernest
Tuff, Charles
Tufnell, Lieut.-Col. Edward
Tuke, Sir John Batty
Turnour, Viscount
Valentia, Viscount
Vincent, Col. Sir C E H (Sh'ffi'd)
Vincent, Sir Edgar (Exeter)
Walrond, Rt. Hn. Sir William H.
Wanklyn, James Leslie
Warde, Colonel C. E.
Webb, Col. William George
Welby, Lt.-Col. A. C. E. (T'n'ton)
Welby, Sir Chas. G. E. (Notts.)
Wharton, Rt. Hon. John Lloyd
Whiteley, H. (Ashton und. Lyne
Whitmore, Charles Algernon
Williams, Colonel R. (Dorset)
Wilson, A. Stanley (York, E. R.
Wilson, John (Glasgow)
Wilson-Todd, Sir W. H. (Yorks.)
Wodehouse, Rt. Hn. E. R. (Bath
Worsley-Taylor, Henry Wilson
Wortley, Rt. Hon. C. B. Stuart
Wrightson, Sir Thomas
Wylie, Alexander
Wyndham, Rt. Hon. George
Yerburgh, Robert Armstrong

TELLERS FOR THE NOES—Sir Alexander Acland-Hood and Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes.

Main Question again proposed.

And, it being after Midnight, the debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed to-morrow.

Adjourned at twelve minutes after Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, 22nd February, 1905.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

PETITIONS.

AGRICULTURAL RATES, CONGESTED DISTRICTS, AND BURGH LAND TAX RELIEF (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1896.

Petition from Dumbartonshire, for continuance; to lie upon the Table.

SUGAR TAX.

Petitions for repeal; from Ashton-under-Lyne (two); and Nelson; to lie upon the Table.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

PRISONS (ENGLAND AND WALES).

Paper [presented 21st February]; to be printed. [No. 54.]

WAGES AND EFFECTS OF DECEASED SEAMEN.

Account [presented 21st February]; to be printed. [No. 55.]

JUDICIAL STATISTICS (ENGLAND AND WALES).

Copy presented, of Judicial Statistics for England and Wales, 1903, Part II. (Civil Judicial Statistics), edited by Sir John MacDonnell, C.B., LL.D., Master of the Supreme Court [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

CIVIL SERVICES (SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1904–5).

Estimate presented, of the Further Sums required to be voted for the Service of the year ending 31st March, 1905 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 56.]

COLONIES (GENERAL).

Copy presented, of Further Papers relating to the proposed adoption of a Metric System of Weights and Measures for use within the Empire [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (IRELAND).

Copy presented, of a General Order of the Local Government Board for Ireland entitled the Union Accounts Order, 1905 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

HOUSE OF COMMONS (VENTILATION).

Copy presented, of Report of an Investigation of the Ventilation of the Debating Chamber of the House of Commons, and Recommendations for its Improvement, by Dr. M. H. Gordon [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

CONTRACTS OF LOCAL AUTHORITIES (WAGES).

Address for "Return showing—(1) for England and Wales, as regards each County Council, Town Council, Metropolitan Borough Council, Urban and Rural District Council, and Board of Guardians; (2) for Scotland, as regards each County Council, Town Council, Parish Council, and District Committee; and (3) for Ireland, as regards each County Council, Town Council, Urban District Council (not being a Town Council), Rural District Council, and Board of Guardians; whether the Contracts entered into by the Authority for the execution of works specify any conditions as to the Wages to be paid by the Contractor, or other conditions with regard to the persons employed by him; and, if so, what are the conditions so specified."—(Sir Charles Dilke.)

NAVY (VESSELS STRUCK OFF EFFECTIVE LIST).

Return ordered, "of the Vessels struck off the list of Effective Ships of War, showing the name, date of completion, cost of hull, machinery, and armament, cost of repairs during the last ten years, date and cost of the last substantial repair with a view to commission, and the aggregate complement of officers and men."—(Mr. Edmund Robertson.)

NAVY (CRUISERS NOT STRUCK OFF EFFECTIVE LIST).

Return ordered, "of Protected and Unprotected Cruisers included in the Return presented to Parliament in 1904 (No. 136) which have not been struck off the list of Effective Ships, showing date of completion, cost, and aggregate complement of officers and men."—(Mr Edmund Robertson.)

An Asterisk (*) at the commencement of a Speech indicates revision by the Member.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

Ventilation of the House of Commons.

MR. WYLIE (Dumbartonshire): To ask the hon. Member for Chorley, as representing the First Commissioner of Works, what has been done during the recess for improving the ventilation and sanitary arrangements of the House of Commons' Buildings; and what, if anything, still remains to be done to fulfil the recommendations of the Committee's Report on this subject.

(Answered by Lord Balcarres.) During the recess the recommendations of the Select Committee of the House of Commons with reference to the ventilation have been carried into effect, with the exception of the completion of the extract fan. This has been delayed by reason of structural difficulties incidental to the floor of the Commons Lobby Chamber, but it is expected that this fan will be running within a month from date. The principal improvements already effected are: (1) The complete washing of the air by means of a new type of water screen; (2) The erection of a much more powerful intake fan; (3) The more effective isolation of passages joining the main airways. This will be followed by experimental tests having in view the better distribution of air to the Chamber, and also by tests of the air so distributed. It is hoped that the works already completed will result in a very considerable improvement in the quantity and quality of the air supply.

Mail Delays at Portree.

MR. JOHN DEWAR (Inverness): To ask the Postmaster-General whether he is aware that, in consequence of the steamer "Lochiel" being frequently late in her arrival at Portree, the mails for Dunvegan and Uig are delayed; and will he communicate with the contractors for this service in order that a larger and faster steamer may be provided.

(Answered by Lord Stanley.) I will make inquiry respecting the circumstances under which the steamer "Lochiel" has been late in arrival at Portree, and the result shall be communicated to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Post Office and Postal Telegraph Clerks' Association.

MR. BELL (Derby): To ask the Postmaster-General whether he is aware that an officer attached to the Controller's staff has been visiting the post offices in the Eastern Central district, London, which are staffed by women, for the purpose of persuading them from joining the Postal Telegraphs Clerks' Association; and, if so, will he state if such action was taken with his sanction, and whether the women counter clerks and telegraphists suffer any disabilities from joining this organisation.

(Answered by Lord Stanley.) I am informed that there is no foundation for the suggestion conveyed by the hon. Member's Question. If his allegation is based on any definite facts, perhaps he will communicate them to me.

Pay for Extra Duty in Excise and Inland Revenue Departments.

MR. JOSEPH DEVLIN (Kilkenny, N.): To ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in view of the fact that officers of Excise, performing duty for absent officers for whom no substitute can be provided, receive special remuneration for such duty, while clerks in the offices of the collectors of Inland Revenue under similar circumstances are expected to perform the extra duty without any remuneration, he will take steps to place the two branches on an equality in this respect.

(Answered by Mr. Victor Cavendish.) I am unable to undertake to do what the hon. Member suggests, as the two branches of the Inland Revenue service to which he refers do not stand on the same footing. A clerk in a collector's office is one of several, and the duties of the office as a whole have to be discharged by the staff as a whole. An officer of Excise, on the other hand, occupies an isolated position with specified duties, and any addition thereto, caused by his discharging similar duties in an adjoining station, increases his work in a distinct and definite manner.

Local Authorities' Accounts in Ireland.

MR. JOSEPH DEVLIN: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, in view of the protests which are being made by the public bodies of Ireland against the new Orders of the Local Government Board for the keeping of accounts, and of the statement made by officials of the Local Government Board as to the submission of draft Orders to the county councils previous to their issue, he will state the names of the county councils which considered these Orders, and also the names of the public officials who approved of them previous to their issue, and say whether the boards of guardians and rural district councils were asked for their opinions prior to their issue.

MR. WILLIAM McKILLOP (Sligo, N.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he can state the names of the county councils, rural district councils, and boards of guardians in Ireland in which the accounts were presented for audit in an unsatisfactory manner owing to the deficiency of the system prescribed in 1899; and if he will point out the cause which led to the superseding of that system.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) The Public Bodies Order was sent to every county council and county borough council, with all of whom the Board was in correspondence prior to the issue of the Order. It was also sent to a number of the councils of the larger urban districts. Many valuable suggestions were received from the local authorities, and these have been adopted by the Board. The communications received from public officials on the subject are confidential, and it would be contrary to practice to publish their names. The Union Accounts Order was not sent in draft to boards of guardians since it contained no material alterations upon the old Order. The Board's experience of the accounts of the local authorities mentioned in the Question of the hon. Member for North Sligo pointed to the necessity of the amendments which have been made in the new Order. The accounts of these authorities were, as a rule, presented for audit as satisfactorily as the Board could have wished or expected, having regard to the fact that the old Order, made prior to the coming into operation of the Local Government Act of 1898, admittedly contained many imperfections. At various times during the past five years some of the most experienced accounting officers of the local authorities have directed the Board's attention to matters in respect of which the original Order required modifications and improvements, and there are no provisions in the new Order which are not the result of the experience gained since 1899.

MR. JOSEPH DEVLIN: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether, in view of the fact that a new system of accounts was prescribed for the Poor Law Unions of Ireland in the year 1899, and acted on by all the Poor Law Boards, he will say whether there was any complaint made by any of the boards of guardians as to the insufficiency of these accounts for public requirements; and whether, seeing that some of the forms prescribed in that Order were copyrighted by a Local Government Board auditor, and that a number of the boards of guardians and district councils have protested against any departure being made in the accounts, they having gone to considerable expense by the previous Order, and being satisfied with the present system, he will, in the case of small unions whose guardians have declared in favour of an amalgamation scheme, recommend to the Local Government Board the deference of the operation of the new Orders until the question of amalgamation is settled.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) The forms of the Union Accounts Order are almost identical with the old forms, and where any alterations to the headings are necessary they can be made by the clerk of the union in the existing books with very little trouble. No copyright in the forms exists and it is open to any printer to prepare books in accordance with the prescribed forms for use by Poor Law Unions. The forms of accounts could not be affected by amalgamation of unions and no advantage would be gained by suspending the operation of the Order pending the Report of the Commission.

Qualifications of Manual Instructresses and Others in Needlework.

Mr. SLOAN (Belfast, S.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland what method is adopted by the Commissioners of Education in testing the qualifications of a manual instructress and others in needlework, and if the manager of a school is at liberty to appeal elsewhere in case he considers the decision of the Directress of Needlework unfair.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) Candidates for the position of manual instructress and others who do not hold certificates of competency in needlework, are tested in needlework in the presence of one of the Board's inspectors. The worked specimens are forwarded to the Directress of Needlework for examination, and she decides whether the candidates have passed the tests and are qualified for certificates in the subjects. The manager of a school may appeal to the Commissioners should he not be satisfied with the decision of the Directress in any case.

Directress of Needlework.

Mr. SLOAN: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he can state what are the precise duties and salary attached to the position of Directress of Needlework under the Commissioners of National Education.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) The Directress of Needlework is charged with the general supervision of needlework instruction in national schools. She also examines and judges the specimens of needlework done by King's scholars from the training colleges at the annual examinations of candidates for the position of national teacher and manual instructress, and of pupil teachers, monitors, etc. The salary attached to the position is £150, rising by annual increments of £10 to a maximum of £200 per annum, with travelling and subsistence allowances.

Volunteer Mounted Infantry.

Sir HOWARD VINCENT (Sheffield, Central): To ask the Secretary of State for War if he is aware that in 1900 and 1901 several corps of Volunteers formed, at the direct invitation of the War Office and at considerable expense to the country for equipment, companies of mounted infantry, some of which are now at full strength and highly efficient, and if, having regard to these facts, the special capitation grant which is essential for the provision of horses and has been in force until the close of the last Volunteer year may be continued.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Arnold-Forster.) The Army Council have decided that the grant should be continued during the coming year, but I propose to make a further statement in regard to this matter when a suitable occasion arises in debate.

Pay of the Army.

Sir HOWARD VINCENT: To ask the Secretary of State for War if he is aware that the United States of America find no difficulty, despite the higher pay and greater prospects of civil life therein compared to Great Britain, in obtaining annually 100,000 white candidates, between twenty-one and thirty-five years of age, from which to select 30,000 recruits, at 1s. 9d. per diem pay, for their regular army, and that this is attributable to the clear conditions of military service placed before the public; and if he will consider the desirability, with like object in view, of simplifying the various rates of pay in His Majesty's Service and making it clear to every youth thinking of adopting the Army as a profession what salaries it offers in the various grades, arms, and climates, clear of all stoppages and deductions for messing, clothing, equipment, sickness, or hair-cutting.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Arnold-Forster.) The conditions prevailing in the United States are somewhat different from those which exist in this country; but I am in full agreement with my hon. friend in thinking that it is most desirable to simplify the various rates of pay, and to make the terms and conditions of service perfectly clear to all young men who wish to join the Army. The matter is now under the consideration of the Army Council, and I am most anxious to give effect to the views of the hon. Member. The terms and conditions of service are now so advantageous that it is very important they should be fully understood.

Militia Officers.

MR. REGINALD LUCAS (Portsmouth): To ask the Secretary of State for War whether, in view of the present difficulty in obtaining officers for the Militia, in consequence of existing doubts as to the future of the force, he can give any assurance that officers now incurring the expense incidental to joining will be permitted to retain the right to wear the uniform in the event of the abolition of their battalions.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Arnold-Forster.) I am afraid that I cannot undertake to give any such pledge as that suggested in the Question, in anticipation of any measures for the re-organisation of the Militia which might involve the abolition of any battalion.

Federated Malay States.

MR. SPEAR (Devonshire, Tavistock): To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether the Federated Malay States have ever been formally annexed by the Crown so as to officially form part of the British Empire; and, if not, whether the portion of the State revenue that is allotted to the Sultans of those States for the maintenance of their dignity can be officially designated by colonial officers as fixed salaries settled by the High Commissioner, subject to the approval of the Secretary of State.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) The Federated Malay States have not been annexed. Their relations with His Majesty's Government are determined by treaties in which the Sultans have undertaken to follow the advice of the British Residents and Resident-General in all matters of administration other than those touching the Mohammedan religion. The allowances paid to the Sultans are fixed by the High Commissioner, subject to the approval of the Secretary of State, and have been frequently described as "Salaries," both in official correspondence and in the Annual Estimates of the Malay States.

Protection of Trawlers on the Dogger Bank.

SIR SEYMOUR KING (Hull, Central): To ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether arrangements have been made to afford full protection to the fishing fleet on the Dogger Bank during the passage of the Russian third Baltic Fleet through the North Sea.

(Answered by Mr. A. J. Balfour.) His Majesty's Government place implicit reliance on the assurance given by the Russian Government that they have taken every precaution to guard against the recurrence of such incidents as that of 21st–22nd October, and that special instructions have been issued to the whole Russian Fleet with that object.

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

Admiralty Yacht "Enchantress."

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Admiralty whether the new Admiralty yacht "Enchantress" is to be remodelled and partly reconstructed by work affecting the whole interior of the ship; what is the total estimated cost of the alterations to be made in the ship and from what source is their cost to be defrayed; and what will be the total cost of the ship, including the alterations.

* THE SECRETARY TO THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. PRETYMAN, Suffolk, Woodbridge): The reply to the first part of the hon. Member's Question is No. The reply to the second part is £412, to be met from the sum provided for Repairs and Alterations to Ships in Commission and Reserve, Portsmouth Programme. The total cost of the ship, including approved alterations, is £126,753.

MR, GIBSON BOWLES: Has the last instalment been paid for the ship and has she been taken over?

* MR. PRETYMAN asked for notice of that Question.

Indian Cavalry—The Patterson Equipment.

SIR CARNE RASCH (Essex, Chelmsford): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War whether the Patterson equipment has been adopted for the Indian cavalry; and whether it will be applied to the British cavalry, seeing that the bucket appliance weighs 4 lbs. and the Patterson arrangement 12 ozs. only.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. ARNOLD-FORSTER, Belfast, W.): I understand that the Patterson equipment is used by a portion of the Indian cavalry. I believe that recent reports show that there is some doubt as to whether the pattern adopted is satisfactory from the point of view of durability. As regards cavalry on the British Establishment, it has been decided not to adopt this equipment at present, as the advantages derived from its use are considered to be more than balanced by its disadvantages. I must point out that the weight of the new bucket is only 2½ lbs., and not 4 lbs. as stated in the Question. It is probable that further information with regard to the value of this equipment will shortly be received from India.

The Transvaal Loan.

*MR. McCRAE (Edinburgh, E.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies if he has communicated with Lord Milner as to the advisability of issuing at an early date the first instalment of £10,000,000 of the Transvaal Loan; and, if so, whether he can state Lord Milner's views as to the most suitable date of issue.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. LYTTELTON, Warwick and Leamington): I am not at present prepared to make any statement on this subject.

*MR. McCRAE: When shall we have an opportunity of getting an Answer from some member of the Government?

[No Answer was returned.]

SIR ALBERT ROLLIT (Islington, S.): May I ask whether, apart from any reference to Lord Milner, it is intended to issue this loan?

MR. LYTTELTON: That depends upon what the Chancellor of the Exchequer says.

MR. SYDNEY BUXTON (Tower Hamlets, Poplar): Will the right hon. Gentleman lay Papers dealing with the subject on the Table of the House?

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: Does the right hon. Gentleman remember that we were promised this instalment at the beginning of 1904, and that on the faith of that assurance the House was prepared to guarantee the loan of £35,000,000.

MR. LYTTELTON: I do not admit the accuracy of that statement.

*MR. McCRAE: Can the right hon. Gentleman tell us whether the state of the revenues of the Transvaal admits of their making the annual contribution necessary?

MR. BAYLEY (Derbyshire, Chesterfield): Will the right hon. Gentleman lay Papers on the Table before the Budget is introduced?

MR. LYTTELTON: I cannot give a pledge on that subject.

South African Inter-Colonial Council—Railway Government.

MR. BUCHANAN (Perthshire, E.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies what alterations have been made in the Railway Department of the Inter-Colonial Council in consequence of the resolutions carried at the meeting of the Council last summer; and will Papers be laid on the Table on the subject.

MR. LYTTELTON: Lord Milner informed the Inter-Colonial Council on 15th November last that of the two definite recommendations contained in the resolutions referred to, the first, namely, the appointment of an auditor with wider powers, had already been carried out, and that the second, namely, the appointment of a treasurer, had also been virtually carried out. He also stated that the main object of the recommendations as a whole, which was the establishment of an efficient system of financial control, had already in the main been effected, executive authority being centralised in the general manager subject to the Railway Committee as a Board of Control. I have recently received from Lord Milner his formal recommendations and proposals for changes as a result of the experience of the last half year, and the matter is now under my consideration. I hope to lay Papers later on.

MR. WHITLEY (Halifax): Who are the members of this Committee ?

MR. LYTTELTON: I cannot give the names off-hand.

MR. BUCHANAN imtimated that he would put a further Question on the subject.

Aden Frontier Force.

SIR CARNE RASCH: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether he can state the number of casualties in the Aden frontier force; and whether it is proposed to give a medal for the services there rendered.

MR. BRODRICK: The number of casualties among the troops employed since the beginning of 1903 in the protection of the Aden Boundary Commission is as follows:—ten killed, twenty-one wounded. It is not proposed to give a medal as the military authorities do not recommend it.

MR. CHARLES HOBHOUSE (Bristol, E.): Has the frontier force now been withdrawn ?

MR. BRODRICK: I think practically so.

Mecca Pilgrims.

MR. WEIR (Ross and Cromarty): I beg to ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, having regard to the fact that out of the 16,000 pilgrims of Egyptian nationality who have started on the pilgrimage to Mecca only 1,600 have availed themselves of Government protection by travelling with the Mahmal, will he, in view of the ill-treatment suffered by pilgrims last year when passing through Turkish Arabia, consider the expediency of communicating with the Turkish Government in order to secure some kind of protection for the pilgrims who are not accompanying the Mahmal.

THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Earl PERCY, Kensington, S.): As I informed the hon. Member yesterday† matters of this kind primarily concern the Egyptian Goverment. Representations have been made to the Turkish Government, and it is hoped that there may be no further cause of complaint.

Income-Tax Appeals.

MR. J. P. FARRELL (Longford, N.): I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in cases of assessment for income-tax in which the persons assessed have not been notified of the sitting of the Commissioners to hear appeals, and so have become liable to levy, any machinery is available whereby the claim of the collector can be suspended pending the appeal being disposed of at next sitting.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN, Worcestershire, E.): I am not sure that I fully understand the hon. Member's Question, and in matters of income-tax so much depends upon the precise facts of each particular case that Answers to general Questions are very apt to be misleading. But, as I read the terms of the Question, I should say that the law provides no machinery to meet the circumstances described. In practice, however, if any taxpayer finds himself in such a position, he should explain matters to the surveyor of his district. If the circumstances appear to him to warrant it, that officer will endeavour to arrange with the Commissioners that they should afford to the taxpayer an opportunity of stating his case to them. In the meantime the collector's claim would be allowed to stand over.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: In the case of a collector of taxes refusing to do this, is there any appeal against him ?

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: If the hon. Member is referring to a particular case, the facts of which are not known to me, perhaps he will let me have the facts, and I will investigate them. I cannot give a general Answer upon individual cases with the circumstances of which I am not acquainted.

---

† See page 773.

Volunteer Notices outside Country Post Offices.

MR. CHARLES ALLEN (Gloucestershire, Stroud): I beg to ask the Postmaster-General whether, in view of the convenience such a concession would be, especially in country districts, he will permit the exhibition of notices of Volunteer parades and other similar orders affecting Volunteers outside post offices in Great Britain.

THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL (Lord STANLEY, Lancashire, Westhoughton): In country districts the post office is, as a rule, provided by a shopkeeper and not by the Crown. In such cases I have no power to require the exhibition of notices of the kind suggested, but I should be prepared to consider any case in which the sub-postmaster is willing to exhibit them, provided that space necessary for departmental notices is not occupied. In regard to the comparatively few offices which are used solely for post office purposes, and are provided by the Department it has, on account of the demand for space, been found necessary to limit very strictly the exhibition of notices, and I regret, therefore, that I am unable to accede to the hon. Member's request. I understand, however, that these are not the cases in which the concession is required. I may add that I very much agree with the object of the hon. Member, and as far as possible I will endeavour to meet it.

Telegraphic Appointments.

CAPTAIN NORTON (Newington, W.): I beg to ask the Postmaster-General whether he is aware that a man named Soundy, after having served with the Army in South Africa and serving as a telegraphist on the temporary staff, passed the examinations and medical tests necessary for qualifying for the permanent staff in February, 1904, but has not yet received an appointment owing to a dearth of vacancies; and, if so, whether, in view of the fact that another examination for learners is announced, he will direct that Soundy, having been out of regular employment for several months, should be given an appointment before other persons are brought into the service.

LORD STANLEY: I regret that, owing to the dearth of vacancies, it has not yet been possible to appoint Mr. Soundy to the permanent staff, but I hope that temporary employment may be found for him in the meantime. The forthcoming competition for learners is intended to meet the future requirements of the Department and will in no way interfere with Mr. Soundy's appointment at as early a date as possible.

London Unemployed Relief Fund.

MR. SYDNEY BUXTON: I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board whether his attention has been drawn to the fact that the resources at the disposal of the Central (Unemployed) Committee in London have become practically exhausted before they have been able to deal with more than a certain number of the cases of the genuine unemployed; and that, unless further funds are forthcoming, they will be unable to keep in employment for the full term the men already at work under their auspices; and what steps he proposes to take in order that sufficient funds may be placed at the disposal of the Central Committee with a view to tide over the present period of distress, and the interval which must necessarily elapse before the proposed statutory Central Committees can be brought into existence.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (Mr. WALTER LONG, Bristol, S.): Representations on behalf of the Central Committee have been made to me with respect to this matter, and I am giving the subject careful consideration. I cannot say more at the present moment.

Criminal Aliens in the United States.

MR. HERBERT SAMUEL (Yorkshire, W.R., Cleveland); I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will state what was the number of aliens in the United States sentenced for crime in each of the last five years for which the figures are available, together with the number of alien immigrants prohibited from landing in the United States, on the ground that they were criminals, in each of the same years.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. GERALD BALFOUR, Leeds, Central): I am unable to give the particulars asked for in the first part of the Question, but in 1903–4 the number of alien inmates of penal and reformatory institutions in the United States is stated to have been 9,825. The number of persons debarred from landing in the United States on the ground that they were convicts in each of the last five years were as follows:—1899–1900, 4; 1900–1901, 7; 1901–1902, 9; 1902–1903, 51; 1903–1904, 35.

Tank Engines on Passenger Trains.

MR. BELL (Derby): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will consider the advisability of appoint a Royal Commission or Departmental Committee to inquire into the question of railway companies using tank engines to run passenger trains above a certain limited speed.

MR. BELL: I beg also to ask the President of the Board of Trade if he can state how many cases of derailment of tank engines running passenger trains have occurred during the twenty years ending 1904; and if he will give a Return of these showing date, place of accident and railway, class of tank engine (saddle or side tanks), and the conclusions of the Board of Trade inspectors relative thereto.

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I would direct the attention of the hon. Member to the report to the Board of Trade made by the Senior Inspecting Officer of Railways with reference to the accident on the Great Western Railway which occurred between Llanelly and Loughor on the 3rd ot October last. This report has recently been published, and I shall be happy to supply the hon. Member with a copy. In the concluding paragraph of the report Colonel Yorke suggests that the Associated Railway Companies should be invited to appoint an expert committee for the purpose of inquiring into and reporting upon the behaviour of tank engines of all types and classes under different conditions of speed. I have specially directed the attention of the Railway Association to Colonel Yorke's recommendation and have asked them to express their approval of it. I propose to await the result of any inquiry made by the railway companies themselves before considering the necessity for further action. In the meantime I will cause a Return to be prepared of the cases of derailment of tank engines drawing passenger trains that have occurred during the past twenty years and have formed the subject of inquiry by the Railway Inspecting Officers of the Board of Trade. This Return will include the particulars mentioned by the hon. Member, together with other material information so far as available. To give the total number of derailments without these particulars would not, I am advised, be useful, and might be misleading.

Exclusion of Canadian Cattle from the United Kingdom.

MR. BUCHANAN I beg to ask the hon. Member for North Huntingdonshire, as representing the Board of Agriculture, whether he can now state whether a reply has been sent by the Government to the recent despatch of the Dominion Government on the exclusion of Canadian cattle; and whether, in view of the importance of the subject and the official statement just issued by the Agent-General for the Dominion, he will lay the correspondence upon the Table of the House.

MR. AILWYN FELLOWES (Huntingdonshire, Ramsey): Perhaps the hon. Member will allow me to refer him to the written Answers which were given to the similar Questions addressed to me by the hon. Member for Dundee on Monday last,† with a copy of which I shall be glad to supply him. In the opinion of my noble friend the Papers are not of sufficient importance to justify their being laid upon the Table of the House, but I shall be glad to show them to the hon. Member that he may assure himself that they contain nothing which has not already appeared in the Press.

MR. BUCHANAN: Is the hon. Gentleman aware that this misunderstanding on the part of the Canadian Government was due to a speech delivered by the President of the Board of Agriculture, and is it not right that their disclaimer as well as the letter of the President of the Board should be published?

---

† See page 591.

MR. AILWYN FELLOWES: It is perfectly true it has arisen from some misunderstanding, and I will consult the President and see if he is willing the Papers should be laid.

MR. KILBRIDE (Kildare, S.); Will the hon. Gentleman give an undertaking that Canadian cattle shall be kept out for the next seventy years.

[No Answer was returned.]

The Green Park.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: I beg to ask the hon. Member for Chorley, as representing the First Commissioner of Works, what is the estimated cost of the construction of the road or path sixty-five feet wide now being made across the Green Park from the Victoria Memorial to Half Moon Street, Piccadilly, and from what source will that cost be defrayed; is this path required for traffic across the park, and, if not, for what other object is it being constructed; has any public body been consulted as to the necessity for the path; and will this House have any opportunity, either on the Estimates or otherwise, of expressing an opinion on the removal, from the smallest of the parks, of nearly one acre of grass and the substitution for it of either gravel or pavement.

LORD BALCARRES (Lancashire, Chorley): The estimated cost is £4,000. The cost of construction is being met by the Mansion House Committee for the Unemployed and by a contribution by the Queen Victoria Memorial Committee. There will be no charge on public funds. The path is an essential part of the scheme sanctioned by the First Commissioner and by the Queen Victoria Memorial Committee for the approaches to the Memorial. It is proposed to turf over several existing paths and restore the space occupied by them to the grass surface of the park. The possibility of a discussion of the matter in the House of Commons is a question rather for the Leader of the House than for the Department.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: There will be no Estimate?

LORD BALCARRES replied in the affirmative.

MR. SYDNEY BUXTON asked whether the enormous amount of brick-work under the path was necessary for the drainage of a pathway.

LORD BALCARRES: I have made no further inquiry into the matter. My Answer that it is for drainage purposes holds good.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES asked whether there was not a danger that in process of time the path would be turned into a roadway.

[No Answer was returned.]

Teaching of Domestic Economy in Schools.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord-Advocate, having regard to the fact that the Committee on Physical Deterioration, in their Report issued last year, express the opinion that instruction in cookery, hygiene, and domestic economy should, as far as possible, be made compulsory on the elder girls at school, will the Secretary for Scotland consider the expediency of giving effect to this recommendation by the issue of an amendment to the present Education Code.

*THE LORD ADVOCATE (Mr. SCOTT DICKSON, Glasgow, Bridgton): I am in reply to refer the hon. Member to the Answers given to his Questions of 16th March, 1904, † and 25th April, 1904, ‡ addressed to the Secretary for Scotland. I have nothing to add to these replies.

Irish Evicted Tenants.

MR. DILLON (Mayo, E.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he will grant a Return giving the following particulars as to evicted tenants reinstated by the Estates Commissioners under the Act of 1903; total number of evicted tenants reinstated up to 31st, December 1904; name of each tenant; name of estate from which he had been evicted; area, former rent, and valuation of farm; county and townland where farm is situated; whether tenant was reinstated in farm from which he had been evicted or provided with new farm; full particulars in either case of the terms under which the tenant was reinstated, showing amount of annuity; and whether reinstatement was carried out in connection with or independently of sale of estate from which tenant had been evicted.

---

† See (4) Debates, cxxxi., 1257.

‡ See (4) Debates, cxxxiii., 1053.

THE CHIEF SECRETARY FOR IRELAND (Mr. WYNDHAM, Dover): I am consulting with the Commissioners as to the desirability of furnishing the information in the form suggested.

Galbraith Estate, North Longford.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether any application has yet been made to the Estates Commissioners for the purchase, as a congested estate, of the Galbraith property, in North Longford.

MR. WYNDHAM: No such application has yet been made.

Longford Evicted Tenants.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland how many applications from evicted tenants for restoration under the Land Purchase Act, 1903, have been received from county Longford; and whether any steps have been taken, or are being taken, by the Estates Commissioners to acquire grazing lands in that county for the purpose of providing homes for these tenants.

MR. WYNDHAM: Eighty-six, of whom eight were outside the provisions of Section 2 of the Act. Four evicted tenants have been reinstated, and the Commissioners are now making inquiries in respect of the acquisition of untenanted lands in the county.

Kingston Estate, Mitchelstown.

MR. WILLIAM ABRAHAM (Cork County, N.E.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Estates Commissioners have under consideration certain agreements to purchase their holdings obtained from the tenants on the Kingston Estate, Mitchelstown, and if, before a final sanction is given to those agreements, an inquiry will be made into the circumstances under which they were entered into; and if he will state whether any application to divide the estate into sections has been made; and, if so, what decision have the Estates Commissioners arrived at in the matter.

MR. WYNDHAM: Four hundred and twenty-five agreements have been lodged with the Commissioners. The vendor has also lodged originating applications to have the lands declared five separate estates for the purposes of sale. No decision has been arrived at by the Commissioners. I see no necessity for suggesting any special course to them in respect of this estate.

Limerick Rural Postman's Dismissal.

MR. LUNDON (Limerick, E.): I beg to ask the Postmaster-General, is he aware that a man named Edmond Keane was employed from October, 1890, to May, 1904, as rural postman between Knockling and Herbertstown, county Limerick; and that he was dismissed or suspended; if so, will he say on what charge or charges did such dismissal take place, seeing that he was not formally charged; will he explain why he did not receive wages from 28th May, 1904, to 7th August following; and will he get any compensation for his services during that period, or will his fourteen years service entitle him to any compensation, as he was not found guilty of any misdeed.

LORD STANLEY: Edmond Keane, late a rural postman between Knockling and Herbertstown, county Limerick, was dismissed in August last, as I considered that he was not a fit person to be retained in the service. Keane was appointed a rural postman in April, 1891, after he had been an acting rural postman since July, 1890. He was suspended from duty on the 28th of May last, and, following the general rule in such cases, no payment on account of wages after the date of suspension has been made.

The circumstances in which his connection with the Post Office terminated preclude the possibility of obtaining for him any award under the Superannuation Acts.

Irish National School Plans.

Mr. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether the Estimates, under Plan VI. A, for the erection of national schools in Ireland have yet been altered; and, if not, when action will be taken on this matter.

The FINANCIAL SECRETARY of the TREASURY (Mr. Victor Cavendish, Derbyshire, W.): No decision has yet been arrived at, but I will endeavour to expedite the settlement of the question.

Mr. J. P. FARRELL: May I point out that this matter has now been under consideration for six years.

Sir Antony MacDonnell.

Mr. LONSDALE (Armagh, Mid.): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury if it is intended to continue in Sir Antony MacDonnell, as Under-Secretary, special and extraordinary powers beyond the usual rights of Civil servants.

The PRIME MINISTER and FIRST LORD of the TREASURY (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.): In my view it would be unconstitutional in the highest degree to give any Under-Secretary extraordinary powers such as could not be exercised by other Civil servants. But it is quite constitutional for a Minister, when inviting some one outside the Civil Service to become an Under-Secretary, to assure him that he will be treated on terms of the utmost confidence and be given full licence to lay before his chief schemes which he conceives to be for the advantage of the interests committed to the Department. My hon. friend may rest assured that there is no chance of these powers being again exceeded owing to misunderstandings such as those which were dealt with in recent debates.

Sir H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN (Stirling Burghs): If my memory serves me rightly, the right hon. Gentleman said last night that he had no objection to lay on the Table the conditions of Sir Antony MacDonnell's appointment, and the Chief Secretary on another occasion said the same thing. But the two positives appear now to make a negative.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: The right hon. Gentleman is misrepresenting me, unintentionally.

Sir H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: Seeing that so much turns on it, will the right hon. Gentleman lay on the Table the Papers which passed when Sir Antony MacDonnell was appointed?

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: There is a Question on the subject, addressed to my right hon. friend, standing on the Paper for to-morrow. I have not had time yet to consult with him in connection with the subject of the interruptions in last night's debate. I have made myself acquainted with the fact that there were letters which did pass between the Chief Secretary and Sir Antony MacDonnell; but they were private letters, and I am not sure that anything would be gained by laying them on the Table.

Mr. LONSDALE: Will the right hon. Gentleman say whether Sir Antony MacDonnell's position is still a transitory one.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: I understand that when Sir Antony MacDonnell took the place his view distinctly was that he took it as a temporary appointment. He is an Indian Civil servant primarily, and he did not intend to devote the remainder of his official career to Ireland. It was understood to be a temporary appointment both by Sir Antony MacDonnell and by the Government; and I have no reason to believe that he, any more than the Government, has changed his mind.

Mr. JOHN REDMOND (Waterford): Has he been asked to give up his appointment?

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: No, Sir.

MR. WHITLEY: Is it not a Rule of the House that when a Minister quotes from a document that document should be laid before the House?

*MR. SPEAKER: Yes, unless the Minister is in a position to state that it is not to the advantage of the public service that the document should be produced. Unless he states that, he can be called upon to produce the document which he quotes. I am answering the Question generally. I do not remember precisely what passed on the occasion referred to.

MR. JOHN REDMOND: Is the Chief Secretary prepared to state that the production of these documents would be prejudicial to the public service? And, if not, will he produce them?

MR. WYNDHAM: I did not quote from them. [Cries of "Oh."] I did not. I had not the documents in my possession.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: They will not listen to the explanations which they ask for.

MR. WYNDHAM: Two letters passed. I had not copies of those letters; and Sir Antony MacDonnell was kind enough to furnish me with the points on which we had agreed.

MR. JOHN REDMOND: May I ask, Sir, whether the technical point taken by the right hon. Gentleman—that he did not quote the exact words—satisfies the Rule of the House? May I ask whether, when the right hon. Gentleman, without giving the words, professes to give the substance of a document, he is not making a quotation which necessitates the production of the document?

MR. SPEAKER: I must decline to answer a general Question of that kind in general terms. My attention ought to have been called at the moment to the circumstances and to the language used by the right hon. Gentleman.

MR. T. W. RUSSELL (Tyrone, S.): As to the temporary character of Sir Antony MacDonnell's appointment, is it not the fact that within the last month he has resigned his appointment on the India Council? In view of that fact, will the right hon. Gentleman state what the character of Sir Antony MacDonnell's appointment as Under-Secretary now is, as it is an appointment independent of the Government?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: The Under-Secretary for Ireland is not independent of the Government.

MR. T. W. RUSSELL: He is independent of Party Government. He does not go out with the Government.

MR. EDMUND ROBERTSON (Dundee): Does the Under-Secretary hold his appointment under the Treasury Minutes?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: Yes, certainly.

MR. DALZIEL (Kirkcaldy Burghs): Are we to understand from the right hon. Gentleman's answer that the terms of Sir Antony MacDonnell's appointment have been altered?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I am not aware that the legal terms [Cries of "Oh"] have been altered, unless an alteration is implied in the general statement that Sir Antony MacDonnell is subject to the ordinary Civil Service regulations.

MR. JOHN REDMOND: Can the right hon. Gentleman say whether the conditions on which Sir Antony MacDonnell was appointed have been modified or varied?

After some conference with Mr. A. J. BALFOUR,

Mr. WYNDHAM rose to reply.

MR. JOHN REDMOND: You might as well tell the truth at once.

Mr. WYNDHAM resumed his seat.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I rise to order, Sir. I wish to know whether such expressions are to be permitted in this House.

*MR. SPEAKER: The hon. Member may have intended only to ask for the whole facts, but he has put his Question in language which conveyed an offensive imputation, and which ought to be withdrawn.

Mr. JOHN REDMOND: I hope the House will allow me to apologise for putting the Question in that form. I did not mean it in that sense. What I meant was that the Government might as well tell the whole truth at once, instead of having it dragged from them piecemeal.

Mr. WYNDHAM: I accept the hon. and learned Member's retraction of what I considered to be an offensive insinuation. But the Question is not clear to me. Are the terms of Sir Antony MacDonnell's appointment altered? No, I do not think they are.

Mr. DALZIEL: May I ask whether the statement of Lord Lansdowne that the ordinary rules do not apply to Sir Antony MacDonnell still holds?

*Mr. SPEAKER: The right hon. Gentleman can answer that if he wishes, but I may point out that this is becoming a general debate.

Mr. BLAKE (Longford, S.): Inasmuch as the right hon. Gentleman said that the Question was not clear to him, would it be permissible to ask whether those conditions which were stipulated between Sir Antony MacDonnell and the right hon. Gentleman, as explained by him in the House the other day, have been in any way modified or varied?

Mr. WYNDHAM: It is not possible for me to divest myself of any shred of responsibility by this appointment. When I exchanged private letters with Sir Antony MacDonnell I had been a Cabinet Minister for a fortnight; and I was not as well aware as I am now as to how far the responsibility to this House may carry a Minister. He may have to answer twenty or thirty Questions a day on minute facts which are not before him. I have pointed out to Sir Antony MacDonnell, and he has quite agreed with me, that, in view of the criticisms to which my Department has been subjected during the last three or four weeks, it was necessary for me to see any matter which was likely to be the subject of debate in this House. If that is a modification of the appointment, then it is one in conformity with my constitutional responsibility to the House of Commons.

Alleged Shooting of Workmen's Leaders at Warsaw.

Mr. KEIR HARDIE (Merthyr Tydvil): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether the Government has any official information concerning the shooting, without trial, of 120 workmen's leaders by Russian troops in Warsaw; and whether His Majesty's Government has made, or intend making, representations to the Russian Government upon the methods by which the authorities have met the workpeople's claims for improved conditions of employment and for the concession of political reforms.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: It is obviously impossible for His Majesty's Government to interfere in the internal affairs of Russia.

Mr. KEIR HARDIE: Have the Government received any official information of the kind I have mentioned?

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: We have received no confirmation of the story. But the matter is evidently outside the province of the Government, and, if I may say so, outside the province of this House.

Underfed School Children.

Mr. KEIR HARDIE: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether his attention has been drawn to the exhaustion of the funds for the provision of free meals to destitute school children in Manchester and elsewhere; and whether, since the destitution is as great as ever, the Government proposes introducing on an early day a measure to enable the education authorities to provide the cost of such meals out of the rates.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: Such information as I have received from Manchester does not show that these funds to which the hon. Member refers are exhausted. The Answer to the second part of the Question is in the negative.

MR. LOUGH (Islington, W.): If we show that such conditions exist in London, will the Government arrange to give some temporary assistance?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: That is an entirely different Question from the one on the Paper.

DR. MACNAMARA (Camberwell, N.): Has the right hon. Gentleman considered the Report of the Physical Deterioration Committee on this point?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I am not prepared to make any statement of policy in answer to supplementary Questions. If we have any measures to propose, they should be formally submitted.

MR. KEIR HARDIE: Are these starving children to be allowed to perish of hunger in their thousands because His Majesty's Government refuse to give the local authorities power to supply them with food?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: According to such information as I have been able to obtain that is not the case in Manchester. If His Majesty's Government were to bring forward a measure such as the hon. Member suggests it could not deal with the existing situation, or be operative for weeks and months.

THE HOME RULE AMENDMENT DIVISION.

*MR. C. R. SPENCER (Northamptonshire, Mid.) called the attention of the Speaker to a discrepancy in the record of the division which took place the previous night in the "Votes and Proceedings." On one page the Ayes were given as 236 and the Noes as 286; and on another page the Noes numbered only 285. Could that be rectified?

*MR. SPEAKER replied that unless some report was made to him by the Tellers, showing that there was an error, he must accept their report as it stood. In all cases where a discrepancy of this description occurred it was more probable that a Clerk in the division lobby had omitted to tick off the name of an hon. Member than that the Tellers had erred.

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT.

MR. JOHN REDMOND (Waterford) asked leave to move the adjournment of the House in order to call attention to a definite matter of urgent public importance—namely, "The present conditions under which Sir Antony MacDonnell holds the office of Under-Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland."

*MR. SPEAKER: Is not that the same question as the one debated yesterday?

MR. JOHN REDMOND: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, the question was incidentally mentioned in the debate yesterday, and also in Questions put to the House. I would not have attempted to move this Motion were it not that the Government have practically declined to produce the documents referred to by the Chief Secretary, documents which I understood him to say in his speech he personally had no objection to produce. In addition, I would not have moved it were not statements made at the Table to-day that there had been some variation in the terms and conditions of the appointment. I respectfully submit that I am quite in order in asking permission to move the adjournment.

*MR. SPEAKER: Although I have some doubts about it, I do not feel justified in taking the responsibility on myself of refusing the Motion.

The leave of the House not having been given, Mr. SPEAKER called on those Members who supported the Motion to rise in their places, and not less than forty Members having accordingly risen,

The Motion stood over, under Standing Order No. 10, until the Evening Sitting this day.

NEW BILLS.

SMALL DWELLINGS (ACQUISITION) BILL.

"To amend the provisions of The Small Dwellings Acquisition Act, 1899," presented by Sir Thomas Wrightson; supported by Mr. Claude Hay, Mr. Graham, Mr. Peel, Sir Alfred Hickman, Captain Jessel, Mr. Moon, Mr. Pike Pease, Mr.

Jesse Collings, and Mr. Griffith-Boscawen; to be read a second time upon Wednesday, 5th April, and to be printed. [Bill 51.]

PURCHASE OF LAND (ENGLAND AND WALES) BILL.

"To provide facilities for the sale of Land to occupying tenants and others in England and Wales," presented by Mr. Jesse Collings; supported by Sir John Dorington, Mr. Spear, Sir John Kennaway, Mr. Herbert Roberts, Sir Lewis Molesworth, Colonel Kenyon-Slaney, Mr. William Mitchell, and Colonel Pryce-Jones; to be read a second time upon Friday, 10th March, and to be printed. [Bill 52.]

CHARTERED SOCIETIES BILL.

"To provide for the further protection of Chartered Societies," presented by Sir John Rolleston; supported by Sir Francis Evans, Mr. Alban Gibbs, Mr. Fletcher Moulton, Mr. Charles Seely, and Sir James Woodhouse; to be read a second time upon Wednesday, 22nd March, and to be printed. [Bill 53.]

SALMON FISHERIES (IRELAND) ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.

"To amend the Salmon Fisheries (Ireland) Acts," presented by Sir Henry Seton-Karr; supported by Sir Herbert Maxwell, Sir Robert Penrose-Fitzgerald, Mr. Grenfell, Captain Bagot, and Colonel Nolan; to be read a second time upon Tuesday, 4th April, and to be printed. [Bill 54.]

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Main Question [14th February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Question again proposed.

*CAPTAIN NORTON (Newington, W.), in bringing forward the Motion which stood in his name on the Paper expressed his firm belief that if it were not for the strength of Party ties a large proportion of hon. Members opposite would vote for it, and few, if any, of the Service Members would fail to give it their support. He made that statement because, for the last ten years, members of the Service Committee had year after year brought under the notice of the Government many shortcomings of the Army and many matters in which it was deficient as regarded its efficiency for the defence of the Empire. After these ten years the position of the Army was such that it had been described by the Secretary for War as being in a condition which constituted a grave danger to the Empire. It was in that condition, in his opinion, because professional advice had been disregarded in order to gain a Party advantage, and the result was chaos in the War Office and discontent in the ranks of His Majesty's land forces, and that in spite of the fact that they had had in succession as Secretaries for War three capable men, all of whom had had considerable experience in Army matters prior to accepting office. They also had been assisted by two of the most experienced and most distinguished of British officers, and the last Secretary for War had been aided and abetted by a Council of distinguished soldiers.

He had said that this condition of affairs had been produced because the well-being of the Army had been made subservient to political considerations, and he now desired to show the result of continuous and continuing changes with respect to the Army, coupled with negligence and mismanagement. For the first four of the ten years to which he had referred a certain military policy was pursued, and it was held that we should always have two Army Corps complete in every respect and ready for service beyond the seas and, in addition, sufficient seasoned and trained men to supply our garrisons in India and elsewhere, and to furnish forces in this country to defend it against raids during the temporary absence of, or during temporary mishaps to, our Navy. The present Government were responsible for the well-being of the Army for nearly four years, and when the war took place what occurred? He was told personally over and over again by the Secretary for War that these two Army Corps were ready in every detail, though he pointed out several details in which they were defective, and when the war broke out and one Army Corps had been mobilised and a fraction of another, the remaining portion of the two Army Corps was found to be deficient in almost every respect. In this matter hon. Members who had seen a little mote in the eye of the Liberal Government with reference to cordite failed to see the beam in their own eye with reference to the shortage of guns. He need only instance one item to illustrate that point. The Inspector-General of Ordnance said he found that there were 326 machine guns deficient in the authorised number. He hoped that no attempt would be made that day, as had been frequently done by politicians, to shelter themselves behind the soldiers, these unfortunate soldiers being absolutely under their thumb. What occurred in regard to that particular question? Lord Wolseley, a man who had done great service to the country in his time, for years prior to the South African War did all he could to induce the Government to bring the Army up to that standard which they themselves had laid down as necessary, and he had failed. In 1896 he pointed out the insufficiency of the garrison in South Africa, and his advice was ignored. In 1897 he proposed that the Army should be brought up to the standard which they themselves had laid down and he was refused. In 1899 he asked that some of the field artillery should be placed on the higher establishment, and again he was refused. A little later on in the same year he suggested that one Army Corps should be fully mobilised on Salisbury Plain in order that it might be completely ready for transport over the seas, and so that any defects found to exist might be supplied. No notice was taken of his advice for political reasons, because the foolish and despicable game of "bluff" was then being carried on, in order to suit political considerations. Then the Intelligence Department furnished the Government with very valuable and accurate advice with reference to the Boer Republics. That also was ignored, and, in fact, everything that could have placed the Army in a position to do its duty in the South African War was ignored. He would not refer to the humiliating period when disaster followed disaster and when many gallant young men went from this country like sheep to the slaughter because we had defective guns, because we were defective in material of all kinds. He would not refer to that period because, in his opinion, it was burnt into the hearts of all young men of this generation, and they would never forget the fact that the great Imperialist Party failed to think Imperially in reference to the Army, and left us in so sad a state that we had to put more than a quarter of a million of men into the field, and to spend nearly £300,000,000 of money, in order to fight 60,000 or 70,000 Boer farmers.

He would now proceed to deal with what followed after the South African War. They were then given to understand that they would have real Army reform, and they were told by the Secretary of State for War that two Army Corps had been found insufficient, and that in future we were to have three Army Corps completely ready, when mobilised, for service beyond the seas, and three other Army Corps to supplement them for home defence. That scheme was based upon the full and complete acknowledgment of the value and efficiency of the Auxiliary Forces. But before a very long period had elapsed the scheme vanished into thin air, and the same right hon. Gentleman came forward with a new scheme of Army reform based upon the destruction of our great constitutional force, the Militia, and the dismemberment and disorganisation of our great Volunteer force. This scheme was based upon the ignoring altogether of the Auxiliary Forces. It was a very extraordinary political somersault, and he would like to give one instance of that constant change which brought about both neglect and mismanagement He referred to the question of the arming of our artillery. The right hon. Baronet the Member for the Forest of Dean stated in the House that we had no quick-firing guns, and pressed the necessity for those guns on the Government. The Service Members sent a special deputation to the Prime Minister urging upon him the importance of this matter, and reminding him of the fact that France was at that time armed, and most of the other European countries were arming themselves, with guns which would fire from eighteen to twenty rounds per minute, as compared with the two or three rounds which our guns could fire. In spite of that fact, and in spite of the fact that the Government were offered by the French at that time a quick-firing gun which was almost equal to their present magnificent quick-firing gun, nothing was done, and the offer of the French was declined, the result being realised in the South African campaign. It was also shown in the course of that war that we had only 108 field guns in this country, or, in other words, not sufficient to arm a force of 40,000 men. Therefore we were deficient, during a time of war, both in the number and in the character of the guns. The late Secretary of State for War, in the House of Commons on March 9th, 1901, said it was obvious that our artillery was insufficient, and yet no more guns were ordered, nor were any steps taken to order them. He said further that they proposed to give guns to the Militia and Volunteers, and intended to rely on the Volunteer batteries in each of three large Army Corps. The Committee which was appointed in 1901 decided very rightly on having 18½-pounder field guns and 12½-pounder horse artillery guns, but before making their Report they were allowed to delay its issue for the space of two-and-a-half years. He said advisedly they were "allowed" to do so. What took place on April 14th 1904, when it was shown that the guns were required? Were they ordered? No, nine months were allowed to elapse without their being ordered. Possibly some right hon. Gentleman would stand up on the Ministerial Benches and say they had ordered some guns. It was true that some horse artillery guns were ordered for India. Some twenty-one batteries were ordered, but they were for India, and had nothing to do with the gunning of our troops in this country and elsewhere. The Prime Minister had had the audacity to state that there had been no delay either in the designing or in the construction of the new gun. But, as against that, they had the fact that six years ago it was known that there was a great deficiency in the number of guns as well as in the quality, and four years were allowed to elapse before 160 batteries were ordered, and that was in face of the fact that the late Secretary of State for War had said that the Government would not shrink from their duty. But they had shrunk from ordering guns last year, because they knew perfectly well it would entail putting an extra £3,000,000 or £4,000,000 into the Budget, and because the great Imperialist Party shirked going to the constituencies. They were, in fact, afraid to face their constituents and let them understand that with our resources in coal and iron and skilled labour they had not only failed for four years to supply us with guns, but that for two years to come, as they acknowledged, we must remain in that degrading position. So it would take six years from the time they first acknowledged that we were short of guns before the Army was re-armed, whereas Germany was able to arm its entire army in two years. Was it to be wondered at, then, that the Commission reported they were not satisfied that enough had been done to place matters on a better footing in the event of any contingency?

As with the guns, so with the rifles — a subject which he hoped to find another opportunity of going into more fully. A Committee was appointed; but instead of the members receiving a free hand to produce the best rifle they could for the infantry, they were told to produce the best rifle they could, subject to its being five inches shorter in the barrel than the weapon used by the infantry of any other army in the world. It was something like telling a watchmaker to produce a watch that would be a good timekeeper under all climatic conditions, with the proviso it should lack a compensating balance. These rifles, in consequence of the variety of experiments made in connection with them, cost the country £14 apiece. The rifles which were knocked about in South Africa were being converted at a cost of £2 5s. They originally cost £2 12s., so that now the country was paying £4 17s. for a second-hand rifle, when a brand new one of the best quality could be obtained for about £3 10s. With all these extravagances, was it to be wondered at that the Army Expenditure amounted to £46,000,000? Yet the present state of the Army, as the Secretary of State for War said, constituted a danger to the country.

The same waste of money took place with regard to barracks. Close upon a million had been spent on barracks on Salisbury Plain, about another million would be required, and when they were finished we had no troops to go into them. Then, again, there was a shameful waste of money in connection with the Indian reliefs and with the silly and senseless system of recruiting. He hoped some hon. Member who knew more about finance would develop the argument as to our immense expenditure without value. For four years there had been great neglect on the part of the Government. That was followed by mess and muddle for two years, then came the Army Corps scheme, by which the Prime Minister said he would stand or fall, although, incidentally, he might mention that the right hon. Gentleman did neither. Following that was the "clean slate" policy in 1903, and now a further fifteen months had elapsed the Prime Minister, who was an expert juggler in these matters, had made the discovery that the problem of the British Army was the problem of the defence of Afghanistan. The Prime Minister stood convicted out of his own mouth of what he might call an unpatriotic neglect of duty with reference to the Army. Never in the history of the nation had the Army been in a worse position to defend Afghanistan. The Secretary of State for War once told them that troops required two years home training in order to fit them for India. But never was there a period when men were so difficult to obtain for Indian service, and last year 4,000 men were sent out under a three years term of engagement. The Indian military and civil authorities protested against that on account of the excessive expense, and the Home Exchequer agreed in consequence to pay a portion of the cost. The highest military authorities agreed that, in the event of war on the North-West Frontier, in addition to the 70,000 British troops already in India, we should require to send 150,000 men from this country; and while the war lasted we should have to send 200,000 men annually to meet the wastage of war. How did the Cabinet intend to meet this difficulty? Did their scheme provide for the necessary number of long-service men, matured and trained, to meet the requirements of the striking force and the Indian reliefs? They could not get the necessary recruits. In 1902 they obtained something like 51,000 recruits, and there were lost during the first year by death, desertion, discharge, and so forth, nearly 50 per cent. As 50 per cent. were lost, the payment per man, instead of £94, became in fact £188. That was an instance of direct wastage. What did the Government scheme propose to do to meet the difficulty? It proposed to reduce the Army Expenditure by about £1,000,000 sterling out of £46,000,000, and to reduce the Army by 140,000 men! That was how the Prime Minister was going to solve the question of the defence of Afghanistan!

Then there was the question of these huge barracks; the idea that they could not have discipline without barracks was a very fallacious one. In the Metropolitan Police they had a splendid force and the railway workers were a fine body of men, all well disciplined, and yet they did not live in barracks. The proposal now made meant the reduction of the Volunteer force by 50,000 men in order to save £300,000. It was proposed to practically destroy the Militia, and the Auxiliary Forces were to be almost wiped out under this scheme of Army reform, although their total cost was only £4,500,000. He did not know what hon. Members opposite thought of such a state of things. For ten years the Party opposite had had the management of the Army, and they had made two or three attempts at Army reform. Were they now prepared to give the Government another chance in this matter? He hoped the facts he was putting before the House were not unpleasant to the Secretary of State for War, for he noticed that he was covering up his ears. [Cries of "Oh, oh!"]

During the past ten years the expenditure upon the Army had been unprecedented, and even now they were to remain over two years longer with obsolete guns and defective rifles, and at the same time the Reserve and Auxiliary Forces were dwindling to such an extent that they were becoming the by-word of all the countries of Europe.

MAJOR SEELY (Isle of Wight) said that he seconded this Amendment in no Party spirit, because he believed that the state of the Army at the present moment was a danger to the country, and his only desire was to get this matter put right as soon as possible. The mover of this Motion had laid down three main propositions. In the first place, he said that the state of our artillery was a national danger, and therefore it behoved the House to express its condemnation of those who were responsible for this state of things. In this matter of the guns the responsibility rested with the Prime Minister and the Cabinet and not so much with the Secretary of State for War. The second proposition raised by his hon. and gallant friend was that nothing had been done to remedy the defects brought forward by the hon. and gallant Member for Whitby, namely, the fact that the chief danger was not the administration of the question of how many generals or Army Corps they should have, but the more important question of how they were going to get the best men of the nation to serve in the ranks of the Army instead of getting only that part of the population which was incapable of withstanding the hardships of a campaign. The third proposition put forward was that for lack of sympathetic treatment they had allowed the Volunteer force to dwindle away. The hon. and gallant Member also laid down the proposition that upon the Volunteers alone could they rely for the defence of this country in the event of war.

With regard to the guns, he contended that it was impossible for this country to go to war with any European Power at the present time without almost the certainty of defeat. A war involved a battle preceded by an artillery duel. During the next eighteen months, as far as our forces were concerned, a battle would not mean an artillery duel but a massacre, for it would end in our gunners being shot without the least possibility of their replying. It was no good the right hon. Gentleman saying that he was not responsible, because the crime that had been actually committed was one which was capable of very exact condemnation. The difference between quick-firing guns and the guns which this country had got was a difference not of degree, but of kind. The quick-firing gun was quite a new thing, and it was invented in 1897 by the French. By its use they could fire twenty shots a minute, whilst the guns this country possessed would only fire two or three shots a minute. Certain definite changes in artillery had come about with the introduction of the quick-firing gun, which had made as much difference in guns as the difference between a motor-car and a four-wheeled cab. They would have just about as much chance of winning an artillery duel with their present guns against the quick-firing guns of a Continental Power as a four-wheeled cab would have of winning the Gordon-Bennett Cup. This country alone, of all the nations in the world, allowed this matter to drift until December 29th last year. The Secretary of State for War would no doubt say that he had given the order for these guns, but this would not save him or the Cabinet from their responsibility. What they required was a reply to the question why, if they had gone to war the other day, or if they happened to go to war during the next year and a half, they were bound to be smashed and pulverised by the Artillery of every Continental Power. Was it not a fact that they could have obtained a quick-firing gun, firing twenty shots a minute, from private firms in this country or on the Continent so long ago as five and a half years. He defied contradiction of that statement. No, they had still eighteen months to wait during which they must submit to every insult from every foreign Power or risk defeat in every single battle It might be said that the guns having been ordered there was nothing more to do in the matter, but the House possessed the function of condemning those who had not done their duty in this matter.

The Prime Minister had landed them into this extraordinary position of unpreparedness, and if the House wished to retain its power and see that its money was well spent hon. Members should express their condemnation of those who had so grossly abused the power which had been given them in regard to this matter. He would like the right hon. Gentleman to tell them why they were defenceless and why every foreign Power, including such Powers as Roumania, Bulgaria, Norway, Sweden and Argentina, had armed themselves with quick-firing guns before they were adopted by this country.

With regard to the Regular Army nothing had been done to cure the grave mismanagement resulting from our present system of enlistment. Two years ago the Member for Whitby pointed out that there were two British armies, one which went to war and the other which stayed behind because it was inefficient, and he pointed out that they were almost equal in size. The reason was apparent, because if they enlisted men under the present system and in the present state of the labour market, all they were able to get was the residuum of the population and the unsuccessful. He had been told by recruiting officers that 50, 60, and 70 per cent. of the men who presented themselves did so because they were hungry. He had heard it said that it was desirable that an occupation should be found for the less efficient, but, after all, the worst thing to do was to take them into the Army, because they were not only a curse to the more efficient, but also a curse to the country. Disease and sorrow flowed from this method of enlistment, and until the elimination of this method took place those struggles and sorrows must continue. Nothing had been done to face the real problem of enlistment. What they ought to do was to devote their minds to the real problem of how to get the best men into the Army.

There was an indictment he wished to make, not only against the Government, but also against the present Secretary of State for War, who had done a great disservice to this country, because there had recently been a culmination of the follies perpetrated by them with regard to the Volunteers and the Auxiliary Forces. The Volunteers were dwindling away, and why was there shortage of officers and men in the Volunteer corps? Why was it that this shortage existed? Principally and mainly as the culmination of the folly of discouraging these people. The Secretary of State for War said he desired to reduce their numbers and that statement seemed to him to be a condemnation of the policy of the right hon. Gentleman. What did it amount to? Why were hon. and gallant Members Volunteer officers? It was not because they liked it, but because they conceived it to be their duty. If they were told that there were more Volunteers than were necessary, every officer would begin to wonder why he should take all this trouble in the matter. Every officer, since the moment the Secretary of State for War made that extraordinary statement, had found it difficult to recruit men. The Prime Minister and Leader of the Opposition had laid down the principle that it was upon the Volunteers they had to look as the only school of arms they possessed, and that they must rely upon them in any war which was worthy of the name. In 1903 the Prime Minister pointed out that the Regular Army could do nothing but commence any campaign, and after that they had to rely upon the patriotism of the people. In the year 1894 or 1895 the Prime Minister said that the vigorous growth of Volunteers was one of the most encouraging signs of the times. They only needed to look back to the last time they went to war in order to see how true all this was. The South African War was the smallest war they were ever likely to be engaged in for it was a war against some 80,000 farmers. During that campaign he had to command men in the field who did not know one end of the rifle from the other, and there were other hon. Members of the House who had to command men who had never been taught to shoot. As a consequence of this they had to suffer the great humiliation of the loss of a British general and nearly all his men, who were captured by the enemy. They had to consider really whether in point of fact the Volunteers were really of any use. As to that point, he trusted that the hon. and gallant Member for Sheffield, if he took part in the debate, would read one or two extracts from a pamphlet he prepared giving the opinion of the Regular officers who served in South Africa. The best way to test whether men were valuable soldiers or not was the actual test of war and the test of an actual battle. He had in his possession the first order of one of the divisions of the troops in South Africa, issued after many months of an arduous campaign in which many thousand men were engaged on both sides and many losses were sustained. There were in the division to which he alluded about 1,000 Auxiliaries, the total number of men being about 10,000. The Lieut.-General's order was issued in the Orange Free State after four months of hard labour in the field. The first two names appearing on the list were two Guards belonging to the Grenadiers and the Scots Guards. For Distinguished Service in the Field the order contained eleven names, and the first four out of those eleven belonged to this despised Auxiliary Force which they were now going to reduce, and which it was said were not fit to meet Continental troops. Those names were put down not for publication or with any idea that they were to be quoted in the House, but simply in the ordinary way of routine military business as recommendations for Distinguished Service in the Field. He happened to know those four men, and he knew how they got their training, and if the Secretary of State for War had his way and was allowed to reduce the redundant units, two out of those four names would have been abolished as being redundant. If they looked facts squarely in the face they would see that what they wanted was to be able to obtain vast numbers of men. It was possible that they might require 500,000 men, and how were they going to get them under the present system? In an Answer which the right hon. Gentleman gave to a Question two days ago he said that he did not now propose to reduce the Vote for the Volunteers. He had, however, already achieved this result, and the numbers continued to dwindle. The Volunteer service was a very delicate thing, and if this force was told that their services were not required, or that they only wanted a smaller number, the whole force might vanish like a dream. The true function of the Secretary of State for War was to take from every man what he could give in the way of military service, encourage every man to give something, and pay as much as they could afford to the men for their loss of time. Above everything they ought to encourage every man to give something, however little. He commended that principle to the Secretary of State for War, who, by his action, had ignored this principle. The Prime Minister stated that he relied upon the skill and patriotism of the people in the last resource, but the action of the War Office and the Secretary of State for War tended to reduce the military skill in the country, to sap their patriotism and discourage their military endeavours by telling them that they were not wanted. In the matter of guns they had undoubtedly left the country defenceless for another eighteen months. He hoped the House would look this matter fairly in the face and realise how great were the evils which might arise from this negligence. He hoped the House would assert its power and take away from the Government in this matter the power which they had so grossly abused.

Amendment proposed—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But humbly to represent to Your Majesty that the continuous and continuing changes in the War Office are destructive of the best interests of Your Majesty's Army, have gravely disordered the system upon which the regular forces at Home and Abroad are raised and trained, have discouraged the Militia and Volunteers, and disclose negligence and mismanagement on the part of Your Majesty's Ministers, more particularly as to the armament of the Artillery, whereby, in spite of the increased cost of the Army, its efficiency for the defence of the Empire has been diminished.'"—Captain Norton).

Question proposed, "That those words be there added."

Sir HOWARD VINCENT (Sheffield, Central) said there was a great deal in the speech of the hon. Member for the Isle of Wight with which he cordially agreed, especially with regard to the Volunteer force, to which branch of the service he intended to confine his remarks. It would be difficult to put the matter better than it had been put by the seconder of the Amendment. Everybody knew the difficulties with which the Volunteer force had had to contend since its re-establishment in 1859—difficulties which had been put in its way, not by one Government more than another, or by one set of military advisers more than another—and it was entirely by the perseverance and determination of the Volunteers themselves that the force was still alive and had been able to render to the country services which had been recognised by every Commander-in-Chief and by all the generals who had Volunteers under them in the recent campaign in South Africa. That war entirely dispelled any illusions which might have prevailed as to whether or not Volunteers would be fit for service in the field should the necessity arise, as over 36,000 came forward in one capacity or another, and, so far as he had been able to ascertain, not a single unfavourable report was made upon their conduct in the field. That they rendered considerable service in a time of great necessity could not be disputed.

CAPTAIN JESSEL (St. Pancras, S.) asked whether the hon. and gallant Member was referring to Volunteers pure and simple, or included also the Yeomanry.

SIR HOWARD VINCENT said he was speaking more especially of the Volunteer force, and, if desired, would place at the disposal of the hon. and gallant Member for St. Pancras a number of extracts from General Orders on the subject. What had been their reward for all these services? First of all, there were the new regulations of 1901, issued without the knowledge of or consultation with General Turner, the Inspector-General of Auxiliary Forces, who saw them for the first time when published in The Times. Those regulations, which were very offensively worded and naturally created great consternation in the force, were so impracticable in their character that they had to be at once suspended, and were, after inquiry, materially modified. The fact that such regulations could be drawn up and thus issued showed the confusion of mind which existed at the War Office with regard to the Volunteer and Auxiliary Forces. That the officer mainly responsible for those regulations was still retained in his position at the War Office was very extraordinary in view of the regulation that officers on the Headquarters Staff must return to regimental duty on the expiration of a certain period. Then came the advent of the present Secretary of State for War, whose great industry and desire to discharge his duties to the utmost of his ability none could deny, and who undoubtedly had been an earnest student of military affairs. The first speech of the right hon. Gentleman after his appointment, delivered at Liverpool on January 21st, 1904, gave the greatest hope and encouragement to every member of the Volunteer force. On that occasion the right hon. Gentleman said—

> "There are some men, not necessarily the best, who can give a great deal of time to their military duties; there are others who, because of their serious and constant occupation, can only give a certain amount of time. Do not for a moment think that the Volunteer who cannot give a large amount of time to Volunteer work is the less valuable Volunteer of the two. Whether I am in this office a short or a long time, the Volunteers will find in me a most sympathetic person. I cannot believe that among the 250,000, more or less, young Englishmen and Scotchmen anxious to give their service, to the country in time of war we cannot get a force of enormous value. I do not think the problem is solved yet; but, believe me, it requires a great deal of sympathy and a considerable dose of common sense."

That speech gave rise to the hope that as soon as the right hon. Gentleman got fairly into the saddle he would do his best to encourage and develop the Volunteer force. A Royal Commission appointed shortly before to inquire into the question held a large number of sittings and examined over 130 witnesses, and the fact that the Secretary of State repeatedly pressed for their Report gave colour to the assumption that he was anxious to deal with the problem as soon as possible. The Report, when issued, contained the following paragraph—

> "The Volunteer force owes its origin and continuance mainly to the energy and goodwill of its officers and men, and the fact that it is not maintained at war conditions is in no way attributable to them."

It was attributable to the War Office, and therefore it was for the War Office to set to work to remedy the defects as rapidly as possible. Unfortunately the Report contained recommendations of compulsory service——

MR. LEWELLYN (Somersetshire, N.) said the Report recommended, not compulsory service, but compulsory training—a very different thing.

SIR HOWARD VINCENT accepted the correction, seeing that the hon. Member was a member of the Commission. The Report, at any rate, recommended compulsory training, and that recommendation attracted the attention of the country and gave the idea that the Commissioners were in favour of compulsory service, with the result that many excellent recommendations in other directions had been practically lost sight of. The Commission made valuable suggestions with regard to both Militia and Volunteers, but although several months had elapsed nothing whatever had been done. The Volunteers did not know where they were, and he appealed to the Secretary of State not to keep them longer than was absolutely necessary in the present condition of uncertainty and suspense. A Director of Auxiliary Forces was appointed, but on the re-organisation of the War Office he was made a mere officer of the Adjutant-General's Department. It was not proper that the head of the Auxiliary Forces should be a mere adjunct of the Adjutant-General; only by having a separate department could satisfaction be given. His right hon. friend had now assured them that the Director of Auxiliary Forces should have direct access to himself. He thought the Director of Auxiliary Forces had done all that was expected of him, for he had attended an enormous number of prize distributions, where he had stated that he wished something could be done to solve the mystery which existed in regard to the future of the Volunteer forces. He had told the Volunteers as lately as last night the same thing, and under those circumstances no wonder that there was great uncertainty, suspense, and apprehension prevailing in the mind of every deserving member of the Volunteer force.

What was the reason for all this? The Secretary of State for War met a large number of Members of both Houses of Parliament last summer connected with the Volunteer force. His right hon. friend was exceedingly accessible, but he was very anxious to impress his views upon those he received, and not quite so anxious to hear the views of those he honoured by an interview. That was somewhat the case upon this occasion. They all liked to read the right hon. Gentleman's speeches, but when they met him in this way they liked to have an opportunity of expressing their views instead of listening so much to his orations. So far as he was able to form an opinion he thought there was no subject upon which all hon. Members were agreed that no parsimony should be shown as that of the support granted to the Volunteer forces. His right hon. friend took a different view and was bent upon cutting down the cost, which amounted only to £6 per man, of the Volunteer force. He hoped hon. Members connected with the Volunteer force would impress upon the right hon. Gentleman that it was necessary to have generous treatment in this matter. What had been the result of this extraordinary action as regarded the Volunteer force. Only the day before yesterday his right hon. friend said there were 2,700 officers short. But this was explained by a statement that it was due simply to decline after the war fever. He would give an instance when there was no war fever. In the year 1898 nobody had any idea that the Volunteer force would be wanted for active service. At that time there were 1,300 officers deficient. At the present time, seven years after that, the deficiency was more than double, for they were 2,700 officers deficient at the present moment. His right hon. friend knew that the one great lesson which ought to have been learned in South Africa was that men were forthcoming in large numbers provided they opened the door wide enough, and by doing that they could get any number of men. There was, nevertheless, the greatest difficulty in getting competent and thoroughly efficient soldiers. With regard to the United States, the American Government had very closely followed this question of the great want of officers experienced by us in South Africa, and since the war they had adopted legislation providing for the establishment of a large corps of officers for the Volunteers. This country had done nothing whatever of that kind, and they had allowed the Volunteer officers to dwindle away simply because they had received no encouragement. They did not want flattering words or after-dinner speeches, but he thought they were entitled to be treated fairly and justly and encouraged. Why were they 2,700 officers short? Simply because in the present condition of affairs it was impossible to tell what shape the force might take. They did not know what the new regulations would be. They knew nothing as to the time of camping, and they did not know whether it would be inconvenient or not. He was aware that in some parts of the country this matter operated differently. In some districts there was a regular suspension of work at Whitsuntide, and then the men could manage to leave their employment without loss. If the time was well chosen in country districts there was not much difficulty about arranging for the camps after the harvest. But in cases like the Metropolitan Volunteer Corps, which consisted largely of clerks in banks, insurance officers, and other commercial institutions, the question of the camp operated in a much more difficult way. The system of making the man undertake that he would go to camp debarred from the service a very large number of men who might otherwise be very useful. He was not arguing that class corps were better than the others, but he thought it was desirable that they should get men of intelligence and education into their Volunteer Army, because they were the men, when they wanted a large number of officers for the Regular Forces, who were likely to prove exceedingly valuable and useful in that direction. Therefore, it was a very great pity to do anything which prevented this class of men from coming forward.

He had in his possession a return of the Metropolitan Volunteer Corps for January, 1902, and they represented 8,000 in that year. Now, in February this year they only numbered 5,000, or a falling-off of no less than 3,000 men in three years. Altogether they were seventy-one officers and 5,000 men short of their establishment. In the middle of October last year he wrote a letter to his right hon. friend, impressing upon him the necessity of letting the Volunteer force know what was going to be done. He pointed out to him that this was the time that the men made up their minds whether to leave the force or to remain in it. Now they found themselves at the end of February and still nothing whatever had been done. The consequence was that the force was thoroughly discouraged, and he could not conceive why something had not been done. They had been in possession for some time of the recommendations of the Duke of Norfolk's Commission, and many of those recommendations were of a very simple character and were not very costly, in fact, the whole of them would not cost more than about £200,000. He believed in economy, but not at any price, and if for £200,000 they could put the Volunteer force in the state recommended by that Commission, then he thought it would be money well expended. His right hon. friend proposed to reduce this force from 250,000 to 180,000. The reason why so many Volunteers were leaving was because naturally they would not stay on in order to be turned out. He called upon the right hon. Gentleman that afternoon to make a clean breast of it, and to solve this mystery and let the Director of Auxiliary Forces know what the future of the Volunteer force was going to be.

His right hon. friend, speaking at a dinner on February 1st, said—

> "It was his opinion that money could only be got by reducing the total of the Volunteer force and applying the savings to the perfection of the remainder. Until the Volunteer force accepted that view of the situation what they all desired would not be done."

He was sure his right hon. friend did not intend to threaten the Volunteer force, but that statement could only be read as a most deliberate threat. "Unless you accept my scheme you shall have nothing at all," If that was a view which his right hon. friend allowed to escape him in the heat of the moment he was sure it would not commend itself to his earnest desire to benefit and to put on a better footing the whole military forces of the country. To say to the commanding officers, who had done their utmost in the face of great discouragement to improve their regiments and to improve the force, that unless they accepted the whole of the ideas of the Secretary of State for War, who, however able, industrious, and persevering, had no real practical experience of the force, they should have nothing at all and that everything should be hung up until they came into line—that was a view which was quite unworthy of his antecedents and of his great desire to benefit the force. This was a matter of very great urgency and importance. He earnestly hoped that they would have an end now to the mystery, and that before many hours were out they would hear from the Secretary of State for War exactly what he intended to do in regard to the Volunteer force. The right hon. Gentleman stated that he knew what he wanted and that he knew how to get it. Those Members of the House who spoke as representing the Volunteer force knew what was wanted in regard to the Auxiliary Forces, and he thought they were determined to get it if they possibly could, not from any selfish motive but because they knew that by the encouragement of these the military forces of the Crown would be put on a better and surer footing. It was only by this means that the country could be rendered safe against invasion, and that forces could be furnished in adequate strength in times of necessity.

*Mr. McCRAE (Edinburgh, E.) said it was not too much to say that the question before the House that afternoon was the most pressing they could discuss. The Fiscal question and Home Rule would become very secondary matters indeed if the state of the Army was allowed to continue as it was at present. He did not intend to deal with the Regular Army. He would devote his remarks to the Volunteer force. The question which he would submit to the Secretary of State for War was this—What is the object of the Volunteer force? It existed for the purpose of national defence. He should like to say that it was to the credit of the Secretary of State for War that he had taken the Volunteer force as a serious factor in the question of national defence. He would also say that he admired the courage and ability with which the right hon. Gentleman was maintaining the struggle—he thought all in the House would admire the determination he had shown, with perhaps the exception of a few of his colleagues in the Cabinet—to place the Army on a better footing.

Sir Howard Vincent.

He wished first of all to examine the position of the right hon. Gentleman with regard to the Volunteers. In a speech in that House the right hon. Gentleman said—

> "The defence of these islands against hostile raids must therefore be left very largely to the Volunteers."

That was very sound policy indeed. The Volunteers themselves, he thought, were quite prepared that that responsibility should devolve upon them, but he should like to point out to the right hon. Gentleman that it was not perhaps the view of those who were not so familiar with military matters. Perhaps the right hon. Gentleman had heard of Lord Esher. That noble Lord had evidently had a good deal to do with the reform of the War Office, though according to all accounts confusion had been succeeded by chaos. He must admit that his belief in the ability of Lord Esher to formulate military schemes, without, as he understood, any military training, had been somewhat shattered by a speech which he made in Scotland with regard to the Volunteers. Speaking in August at Callander, Lord Esher said—

> "Well, he supposed they had often asked themselves what the uses of the Volunteers might be, and at the first glance it was generally supposed that the Volunteers existed for the purpose of repelling invasion. Well, he thought that, according to modern ideas of military and naval strategy, that was an illusion."

That was the view of a good many of our military authorities, and he was afraid that the Secretary of State for War had been subjected to a good deal of cross-pulling on the question what the Volunteers were to do. With regard to the quality of the Volunteers the right hon. Gentleman had said in the House that he believed the Volunteer force contained the best material we had in the whole Army, and a divisional commander in South Africa at the time of the war said that the only decent fellows sent out were the Volunteers and the Militia. There was no doubt at all about the quality of the men and their capacity to perform the duties which the right hon. Gentleman said he wished to devolve upon them. He believed the intentions of the right hon. Gentleman were very good, but in this case he was afraid they were paving-stones to perdition. How did he propose to fit the Volunteers for the task which he was going to lay upon them? First of all by reducing their number. He proposed to reduce the establishment of the Volunteers by 147,000 men—from 347,000 to 200,000—and he proposed to reduce the actual strength from 240,000 to 180,000. He next proposed to divide the force into two distinct classes. What he would call for convenience of phrase the first-line Volunteers were to be put into a class amounting to 60,000 men, and the remainder were to be put into the second class of 120,000 men. Then the right hon. Gentleman proceeded to reduce the expenditure on the Volunteers. All were agreed with regard to national expenditure that a crisis had really come and that something must be done to reduce it. The Secretary of State for War himself had said that the annual Estimates showed that the cost of the Army was excessive. They all agreed with his main proposition. The present expenditure on the Army went to show that large expenditure was no guarantee of efficiency. The Army Estimates for the present year amounted to £28,900,000. Under the new scheme, the Secretary of State for War proposed to make a saving on these Estimates of £1,092,000. Where was he going to get this reduction? Excluding the Militia proposals, which the hon. Member thought had gone by the board and need not be considered, the right hon. Gentleman proposed to reduce the Army Estimates by £1,000,000, and of that sum £300,000, or a third part, was to be taken off the Volunteers, and yet the total cost of the Volunteers was only £1,200,000. The right hon. Gentleman was simply going back to the old policy of attempting to starve the Volunteer force. When the present Government came into power the expenditure on the Volunteer force amounted to £800,000, and in four years they had managed to reduce that sum to £628,000. In the year after that came the war in South Africa and the expenditure suddenly went up to £1,700,000. What the Secretary of State for War was now attempting to do was to bring back the expenditure on the Volunteers to the amount at which it stood in 1895–6. Was the right hon. Gentleman prepared to apply the same test to the Army Estimates? Was he prepared to reduce the Army Estimates from £29,000,000 to £18,000,000, the figure at which they stood in 1895-6? The whole position in regard to this was untenable. The right hon. Gentleman, in reply to a Question the other day, told them that there was to be no reduction in the Volunteer force for the current year. On behalf of the commanding officers he must thank him for that answer.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. ARNOLD-FORSTER, Belfast, W.): On the Volunteer Vote.

*MR. McCRAE said he was very glad of that at any rate. The answer allowed the commanding officers to know how they stood for at least one year. He asked the right hon. Gentleman to state whether it was only for one year that there was to be no reduction on the Vote. Was it a reprieve, or was it merely a postponement of their sentence? He did not know whether the right hon. Gentleman was in full retreat and going to give up the proposal for a reduction of the force. Out of the reduced expenditure on the Volunteers the right hon. Gentleman proposed to spend £50,000 per annum on rifle clubs, complete a system of transport for the Volunteers, a divisional staff for the Volunteers; and, in addition, he intended to make an increased grant for efficiency. His plan of finance was like the proposition of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham with regard to old-age pensions. It was so simple that anyone could understand it, but he confessed that he thought the right hon. Gentleman would find, when he came to the details in the Volunteer Estimates, that the position was one which he could not really maintain. Since the day when the Irishman attempted to lengthen his blanket by taking a piece off the top and sewing it on to the bottom, a more futile and indefensible proposal could hardly be conceived. Lord Esher evidently thought that the main purpose for which the Volunteers existed was to increase or to foster the military spirit of the country. He said there, as a commanding officer, that if that was the reason for the existence of the Volunteers the country was spending far too much money on the force. They wanted to be taken seriously, and if the right hon. Gentleman wished to put the force on an efficient footing, his only alternative was to increase the expenditure upon it rather than reduce it. They only asked for a few thousands out of the million or two which, it was generally conceded, could be saved in Army administration. Let him affirm that the Volunteer force had any objection at all to submit to increased efficiency, but there was one limit which must be placed to that demand, and that was that that efficiency must not mean the sacrifice of the men's daily employment. When the regulations were promulgated by the predecessor of the present Secretary of State for War, and for which the latter was therefore not responsible, in regard to attendance in camp, very many of the men had to choose between giving up their daily employment or resigning their position as Volunteers. The consequence was that a very large number of the best men in the force had to resign because they could not submit to the test. Not only that, even the numbers were kept up only by a reduced physique on the part of those enlisted. The fact was that for many years the War Office had been experimenting with the Volunteers. They had been subjected to the process of vivisection, and it was only their strength and inherent vitality that had prevented the force from being shattered beyond recuperation.

Now, the name of the late Inspector-General of the Auxiliary Forces had been mentioned, and he had great experience. He meant Major-General Turner, and he did not know why the Secretary of State for War should laugh. Major-General Turner was, he thought, an officer who had shown that at any rate he understood the Volunteers, which was more than could be said for the War Office. That officer said the other day that—> "He complained much of the treatment which the Volunteers had received. It was impossible that our Volunteers should fulfil the hard and fast conditions laid down for the Regulars. The result of attempting to impose upon them those conditions was that the best London corps were dying away."

No doubt those regulations had now been modified or withdrawn, but after much mischief had been done, and he was quite sure of this—and he did not want to put the case too strongly—that the Volunteers had suffered a great wrong in consequence of those regulations. They did not apply equally to all the force. His own battalion was not affected, as it was composed principally of artisans, who could go into camp on the trades holidays, and moreover, they were over strength. But he was speaking for corps not so happily situated. What was wanted was elasticity of treatment in regard to the force. He would like to know who had advised the Secretary of State for War—for he must have had some expert adviser—to put the Volunteers into two distinct classes. Really that proposal was fundamentally wrong. He had for years advocated that every man in the country who was capable of bearing arms should get a course of training similar to that which was given to the Volunteer force. No doubt the country was against that being done compulsorily, but it should be our aim to get as many men as possible, so that in the hour of need there should be a foundation to work upon. He believed that the secret of this muddle and the reason for this policy which he had described as unwise, uncertain, and erratic, was that our military administrators had lost faith in the voluntary principle. A great many of them had a hankering after conscription. He did not hesitate to say that the proposals of the late Secretary for War were intended, by smashing up the Volunteer force, to pave the way for conscription; and he was afraid that, with all his good intentions, the present Secretary of State for War was going in the same direction. The right hon. Gentleman might have different aims and a different policy, but the effect would be the same, and he would find that by reducing the Volunteer force he was cutting at the root principle of the voluntary system.

What was going to be done? There must be continuity of policy in the first place. It must be open to every Volunteer to go into camp for fourteen days and get the grant now earned by the selected battalions. They ought to have a transport service—an Army Service Corps for the Volunteers alone. He would ask the Secretary of State for War, who was so anxious to bring forward proposals which struck at the root of the principles on which the Volunteer force was founded, to consider that there were various ways in which that force could be built up upon a system which would put it on a better footing. Whatever method was adopted by the Secretary of State for War the Volunteer force, if it was to be of any use at all, must have transport of its own. There was in existence a proposal approved of by the War Office, and recommended by the Royal Commission, yet no effort had been made to put it into operation. Much had been said of the efficiency of the officers. There, again, the officers were quite prepared to undergo training and pass the necessary examinations; but it must be kept in mind that the Volunteer who gave his time should not be called upon for such a drain, as at present, on his pocket for expenses. He emphasised the fact that the Volunteer officers did not shrink from any test in regard to efficiency short of that which interfered with their ordinary employment. He asked the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary for War to reconsider his proposal to reduce the number of Volunteers and to divide them into two distinct units. Grade, if he liked, the grant for efficiency, but do not make the second-line Volunteers feel that they were serving in a lower-grade corps, which would be the result of the right hon. Gentleman's proposal if carried out. He hoped they were to have an end of all this marching and counter-marching, orders and counter-orders. Let them have some definite policy. Even a bad policy was better than the sort of treatment they had been subjected to during the last few years. The Secretary for War should let them know where they stood, should give them a clear policy, and pledge himself to end a system which was a curious mixture of apathy, ignorance, and misunderstanding.

*MR. WYLIE (Dumbartonshire) said he intended to confine his remarks to that portion of the Amendment which dealt with the Volunteers. At the end of last Session 60,000 (a fourth) of the Volunteer Forces were under sentence of extinction and 120,000 were to be deprived of 30 per cent. of their grants, but he was glad to learn that in the meantime they had been reprieved. Since the end of 1901, when the very severe Order in Council by Lord Roberts and the War Office was issued, a large number of Members of this House had not ceased to bring forward the claims of the Volunteers for fairer treatment. The Norfolk Commission was appointed in 1903, and after very careful investigation and the examination of 134 witnesses, that Commission issued a Report last year which was admirably clear, concise, and comprehensive. It was with the utmost satisfaction that many of them found therein ample justification for the time of the House they had taken in pressing the claims of the Volunteers, for it thoroughly homologated the opinions they had advocated in and out of the House. There was amongst many Volunteer officers considerable misapprehension of the general terms of that Report. They had been so depressed with the sweeping criticism of the Report that the Volunteer force was not capable of dealing with a regular army in the field, that they construed it into an indirect intimation that their services would no longer be required. But the whole tenour of the Report was that until they obtained a larger and more comprehensive system of military training the Volunteers must not only be maintained in their present numbers but very much increased in efficiency. The Royal Commission very generously recognised the good services they had done, and held out encouragement to proceed to better things. He pressed on the Secretary of State for War the necessity for carrying out the recommendations of that Report at the earliest opportunity. Now, during the late war, and for a short time after, it was thought that we could not have too large an Army, and the Volunteers were largely increased. But the fit for lavish expenditure and a very large Army was immediately succeeded by a cool mood for parsimonious retrenchment and wholesale disbandment. No one had had more severe experience of this fickleness in policy than the late Secretary for War. His right hon. friend was incited in 1900 and 1901 to form as large an Army as possible, and exposed to unmerited obloquy because of the failure of his scheme, some of the leading parts of which had not had the beginning of a trial. The present Secretary of State had had set before him the very difficult problem of increasing the efficiency of, and reducing the expenditure on, the land forces. His right hon. friend proposed to decrease the Regular Army, the Militia, and the Volunteers. He would not say anything about the Regular Army and the Militia, except that it was easier to disband men than bring them together again. His remarks would be confined to the Volunteers; and they would be founded in a great measure on the opinions of a number of very able Volunteer officers, and also principally on the Report of the Commission.

He would ask hon. Members to remember that the cardinal principle on which the Report was based was that no officer, non-commissioned officer, or private should be put to any expense, but that everything should be paid by the State. That had been opposed by the War Office in the past. The first thing that struck him in the proposals of the Secretary for War was that, although home defence was to rest on the Volunteers, the establishment was to be reduced by over 40 per cent., the effective strength by 25 per cent., and the expenditure by about as much—even the present expenditure, £1,200,000, was less than the cost of a single battleship—in connection with a branch of the service which was to be entrusted with the most important duty of all, home defence. He quite concurred with his right hon. friend in his expression of opinion as to the inefficiency of a considerable number of the Volunteer forces. Lord Roberts was just as frank and explicit; and in 1901 he and the War Office authorities proceeded to reform the then existing state of affairs by the celebrated Order in Council demanding more arduous training, without increasing the grants. He believed that if the Order in Council then issued had been accompanied by an increased grant, so that the Volunteers might be able to receive about £1 a week for their camp training there would have been no complaint. But the usual parsimony in connection with the Volunteers was exercised. The great success of his right hon. friend the previous Secretary of State for War in connection with the Yeomanry was due to a liberal apportionment of grants which enabled every Yeoman to return from camp with £5 or £7 in his pocket. He was very glad his right hon. friend recognised the necessity of increasing the efficiency of the Volunteers by means of an increase of grants, and intended to apply this principle to 60,000 of them; but he would be interested to know to what extent his right hon. friend was prepared to increase the grant. If his right hon. friend was as liberal as his predecessor was in connection with the Yeomanry he would predict a great success for his scheme. Its great defect, however, was that he proposed to carry it out at the expense of the other Volunteers. His right hon. friend proposed to dismiss 60,000 of the most inefficient Volunteers. That was a very drastic proposal. Why were they so inefficient? The Report of the Commission stated it was no fault of the Volunteers; but was principally the fault of the War Office because of the parsimonious policy which had been adopted. A great deal of the efficiency of some of the Volunteer Corps was owing to subscriptions from officers and from gentlemen resident in the district. A large amount of the inefficiency of others was due to the fact that officers could not afford that expense; and that there were no gentlemen in the several districts who subscribed. Many of the Volunteers proposed to be dismissed had rendered splendid service to the country; they had guarded the country when the Regular Forces and the Militia were abroad in South Africa; and they had sent many of their members to the front. It would be much more judicious to give them a chance under the more liberal auspices proposed by the Commission, demand a minimum standard of efficiency and let those who would not come up to it quietly drop out. He considered the other proposal, viz., to reduce the grants to 120,000 and form them into a second class even more objectionable. The Secretary for War relied upon them to act as second battalions to the efficient regiments, but with grants reduced by 30 per cent. they would melt away like snow in summer. In that he had the concurrence of every Volunteer officer with whom he had spoken.

The proposals of the right hon. Gentleman were quite contrary to the Report of the Commission, to the opinion of almost all Volunteer officers, and based on the supposed necessity for retrenchment. To listen to some hon. Gentlemen one would imagine that this was the most overburdened country in the world; whereas, on the contrary, according to its wealth, it was one of the most lightly taxed. The taxation of France was £10,000,000 greater, though its population and wealth were smaller, and there was, therefore, no necessity to rush into a parsimonious policy. The policy which the Government should adopt lay in an entirely different direction. The growing necessities of the Empire and the need for improvement in the physical condition of our young men so impressed the Royal Commission that they recommended what might be called a modified form of conscription—universal military training. No form of conscription, however, was within the scope of present practical politics, nor need it ever be if we rightly utilized the Volunteer spirit and if we made use of our Volunteers. No country had so many young men and boys who were not merely willing but anxious and eager for military training. The policy to adopt would be to very largely increase the Volunteer forces, with a moderate increase in the grant not to exceed £10 per head, which would entail a proportionately small expense, through which would pass all the vigorous youth of our country, who would then form a reserve ready to be called upon in case of emergency. But this also was not at present within the range of practical politics. But he would suggest to the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary of State for War that there was a scheme in accordance with the recommendations laid down by the Royal Commission which was within the scope of practical politics and which might be adopted by the right hon. Gentleman, viz., to maintain the present numbers and to secure much greater efficiency by a corresponding increase of grants and facilities. The amount of money that such a scheme would require had been computed by the hon. Member for Sheffield at £200,000, but in his (Mr. Wylie's) opinion that estimate was far too moderate. He believed the increase would be at least £500,000. The right hon. Gentleman had said the expenditure upon the Army precluded any advance upon the estimate he had made, but the right hon. Gentleman had, he thought, entirely misapprehended the feeling of the House and the country so far as the Volunteer Forces were concerned. He believed that if the right hon. Gentleman would bring forward an Estimate for £1,750,000 for the voluntary forces he would get his Vote, if not without its being challenged, at least by a large majority. The right hon. Gentleman was himself an old Volunteer officer and in that capacity had acquired that practical military training which had proved of such service to him in dealing with military questions. Like many of his predecessors in the War Office he had apparently succumbed to the united influence of the Treasury and the War Office. The Chancellor of the Exchequer demanded retrenchment; the authorities at the War Office still retained their old professional contempt for the amateur and had no doubt insisted that the retrenchment should be at the expense of the Auxiliary Forces and not the Regular Forces, and the Secretary of State for War sought to restrict the already far too narrow basis on which our military strength rested by confining it to our very small professional Army and 60,000 semi-professional Volunteers. But, after all, the final decision rested with the House, and if the right hon. Gentleman would bring such an Estimate as he (Mr. Wylie) had ventured to suggest he felt confident the House and country would approve of it. For years the country had been recognising the necessity of improving the physique of our young men and the necessity for military training, and the Royal Commission had been so impressed that it had recommended universal military training. The right hon. Gentleman had now a great opportunity of taking not a retrograde but a forward step, and it was to be hoped he would not miss the opportunity.

Sir JOHN KENNAWAY (Devonshire, Honiton), as a Volunteer for more than forty years, wished to try to face the salient points of the most difficult problem the Volunteers now presented. The Volunteer force, formed just sixty years ago, had had an excellent moral effect as a defensive force, and a great physical effect upon the youth of the country, and this system had trained hundreds and thousands of our young men into habits of discipline and obedience. But, after all, this military force must be tested by the question whether it was efficient for the purpose for which it was created and whether it was ready to do what the country expected of it. It was clear, from the findings of the Royal Commission to whom the Government did well in referring the matter, that the Volunteer force, excellent as it was, would not be able to resist the highly trained troops of any country that might invade our shores, because the officers had not the opportunity of being properly trained, nor had it sufficient equipment and commissariat necessary to take the field. The question to be considered was how to make the force a reality, equal to the conditions of modern warfare. Half-trained men would not do, and to make the men efficient a large sum of money would have to be spent on additional training. That was admitted on all sides. The only alternative was to reduce the force, and to spend on the smaller number of men the same amount of money as was now allocated. The country would not begrudge the money necessary to make the force efficient, but the present was not an opportune time to increase the Estimates. An additional £500,000 had been suggested, but if all the expenses of the Volunteers were to be paid so that the men were not losers by their patriotism the extra expenditure might easily amount to much more. Another question was as to the size of the force which could be usefully employed in defending our shores. Too large a force would become unwieldy, and the men would simply get in each other's way. The alternative of a reduction in numbers was not popular, but the only choice lay between an indefinite increase of expenditure and the making of a smaller force thoroughly efficient. It was a very difficult problem. The Volunteer force was so entwined with our national sentiment that it should be treated with the utmost consideration and allowed the greatest elasticity. He hoped that as a result of the efforts now being made there would be secured a continuity of policy, the lack of which had caused so much inconvenience in the past. The demand for them to go into camp for a lengthy period was outside the conditions on which the men had joined the Volunteers, and if the men were to be called upon to spend long periods away from home the country must be prepared to recompense them. He trusted the Secretary of State for War would be supported in his endeavours to deal with the matter on right lines, Salus populi suprema est lex. The country must have an efficient force for the defence of these islands, ready to meet any emergency which might arise.

Mr. FREDERICK WILSON (Norfolk, Mid.) said that the House and the nation must remember that there were only two policies before the country. There was the policy of conscription, and, opposed to that, there was the policy of the encouragement of the Volunteers. It must come to one or the other. We had a nation full of fight; every schoolboy wanted to fight somebody, and we ought to be full of pride for our high-spirited race. Yet we could not get men for either the Regular Army or the Volunteers. They would not come. We were a fighting race, but our men would not go into either portion of the Army. There must be something wrong in the treatment by the authorities when they could not fill the ranks. There was no doubt in his mind which was the better policy, conscription or the encouragement of the Volunteers. Why should they encourage the dear Army at the expense of the cheap Army? Yet the policy of the Government seemed to be to expend money on the more expensive branch and to economise on the cheaper. The hon. Member for the Honiton Division seemed rather to disparage the Volunteers as a fighting force; but did they not do well in the Boer War, and did not the Boers themselves show what a race trained to shoot could do? He did not speak as a colonel of Volunteers, he had not been a colonel; he had never attained more than the rank of a full private, but he knew that among the private Volunteers there was a love of rifle-shooting, which was almost wiped out of the force to-day, for they had lost their ranges. When the long-shooting rifle came in, range after range was closed, and there was now no inducement of pleasure to be a Volunteer; there was now no fun in it. Volunteering in the old days was almost freemasonry; it was the best Saturday afternoon's holiday. At present, however, the English race was spending its energies in kicking a football about on Saturday afternoons. If they encouraged the grand old martial spirit of the English race they would soon fill their Volunteer ranks, to say nothing of the Army. The difficulty of the Army was different from that of the Volunteers. They had got to fill their ranks, not so much as to find officers. If they began at the bottom of the ladder they would soon have men qualified to rise to the top of it; and he trusted this Government, or any succeeding it, would bear distinctly in mind that there was one way to escape from a vast expenditure on a large Army, and that was to encourage the Volunteer, who was ready for home defence and was prepared, as shown in the Boer War, on emergency to go abroad and fight and die for his country.

*MAJOR EVANS GORDON (Tower Hamlets, Stepney) said the course of the debate would lead one to suppose that we had no Regular Army at all, the speeches so far having dealt almost exclusively with the Volunteers. He feared that his remarks would be considered somewhat out of sympathy with the speeches of hon. friends with whom he had acted on Army questions on previous occasions, but he was glad to think that their personal relations were not affected. Reference had been made to the "useless quality" of great numbers of the men enlisted into the Regular Army. He quite agreed that that process should be stopped, and that the element which was admitted on all hands to be such as would never be of any military value should be got rid of. But would it not be admitted that a similar element existed in the Volunteers? And if a reduction was to be made in the Regular Army on that ground, would not the same argument hold good with regard to the Volunteers?

Another point to be noted in this debate was the absence of any reference to the universal cry as to the necessity for economy in the expenditure connected with the armed forces of this country. Immediately a particular branch of the service was threatened with anything in the nature of reduction an outcry was raised and claims were put in for that branch. What the right hon. Gentleman had to consider was not so much what ought to be done, but what really could be done; and true economy must depend upon spending the money to the best possible advantage. If reductions were necessary they could only or mainly be brought about by the reduction in establishments and men, and if these reductions could be carried out, as he believed they could, without any material loss in the fighting power of the forces of this country, the Volunteers would have to take their share in the reduction. He knew the line he was taking was not a popular line, but he asked the House to believe that, though his views might be unpopular, he put them forward with the idea of doing the best all round for the armed forces of the country.

A good deal had been heard that afternoon about the utility of the Auxiliary Forces for keeping up the martial spirit of the country and providing a reserve force to be called upon in case of emergency. But while that was true enough the House must beware of mistaking mere numbers for military strength. There was abundant evidence in the many voluminous Reports to show that we were maintaining in many branches of the service, boys who would not within a long period be fit to take the field, but who swelled the Estimates, and deceived the nation as to its military strength. Besides those there were numbers of men who would never become effective soldiers at all. That remark applied to the Volunteer Auxiliary Forces with even greater force than to the Regular Army, and if efficiency was desired, surely the proper thing to do was to fearlessly get rid of all those. Broadly speaking, that was what the scheme of the Secretary of State proposed to do. The right hon. Gentleman had the courage to look facts in the face; to get rid of useless material and to spend the money so saved in making the material which remained more effective and more efficient. It seemed to him that there had been in the Press a great deal of, if not unfair, at least ill-informed criticism of the right hon. Gentleman's scheme. They ought to look at the whole position. The military ideal could never exactly coincide with political exigencies, and the only course open to us was to make them coincide as far as possible. This was what the right hon. Gentleman had done. He did not believe any Secretary of State for War had ever been in closer touch with military opinion or had consulted his military advisers more freely and fully than his right hon. friend. If this scheme which was put forward, was rejected because in the opinion of some it did not reach perfection, and if they did not make the best use of what could be got and insisted upon what could not be obtained they would never reach any reform at all. The constant desire to pull up everything that was sown in order to see whether it was growing was greatly to be deprecated. As to the Volunteers, what did the right hon. Gentleman propose? There were three categories of Volunteers, first, there was the very good first-class material; men who gave a deal of time to their training. Then there was a second class composed of men who did not do so well but who gave what time they could towards making themselves efficient, and there was the third group which was classed as efficient but which was unfit for service with any mobile army. The scheme of his right hon. friend differentiated between these three classes and encouraged the first class, composed of the best material, by every means, and also the second class which would come to fill the ranks of the first and which would be stiffened by the men already in the first class. But that could only be done by the reduction of the third class which was known to be inefficient. He could not understand hon. Members saying that they must have enough money to make the Volunteer force as it now existed efficient. He did not believe that a sum sufficient for that purpose would ever be granted by Parliament, and if it were he did not think the expenditure would produce the desired result. The fact was it was impossible to get the money to keep the Volunteer force in its present state efficient, and so far from the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary of State being an enemy to the force he was the best friend they had, because he desired to convert what in many respects was a sham into a reality, and to give us a force of 60,000 or 70,000 men upon whom we could depend in time of war. The question was essentially one of quality rather than quantity. As was well known, the Volunteers were lacking in nearly all the essential accessories without which an Army is incapable of taking the field. Surely it was better to provide these things for a smaller force fit to use them, than to waste money on the maintenance of a large force with only a paper value? At present the tares were choking the wheat, and the money urgently needed would never be forthcoming unless reduction of men known to be useless were submitted to. Such were the facts upon which the House was asked to pass a vote of censure upon the Government for what they had done and proposed to do. He trusted the House of Commons, by an overwhelming majority, would say that the right hon. Gentleman had taken the proper course. When his right hon. friend replied to all the criticisms, which had now been going on since March last, he would be able to show that there was no foundation for them, and the country might be confident that a great step in advance had not only been taken with regard to Army reform but with regard to the reform of the Volunteers as well.

*SIR WALTER FOSTER (Derbyshire, Ilkeston) said one of the lessons of the South African War which ought to be taken to heart by every War Minister was that he should do nothing to discourage the efficiency and strength of the Volunteer forces, and he hoped the right hon. Gentleman would move in the direction of making that force not only more efficient but more numerous. He believed there was in this country an enormous amount of material for the Volunteer force, not for aggressive purposes, but for the highest of all purposes: the defence of our hearths and homes. Another lesson of the war was the importance of mobility in warfare and the necessity of creating in this country a mobile force after the fashion of our opponents in the Transvaal. The third lesson was in connection with the artillery. It was a standing disgrace to our land that we should be fighting a war with a force better armed than we were. That lesson had been taken to heart. Since the right hon. Gentleman had been in office he had given orders for putting us in possession of adequate artillery in the course of twelve or eighteen months. It was manifestly a danger to this country that we were supplied with artillery which was inferior to any great Continental Power. But a more serious lesson of the war was that from neglect of certain precautions we lost an enormous number of men. In the course of the war we lost 13,250 men from disease, mostly from a disease which of all diseases was the most preventable. He laid it down as a canon which every War Minister ought to regard, that while in a civil community an outbreak of enteric fever was a scandal, an outbreak of enteric fever in the course of a war was a crime. The Secretary for War's predecessor in office, after the recommendations of more than one Commission, started a system in the Army Medical Service by which there should be a college for the teaching of science in London and also a large hospital where they could learn the latest methods of defeating and possibly preventing disease. How far had that scheme progressed? He saw on the Embankment a large hospital which had been completed for more than a year. It was still empty and unused. But where was the medical school in which officers were to be taught the latest scientific methods for preserving the physical efficiency of the general force? He believed the college was working in cramped buildings and without a sufficient amount of money. Was the right hon. Gentleman going to reform the present condition of affairs and develop the institution as it should be developed? The right hon. Gentleman had had the courage to approach the Treasury, and had obtained an increased grant. The institution wanted £30,000 or £40,000 to equip it adequately, and he hoped he would obtain sufficient money for the purpose. At the commencement of the Russian-Japanese War a distinguished Japanese officer said to Major Seaman, an American medical officer, who relates the story—

> "Russia may be able to place 2,000,000 men in the field. We can furnish 500,000. You know in every war four men die of disease for every one who falls from bullets. That will be the position of Russia in this war. We propose to eliminate disease as a factor. Every man who dies in our Army must fall on the field of battle. In this way we shall neutralise the superiority of Russian numbers, and stand on a comparatively equal footing."

The result had been that whereas it had been a canon on the part of medical departments in the past that four men were killed by disease for every man killed by the enemy, the Japanese had grappled with this problem, and they had found that instead of losing four by disease to every one killed, the rate had fallen to 1 per cent. of their forces because they had the science and knowledge to prevent it. That was one of the greatest triumphs in Army administration, and he wanted to know whether the Secretary of State was trying to imitate the Japanese, in order that when the British Army was again engaged in conflict, and he hoped that the time might be far distant, we might be able to deal with the pestilences that tracked every army, and that we should only have to deplore those losses, which were the legitimate losses of war, inflicted by the enemy. All the Reports of the Commissions and Committees that sat on the South African war converged on this point—that we wanted improved methods of sanitation. We wanted forethought in the Boer War to meet possible contingencies. There was no part where this was more apparent than in the administration of the medical department, which would not recognise the warnings of the terrible amount of disease they were likely to have among the forces in the field. The consequence was that men died like flies on the veldt in South Africa, and many a brave fellow lost his life and many a family was put into mourning on account of lives lost which ought to have been saved by the exercise of forethought. In solving this problem the Japanese had for the first time in the history of the world realised the true inwardness of the medical department of the army. It was instituted and constituted for the purpose of preventing disease. The Japanese knew that under the old theory and old systems 400 men were lost by disease for every 100 lost by the action of the enemy, and, recognising that, they had made their medical department not so much a department for treatment and operating, but a great department for looking after the health, the feeding, and the physical efficiency of their army. How had they done it? They had put a medical officer everywhere. Our system was to put the medical officer in the background and to keep him there. There was no respect for science in the British Army. It had never had the recognition it ought to have in the Army. Manchuria was a country where the sanitary conditions were very much worse than those in South Africa, but the Japanese medical officers went out behind the first screen of scouts, and made it their duty to attend to every detail before the advancing army. Every water-supply was tested by the medical officer, and a notice was put up in those cases where the soldiers must not drink, in other cases instructions were given that the water must be boiled before use. That was done as the army marched, and so good was the discipline of the soldiers that they never disobeyed the orders of the scientific advisers. When they visited towns where fever was epidemic, the soldiers were encamped under conditions where they were not likely to be infected. If we had done that in South Africa, hundreds of lives would have been saved in cases where the men were encamped on ground which had previously been occupied by patients suffering from enteric fever.

Throughout the whole department of transport the same care was exercised in connection with all the possibilities of the campaign, and by attending to that carefully day by day, with the highest scientific skill, this nation of the East had shown the civilised West how to preserve human life. They did not stop there. The medical officers of the Japanese Army, when the troops were in camp or in stationary positions, used these opportunities to teach the soldiers all the devices by means of which they could preserve health, what food to take, how it should be cooked, and how to avoid all those maladies which came from inattention to personal cleanliness and sanitation; and so the whole army was preserved in a state of efficiency and preparedness for warfare, which no other army ever had before attained. It was almost like a fairy tale to read the details recently published in regard to General Oku's division—or left wing of the Japanese Army in Manchuria—an army about equal in numbers to what we had in South Africa. That record came to this: that during the first five or six months of the campaign they had only 40 deaths from disease. There were only 193 cases of enteric fever and 342 cases of dysentery. What was our record in South Africa in the first year of the war? We had no fewer than 3,774 deaths from typhoid fever alone, out of some 12,000 cases. And so it was with other diseases. The disease of beri-beri, familiar to this House in connection with the Chinese labourers in South Africa, had been overcome by the sanitary precautions of the Japanese medical authorities, and had ceased to be the scourge it used to be in Eastern armies. It might be said that all this was beside the question; that it happened in another country where the climatic and other conditions were not the same. But the climatic conditions in Manchuria were worse than in South Africa. It was science that had done it, because the Russian Army had had a scourge which the Japanese had been able to avoid. It had been estimated that the total number of sick and wounded in the Russian Army, up to the time of the great battle on the Sha Ho, was 150,000, or 30 per cent. of the force. The central board at Kharbin registered 32,000 sick and wounded from June 15th to August 15th, of whom only one-fifth were wounded. Dysentery, enteric, and rheumatic fever prevailed. The Japanese system was an example which it would be well for the military heads of our Army to follow.

They should take every opportunity of learning from this Eastern people the details of their methods, in order that when a British force was again placed in the field we should have the scientific administration which our allies enjoyed. The great marvel of it was that the Japanese had managed to overcome the ordinary scourges of an army with a loss of 1 per cent. of their men from all diseases, while we lost in our recent war more from enteric fever alone. This example of "knowing how to do it," which this people of the East were setting us, should be followed and imitated in the interests of humanity and efficiency by every civilised Power in the world. He hoped the Secretary for War, when he applied himself to this portion of his Army work, would try to bring about that efficiency which existed in the Japanese Army by insisting that the chief and most important duty of the medical staff was the prevention of disease among the soldiers and the looking after them with the almost paternal care exercised by the Japanese medical officers. In that way, and in that way only our troops might be always kept fully efficient for the duties they had to perform in the field. New artillery, rifles, long or short, would not by themselves save us, but men strong and vigorous, able to face their foe, were the best defence for a civilised nation.

SIR HARRY SETON-KARR (St. Helens) said it was impossible to follow in the same line the very interesting speech which the hon. Member had just made with so much ability. There was, however, one subject covered by the Amendment to which he desired to call the attention of the House. He referred to one of the great changes recently introduced into the Army by his right hon. friend—the re-arming of our infantry. The subject had been very briefly touched upon already by the hon. and gallant Gentleman who moved the Amendment, but not in any detail. He did not think it was necessary for him to apologise to the House for saying a few words upon it, because in spite of what the hon. Gentleman opposite had said, he was one of those who thought it was of the greatest importance that our soldiers should be armed with the best and most efficient weapon, without which they could not do themselves justice in a state of war. As the House was well aware, in December last a report was issued on the trial of a short rifle for the Army and Navy. He did not want to say anything that would be in the slightest degree offensive to the authors of that report, but he considered that it was in a certain sense—he did not say intentionally—misleading. It professed to be a report on the trials of the short rifle with which the Army—cavalry and infantry—was to be armed by a test called the figure-of-merit test up to a range of 1500 yards. The change from the long to a short rifle was not touched upon in the report, although it was true that there was a table of comparisons between the figure of merit for the long and the short rifle. It would not be contradicted that that was not a test between the merits and advantages of the long and the short rifle. Now the issue of the new short rifle to the Army would cost something like £3,000,000, and it was now, in fact, being sent out to India. His contention was that the new short rifle, which was five inches shorter than the old rifle, had been insufficiently tested in comparison with the rifle at present in use. It was not his intention to go into scientific details, but the man in the street wanted to know whether this great change was being made without a proper test having been instituted between the long and short rifle—all other things being equal—to discover which was the best weapon. The War Office experts had carefully refrained from entering into this question. They had not endeavoured to find that out. They practically said that the Committee had examined the short rifles; they told how it shot in certain cases, but they had not tested the long and the short rifle under equal conditions. He did not pretend to be a scientific expert but he knew something of the practical use of a rifle. Everybody was aware that the question was a very important one, and had involved very serious differences of opinion between large bodies of experts of all sorts in this country.

It was an established fact that, other things being equal, a long-barrelled rifle would carry much further and shoot harder and straighter than a short-barrelled weapon. That principle had been already acknowledged in connection with big guns. The longer barrel, within reasonable limits, utilised more energy than the shorter one. It was also more accurate and easier for the private soldier to shoot straight and be nearer the mark, from the longer barrel, because the sights were farther apart. There were other details with which he would not weary the House, but these were the main factors which it was desirable to keep before the minds of hon. Members. It was perfectly easy, by altering the boring and the size of the cartridge, to make the short rifle shoot better than the old rifle up to a certain range. As a matter of fact that had been done, and according to the table in the report the test of the short rifle appeared to the casual reader to be far better than that of the long. But he should like to call attention to a report published in The Times newspaper a day or two ago, from which it appeared that five experts were taken down to Bisley on a sort of amateur trial of both the long and the short rifles. The competition was carried out by men who thoroughly understood the subject. He knew no more about the trial than he had read in the report in The Times, which he believed was perfectly authentic. These gentlemen tried three of the new short rifles and three old long rifles, and three old long rifles fitted with wind-gauge, sights, and some extra improvements in mechanism adopted in the short rifle. It was a remarkable fact that in this test the new short rifle came out last. Having regard to the serious discrepancy between that test and the test published in the Army report, he asked his right hon. friend to reconsider his position with regard to the issue of this new rifle. The actual shooting powers of the new short rifle compared with the old rifle should be tested. If they took five inches off the barrel of the old rifle, our soldiers would to that extent be handicapped in a personal encounter with the bayonet. It was said that all that was necessary was to increase the length of the bayonet. The answer to that was that a longer bayonet would alter the trajectory and the shooting power of the rifle. If our soldiers had to shoot with the short rifle with a longer bayonet fixed to it, he doubted whether they would hit a haystack. It was also stated in the report in The Times that with the short rifle there was a flash. That meant that a certain amount of energy was wasted. Moreover, the flash would disclose to an enemy the position of our infantry in the field. He could not see that the need for uniformity in the length of the rifle carried by the infantry and the cavalry was so great that they should compel the infantry to carry a rifle with inferior shooting power. They could not rest satisfied with this state of things. No doubt the right hon. Gentleman took the opinion of his experts on this matter, but he (Sir H. Seton-Karr) drew attention to it because it was one which, in his opinion, required explanation. The policy of shortening the barrel of the most important weapon we possessed had been decided in a similar sort of way. There had been no direct tests of the short as against the long rifle. The whole thing seemed to have been decided in a very off-hand sort of way, and he applied to his right hon. friend to reconsider the matter.

In conclusion he would point out that this was a matter of Imperial importance. It might be that at some future time we might require the co-operation of our Colonies. Had the Colonial Governments pronounced upon this weapon? Their opinion was worth taking, because from the very nature of their environments our colonial fellow-subjects were better judges of a rifle than we could be in this country; they had a better chance of using them at long ranges, and that being so, the House would agree with him that if we were ever in a position to have to ask our Colonies to assist us with men, it was very important that they should be armed with a weapon in which they had confidence. He felt very strongly upon this subject, and could not help thinking that some mistake had been made; he therefore hoped that his right hon. friend would, if he thought the matter required further consideration, at once stop the issue of the rifles and have the matter considered by another body of experts.

Mr. GUEST (Plymouth) said misfortune seemed to dog the steps of the War Office whenever they tried to reform the military system. It appeared that in trying to level up the grade of the cavalry rifle they had only succeeded in levelling down the grade of the infantry rifle. He did not rise, however, to indulge in wholesale criticism of the policy of the Minister for War. Blunders there had been, and enough of them, but experience had been gained, and he thought that they were in a better position in regard to Army reform than they were two years ago. Advance had been made, even if it were by the humiliating process of eliminating blunders. They would be really on the threshold of some real improvement if the military authorities and the Secretary for War would divest themselves of one cardinal remaining misapprehension, which had been responsible for nearly all the difficulty, muddle, and confusion in which they were to-day. That misconception was that it was necessary for this country to have a large Regular Army. Until that idea was got rid of this country would make no substantial advance in Army reform. There were three considerations which rendered it desirable that there should be a small Regular Army. The first consideration was that the Army was limited by the number of recruits that could be obtained year by year without lowering the standard of recruits. There were also the considerations of cost and policy. A large standing Army was a menace to peace, whereas a large Auxiliary Force was a guarantee of peace. The Army should simply exist for the purpose of garrisoning our possessions, providing a reserve, and creating a machine by which there might be in this country, to resist foreign aggression, a large number of people with some military training and military instincts. It was no part of the duty of the Army to go wandering over the plains and highlands of Central Asia to acquire fresh territory. In a democracy every war must be a popular war. If the country felt that it had been wronged, or that its honour was at stake, and through its representatives in the House undertook a war, the authorities could count on the patriotism of the Auxiliary Forces. But in every War Office there was a professional contempt for the Auxiliary Forces, a contempt which survived the most startling proofs of their worth under actual conditions of war. The flimsiness of the professional prejudice might be gauged from the fact that when professional soldiers and Volunteers found themselves side by side on the field it disappeared at the first brush with the enemy, or at the first puff of powder. But as soon as the war was over, the services, efficiency, and capacity of the Auxiliary Forces were forgotten, and the old feeling of dislike and contempt reasserted itself. Even Ministers, such as the present Secretary of State for War, the "blue-water school" themselves, were attacked by the same disease.

Volunteer effort was a delicate plant which could not be treated by artificial methods. If the authorities discouraged the patriotic efforts of people who, at great inconvenience, gave a great deal of their time to the service of their country, they would kill the force, there would be nothing of it left. If the Volunteer forces were not up to the standard of efficiency, let the Secretary of State for War set to work to improve and encourage them by spending more money on them. There were many economies which could be effected in the Regular Army which might provide means for the Auxiliaries. Let the right hon. Gentleman call upon the local authorities to assist him in his efforts. The Auxiliary Forces were the raw material, and one of the duties of the War Office should be to provide a machine capable in time of war of translating that raw material into an effective fighting weapon. For that purpose the military policy should have in view the organisation of those branches of the service and those parts of the military machine which could not be improvised. They must train officers and have a general staff, stores, and, above all, arms and other things which could not be supplied at the last moment. Then, if they relied on the patriotic and military spirit which they would be able to keep alive and foster by means of the Auxiliary Forces, they would have a better fighting machine on the whole than if they tried to collect from the gutter and from among the unemployed what they themselves described as the dregs of the population. But all efforts in this direction were vitiated by the non-recognition of the fact that our Army was nothing but an amateur Army. Too many men took up a military career with the intention more of amusing themselves than of forwarding its interests or adding to its efficiency. This was largely due to the fact that officers were not paid sufficiently well to enable the authorities to exact the whole-hearted devotion to the service which the country ought to expect. When an officer became a colonel it was idle to expect him to devote the whole of his energies for the paltry consideration he was to receive. If a colonel did his duty he would be worth £1,000 a year. There was too much inclination to suppose that they could demand from those in the Volunteer force very much more than they were prepared to pay for. He hoped they would have from the Secretary of State for War some statement that he had resolved to improve the Army without destroying the Auxiliary Forces. If he did carry out this policy of reducing the Auxiliary Forces he would be doomed to disappointment.

SIR CARNE RASCH (Essex, Chelmsford) said he was only going to trouble the House with a few words about quick-firing guns and short rifles. He had never been an admirer of the War Office, but he thought the criticism of it had been more acidulated than it ought to be. The hon. and gallant Member for Newington had rather unduly piled on the agony as to one or two matters. As an object-lesson upon this question he would like to point to what was happening on the Continent, where two great Powers who re-armed the artillery five years ago were now about to re-arm it again, one at a cost of £2,000,000. During this time the War Office had been marking time and had adopted two stop-gaps, namely, the sixteen batteries of guns bought from Austria and the equipment invented by Sir George Clarke. Fortunately the English batteries, with guns firing four shots a minute, had not been pitted against the French batteries with guns firing twenty shots a minute. He had been informed that on March 5th of last year the order for the quick-firing guns was given by the War Office. They were put in hand the following month, and in a month's time the War Office would be in possession of fifty quick-firing guns, and in a year's time something like 500 would have been delivered. It should not be forgotten that if the War Office had re-armed the artillery five and a half years ago they would have had to come down to the House and ask for £2,500,000 more to carry out the re-armament of the artillery a second time.

He could not help thinking that the attack which had been made upon the short rifle was somewhat belated, because they had been in possession of it for the last two years, and they had all had ample opportunities of examining it. Although he was an old instructor in musketry he did not consider himself an expert. What he would say, however, was that the Lee-Metford could not be regarded as a good weapon, because it was unhandy and heavy and did not come up handy to the shoulder. They wanted a rifle that came up handy to the shoulder and was well balanced. The trajectory of the short rifle and the Lee-Metford was practically the same up to 800 yards. He would rather have a short rifle and a short bayonet than an ill-balanced one and a long bayonet. The Times pointed out that in consequence of the shortening of the rifle the British soldier's bayonet would be five inches shorter than his adversary's. Surely the resources of civilisation were not exhausted, and it was within the competence of the War Office to provide a longer bayonet if it was necessary, and he did not think it was. With regard to the shooting at Bisley that was very different to what occurred on active service. The flash fire from the muzzle they could not help, and if they had a short rifle they would have to take the disadvantages as well as the advantages.

As to the Militia, he hoped the Secretary of State would stand to his guns in that direction, and that he would end or mend that force. He would rather that the right hon. Gentleman should mend it. After all, what was the use of a force which was short of officers, which had no staff, no guns, and no transport, and which was 50 per cent. below strength at the present moment? Such a force, as his hon. friend the Member for Stepney had said, was a patent fraud. The other day The Times pointed out that the Militia was the backbone of the Peninsular Army. That was so; but at that time the Militia was recruited by ballot, and he should like to know what hon. Gentleman would bring in a Bill to restore balloting for the Militia. He brought in such a Bill once, but the five hon. Members who backed it withdrew their names before he could even bring it to the Table. Whether they acted under pressure from their constituents or not he could not say. During the last year or two the criticism of the War Office had been rather too acidulated. He thought his right hon. friend the present War Minister was doing well. During the last eighteen months more had been done for the Army than had been accomplished since the time of Lord Cardwell, whom, though execrated when he was in office, he regarded as the greatest military administrator the country ever had. But it was idle to talk of Army re-organisation unless the recruits were forthcoming, and the recruiting of an Army which had to serve in the tropics was by no means an easy matter. He had heard of a regiment which lately went marching through its territorial district beating up recruits. At the end of three weeks it got only one recruit, and he had a difficulty in passing the doctor. On the following Sunday the pastor of the village in which the recruit lived asked the prayers of the congregation for their erring brother, and opened a collection to buy him out. That was an example of the difficulties which the Secretary for War had to encounter.

Mr. COURTENAY WARNER (Staffordshire, Lichfield) said it was quite true, as the last speaker had said, that the Militia was weak, but everything had been done for years past to snub it, and do away with it as much as possible. The recruits had been taken out of it and put into the Army. It had been bled to strengthen the Regular Army. Militia officers had been snubbed to such an extent that there was not now the same desire, as in the old days, to join the force. It was not only in the Peninsular War that the Militia rendered good service; it also did a good deal in the late South African War, and we should have been in very great difficulty if we had not been able to send these men out there. The Militia was ready to be used at a moment's notice whenever we wished to embody it, and it was a useful reserve in that sense. He was glad to learn from what had been said in another place that there was a probability of the Militia being taken a little more notice of in the future than in the past. He agreed with the suggestion that the Militia should be enlisted for foreign service in time of war. That was a view which he had repeatedly pressed on Secretaries of State for War. It would not affect the recruiting, but it would give us a valuable force, which could be used at much shorter notice than at the present moment. There was one thing which he hoped would be avoided, and that was the destruction of the Militia by trying to improve it by the imposition of conditions which could not be fulfilled. It might not be so good as we should like to have it, but it was to a certain extent a voluntary force, and we could not expect to get from its members what could be exacted from men who gave their whole time to the Army, and who got regular pay all the year round. It should also be remembered that Militia officers did not go into that force for a career. They sacrificed a certain amount of their time, and he hoped the proposal that they should be a year with the Regular battalion would be done away with. If that were to be put in force he was quite sure the deficiency of officers would be greatly increased. By all means give every possible opportunity to the officer to serve two or three months during the period of his Militia engagement, but do not force him to go for a year at a time when, if he was not going into the Army, he would be at business or finishing his education. If they wished the local squires and men who could spare a certain amount of time to become officers they must not be asked to give up that time from the careers on which they had entered.

There was some sort of new scheme and some of them in the House wanted to know where it was tending. He understood that the scheme put forward by the right hon. Gentleman last year was to be modified on certain points, beginning with the gradual abolition of the small depôts, which were expensive and inefficient. A large factor in any scheme at the present moment must be a considerable curtailment of expenditure on the Army Votes, and he was quite willing to see the Votes for his own favourite hobby cut down to secure economy. Unless economy was immediately introduced, even if necessary by the reduction of numbers, the demand in the country for economy would become so great that they would be obliged to cut down the Army to the non-efficient point. There was one part of the Army, and that the most expensive, on which economy could be directly exercised. He meant the staff and the Organisation Department of the War Office. The staff went on increasing in numbers under the new system, and yet these highly-paid higher officers were not compelled to become more efficient. The example of foreign nations on this point should be followed. There should be fewer general officers, colonels, and higher-grade staff officers, and they should insist that those retained should be more efficient, even if they were granted higher pay. The promotion of officers from the lower ranks should not be carried on simply to increase the flow of promotion, and only those should be promoted to higher ranks who were efficient.

Several questions had been raised as to the new guns. France had the best guns in Europe at the present time, but it was said that by the delay in the provision of new guns our Army would get a better weapon. If that argument were to prevail the old Waterloo guns might still have been in use. There would have been a great saving in life and expenditure if we had had proper guns in the South African War instead of obsolete ones. During the last seven years it had been pressed over and over again on the War Office that our artillery was obsolete, and nothing should be allowed to stop the re-armament of our artillery in the shortest possible time. With regard to the new rifle, it was by no means true that the present weapon was obsolete, yet the War Office had plunged into an expenditure of £3,000,000 on a new rifle, to which certainly half the expert opinion was opposed. He begged the War Office to wait before they spent this large sum on a rifle which was not accepted as an improvement on the one we had already by any large majority of expert opinion. Certain things, such as fouling and heating, could not be proved by the ordinary tests. But the increased flash and the detention of the bullet by the extra rifling showed that the short rifle would foul and get hot. He deprecated very much such an expenditure on a rifle which had not been proved to be absolutely necessary. But one thing had escaped the War Office; they were not in touch with the Auxiliary Forces. They did not understand them. He knew the present Secretary for War did understand them, but most people at the War Office were entirely ignorant of the Volunteer and the Militia systems and the way in which they were worked. It was quite true that some of the new officials put into the office did understand these forces, but they were in subordinate positions, and the War Office as a whole should study more than hitherto the efficiency of these forces in the field.

And, it being half-past Seven of the clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS.

The Clerk at the Table informed the House of the unavoidable absence of the Chairman of Ways and Means.

ADJOURNMENT (UNDER STANDING ORDER No. 10).

MR. JOHN REDMOND (Waterford): Mr. Speaker, at Question time this afternoon, when the subject of the appointment of Sir Antony MacDonnell and the conditions under which he held that appointment came up for consideration, I used the expression, in speaking of the Government, that in my opinion they should tell the truth about this matter at once. You, Mr. Speaker—as I readily admit—most properly called me to order for that expression, because it might have conveyed the impression that I thought that in the answers given by the Government they were actually stating what was untrue. I did not intend to convey that impression and apologised for my mistake. What I did intend to convey was that the Government was not telling the whole truth, and I desired to press on them that, in a matter of this supreme importance, they were bound to take the House into their confidence and to tell the whole truth. The conditions on which Sir Antony MacDonnell was appointed, the conditions on which he has held the office of Under-Secretary up to this moment, and the conditions on which he is to hold it from this time on are in doubt and uncertainty, and this is a matter of such supreme importance that I venture to suggest to the House of Commons that it is its duty to probe it to the bottom and to learn the whole truth. This is an important question from many points of view. First of all, it is important because of the gravity of the matter at issue, and secondly, because of the character and position of Sir Antony MacDonnell himself. The position which this distinguished Civil servant holds in Ireland is one which had its origin a long time ago. I believe the creation of the appointment was in 1777, that is before the Union, and the appointment is one which I think I can easily show has been held almost ever since by men who were not mere Civil Service clerks, but men who were politicians, and who had given to them the power and privilege of making suggestions not merely as to administration but as to policy. I remember that in the year 1902 my hon. and learned friend the Member for Donegal asked a Question of the present Chief Secretary as to the character of the office of Under-Secretary, and the right hon. Gentleman said in reply that the Under-Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant was the permanent representative of the Executive Government in Ireland. That answer precludes the idea altogether that the Under-Secretary is a mere Civil Service clerk without any right of suggestion or initiative as to policy. I will not allude to-night to the appointment of Mr. Thomas Drummond further than to say in passing that of course that was not the appointment of an ordinary Civil servant. Mr. Drummond went to Ireland to initiate and carry out a policy, but I will come down to more recent times. What about Sir Robert Hamilton? Undoubtedly, when Under-Secretary he initiated a policy and exercised the widest possible powers. What about Sir Redvers Buller? He was appointed Under-Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland by a Conservative Government, and in the evidence he gave before a Royal Commission, evidence given, I believe, while he actually held the office ——

MR. LONSDALE (Armagh, Mid.): What did he initiate?

MR. JOHN REDMOND: I hope the hon. Gentleman will be kind enough to allow me to develop my argument in my own way, and I hope when I have finished the House will be delighted and entranced, as it always is, by his reply. Sir Redvers Buller gave evidence before a Royal Commission in which he did suggest a policy and did propose to take a certain initiative with reference to the action of the Government in relation to landlords and the land question. Then what about Sir West Ridgeway? He also was appointed by a Conservative Government, and I hope I may be allowed to quote from a recent declaration of his showing the powers he possessed while in the office of Under-Secretary, and how he exercised them. In explaining the other day in The Times newspaper his adhesion to the Reform Association of Lord Dunraven he used these words—

> "My views and opinions are not of recent birth; they were conceived during the period of my service as Under-Secretary for Ireland, and were embodied in a Memorandum written in 1889."

So Sir West Ridgeway was not a mere Civil Service clerk; he was a man with sufficiently wide powers to entitle him to prepare a Memorandum suggesting a fundamental change of policy on the part of the governors of the country. He goes on to say—

> "In that Memorandum I advocated the concession of a liberal measure of local government in provincial as well as county councils, the administration of the education grant and other funds raised for that purpose by a local body at least partially-elected——"

Why, I thought that was one of the two proposals in Lord Dunraven's reform programme which had excited the ire of the Chief Secretary. The letter goes on——

> "decentralisation of finance, the reorganisation of Dublin Castle, and especially the abolition of that chaotic anachronism, administration by semi-independent boards, whereby three men do the work of one. The policy of extreme Unionism in Ireland is purely negative; that policy is to stand still and do nothing, Ireland is to rest and be thankful. While the rest of Europe progresses and develops, Ireland is to be stationary, to remain stagnant, and, if in the course of nature unhealthy ferment follows, it is to be corrected by the antiseptic of coercion."

Could one conceive a more direct exercise of initiative and a suggestion of policy on the part of an Under-Secretary? That is the experience of the powers exercised by gentlemen occupying this position in the immediate past.

I now come to the position of Sir Antony MacDonnell. We have had a certain account given by Lord Lansdowne and by the Chief Secretary as to the particular terms on which Sir Antony MacDonnell was appointed. These conditions are contained in certain letters. We demand the production of those letters. There is a Rule of this House that any Minister who quotes a document in support of his position is bound to produce that document, and when we asked the Chief Secretary to obey that Rule his answer was that he did not quote the document. Now I will show that he did quote the document, and I submit respectfully to him and to the House of Commons that he is bound to produce that document, and that until he does produce it it is inevitable that there will be dissatisfaction and probably great misapprehension in the public mind on this question. I hope I may be allowed to make a quotation from the speech the right hon. Gentleman made the other night on this subject. He said—

> "I could not invite such a man as Sir Antony MacDonnell, with such a record, to come and help me as a mere clerical assistant, and, apart altogether from anything that specifically passed between us, if it was proper to make such an appointment—and I hold it was proper—it was impossible to make it without accepting Sir Antony MacDonnell as he was, as a man sworn of the Privy Council the same day as I was myself. Do you suppose that a Minister could invite a man who had rendered greater service to the country than he could ever hope to render to sit on an office stool and merely to register the papers that came into the office?"

Then he goes on to say—

> "We embodied in our letters the conversation in which we had been engaged. These letters made it perfectly plain and clear that Sir Antony MacDonnell was invited by me rather as a colleague than as a mere Under-Secretary to register my will. I was glad to have his advice, to welcome his suggestions, and it was made clear, subject of course to my control, that he was to enjoy a certain freedom of administrative action. I made it clear to Sir Antony MacDonnell. Those letters are extant—they are in Sir Antony MacDonnell's possession—and they show that no such problem was contemplated by him at the time of his appointment, as he suggested to Lord Dunraven."

Will the right hon. Gentleman get up and seriously suggest that that is not a quotation from a document? In defence of his position he brought forward these letters, and said the letters would show that Sir Antony MacDonnell was precluded from considering this particular question, about which it was said his conduct was indefensible. I submit that if ever a document was quoted in support of a Minister this document was, and I say it is a mere subterfuge, and a most unworthy one for the right hon. Gentleman to say that he is exempt from the duty of producing the document because he did not quote the exact words. I call for the production of the document. Is there anything in the document of which the Government is ashamed? Is there anything in it inconsistent with the case they have been trying to make in their own support? If there is not, why is it not produced? If there is, was a more discreditable performance ever made by a Minister of the Crown than the assertion that he was not bound to produce it on the technical ground that he did not quote the exact words? The right hon. Gentleman went on to make further reference to these letters, and he said that among the subjects which these letters would show that Sir Antony MacDonnell was entitled to discuss with various people in Ireland was this—co-ordination, direction, and control of the detached boards in Ireland.

> "Co-ordination or co-relation . . . does not suggest to me, and never will suggest to me, the introduction of another board which is to be of an elective character."

and he went on at the end of the reference to say in his speech that these proposals—let the House mark this—these two proposals of Lord Dunraven that there should be devolution of certain powers of this House to a body in Ireland, and that there should be a partially-elected board to deal with Irish finance had not been before him. I assert that the charge which is made against the right hon. Gentleman is not that these actual proposals, in the detail with which they were put before the country in Lord Dunraven's second pronouncement, were before the Government. That is not the charge I make. The charge I make is that the substance of these proposals were before the Government. So far as Sir Antony MacDonnell was concerned, judging by the statements made by Lord Dunraven in the House of Lords, and judging by what we think we know of Sir Antony MacDonnell's opinions, these exact proposals in the precise words in which they were put forward would not represent Sir Antony MacDonnell's view of the proper settlement of the Irish question at all. These proposals were put forward not by him, but by Lord Dunraven and his association on their own responsibility, and the responsibility for them is not the responsibility of Sir Antony MacDonnell, but the responsibility of Lord Dunraven and the Reform Association. The charge is that general powers to confer and discuss on similar subjects to these were conferred on Sir Antony MacDonnell, the charge is that Sir Antony MacDonnell, under the terms of his appointment, had power to consult not merely with Lord Dunraven but with anybody he chose in Ireland upon practically all questions, including specifically the question of local government in the country. He had, on the authority of Lord Lansdowne to discuss what was called the co-ordination of the various forty-one boards of which the Government of Ireland consists. He had, according to Lord Lansdowne, full authority to confer with anyone he liked in Ireland on the question of what Lord Lansdowne called improvement in the antiquated and complicated system of government by Dublin Castle. The Chief Secretary knew all about these discussions that Sir Antony MacDonnell was conducting. He has told us that last August he went on his holiday and that he did not pay particular attention to the first pronouncement of the Reform Association. The Association issued its first report on August 30th. I do not know when the right hon. Gentleman went on his holiday. Upon what date did he go ? When he went did not he know that he was leaving Sir Antony MacDonnell behind to continue these conferences with Lord Dunraven ?

*MR. SPEAKER: The hon. Gentleman must remember that this matter was discussed at great length for two days, and the hon. Member is only entitled to discuss the definite matter on the Paper. He is not entitled to go into the question as to what the action of Sir Antony MacDonnell was, nor how far Lord Dudley or the Chief Secretary knew about it. The question is what are the terms on which he is employed.

MR. JOHN REDMOND: I quite understand, Mr. Speaker, and you will find that I am not in the slightest degree transgressing your ruling. I moved the adjournment for the purpose of calling attention to the present conditions on which Sir Antony MacDonnell holds his appointment, and I submit respectfully that I am entitled to consider the conditions on which he has held the appointment up to the present, and then to go on to ask whether those conditions have now been changed.

*MR. SPEAKER: What are the present conditions ? As I understand, this Motion was based on an Answer given that certain fresh instructions had been given since this matter was first raised in the House, and it was on that really that leave to move was given. Of course I quite agree that involves what are the terms as a whole on which he now holds it. The hon. Member appears to me to be going beyond that, and re-opening the whole discussion as to how far the Government was to blame for the attitude they have taken during the last few weeks towards Sir Antony MacDonnell. That is not the point.

MR. JOHN REDMOND: In order to arrive at some understanding of what are the precise terms, I must include what the terms were on which he was appointed, and then go on to ask how those terms have been varied, but I will bear in mind the suggestion that you have made. You will find that I will not in any sense depart from it.

*Mr. SPEAKER: I will leave it to the hon. Member, who, I believe, always endeavours to follow any suggestion from the Chair, but it appeared to me that he was going beyond the terms of the Motion.

Mr. JOHN REDMOND: I will endeavour not to do so. We are in this difficulty about these terms and conditions, that the right hon. Gentleman has not produced the document, and we are trying to ascertain what were the conditions on which Sir Antony MacDonnell was appointed, with the object of asking how far they have now been varied. We have really to grope about to ascertain what the conditions really were. The right hon. Gentleman has said that Sir Antony MacDonnell was appointed on conditions which did enable him to discuss questions of local government in Ireland, the question of co-ordination of Irish public boards, and the question of a large improvement in the antiquated system of Dublin Castle, but he has said these terms and conditions did not justify him in having anything to do with these specific proposals, namely, devolution and the creation of a financial board. I want to ask the right hon. Gentleman a Question. I want to ask him whether, in the first place, he knew, and of course the answer is obvious, that Sir Antony MacDonnell was conferring with Lord Dunraven on this question? Secondly, I want to ask him whether the first report of the Reform Association, published on August 30th, contained anything which in his mind led him to believe that Sir Antony MacDonnell had violated the conditions of his appointment? It is only thus that we are able to arrive at an understanding of what the conditions were. That report for August 30th contains this paragraph—

> "We consider this devolution would be beneficial to Ireland, and would relieve the Imperial Parliament"— that cannot mean private business—

> "Of a mass of business with which it cannot now deal satisfactorily."

That is point number one, devolution. Point two—

> "The decentralisation or localisation of finance without sacrificing the element of control of Parliament."

That is point number two, financial control. My point is that the report was issued on August 30th. The Chief Secretary knew that Sir Antony MacDonnell was conferring with Lord Dunraven and other people on this question. He saw in this report of August 30th the result of this conference, and he remained silent for a month. He has told us that he rushed into print in The Times newspaper after September 26th because the second publication of the Reform Association contained these two points which, he said, were quite new to him. He said he had not heard of them at all, but they were in the first report a month before. No one connected with Irish political life will grudge him a holiday. Some of us wish that we had been able to take a similar holiday ourselves. But he said—

> "At the end of last session I defended Sir Antony MacDonnell, and I am prepared to defend him again. I went on a holiday and tried to make it as complete as possible. I paid no heed to newspapers and neglected correspondence. The Irish Reform Association came into being without startling me."

That is, the first publication of the Reform Association, containing these two proposals specifically, did not startle the right hon. Gentleman—

> "But in the second manifesto, published on September 26th, everyone read into the Reform Association all kinds of designs that I had not discovered in it in the very cursory perusal of the report of the first meeting."

I am not going to suggest that the right hon. Gentleman is saying anything that is not absolutely true. But I do say that if he read the report of the first meeting which I read to the House, even in the most cursory way, he must have seen those two proposals—devolution and a financial council. He goes on to say—

> "The first report issued by the association made no impression on my mind."

Well, I have read the words of the report—devolution and a financial council—He added—

> "It made very little impression on the minds of other people."

There's the rub. It made no impression on the mind of the right hon. Gentleman because his mind was prepared for it. It made no impression on the mind of the public in Ireland. Therefore, he held his peace—

> "I did not read it at the time," he said, "but the Irish Times, a Unionist organ,"— apparently he has the Irish Times sent after him on his holiday wherever he goes—

> "seems to have read this report more carefully than I did, and even it was not startled or alarmed."—

At devolution or the financial council.

> "This newspaper pointed out that the proposals were very vague. If I had been in Dublin I should not have thought it my duty to dash into print and to say that these gentlemen were wrong."

That is to say, if he had been in Dublin attending to his business he would not have felt it his duty to rush into print and declare that the proposal of devolution from this House and the creation of a partly-elected financial council was wrong. Let me dwell for a moment on the account Lord Lansdowne has given of the terms and conditions of Sir Antony MacDonnell's appointment. He says—

> "I suggest to your Lordships that it follows almost as a matter of course that a man of that kind and those antecedents could scarcely be bound by the same narrow rules of routine which are applicable to an ordinary member of the Civil Service, and I answer the noble Marquess's question by telling him that it was understood on both sides that he was to have greater freedom of action and greater opportunities of initiative than he would have expected if he had been promoted in the ordinary way. It was also understood between Sir Antony MacDonnell and the Chief Secretary that there were certain subjects to which their efforts were to be addressed, and which they had reasonable hope and expectation of being able to deal with should they remain in office, and amongst those subjects was the co-ordination of the many detached and semi-detached boards into which the government of Ireland is at present sub-divided. Any one who has studied that question is aware that there is room for considerable improvement in that old-fashioned and complicated organisation."

That is to say, one of the subjects which the Government hoped to deal with, if they remained in office, and which Sir Antony MacDonnell was specifically authorised to discuss with various people, was practically the abolition of the present system of government of Dublin Castle and the substitution for it of some other entirely new system.

> "I think I ought to explain," he says, "that I say this to your Lordships with the knowledge and concurrence of the Chief Secretary for Ireland."

In these circumstances Sir Antony MacDonnell was justified in assuming that he had a certain scope of action. He certainly acted upon that assumption, and with the full knowledge and approval of the Chief Secretary.

> "It was with the Chief Secretary's approval that Sir Antony MacDonnell made himself accessible to persons of all kinds and descriptions; and I maintain that in endeavouring to arrive at that result, and in endeavouring to break down the barrier which has so long and too often divided Dublin Castle from the rest of the country, my right hon. colleague."

—that is Sir Antony MacDonnell—

> "was taking a step in the right direction, and one for which he deserved the greatest possible praise. I have no doubt," continued Lord Lansdowne, "that he called to mind the understanding upon which he took office in 1902. I have no doubt he called to mind conversations and consultations with the noble Earl and the Chief Secretary, recollecting that the subject of local government was one that they had to discuss and examine together. I say, therefore, that it appears to me that Sir Antony MacDonnell might well feel himself able to take part in the symposium with a perfectly clear conscience."

Lord Lansdowne subsequently read a letter from the Viceroy of Ireland, which reflects the greatest honour upon his straightforwardness and his courage, in which he said he was aware that Sir Antony MacDonnell was helping Lord Dunraven, and that he discussed the reforms suggested in the noble Earl's scheme on several occasions with the Under-Secretary. He adds that he does not think that Sir Antony MacDonnell was exceeding his functions, because in the first place he knew that under the terms of his appointment—Where are those terms? This is a very serious matter. Here is the representative of the Sovereign in Ireland, the Viceroy, declaring that in his opinion, under the terms of that appointment, Sir Antony MacDonnell was justified. The Chief Secretary says that his conduct was indefensible; and because there is this difference between the Chief Secretary and the Viceroy, the House of Commons, forsooth, is to be denied the production of the documents.

"Because," he says, "in the first place he knew that under the terms of his appointment his position differed from that of an ordinary Under-Secretary, and, secondly, he knew that on two previous occasions, the Land Conference and the University question, Sir Antony MacDonnell had been in close communication with Lord Dunraven."

Surely this places the House of Commons in an extraordinary position. We have a direct conflict of testimony as to the terms and conditions on which Sir Antony MacDonnell was appointed, the Viceroy stating one thing and the Chief Secretary another, the Chief Secretary quoting by paraphrase the letters containing those terms and declining to produce them for the inspection of the House of Commons and the country. This cannot be tolerated. As I stated earlier in the day the whole truth will have to come out, and nothing but discredit will attach to the Minister who, declining to produce the whole truth at first, has it dragged from him piecemeal. The charge that I make against the Government is this: That the nature and terms of Sir Antony MacDonnell's appointment covered, as the Viceroy has solemnly declared they covered, discussions upon questions such as this. I charge the Chief Secretary that he knew the subjects upon which Lord Dunraven and Sir Antony MacDonnell were conferring. I say that those subjects were specifically stated on August 30th in the terms that I read to the House, that they were stated to be devolution and a financial council, and I do not care in what part of the earth the right hon. Gentleman was hiding himself during his holiday [Cries of "Oh, oh!"]—I will withdraw that at once; I assure the House I meant nothing offensive by that phrase. I assure the House that I quite realise that the right hon. Gentleman was, in taking his holiday, anxious to get away as far as he could from politics; and it was only in that sense that I used the word "hiding"—and I do not blame him if he was. No matter on what part of the earth he was endeavouring to take his holiday free from bother and anxiety about Irish politics, it was impossible for him not to have seen some British newspapers or to have had some information as to the first pronouncement of the Reform Association. He has himself admitted, though he did not see it in full, apparently, he was aware of its substance. He has admitted that he had seen, in the Irish Times, a statement on this subject. He must, therefore, have known either a whole month, even if he did not know, as I believe he did, beforehand, that Sir Antony MacDonnell and Lord Dunraven were discussing amongst themselves the question of devolution, and some sort of a partially-elected financial council for Ireland. I, therefore, come to this decision: the Viceroy knew about these conferences, and believed that they were within the scope of Sir Antony MacDonnell's powers. The Chief Secretary admits that he knew in substance what these proposals were, and also that for one month, from August 30th to September 26th, he never made any protest, never communicated with Sir Antony MacDonnell on the subject. What would have been more natural, if Sir Antony MacDonnell had really exceeded his powers, than for the Chief Secretary to have communicated with him; from the most distant quarter of the world he might have written him to say that he was startled with the result of his conference with Lord Dunraven, and hoped he would go no further, and that he did not approve of the length he had gone? But he did nothing until September 26th. He did it then, after the Orange section in Ireland had raised a loud cry against the proposals of the Reform Association, and after The Times newspaper had published a leading article demanding from the Chief Secretary a repudiation. I am not so sure that it conduces to the power or dignity of a great officer of State to be whipped to heel by The Times newspaper. I am not sure that it consorts with the dignity of a great officer of State, having remained silent on this matter for a month, to come forward within twenty-four hours, with a repudiation in answer to a threatening and brow-beating article from the London Times calling upon him to do so. The great charge is that for one reason or another those who are in possession of the truth are withholding the truth. I think that the House of Commons and the country are entitled to have the full truth with reference to this matter. As Lord Lansdowne stated in the House of Lords, Sir Antony MacDonnell was offered a great position in India, the position of Governor-General of Bombay. That is a position that any man living might envy. But Sir Antony MacDonnell gave up that great position, gave up his right to it in order to continue his work in Dublin Castle. Who asked him to do that work? Surely the refusal of Sir Antony MacDonnell to take up this great position, and his retention of office in Ireland, meant that at least he thought he had the confidence and approval of the Government in Ireland. Now is it to be supposed, if he had the slightest inkling that he had lost the confidence of the Government in Ireland, that he would have refused the Indian position? No, Sir, he possessed the confidence of the Government, and he was pressed by the Government of Ireland to give up his great career in India, and to remain in Ireland at the very time when he was engaged in conferring with Lord Dunraven on these very schemes.

Now, Sir, I commenced by asking for the production of the documents to show us what were the conditions of his appointment. I now ask for information as to how these conditions have been varied. Apparently, from the answer given this afternoon by the Chief Secretary, the conditions and power of the appointment have been varied. I asked whether Sir Antony MacDonnell had been asked to resign and I was told not. But a few minutes after we were told there had been some variation in his powers and in the conditions under which he holds the appointment. So that what has happened is that the Government shrank from asking for his resignation, but they thought they could effect their purpose by degrading him from the position of colleague of the right hon. Gentleman, as the Chief Secretary himself described it, into being a mere head clerk sitting on a stool in Dublin Castle. I think the right hon. Gentleman said something this afternoon to the effect that in future Sir Antony MacDonnell would have no initiative power on any subject without consultation with the Chief Secretary; that is, on any subject which would be likely to cause discussion in Ireland or in this House. Well, if that be so, Sir Antony MacDonnell will be a very idle man. Between the gallant and vigilant few who represent the Orange faction in this House and the numerous and vigilant gentlemen representing Nationalist interests in this House, I am afraid that not many actions in Dublin Castle will escape discussion in this House. If he is to be put on these new conditions, that is to say to do nothing, be the permanent representative of Executive Government in Ireland, it is degrading him from the position he has held—which was not, I think, inconsistent with his great career—into the position of a mere clerk, which is inconsistent with all his past record. I ask the Government, therefore, to tell us the conditions on which Sir Antony MacDonnell was appointed. I ask the Government to produce the documents. I ask the right hon. Gentleman to explain his own conduct, how it is that, having read on August 30th the first report of the Irish Reform Association dealing with devolution and the elective financial board, he remained silent for a month and only came out against it when a storm was raised by the Ulster Members? How can the right hon. Gentleman hold the conduct of Sir Antony MacDonnell as indefensible in view of the declaration of Lord Lansdowne, and especially in view of the manly and honourable vindications of Sir Antony by the Viceroy of Ireland? I ask the right hon. Gentleman to state specifically the whole of the variations in the conditions of Sir Antony's appointment, and I say to him that, in my judgment, the whole of this transaction, down to the present moment, is discreditable and disreputable in the last degree and that the Government are bound in common decency to let the House of Commons and the public know the full truth in the matter.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.) formally seconded the Motion.

THE CHIEF SECRETARY FOR IRELAND (Mr. WYNDHAM, Dover): The form of my reply is dictated by the four Questions with which the hon. Member concluded his speech. He asked me in the first place to state the conditions of the appointment of Sir Antony MacDonnell. I am perfectly prepared to read the letters which passed between myself and Sir Antony MacDonnell at the time that he was appointed. The letters embody the gist of our conversations, in which we discussed for some time the prospect of Sir Antony MacDonnell being able and prepared to take up the post of Under-Secretary in Ireland; and those conversations, on my part, took the form of a very full exhibition to Sir Antony MacDonnell of all I thought would arise within the utmost conceivable bounds of possibility in the near future in Ireland. That is treating Sir Antony MacDonnell as a colleague; but colleagues are bound by the collective opinion of all their colleagues, and it is perfectly clear—and nothing to the contrary was in my mind and in the mind of Sir Antony MacDonnell—that I could not promise to do things unless they received the sanction of my colleagues, the sanction of the Treasury, and the sanction of this House. I was not telling him what I would undertake to do; I was telling Sir Antony MacDonnell all that I thought conceivably might be done; and nothing I could say to Sir Antony MacDonnell could enable him or confer upon him powers which I did not myself enjoy. I will now read the letters.

"Dear Mr. Wyndham—"

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: What is the date?

MR. WYNDHAM: The date is September 22nd, 1902. He writes to me, and then I write a letter expressing my views. My letter is not a solemn document, but it is the expression of opinion from one gentleman to another who are both working together. The letter is—

"I told you that I had been offered and had accepted the nomination to a seat in the Council of India, and that it would be necessary for me to consult Lord George Hamilton before anything was settled regarding the Irish appointment. I have now seen Lord George Hamilton, and I understand from him that there would probably be no difficulty in allowing me to retain a lien on the India Council and lending my services to the Irish Government. This procedure would be in accordance with my own wishes, and it would, I think, strengthen my position in Ireland if I go there. But if the matter, through Lord George Hamilton's considerateness, is simplified in this direction, there still remains the difficulty to which I alluded when I saw you. I have been anxiously thinking over the difficulty. I am an Irishman, a Roman Catholic, and a Liberal in politics. I have strong Irish sympathies. I do not see eye to eye with you in all matters of Irish administration, and I think that there is no likelihood of good coming from such a régime of coercion as The Times has recently outlined. On the other hand, from the exposition you were good enough to give me of your views, and from the estimate I formed of your aims and objects, I find that there is a substantial measure of agreement between us. Moreover, I should be glad to do some service to Ireland. Therefore, it seems to me that the situation goes beyond the sphere of mere Party politics; and I should be willing to take office under you, provided there is some chance of my succeeding. I think there is a chance of success on this condition—that I should have adequate opportunities of influencing the policy and acts of the Irish Administration, and, subject, of course, to your control, freedom of action in executive matters. For many years in India I directed administration on the largest scale, and I know that if you send me to Ireland the opportunity of mere secretarial criticism would fall far short of the requirements of my position. If I were installed in office in Ireland my aims, broadly stated, would be—(1) the maintenance of order" [MR. DILLON (Mayo, E.): Not by coercion.] "(2) the solution of the land question on the basis of voluntary sale; (3) where sale does not operate, the fixation of rent on some self-acting principle whereby local inquiries would be obviated; (4) the co-ordination, control, and direction of boards and other administrative agencies; (5) the settlement of the education question in the general spirit of Mr. Balfour's views; and generally the promotion of material administrative improvement and conciliation. I am sure you will not misinterpret this letter. I am greatly attracted by the chance of doing some good for Ireland. My best friends tell me that I am deluding myself—that I shall be abused by the Orangemen as a Roman Catholic and Home Ruler and denounced by the Home Rulers as a renegade; that I shall do no good, and shall retire disgusted within the year. But I am willing to try the business under the colours and conditions I have mentioned. It is for you to decide whether the trial is worth making. In any event I shall be your debtor for having sought me in connection with a great work."

Now I will read my reply:

SEVERAL HON. MEMBERS: Date?

MR. WYNDHAM: Sir Antony's letter was dated September 22nd, and my reply September 25th, 1902—

"My dear Sir Antony,

Your letter was most welcome. I accept your offer to serve in the Irish Office with gratitude to you and confidence that your action will be for the good of your country. When Sir David Harrel resigns, I shall accordingly nominate you as his successor; and it is understood between us that I make and that you accept this appointment on the lines and under the conditions laid down in your letter with a view to compassing the objects which you hold to be of primary importance—namely, the maintenance of order, the solution of the land question on the basis of voluntary sale, and where that proves impossible, on the basis of substituting some simple automatic system of revising rents in place of the existing costly processes of perpetual litigation; the co-ordination of the detached and semi-detached boards and departments; the settlement of education in such a way as to provide higher education in a form acceptable to the majority of the inhabitants, and administrative conciliation. To these I add—(1) Consolidation and increase of the existing grants for Irish local purposes with a view to reducing rates where they are prohibitive of enterprise; (2) if we are spared long enough, the development of transit for agricultural and other products, possibly by guarantees to railways, on the Canadian model. But this is far off. We have each of us terminated 'an option' in the sense which I have all along desired. I ciphered the purpose of your letter to the Prime Minister and received his concurrence by telegram yesterday, and by letter this morning. It is understood that you accept a seat on the India Council and are to be transferred when the vacancy occurs. I will ask Lord George Hamilton to see that the Press understands and insists on your great administrative achievements in India. That will prepare the public for the further move. I can only thank you once again with all my heart for coming to my assistance."

I think that everyone will agree that that friendly letter, we having left one another a fortnight to see whether we should suit, was not intended to be produced as a document. But the fact that letters were exchanged shows that the lines and measure of our agreement were laid down between us, and under these circumstances, as they are of a special character and of an important interest in this debate, some departure from the uniform precedent may possibly be permitted. The Prime Minister has, therefore, authorised me to read that correspondence, although it does involve a departure from uniform precedent. There is nothing in that letter of mine of which I am in the least ashamed.

MR. JOHN REDMOND: You said that Sir Antony MacDonnell's conduct was indefensible.

MR. WYNDHAM: I must say two words on that letter. It may be said that I was being urged by The Times to proclaim Ireland under the Criminal Law and Procedure Act, and that the reference in my letter meant that Sir Antony MacDonnell was to come and that was not to be done. That was not so. I had in September proclaimed many counties under that Act, and the maintenance of order was one of the points on which we were agreed. But was it unreasonable in 1902 to hope that administrative conciliation might become a practical policy? I do not think it was. These letters were written on September 22nd and 25th, and the first public suggestion of a conference between the two Parties had been issued on September 3rd of that year, and though it excited much derision in many quarters, it also raised some sparks of hope in others. Therefore, when you are writing a document which deals not with the immediate future, but with all that is possible during a long term of years, the chance of the Government being occupied with something else besides police work is one that ought to be entertained as within the bounds of possibility. Then, Sir, loud cheers were given at the phrase "ample opportunities to influence the policy and acts of the Irish Government." Yes, but subject, of course, to the fact that I, as Minister responsible to this House, cannot divest myself of that responsibility, and that my policy must be the policy of the Cabinet, or that I must leave the Cabinet. Therefore, it must be perfectly clear that any terms which state what you hope in the process of some years to do cannot alter what is the foundation of the constitutional Government of this country. And then we have the words "co-ordination of detached and semi-detached boards and departments." Now, why do those words "co-ordination of departments" suggest to any man's mind either of the two things to which I object and to which I very properly stated my objection? How does that phrase suggest either the creation of an elective financial board or the delegation to any board, however composed, of any legislative powers in excess of Private Bill legislation? It suggested nothing of the kind to my mind; it never has done so. And this is not the first time since I have been Chief Secretary that some phrase or word has been taken up and twisted to another purpose. I remember that when introducing the Land Bill there were proposals made by me, or mentioned by me, with an idea of keeping a one-eighth instalment in perpetuity, and possibly bringing in local bodies. What are local bodies? They are county councils; but at that time the idea was promulgated that I was contemplating the creation of some central body indistinguishable from a national assembly. I never contemplated that. The hon. and learned Member traversed during a portion of his speech some parts of the ground which I endeavoured to cover, and, I think, covered fully the other day. I adhere to every word which I said the day before yesterday. I stated that there are two things to which I object, that I am entitled to object to those things, and that I was right in stating my objection. You may entertain an objection and not state it, but I was right in stating my objection as I did on September 27th, because I did not wish it to be thought that I held an attitude of benevolent neutrality to these two proposals.

Mr. JOHN REDMOND: Why did you not say it a month before.

Mr. WYNDHAM: Well, if the hon. Member will take the pains to read my speech he will see why I did not state it before. I stated to the House that I saw no cause for taking the first publication of the Reform Association very much to heart. The hon. and learned Member for Waterford has misinterpreted one sentence of that speech. I did not say that I had read the Irish Times then; I said that having read the Irish Times afterwards, on looking back I found that one of the principal organs of Unionist opinion in Ireland, and an organ not too friendly to the Government, was not perturbed either. It is unnecessary for me to make all the points which I made the other night over again; but that unhesitating reaffirmation of my declaration that I do object to those two things, that I did object to them, and that I was entitled, and bound, in my opinion, to publish that objection, I repeat to-night without any qualification of any sort or kind. Nor is there any reason why I should repeat the other part of my speech in which I explained, I know fully, and I think to the satisfaction of anyone who accepted my account of what took place, how a misunderstanding grew up on the question of finance. But the critical and hostile comments upon the fact that I was not perturbed, as I was not, by the first publication of the Reform Association have really nothing to do with the case, because I have stated in the plainest words I can command my testimony to a belief in Sir Antony MacDonnell's candour, loyalty, and integrity. Very well, there the situation stands. But, say hon. Members, then why do you announce that his conduct is indefensible? Sir, I cannot defend the publication of views which we object to, and I will not defend them, and I think that nothing I have read out in those two letters for one moment suggests that a mistake is not made if the Under-Secretary assists in the publication of those documents. But the Under-Secretary wrote, as I said the other day, a letter to me in which he said that he was helping Lord Dunraven. That completely covers his good faith, and against his good faith, far from making a charge, I have specifically said that no charge could lie. But to say that in formulating that document, in drafting that document, he did not exceed the limits of what was expected, I think is going—that, I think, does constitute an action which the Government cannot defend.

Mr. JOHN MORLEY (Montrose Burghs): What is the action which is indefensible?

Mr. WYNDHAM: The action which cannot be defended in my opinion is the action of formulating and publishing, ["He did not publish"]—well, formulating proposals to which the Government takes grave exception. Now I quite understand the charge which is made against me. The charge made against me is this—"If, as you told us the night before last"—and as I say now—"you had knowledge of the fact that Sir Antony MacDonnell had conferences with Lord Dunraven, if it is the fact that you were not opposed to a Moderate Party, if the misunderstanding which you trace and lay before us, made you feel that Sir Antony MacDonnell was not disloyal, uncandid, or insincere, then you had no right to be party to a document which says his conduct is indefensible." I deny it altogether. This is a question of fact, not of argument. If I, without fully consulting my colleagues, had formulated views from which they sharply dissented they would take me to task, and if I were able to prove that my action was action taken in good faith, due to a misunderstanding of their views and which cast no reflection of any sort or kind upon my candour or sincerity, I should accept their inability to defend my action, and should rest there. If I had seen those proposals from which I dissent and had assisted at their publication, I do not think my action in doing that could have been defended. At the same time, for the reasons which I gave the other night, and which I have given again to-night, there is no charge against Sir Antony MacDonnell of having in any way been disloyal to me or having in any word, written or said, done anything of which a man need be ashamed. There the position stands, and there I leave it. What I have to say is that I do object to these two proposals, and that no amount of arguing about the vague and obscure language of the Reform Association——

MR. JOHN REDMOND: I read the words. The word devolution was there.

MR. WYNDHAM: I say those words did not cause me perturbation. No amount of arguing about those words will shake my knowledge that I did object to these proposals, nor deprive me of the right to state my objection to these proposals in order that it should not be assumed that I view them with benevolent neutrality when I do not view them with benevolent neutrality.

MR. JOHN MORLEY: It has been my fortune to speak during the last twenty years very often in Irish debates. The whirligig of time brings strange revenges. I do not think the right hon. Gentleman the Chief Secretary even now quite understands what is the gravamen of the charge, not against him particularly, but against the Government as a whole. The House have heard the correspondence. I submit with perfect confidence that every man in this House, except possibly a few gentlemen from Antrim and so forth, will agree that this correspondence is one perfectly honourable to both parties. I cannot imagine a more straightforward, manly, clear, and definite letter than that of Sir Antony MacDonnell. I cannot, on the other hand, imagine a more frank, straightforward acceptance of such a letter than that of the Chief Secretary. We want to think about two things. First of all, what was it that made the Chief Secretary and, I presume, the Cabinet seek, not accept, but seek and accept, Sir Antony MacDonnell's terms? Then we want to know what has happened since, which makes them, as I understand the answer given by the Chief Secretary this afternoon, now condemn Sir Antony MacDonnell, who was induced to take that post on the footing of being his colleague and not—to use his own language, which I do not think very happy in respect of other Under-Secretaries I have had the pleasure and honour of knowing—on that of sitting on a stool in Dublin Castle. What has made the difference? I have never heard even in this House more extraordinary sophistry than that which the right hon. Gentleman has just fallen into. He says, "I dissent altogether. I will not defend the proposals of devolution made in the second Dunraven scheme." That is not the point. The point is, though he quite honourably and conscientiously cannot defend them, what is it that he finds indefensible in Sir Antony MacDonnell? He has not answered that; he has not touched it. Just let us see what it was. I advise hon. Members opposite to reflect on this. What were the terms upon which Sir Antony MacDonnell accepted office as we gather them from the letter which has been read? First Sir Antony MacDonnell said, if I heard the letter aright, that he was a Liberal in politics, that he was Irish in his sympathies—we know what that means—and then, that from their conversation he inferred that they, the Chief Secretary and Sir Antony MacDonnell, were in a substantial measure of agreement. The right hon. Gentleman accepted that. Sir Antony MacDonnell also said that he only took office on condition that he influenced policy and acts. I say frankly, as I said last night across the floor to the Prime Minister—it was he who introduced these supernatural personages—that if the Archangel Gabriel came to me when I was about to appoint an Under-Secretary for Ireland, I should say "No. I should value your services, I am sure they would be useful to me, at least I am willing to assume that—but special terms cannot be made." But in this case you did accept Sir Antony MacDonnell's terms, whether for good reasons or bad, whether it was setting a good precedent in the Civil Service or a bad precedent. The Chief Secretary accepted the description of himself and Sir Antony MacDonnell as being in substantial agreement on policy. The right hon. Gentleman is in substantial agreement on Irish policy with the man who in that very letter says, "I am a Liberal!"

THE PRIME MINISTER AND FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): He also says he does not see eye to eye with my right hon. friend.

MR. JOHN MORLEY: That is what is called acute dialetics, and I do not admire it. If you declare you are in substantial agreement with a man, you may still say there are some points on which you do not see eye to eye with him. ["Oh!"] Are you going to cavil on this point? When two men say, "We are in substantial agreement with one another;" when one says, "I am a Liberal in politics, Irish in sympathy, I am a Roman Catholic," is it to be contended for an instant that it was not understood between them, as much by the Chief Secretary as by Sir Antony himself, that there was substantial agreement? And agreement upon what? The land question we need not say anything about, because that is settled. Sir Antony, I think, according to Lord Lansdowne's account, and also according to the Chief Secretary's, did a great and substantial service in settling that question. But then there was another question which Sir Antony MacDonnell bargained that he might have a share in settling. There was the question of what is commonly called a Catholic University for Ireland, but more scientifically called higher education in Ireland, in accordance with the spirit of the views of the Prime Minister. We have had a good deal of trouble in other matters in getting at the Prime Minister's views, and if we are to have further mystifications of the spirit of them we may get into deep water. Is this understood by the House? I entirely agree, in spite of the views of some of my hon. friends behind me, in the enormity of your pretending to govern Ireland while no Party dare take in hand the redress of an admitted grievance. There is no man, I believe, who has ever been responsible, certainly no one in this House who has been responsible for the government of Ireland, who does not agree with the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister asked us what we were going to do in some points of Irish policy. I would ask him what is he going to do about higher education in Ireland?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: If you agree, why do you not do it? What are you going to do when you come into power?

MR. JOHN MORLEY: When I am Prime Minister I will tell him. He knows very well what I would do.

*MR. SPEAKER said the discussion was now travelling beyond the terms of the Motion.

MR. JOHN MORLEY: I can only point to one of the important topics which Sir Antony MacDonnell, by the terms of the agreement which are now being modified and the modification of which we are discussing—that one of those terms was the carrying out of the policy of the Prime Minister in respect to higher education in Ireland. Then we come to co-ordination; but if I were to introduce a discussion on the degree in which co-ordination is required or was involved I should be getting out of order. All we do know is from Lord Lansdowne himself, and the House ought really to give great attention to his words, because we are discussing a censure passed on an important public servant—a censure passed by the Cabinet without their having heard what Sir Antony had to say. The Chief Secretary has described his conduct as indefensible; but Lord Lansdowne, on the other hard, who knows as much of Ireland as any one, says that the Lord-Lieutenant, who is curiously enough left out in all these discussions—I do not understand why, I have always understood that though the Lord-Lieutenant was not so important a person as the Chief Secretary, who happens to be in the Cabinet, he is still a person acting with him and the Under-Secretary. Is that denied?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR; Yes, it is denied.

MR. JOHN MORLEY: Now, there! The right hon. Gentleman denies that. An Under-Secretary discussing day after day, and, for all I know, week after week with the Lord-Lieutenant is discussing with an officer whose authority in any such matters the Prime Minister throws over and entirely denies. It is not a pleasant occupation to be a Lord-Lieutenant on the best of terms, but really, if he is to be thrown over in the House of Commons by his own Secretary—for technically, I believe, the Chief Secretary is Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant—what a picture does it present of the confusion of the Irish government? I have been amusing myself with thinking of the Phœnix Park. There is in it the Lord-Lieutenant's lodge, the Chief Secretary's lodge, and the Under-Secretary's lodge. What delightful terms they would be on! What sort of discussion can you have in Dublin Castle? How can you pretend to discuss any great administrative question when each one of these three gentlemen knows that one of them has been thrown over by the Prime Minister, and that the Under-Secretary has been thrown over and his conduct has been denounced as indefensible by the Chief Secretary? I have seen a good many Chief Secretaries in difficulties, but never a Chief Secretary in such difficulties. And it is not only the Prime Minister who throws over the Lord-Lieutenant. It is not only the Chief Secretary who is going to make the Under-Secretary, whom he accepted on special terms, sit on a stool. There is the Solicitor-General for England. What language has he thought it right and consistent with his colleagueship to use? We have all got to consider what sort of system of government will obtain in Ireland in the next month or two? This is what the Solicitor-General said—

> "It would be unbecoming in a member of the Government to make any charge against any permanent Civil servant."

I hope it is not disrespectful to an able Member of this House, but surely that is pure hypocrisy. He knew perfectly well what he was talking about. He said—

> "The charge was that a Civil servant had himself evolved a policy which had been disavowed by the Prime Minister and the Chief Secretary."

Not only the Under-Secretary but the Viceroy, is thrown over by the Solicitor-General, the Chief Secretary, and some other members of the Government in equally unworthy and disparaging language, thus weakening the power of the Executive in a country where above all things it is desirable the power in the Executive by its own members should be upheld. I rejoice that the letters have been read. I think they make the case perfectly clear; and what remains for the Prime Minister to do, if he is going to speak in this debate, is to tell us why it is that the special terms under which Sir Antony MacDonnell was invited to accept this great office have been modified, why he has been punished, why he has been censured in the face of the House of Commons and in the face of the country for doing things which he warned them that he would do [Cries of "No"], and which they specially invited him to take office to do. ["Oh."] What is the meaning of Lord Lansdowne's language? Lord Lansdowne says what has been said in more emphatic language many years ago by the right hon. Gentleman the hon. Member for West Birmingham. He says the system of Dublin Castle is antiquated, complicated, and obsolete. When Lord Lansdowne says that, he admits that the system in Dublin Castle of Irish government must be changed. How can you change it? You cannot change it—and really this is at the bottom of the difference between you and us, or the people, at all events, like myself, who take a certain view of Irish affairs—you cannot break down that system which Lord Lansdowne rightly characterises, knowing Ireland and its difficulties extremely well, unless you do either what I suspect Sir Antony MacDonnell first meant to do, introduce the Indian system, or introduce the elective principle. Probably Sir Antony MacDonnell, I should guess, thought that he could improve or amend that system by introducing the Indian system; but, of course, nobody who attempts to reform the government of Ireland can do it without appeal to the elective principle. Therefore, when we say that you have censured Sir Antony MacDonnell and regarded his conduct as indefensible because he introduced the elective principle, you have really condemned any possible scheme by which Lord Lansdowne's own object and the object of the Prime Minister and all of you can possibly be attained.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: The last few sentences of the right hon. Gentleman's speech contain a singular piece of reasoning. He is a conscientious and convinced Home Ruler, and thinks, from his point of view quite rightly, that if you are to reform Dublin Castle you must reform it by introducing Home Rule and the elective element. [Cries of "No, no!"]

MR. JOHN MORLEY: The elective principle.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I thought the elective principle introduced into discussions on Ireland was commonly called Home Rule by the other side. I have no wish to enter into any dispute about terminology with the right hon. Gentleman. What I want to point out is his contention that because he thinks no reform can be carried out in Dublin Castle without introducing the elective element, therefore Sir Antony MacDonnell when he expressed a desire, as he did in that letter, to make some administrative changes must have meant to introduce the elective principle. That is entirely inaccurate. I believe that the ideas which my right hon. friend and Sir Antony MacDonnell exchanged upon the subject of the reform of the various boards in Dublin Castle were based upon the strengthening of the office of Chief Secretary—not upon introducing the elective element, but upon increasing the grasp which the Chief Secretary and his subordinate the Under-Secretary had upon the various departments which make up the complicated system of Irish Government. And I think that is the proper way to reform Dublin Castle. But what I protest against is the inference that because Sir Antony MacDonnell desired, most rightly, that some administrative reforms should be introduced he was committed to the principle of the elective element. They had nothing to do with the elective principle, but depended on an increased amount of centralisation and a strengthening of the grasp which the Chief Secretary's Office ought to have over the whole administrative machinery of the country. The right hon. Gentleman says these letters have made everything clear. His own speech is conclusive proof that he, at all events, has not yet had an opportunity of fully understanding what the conclusions to be drawn from these letters are. He will be able to see them in print to-morrow, and I think on a more careful perusal he will not be indisposed to concur with the observations I now proceed to make upon them. These letters, on the very face of them, are not formal documents. As constantly happens with letters not to be seen by other eyes than those of the writer and the recipient there are phrases in them which may excite a smile when they are read out in a great assembly accustomed to deal with formal and official documents. These are not formal and not official documents; but they prove two things conclusively—in the first place, that Sir Antony MacDonnell and my right hon. friend were not in full agreement over the whole range of Irish politics, because that is stated explicitly; and they also prove that over another part of the field of Irish politics my right hon. friend and Sir Antony MacDonnell were in agreement. The character of that field in which they were in agreement is quite clearly and unequivocally stated in the letters themselves, and there is not one shadow of a suggestion in any of the subjects which they desired to discuss together and to settle if possible in their joint term of office that anything in the nature of devolution, delegation, or representation was contemplated by either one or the other. Nor was that in the nature of a formal declaration of policy on the part of the Government of which my right hon. friend was a member. That, again, is obvious on the face of these documents, because, as the House knows, the question of higher education in Ireland is not, and, as far as I can see, never again can be a Government question. I still hope that at no distant time we may settle it; but if it is settled at all it will have to be settled as many great questions touching religion were settled in the early part of the 19th century, not as a Government question but as a question independent of the Government of the day. I am convinced that there are a large number of my hon. friends on this side who will resist firmly any attempt to carry out any plan yet suggested on this subject, and I do not believe there will be a less strenuous resistance from a body of opinion on the other side. It is possible that the House of Commons may deal with this question, not under the guidance of a Government, but as other great questions, such as Catholic Emancipation and the Divorce Bill, were settled. I only want to show that on the face of the documents these points do not constitute a Government programme. They are not subjects which either the Government or the Party to which I belong need feel themselves necessarily committed. The Chief Secretary and Sir Antony MacDonnell met and discussed what they regarded as the immediate problems of Ireland. Having done so, they came to the conclusion that they could not agree in all things, but they did agree on some things of immediate practical importance, the greatest of all being the land purchase question, which is now part of the Constitution of Ireland.

I come to the third point, and that is the terms on which Sir Antony MacDonnell was asked to take the office of Under-Secretary. And on that I will in the first place observe that again, on the face of the documents, it was evident that the appointment was considered both by Sir Antony MacDonnell and by my right hon. friend as a temporary and passing appointment. The second thing evident is that my account yesterday evening of the terms on which Sir Antony MacDonnell took the appointment did not differ either morally or legally from those of the Civil Service. The right hon. Gentleman seemed to think, from a sentence in this letter, that Sir Antony MacDonnell is altogether outside the category of the Civil Service, not bound by its rules, and enjoying privileges which such great public servants as Sir A. Godley and Sir G. Murray are debarred from. That is not the case. Sir Antony MacDonnell said—

> "I should be willing to take office under you provided there is some chance of my succeeding. I think there is a chance of success on this condition, that I should have adequate opportunity of influencing the policy and acts of Irish administration and, subject, of course, to your control, freedom of action in executive matters."

It is perfectly clear from that letter what it was Sir Antony MacDonnell was afraid of, and what he hoped to attain in the arrangement he came to with my right hon. friend. What he was afraid of was that he would be reduced to a position of having opportunity only of "mere secretarial criticism." That was not enough for him. He wanted something more than "mere secretarial criticism." And what was that additional privilege which he thought necessary to enable him to do that good for Ireland which was his chief ambition in taking an otherwise thankless position? Adequate opportunity of influencing the policy of the Irish Administration and, subject to the Chief Secretary's control, freedom of action in executive matters. Every great permanent head of a department has, and if the office is to work properly, ought to have, precisely those powers. I have had official experience in more than one department, and have seen the inside of some with which I have not been formally connected. In all these cases, and with regard to every one of the permanent officials at the head of them, all have had the opportunity which Sir Antony MacDonnell rightly thought ought to be given to him if he was to do any good for Ireland. Although I had not had an opportunity last night of carefully considering those letters, it is evident that the account I gave of Sir Antony MacDonnell's position was strictly accurate. What Sir Antony MacDonnell desired to do was what all great permanent officials are — aiders, advisers, suggesters to their official chief, but always bound to follow the rulings of the Government which they serve, and always bound by those rules of the Civil Service which are the great strength of the administrative machine.

Then the right hon. Gentleman asks me why the Cabinet felt themselves constrained to inform Sir Antony MacDonnell that his conduct in a certain connection was indefensible. The reason was that we conceived, and surely conceived rightly, that in his connection with the Dunraven scheme he had exceeded the bounds laid down by the technical rules, and what is even more important, the ordinary practice, of the Civil Service. [A NATIONALIST MEMBER: What did he do?] I am not going into all the details again. They have been discussed for two nights. It may be that hon. Gentlemen opposite think that Sir Antony MacDonnell was acting within the rules of the Civil Service. We do not take that view; and we think that nothing which passed between him and the Chief Secretary when he took office, that nothing embodied in the two letters which have been read to the House, gave him the slightest authorisation to go beyond the bounds which circumscribe the action of his colleagues in other great offices of the State in this country. I quite admit that his action was due to a misapprehension. I quite admit what has been said over and over again by the Chief Secretary, that it does not carry with it the smallest or the faintest imputation upon Sir Antony MacDonnell's honour, trustworthiness, or the fidelity with which he genuinely desired to serve the Government of which, for the time being, he was servant. But the fact remains that he did act beyond his powers. I cannot help thinking that there has been a great deal of unnecessary feeling and exaggeration about the whole matter. Personal questions are always painful. It is disagreeable to me even to say the few words I have said in justification of the action of the Government. It is doubly painful to me to hear one or two speakers attack my right hon. friend the Chief Secretary in a way which I am glad to think is rare in this House. But, at all events, I hope it will be understood by every one in this House and out of it, in the first place, that when Sir Antony MacDonnell agreed to aid my right hon. friend as Under-Secretary, it was not in contemplation by either the one or the other that any scheme should be either considered or discussed which involved devolution or separate representation—[AN HON. MEMBER: Co-ordination]—and, in the second place, that neither my right hon. friend nor the Government have for one instant hesitated to express their own profound disbelief in a scheme which, in good faith that it was in conformity with Unionist principles, has been put forward by Lord Dunraven and his friends. We do not agree with the scheme. We do not think that, in its results at all events, it is compatible with the Unionist policy. We lost no time in expressing our official condemnation of it; and, while I do not regret for one instant either the strength of that official condemnation or any of the merely political results that have flown from it, I do regret that it should be involved in a personal controversy which, I think, makes the already turbid stream of controversial politics more turbid and less wholesome still. I do not think I have anything to add in regard to the position we have taken up. The episode, which we all regret, was due to a misapprehension. Cannot we bury it in oblivion. This episode which, while it reflects discredit on nobody, gives pain to some? That tolerant and Christian-like suggestion does not meet with universal favour on the other side. But, so far as we are concerned, we have made our position clear both as to the terms on which Sir Antony MacDonnell agreed to serve us and as to the policy to which, in an unfortunate moment, he committed himself unknown to the Government of which he is the able servant.

MR. WILLIAM MOORE (Antrim, N.) hoped the House would allow him to say a few words on the matter. He and his colleagues who acted with him had to a certain extent been misrepresented—he was quite sure unintentionally. The Prime Minister had said and done nothing to which they, his followers, could take any reasonable exception. On the other hand,—he did not refer to what the Prime Minister had omitted to say. They had, however, a good deal to complain of in some of the speeches made, in which it had been suggested that the legitimate and justifiable criticism which they had directed against certain of these matters had been an unfair and violent attack. He could only say that their attack would be repeated tonight or tomorrow if the same circumstances recurred. He was afraid they might. He accepted at once the statement of the Prime Minister that the correspondence between the Chief Secretary and Sir Antony MacDonnell, was an honourable one; it had certainly justified Sir Antony MacDonnell, in his opinion, in everything that he had done in Ireland. It had equally justified his colleagues and himself in attacking him for doing it, now that they knew that he was doing it as the co-equal of the Chief Secretary. [NATIONALIST cries of "Colleague."] It had equally justified them in the course of criticism they had taken up in Ireland and in the House. But when he stated that the correspondence was honourable as between the Chief Secretary and Sir Antony MacDonnell, he did not think that exhausted the whole field in relation to the Chief Secretary's obligation to the Unionist Members for Ireland, who were also his colleagues. How often in the past four years had they been found in different lobbies from him? Yet the Chief Secretary, without consulting them, in secrecy took to himself a gentleman to fill a subordinate position, but not as a subordinate. In the right hon. Gentleman's own word he was to be a "colleague." Sir Antony MacDonnell's powers were to be political because he frankly stated that he was a Liberal in politics. Frankly he claimed that he was to have influence in the direction of policy. The Prime Minister had said that it was obvious that the Under-Secretary could never be given initiative political powers, because the moment that was done the Under-Secretary might commit the Government to schemes of which they did not approve. After the date of Sir Antony MacDonnell's appointment as a colleague of the Chief Secretary under these terms, he was authorised by the Chief Secretary—not by the Cabinet or the Government—to go to the North of Ireland to secure political support for a scheme, to which Irish Unionists were opposed, for the endowment of a Roman Catholic University. So far as Sir Antony MacDonnell could do it the Government was committed to that policy. The Government, however, had been obliged to repudiate the transactions entered into by the Under-Secretary. However honourable this correspondence might have been it was not fair to the Unionist Members of the House and the Government itself. The whole idea in view was that in Ireland a Moderate Party was to be formed to be directed very largely against hon. Gentlemen opposite. He did not complain of that. It was perfectly legitimate for a Unionist Chief Secretary to destroy by any fair means in his power the influence of hon. Members opposite; but it was not a fair thing for him to start an organisation to solicit, to procure the influence of newspapers—[A NATIONALIST MEMBER: Or to buy them up]—so as to undermine and destroy his Unionist colleagues in that House.

MR. WYNDHAM made a remark which was inaudible in the Press Gallery.

MR. WILLIAM MOORE said he accepted the right hon. Gentleman's explanation that he did not intend to do that, but that only showed his ignorance of the results that were likely to follow his action in Ireland. He was glad the letters had been produced, because they justified down to the ground that wholesale distrust and suspicion which had been entertained during the last two years by the Unionist Party in Ireland. They showed that the Chief Secretary had been at the bottom of the whole thing in this desire to form a Moderate Party to carry out his own ends, and, under these circumstances, no man could deny that the suspicion which the Unionists entertained was not justified to the letter.

MR. ASQUITH (Fifeshire, E.): I will not detain the House for more than two or three moments, but I think I may congratulate the hon. and learned Member for Waterford on initiating both an instructive and informing debate. The mystery surrounding the original appointment of Sir Antony MacDonnell, and the still deeper mystery which shrouds the present status of the Under-Secretary, have not been wholly cleared up, though they have been substantially illuminated. But we have obtained one solid result from the discussion which has taken place. We have had read to us what has hitherto been denied, the correspondence which originally passed between Sir Antony MacDonnell and the Chief Secretary and which formed the basis on which the appointment was made. I want to say one or two words on the minimising comments which the right hon. Gentleman the Prime Minister has made on that correspondence. In the first place, he tells us that they were, after all, informal letters, never intended to see the light of day, such as one gentleman might write to another. Yes, but the Chief Secretary informs us that they were shown to the Prime Minister. I cannot imagine, therefore, a State Paper which possesses greater authority or which is entitled to be construed with a more strict interpretation of its language. The Prime Minister goes on to say that, after all, it was to be a temporary appointment. What was it Sir Antony MacDonnell was summoned to help the Irish Government to do? To settle the land question, to settle the education question, to settle the great question of co-ordination in all it ramifications and developments. I do not think the use of the word "temporary," in the sense in which it is ordinarily employed, is at all justified in these circumstances. And here I come to the much more serious question of what was the character of the powers, functions, and duties which the Under-Secretary was to perform. The Prime Minister told us last night, and he has repeated it again to-night, that to all intents and purposes Sir Antony MacDonnell was to be like an ordinary member of the Civil Service, subject to the same rules, obligations, responsibilities, and limitations as members of that great service are in the habit of conforming to. Is that the fact or is it not? I have never in my Parliamentary experience known a greater discrepancy between the language of responsible Ministers on the question at issue than we have heard in this House and in another place on this particular matter. We heard the Chief Secretary, only two nights ago, tell us that he would never have thought of inviting a man of Sir Antony MacDonnell's eminence and experience to occupy a merely secretarial position. That is the way in which he described the functions of previous Under-Secretaries at Dublin Castle. He was not to be a subordinate, not to be a servant, but a colleague. Is that the position of any of the great permanent heads of departments in any part of the Civil Service of the State? Lord Lansdowne—who, after all, is the Leader of the other House, who is, as my right hon. friend said, very conversant with Irish affairs, and who, moreover, according to his own statement, was the person who brought about the introduction of Sir Antony MacDonnell to the Chief Secretary—used language which, in view of what the Prime Minister has said to-night, I must quote. He stated—

> "I suggest to your Lordships that it follows as a matter of course that a man of that kind, a man of those antecedents, could scarcely be expected to be bound by the same narrow rules of routine which are applicable to an ordinary member of the Civil Service, and answer the noble Marquess's question by telling him that when he took up this appointment it was understood on both sides"—not only on his own side, but on the side of those who appointed him—"that he was to have greater freedom of action, greater opportunities of initiative, than he would have expected if he had been a candidate promoted in the ordinary course."

I say there is an absolute divergence between the language of the Leader of the other House and the language of the Leader of this House as to what were the terms of Sir Antony MacDonnell's appointment. We must all form our own judgment in this conflict of testimony; and, as we have the letters which passed between Sir Antony Macdonnell and the Chief Secretary, which, we now know, were sanctioned by the Prime Minister, I do not hesitate to give my vote in favour of the version of Lord Lansdowne. And if Sir Antony MacDonnell was appointed upon special terms, what was the nature of the "indefensible" error which he committed in associating himself with the conference which led to the formation and promulgation of Lord Dunraven's scheme? It may be an error, of course, not to agree with the Chief Secretary as to the precise difference between co-ordination and devolution, as to the mysterious and dim boundary between those two spheres of possible legislation. Not to agree with the Chief Secretary about that may be a symptom of uninstructed or, at all events, undeveloped intelligence. But I am bound to say in that respect the state of Sir Antony MacDonnell's mind appears to me to be shared, as far as I can judge, by the vast majority of Irish people, without distinction of class, Party, creed, or school—they do not, and the hon. Gentleman who has just spoken does not, know where co-ordination ends and where devolution begins. Maybe it was an error; very likely it was. But it was described in this House by the mouthpiece of the Cabinet, in the censure of a distinguished public servant, not merely as an error, but as an indefensible error. What does that mean? The term "indefensible" used in such circumstances as these is not appropriate language in which to describe a mere intellectual delinquency; if language has any meaning at all it conveys a moral blame, or, at any rate, to put it at the lowest, it must mean that the great official against whom such a charge is levelled in the name of the Cabinet of this country has seriously transgressed the rules, written or unwritten, of official propriety. What has Sir Antony MacDonnell done to merit that censure? If he entered upon his office upon the terms of the letters read to-night, if he was free, as Lord Lansdowne and the Chief Secretary have said, from the fetters which bind the action of Civil servants, what was there, even if he went beyond what the Chief Secretary and the Government think to be desirable or expedient in regard to Irish government—what was there indefensible in his entering, as he had done on the land question and the education question, into free conference and even friendly co-operation with persons who were endeavouring to solve the question of Irish government?

The Prime Minister passes by the Viceroy as if he were a mere fly upon the wheel of the administrative coach. We know perfectly well, and no one can dispute it, that the Viceroy, who is the representative of His Majesty, was privy to these proceedings, was cognisant of them, and, as we know, was sympathetic towards them. At any rate, Sir Antony MacDonnell had the right to assume that whatever he was doing was being done with the assent of the representative of His Majesty. I ask this question, not because it affects the character and reputation of Sir Antony MacDonnell, whose reputation needs no defence here or elsewhere, but because it does affect the course of public business and the responsibility of Governments in this country when, under conditions such as these, an official, for whom still the greatest respect and confidence is expressed, and who is even now retained in the public service, is publicly censured in the eyes of the whole world for doing something which it now appears was within the terms of his original appointment. [Cheers, and MINISTERIAL cries of "No."] I say it was in the terms of his appointment, and was certainly done—this is not denied—with the cognisance and approval of the Viceroy.

There is one other point, and one which the Prime Minister absolutely ignored in his speech. What is the change that has been made in the status, and the functions, and the authority of Sir Antony MacDonnell in consequence of this "indefensible" error? Is there any change? Are the letters which have been read to the House to-night still to be regarded as containing the basis and expressing the terms upon which he continues to be employed by His Majesty's Government? If they are not, if they have been modified in any particular, if he has been reduced from the position which Lord Lansdowne and the Chief Secretary described to the status of an ordinary Civil servant, then not only he, but this House, is entitled to know what are the terms in which that communication has been made and what are their scope and effect. We are still in the same state of ignorance as we were when the debate began as to the present position of Sir Antony MacDonnell, and upon this we require information, for it is an important question upon both personal and general grounds. I hope the Motion will be pressed to a division.

MR. T. P. O'CONNOR (Liverpool, Scotland) said he rather hesitated to get up because he had hoped that some member of the Government would have risen to answer the last Question put by the right hon. Gentleman who had just sat down. He would press that Question home. What was the exact position of Sir Antony MacDonnell? Was he still in the position of an Under-Secretary in the terms of the contract between him and the Government, or was he not? Had he been degraded in position and status? Of course, he could not be degraded in personal character; that was beyond the power of the Government or of anybody else. But so far as they could degrade him the Government had done so. They had allowed the Solicitor-General forEngland, the Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General for Ireland and their supporters to condemn Sir Antony MacDonnell, and had instigated their Press to conduct a campaign of calumny against him.

THE SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. JAMES CAMPBELL, Dublin University): Will the hon. Gentleman pardon me? He said that I conducted the campaign of calumny against Sir Antony MacDonnell. I spoke on several occasions in public and denounced the Dunraven scheme of devolution on its merits, but never once referred, directly or indirectly, to Sir Antony MacDonnell.

MR. T. P. O'CONNOR said he received with the same cordial welcome as hon. Gentlemen opposite the denial of the hon. and learned Gentleman, and for this reason, that the hon. and learned Gentleman had placed himself in such marked and honourable contrast to the Attorney-General for Ireland. Knowing what he did of the character of the hon. and learned Gentleman, he must say that he was not surprised that his conduct was in such marked and honourable contrast to that of his colleague. However, for months a dead set had been made against Sir Antony MacDonnell until it reached a climax in the speech of the Solicitor-General for England, and during that time not a member of the Government had revealed the fact, which that night was known for the first time, that Sir Antony MacDonnell had taken his position under a contract to do the very thing for which he was denounced. Well, those letters read that night were described with epithets by hon. Gentlemen opposite which he would not repeat. Of course they were all hon. Members in these transactions, including the colleagues of Sir Antony MacDonnell, who denounced him, but had not the courage to mention his name! The letters were astounding. He would take one part from the letter of the Chief Secretary to Sir Antony MacDonnell—

> "I ciphered the purport of your letter to the Prime Minister, and received his concurrence by telegram yesterday."

The letter was sent by telegram in cipher! He would like to know whether Sir Antony MacDonnell's letter was also ciphered to the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN (Birmingham, W.): I do not know whether the Question is addressed to me; but it was not.

MR. T. P. O'CONNOR said he wanted to know for this reason, that they had a member of the Cabinet, the Chief Secretary, and the Prime Minister entering into a campaign in Ireland for a Catholic University, and the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham was kept in the dark about it! Nay, more, Sir Antony MacDonnell was sent on this mission to Belfast, was actually trying to create a campaign there in concert with, and with the knowledge of the Chief Secretary and the Prime Minister, yet without the knowledge and sympathy of the right hon. Member for West Birmingham. Sir Antony MacDonnell went to West Belfast to conduct a campaign in favour of a Catholic University, while at the same time the hon. Member for West Belfast was calling on his constituency to have no transactions with the "Scarlet Lady!" That was a new theory and practice of Cabinet responsibility, a new theory of Cabinet loyalty. Might he ask if the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Belfast was informed of Sir Antony MacDonnell's letter, because at the very moment when this campaign was being conducted with the knowledge and approval of the Chief Secretary and the First Lord, the right hon. Member for West Belfast, with the delicacy and elegance and toleration of language characteristic of him, and of him alone in that House, declared that rather than allow his children to be educated by a Catholic priest he would sooner allow them to run wild in the woods. Now the First Lord affected to believe that Sir Antony MacDonnell was simply in the position of any other great Civil servant. Why, then, did Lord Lansdowne say that a man of Sir Antony MacDonnell's antecedents could scarcely be expected to be bound by the same narrow rules of routine applicable to an ordinary member of the Civil Service?

Why did Sir Antony MacDonnell write that candid, frank, and full letter of the conditions under which he would accept the position of Under-Secretary? Why did the Chief Secretary write to Sir Antony MacDonnell that he accepted his offer to take the position of Under-Secretary on the conditions set forth? There was a contract as solemn and as honourable as any that could be made between two men. The right hon. Gentleman, it must be kept in mind, knew very well that Sir Antony MacDonnell was a Liberal and was Irish in sympathy. That necessarily meant that he was in favour of Home Rule. Did the right hon. Gentleman, who shook his head, really mean to suggest that Sir Antony MacDonnell was not in sympathy with the views of the Nationalist Party? And if he knew that how was he able to place these two things in juxtaposition—that while he was in substantial agreement with Sir Antony MacDonnell, the Home Ruler, who proceeded to the verge of devolution, he applied to that gentleman as gross and cowardly an insult as ever had been applied to a man in a public position. He used the word "cowardly," because the Government had not said a word about any change made in Sir Antony MacDonnell's position. The Prime Minister had been asked that afternoon if there had been any change in Sir Antony MacDonnell's position, and he said that there had not. The Chief Secretary said that when Sir Antony MacDonnell was appointed he had been a Cabinet Minister only a fortnight, but the Prime Minister, who was a party to the appointment, had been in the Cabinet for a great deal more than a fortnight. The Chief Secretary went on to say that he had pointed out to Sir Antony MacDonnell that—

> "In view of the criticisms to which my Department has been subjected during the last two or three weeks—"

Mark the reason—

> "it is necessary for me to see any matter that is likely to be the subject of debate in this House."

The House was acquainted with the large range of subjects covered by the Questions put to the right hon. Gentleman by his hon. friends around him—the mail delivery in a village, a small affray with the police, re-appointment of an inspector under one of the boards in Ireland. There was not a question in Ireland, large or small, to which this description of the Chief Secretary did not apply, and it was monstrous to contend in the face of that that the position of Sir Antony MacDonnell had not been degraded and narrowed from that which he occupied when he took up his appointment. What was the meaning of all this? It was that the Government wanted to get rid of Sir Antony MacDonnell. And for what reason? In consequence of the criticism to which the Chief Secretary's department had been subjected. Was there ever a more miserable reason given why a Cabinet Minister should abandon either his policy or his subordinate? He had never read a more mean confession of faith. The Government were going to abandon a great public servant, simply because someone on their own side of the House and in the public newspapers, had criticised the Chief Secretary's department. He confessed he had gathered new light on his profession from the letters read that afternoon. The newspapers were to be told to write articles insisting on the great administrative achievements of Sir Antony MacDonnell in India, and in that way public opinion was to be ripened and matured for a new departure in Irish politics, a new departure to be inaugurated by a gentleman who, according to the Prime Minister, had only accepted public office in Ireland on the usual conditions! He maintained that these were new methods to him and a new departure in journalism. He thought the right hon. Gentleman must have been reading the memoirs of Bismarck, who, when he wanted to make a change in his policy, always sent an article to the newspapers. Now, however, when they wanted to get rid of Sir Antony MacDonnell, the Press was prepared to denounce and abuse the same man which they had formerly lauded, and who was worth all the men on the Treasury Benches for the services he had rendered to the Empire. He did not mean to enlarge on the services of Sir Antony MacDonnell in India, although the Chief Secretary had confessed to colossal ignorance of Indian affairs. He had no doubt that that confession by a member of the Cabinet which was responsible for the government of India would appear in the vernacular journals in India before many weeks were over. Sir Antony MacDonnell knew that the provincial councils in India were semi-elective in their constitution. Sir Antony MacDonnell was an Irishman, and had ruled 47,000,000 of people in the East; but he was under the tragic misunderstanding that if Asiatics were capable of being governed by an elective body, one of the most brilliant nations in Western Europe was not to be denied that privilege. The misunderstanding of Sir Antony MacDonnell was far greater and more tragic than that of the right hon. Gentleman. Here was a man who had been brought from India who had been able to govern autocratically a province with a population of 47,000,000. He did not attain that high position by social influence. He himself knew Sir Antony MacDonnell's father. He was at school and college with Sir Antony MacDonnell, like his hon. friend the Member for North Dublin. Sir Antony MacDonnell was a Catholic and a Liberal, and had no great social influence behind him. With all due respect, that gentleman was more remarkable for fortiter in re than for suaviter in modo. He was told that nobody disliked Sir Antony MacDonnell except the man who wanted him to do him a dirty trick. Here was an Irishman, the son of a small farmer in the West of Ireland, able to attain the foremost position in the government of one of the greatest dependencies of the Empire, and the autocrat of 47,000,000 of people. And what was his tragic misunderstanding? It was that he himself was not to be allowed to have a single word in the government of his own people, of his own race and creed. The moral of all this was that Sir Antony MacDonnell was one of the many Irishmen who had helped to do great works of statesmanship in this Empire, and who had entered on office in Ireland in the great and glorious hope of doing something for his native land. Many epithets had been applied to the correspondence read that evening; but it was one of the most pathetic instances on record that this great man of genius, who had been ready to risk his splendid position in India and come to the land in which he had his birth, had, for his reward, been flouted, degraded, insulted, and baffled in trying to do a little good to his suffering native land.

Question put.

The House divided:—Ayes, 223; Noes, 265. (Division List No. 7.)

AYES.

Abraham, William (Cork, N.E.
Abraham, William (Rhondda)
Allen, Charles P.
Ashton, Thomas Gair
Asquith, Rt Hn. Herbert Henry
Atherley-Jones, L.
Barlow, John Emmott
Barran, Rowland Hirst
Barry, E. (Cork, S.)
Bayley, Thomas (Derbyshire)
Beaumont, Wentworth C. B.
Bell, Richard
Benn, John Williams
Black, Alexander William
Blake, Edward
Bolton, Thomas Dolling
Broadhurst, Henry
Brown, George M. (Edinburgh)
Brunner, Sir John Tomlinson
Bryce, Rt. Hon. James
Buchanan, Thomas Ryburn
Burke, E. Haviland
Burns, John
Buxton, Sydney Charles
Caldwell, James
Campbell, John (Armagh, S.)
Campbell-Bannerman, Sir H.
Carvill, Patrick Geo. Hamilton
Causton, Richard Knight
Cawley, Frederick
Channing, Francis Allston
Cheetham, John Frederick
Churchill, Winston Spencer
Clancy, John Joseph
Cogan, Denis J.
Condon, Thomas Joseph
Craig, Robert Hunter (Lanark)
Crean, Eugene
Cremer, William Randal
Crombie, John William
Cullinan, J.
Davies, Alfred (Carmarthen)
Davies, M. Vaughan (Cardigan
Delany, William
Devlin, Chas. Ramsay (Galway
Devlin, Joseph (Kilkenny, N.)
Dewar, John A. (Inverness-sh.
Dillon, John
Dobbie, Joseph
Doogan, P. C.
Douglas, Charles M. (Lanark)
Duffy, William J.
Duncan, J. Hastings
Dunn, Sir William
Edwards, Frank
Elibank, Master of
Ellice, Capt EC (St Andrews Bghs
Ellis, John Edward (Notts.)
Emmott, Alfred
Evans, Sir Francis H (Maidstone
Eve, Harry Trelawney
Farrell, James Patrick
Fenwick, Charles
Ferguson, R. C. Munro (Leith)
Ffrench, Peter
Field, William
Findlay, Alexander (Lanark, NE
Fitzmaurice, Lord Edmond
Flavin, Michael Joseph
Flynn, James Christopher
Foster, Sir Walter (Derby Co.)
Fowler, Rt. Hon. Sir Henry
Freeman-Thomas, Captain F.
Fuller, J. M. F.
Gladstone, Rt. Hn. Herbert John
Goddard, Daniel Ford
Griffith, Ellis J.
Guest, Hon. Ivor Churchill
Gurdon, Sir W. Brampton
Haldane, Rt. Hon. Richard B.
Hammond, John
Hardie, J. Keir (Merthyr Tydvil
Harmsworth, R. Leicester
Harwood, George
Hayden, John Patrick
Hayter, Rt. Hon. Sir Arthur D.
Helme, Norval Watson
Hemphill, Rt. Hon. Charles H.
Henderson, Arthur (Durham)
Higham, John Sharpe
Hobhouse, C. E. H. (Bristol, E.)
Holland, Sir William Henry
Hutton, Alfred E. (Morley)
Isaacs, Rufus Daniel
Jacoby, James Alfred
Johnson, John
Joicey, Sir James
Jones, William (Carnarvonshire
Jordan, Jeremiah
Joyce, Michael
Kearley, Hudson E.
Kennedy, P. J. (Westmeath, N.)
Kennedy, Vincent P. (Cavan, W.
Kilbride, Denis
Kitson, Sir James
Labouchere, Henry
Lambert, George
Langley, Batty
Law, Hugh Alex. (Donegal, W.)
Lawson, Sir Wilfrid (Cornwall)
Layland-Barratt, Francis
Leese, Sir Joseph F. (Accrington
Leigh, Sir Joseph
Levy, Maurice
Lewis, John Herbert
Lloyd-George, David
Lough, Thomas
Lundon, W.
Lyell, Charles Henry
Macnamara, Dr. Thomas J.
MacNeill, John Gordon Swift
MacVeagh, Jeremiah
M'Arthur, William (Cornwall)
M'Crae, George
M'Fadden, Edward
M'Hugh, Patrick A.
M'Kean, John
M'Kenna, Reginald
M'Killop, W. (Sligo, North)
Markham, Arthur Basil
Mitchell, Ed. (Fermanagh, N.)
Mooney, John J.
Morley, Rt. Hn. John (Montrose
Moulton, John Fletcher
Murnaghan, George
Murphy, John
Nannetti, Joseph P.
Newnes, Sir George
Nolan, Joseph (Louth, South)
Norman, Henry
Norton, Capt. Cecil William
Nussey, Thomas Willans
O'Brien, James F. X. (Cork)
O'Brien, Kendal (Tipperary Mid
O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
O'Brien, P. J. (Tipperary, N.
O'Connor, John (Kildare, N.)
O'Connor, T. P. (Liverpool)
O'Donnell, John (Mayo, S.)
O'Dowd, John
O'Kelly, Conor (Mayo, N.)
O'Kelly, J. (Roscommon, N.)
O'Malley, William
O'Mara, James
O'Shaughnessy, P. J.
O'Shee, James John
Palmer, Sir Charles M. (Durham)
Partington, Oswald
Paulton, James Mellor
Pease, J. A. (Saffron Walden)
Pirie, Duncan V.
Power, Patrick Joseph
Rea, Russell
Reckitt, Harold James
Reddy, M.
Redmond, John E. (Waterford
Reid, Sir R. Threshie (Dumfries
Richards, Thomas (W. Monm'h
Rickett, J. Compton
Roberts, John Bryn (Eifion)
Roberts, John H. (Denbighs.)
Robertson, Edmund (Dundee)
Robson, William Snowdon
Roche, John
Roe, Sir Thomas
Rose, Charles Day
Runciman, Walter
Russell, T. W.
Samuel, Herbert L. (Cleveland
Schwann, Charles E.
Scott, Chas. Prestwich (Leigh)
Seely, Maj. J. E. B. (Isle of Wight)
Shackleton, David James
Shaw, Thomas (Hawick B.)
Sheehan, Daniel Daniel
Sheehy, David
Shipman, Dr. John G.
Sinclair, John (Forfarshire)
Slack, John Bamford
Smith, Samuel (Flint)
Soames, Arthur Wellesley
Soares, Ernest J.

Spencer, Rt. Hn. C. R. (Northants
Stevenson, Francis S.
Strachey, Sir Edward
Sullivan, Donal
Taylor, Theodore C. (Radcliffe)
Tennant, Harold John
Thomas, Sir A. (Glamorgan, E.
Thomas, David Alfred (Merthyr
Thomson, F. W. (York, W.R.
Tomkinson, James
Toulmin, George
Trevelyan, Charles Philips
Ure, Alexander
Waldron, Laurence Ambrose
Wallace, Robert
Walton, Joseph (Barnsley)
Warner, Thomas Courtenay T.
Wason, Eugene (Clackmannan
White, George (Norfolk)
White, Luke (York, E. R.)
White, Patrick (Meath, North)
Whiteley George (York, W. R.)
Whitley, J. H. (Halifax)
Whittaker, Thomas Palmer
Williams, Osmond (Merioneth)
Wills, Arthur Walters (N Dorset
Wilson, Fred W (Norfork, Mid.)
Wilson, John (Durham, Mid.)
Wilson, J. W. (Worcestersh. N
Woodhouse, Sir J. T. (Huddersfd
Young, Samuel

TELLERS FOR THE AYES—Sir Thomas Esmonde and Captain Donelan.

NOES.

Agg-Gardner, James Tynte
Agnew, Sir Andrew Noel
Allhusen, Augustus Henry Eden
Allsopp, Hon. George
Anson, Sir William Reynell
Arkwright, John Stanhope
Arnold-Forster, Rt. Hn. Hugh O.
Arrol, Sir William
Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
Aubrey-Fletcher, Rt. Hon. Sir H
Bagot, Capt. Josceline FitzRoy
Bailey, James (Walworth)
Bain, Colonel James Robert
Baird, John George Alexander
Balcarres, Lord
Balfour, Rt. Hn. A. J. (Manch’r
Balfour, Rt Hn Gerald W (Leeds
Balfour, Kenneth R. (Christch.
Banbury, Sir Frederick George
Bartley, Sir George C. T.
Bathurst, Hon. Allen Benjamin
Beach, Rt. Hn. Sir Michael Hicks
Beckett, Ernest William
Bhownaggree, Sir M. M.
Bigwood, James
Blundell, Colonel Henry
Bond, Edward
Boscawen, Arthur Griffith
Boulnois, Edmund
Bowles, Lt.-Col. H. F (Middlesex
Bowles, T Gibson (King’s Lynn
Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John
Brymer, William Ernest
Bull, William James
Burdett-Coutts, W.
Butcher, John George
Campbell, J. H. M. (Dublin Univ.
Cautley, Henry Strother
Cavendish, R. F. (N. Lancs.)
Cavendish, V. C. W. (Derbysh.
Cecil, Evelyn (Aston Manor)
Cecil, Lord Hugh (Greenwich)
Chamberlain, Rt. Hn. J. (Birm.
Chamberlain, Rt Hn. J. A. (Worc
Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry
Chapman, Edward
Coates, Edward Feetham
Cochrane, Hon. Thos. H. A. E
Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
Colomb, Rt. Hn. Sir John C. R.
Colston, Chas. Ed. H. Athole
Cook, Sir Frederick Lucas
Corbett, A. Cameron (Glasgow)
Cripps, Charles Alfred
Cross, Alexander (Glasgow)
Crossley, Rt. Hon. Sir Savile
Cubitt, Hon. Henry
Cust, Henry John C.
Dalrymple, Sir Charles
Davenport, William Bromley
Denny, Colonel
Dickinson, Robert Edmond
Dickson, Charles Scott
Dimsdale Rt. Hn. Sir Joseph C.
Disraeli, Coningsby Ralph
Dixon-Hartland, Sir Fred Dixon
Dorington, Rt. Hn. Sir John E.
Doughty, Sir George
Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers
Doxford, Sir William Theodore
Duke, Henry Edward
Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
Fergusson, Rt. Hn. Sir J. (Manc’r
Fielden, Edward Brocklehurst
Finch, Rt. Hon. George H.
Finlay, Sir R. B. (Inv’rn’ss B’hs
Fisher, William Hayes
FitzGerald, Sir Robert Penrose-
Fitzroy, Hn. Edward Algernon
Flannery, Sir Fortescue
Flower, Sir Ernest
Forster, Henry William
Foster, Philip S. (Warwick, S.W
Galloway, William Johnson
Gardner, Ernest
Garfit, William
Godson, Sir Augustus Fredk.
Gordon, Hn. J. E. (Elgin & Nairn
Gore, Hon. S. F. Ormsby-
Goulding, Edward Alfred
Gray, Ernest (West Ham)
Green, Walford D. (Wednesbury
Greene, Sir E W (B’ry S Edm’nds
Greene, Henry D. (Shrewsbury
Greene, W. Raymond (Cambs.
Gretton, John
Greville, Hon. Ronald
Guthrie, Walter Murray
Hain, Edward
Hall, Edward Marshall
Halsey, Rt. Hon. Thomas F.
Hambro, Charles Eric
Hamilton, Rt Hn Lord G (Midd’x
Hamilton, Mar. of (L’nd’nderry
Hardy, Laurence (Kent, Ashford
Hare, Thomas Leigh
Harris, F. Leverton (Tynem’th
Haslam, Sir Alfred S.
Hay, Hon. Claude George
Heath, Arthur Howard (Hanley
Heath, Sir James (Staffords. NW
Heaton, John Henniker
Helder, Augustus
Henderson, Sir A. (Stafford, W.)
Hermon-Hodge, Sir Robert T.
Hoare, Sir Samuel
Hope, J. F. (Sheffield, Brightside
Horner, Frederick William
Hoult, Joseph
Houston, Robert Paterson
Hozier, Hn. James Henry Cecil
Hunt, Rowland
Jebb, Sir Richard Claverhouse
Jeffreys, Rt. Hon. Arthur Fred.
Jessel, Captain Herbert Merton
Kennaway, Rt. Hn. Sir John H
Kenyon, Hn. Geo. T. (Denbigh)
Kenyon-Slaney, Rt. Hn Col. W.
Kerr, John
Kimber, Sir Henry
King, Sir Henry Seymour
Knowles, Sir Lees
Lambton, Hon. Frederick Wm.
Laurie, Lieut.-General
Law, Andrew Bonar (Glasgow)
Lawrence, Sir Joseph (Monm’th
Lawson, Hn. H. L. W. (Mile End
Lawson, John Grant (Yorks NR
Lee, Arthur H (Hants. Fareham
Lees, Sir Elliott (Birkenhead)
Legge, Col. Hon. Heneage
Leveson-Gower, Frederick N.S.
Llewellyn, Evan Henry
Lockwood, Lieut.-Col. A. R.
Loder, Gerald Walter Erskine
Long, Col. Charles W. (Evesham
Long, Rt. Hn. Walter (Bristol, S.
Lowther, C. (Cumb., Eskdale)
Lucas, Col. Francis (Lowestoft
Lucas, Reginald J. (Portsmouth
Lyttelton, Rt. Hon. Alfred
Macdona, John Cumming
MacIver, David (Liverpool)
Maconochie, A. W.
M‘Arthur, Charles (Liverpool)
M‘Iver, Sir Lewis Edinburgh W
Majendie, James A. H.
Malcolm, Ian
Manners, Lord Cecil
Marks, Harry Hananel
Martin, Richard Biddulph
Maxwell, Rt. Hn Sir H E (Wigt’n

Maxwell, W.J.H (Dumfriesshire
Meysey-Thompson, Sir H. M.
Mildmay, Francis Bingham
Milner, Rt. Hn. Sir Fredk. G.
Milvain, Thomas
Molesworth, Sir Lewis
Montagu, G. (Huntingdon)
Montagu, Hon. J. Scott (Hants
Morgan, DavidJ(Walthamstow
Morpeth, Viscount
Morrell, George Herbert
Morrison, James Archibald
Morton, Arthur H. Aylmer
Mount, William Arthur
Mowbray, Sir Robert Gray C.
Muntz, Sir Philip A.
Murray, Charles J. (Coventry
Myers, William Henry
Palmer, Sir Walter (Salisbury)
Parkes, Ebenezer
Peel, Hn. Wm. Robert Wellesley
Pemberton, John S. G.
Percy, Earl
Pierpoint, Robert
Pilkington, Colonel Richard
Platt-Higgins, Frederick
Plummer, Sir Walter R
Powell, Sir Francis Sharp
Pretyman, Ernest George
Pryce-Jones, Lt.-Col. Edward
Purvis, Robert
Pym, C. Guy
Quilter, Sir Cuthbert
Randles, John S.
Rankin, Sir James
Rasch, Sir Frederic Carne
Ratcliff, R. F.
Reed, Sir Edw. James (Cardiff)
Reid, James (Greenock)
Remnant, James Farquharson
Renshaw, Sir Charles Bine
Renwick, George
Ridley, S. Forde
Roberts, Samuel (Sheffield)
Robertson, Herbert (Hackney
Rolleston, Sir John F. L.
Rollit, Sir Albert Kaye
Round, Rt. Hon. James
Royds, Clement Molyneux
Rutherford, John (Lancashire)
Sackville, Col. S. G. Stopford
Sadler, Col. Samuel Alexander
Sandys, Lieut.-Col. Thos. Myles
Scott, Sir S. (Marylebone, W.)
Seely, Charles Hilton (Lincoln
Seton-Karr, Sir Henry
Sharpe, William Edward T.
Shaw-Stewart, Sir H. (Renfrew
Simeon, Sir Barrington
Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
Skewes-Cox, Thomas
Smith, Abel H. (Hertford, East
Smith, H. C (North'mb. Tyneside
Smith, Rt. Hn. J Parker (Lanarks
Smith, Hon. W. F. D. (Strand
Spear, John Ward
Stanley, Hn. Arthur (Ormskirk
Stanley, Rt. Hon. Lord (Lancs
Stewart, Sir Mark J. M'Taggart
Stock, James Henry
Stone, Sir Benjamin
Strutt, Hn. Charles Hedley
Talbot, Lord E. (Chichester)
Thorburn, Sir Walter
Thornton, Percy M.
Tomlinson, Sir Wm. Edw. M.
Tritton, Charles Ernest
Tuff, Charles
Tufnell, Lieut.-Col. Edward
Tuke, Sir John Batty
Turnour, Viscount
Valentia, Viscount
Vincent, Col. Sir C. E. H. (Sheffield
Vincent, Sir Edgar (Exeter)
Walrond, Rt. Hn. Sir William H
Wanklyn, James Leslie
Warde, Colonel C. E.
Webb, Colonel William George
Welby Lt.-Col. A. C. E. (Taunton
Welby, Sir Charles G. E. (Notts.
Wharton, Rt. Hn. John Lloyd
Whiteley H (Ashton und. Lyne
Whitmore, Charles Algernon
Williams, Colonel R. (Dorset)
Wilson, A. Stanley (York, E. R.
Wilson, John (Glasgow)
Wilson-Todd, Sir W. H. (Yorks.)
Wodehouse, Rt. Hn. E. R. (Bath
Wortley, Rt. Hon. C. B. Stuart
Wrightson, Sir Thomas
Wylie, Alexander
Wyndham, Rt. Hon. George
Yerburgh, Robert Armstrong

TELLERS FOR THE NOES—Sir Alexander Acland-Hood and Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Adjourned debate on Amendment [22nd February] to Main Question [14th February] further adjourned till to-morrow.

NEW BILL.

HOUSING OF THE WORKING CLASSES ACTS AMENDMENT.

Bill to amend the Housing of the Working Classes Acts, and otherwise to facilitate the building of Houses for the Working Classes in rural districts, ordered to be brought in by Sir Walter Foster, Mr. Channing, Mr. Stevenson, Mr. Price, Mr. Broadhurst, Mr. Frederick Wilson, Mr. Herbert Samuel, and Mr. Soames.

HOUSING OF THE WORKING CLASSES ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.

"To amend the Housing of the Working Classes Acts, and otherwise to facilitate the building of Houses for the Working Classes in rural districts," presented accordingly, and read the first time; to be read a second time upon Friday, April 14th, and to be printed. [Bill 55.]

Adjourned at four minutes after Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Thursday, 23rd February, 1905.

ADDRESS.

The King's Answer to the Address of Tuesday the 14th instant reported; and Address and Answer to be printed and published.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

The LORD CHANCELLOR acquainted the House, That the Clerk of the Parliaments had laid upon the Table the Certificates from the Examiners that the further Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have been complied with:—Cardiff Railway [H.L.]; Charing Cross and Strand Electricity Supply Corporation [H.L.]; City of London Electric Lighting Company [H.L.]; Cordoba and Rosario Railway [H.L.]; East Cowes Gas [H.L.]; Entre Rios Railways [H.L.]; Gosport and Fareham Tramways [H.L.]; Hastings Harbour District Railway (Abandonment) [H.L.]; Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Acton District) [H.L.]; Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Various Powers) [H.L.]; North Metropolitan Electric Power Supply [H.L.]; Truro Water [H.L.]: West Cumberland Electric Tramways (Extension of Time) [H.L.]; Workington Harbour and Dock [H.L.].

And also [the] Certificate that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bill have been complied with:—Clyde Navigation.

The same were ordered to lie on the Table.

Clacton-on-Sea Commissioners Bill [H.L]. Read 2^{a}, and committed. The Committee to be proposed by the Committee of Selection.

Hastings Harbour Bill [H.L.]. Read 2^{a}, and committed.

Mansfield Corporation Bill [H.L.]. Read 2^{a}, and committed. The Committee to be proposed by the Committee of Selection.

Municipal Corporations (Merthyr Tydfil Scheme Confirmation) Bill [H.L.]. Referred to the Examiners.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

NAVY (ESTIMATES).

Estimate for the year 1905–1906; with explanation of differences;

Statement of the First Lord of the Admiralty explanatory of the Navy Estimates, 1905–1906.

HOUSE OF COMMONS (VENTILATION).

Report and recommendations by Dr. M. H. Gordon.

JUDICIAL STATISTICS, ENGLAND AND WALES, 1903 (PART II. CIVIL JUDICIAL STATISTICS).

Statistics relating to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the House of Lords, the Supreme Court of Judicature, County Courts and other Civil Courts, edited by Sir John MacDonnell, C.B., LL.D., a Master of the Supreme Court.

COLONIES (GENERAL).

Further Papers relating to the proposed adoption of a metric system of weights and measures for use within the Empire (in continuation of [Cd. 1940], February, 1904).

Presented (by Command), and ordered to lie on the Table.

MOTOR-CAR ACTS, 1896 AND 1903.

General Order made by the Local Government Board for Ireland, entitled "The Heavy Motor-Car (Ireland) Order, 1905."

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (IRELAND) (GENERAL ORDERS).

General Order entitled "The Union Accounts Order, 1905."

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table.

SERVICE OF MILITIAMEN BILL [H.L.]

THE EARL OF WEMYSS: My Lords, I beg to give notice that on the Second Reading of the Militia Bill I shall move the following Motion, "That in the opinion of this House it is contrary to sound policy to tamper with the Militia forces, and alter, as is intended, its conditions and terms of service."

An Asterisk (*) at the commencement of a Speech indicates revision by the Member.

SEAMEN'S AND SOLDIERS' FALSE CHARACTERS BILL [H.L.].

House in Committee (according to Order).

Bill passed through Committee and reported without Amendment to the House.

THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (The Earl of DONOUGHMORE): My Lords, this Bill, excepting for one small drafting Amendment in Clause 3, is exactly the same as that which your Lordships passed last year, and I would, therefore, ask your Lordships to negative the Standing Committee.

On Question, Standing Committee negatived, and Bill to be read 3^a to-morrow.

THE NEW SERVICE RIFLE.

*LORD TWEEDMOUTH, who had given notice to call attention to the new service rifle and to move to resolve, "That in the opinion of this House whatever convenience a shortened rifle may afford to mounted troops it is inexpedient that the whole of His Majesty's Forces should be armed with the recently approved short rifle," said: My Lords, I feel that I am making a great demand upon your tolerance in referring to the subject of the new rifle now, I think, for the third time in the last ten months; but I assure your Lordships I do so because I am honestly convinced that a grave and costly blunder is about to be perpetrated, and I am really anxious that you should help me in, at any rate, causing the War Office to hold their hand before they finally adopt this weapon. Gutta cavat lapidem, and I do trust that the drip of my persistence may have some effect in wearing away the stony prejudice and rocky non possumus attitude that the War Office have adopted towards all the propositions that have been put forward by those, either soldiers or sportsmen, who have really some practical knowledge of what a rifle should be.

The question of the rifles divides itself naturally and easily into three parts. First, there is the question of improvements that have been made in the rifle, improvements which are admitted by all, and which were not to be found in the long rifle as it was used in the South African War. Then there are a series of, as I think, defects, which are common to the two rifles. But, after all, I wish to impress upon you that it is not proposed to introduce a new rifle. To all intents and purposes you are simply going to continue the old rifle with a shortened barrel. Lastly, there are the series of considerations that arise from the adoption of the shortened barrel, and the arguments to be brought forward for and against that change.

Now, taking the improvements first, I can deal with them in but a sentence or two. You have, in the first place, the new backsight. The new backsight is a very good backsight, and one that I think His Majesty's forces are very fortunate to have acquired. Some of my military friends say that it is too good a backsight, and that it is useless giving the soldier a wind-gauge on a good backsight because he will not know how to use it, and would, therefore, be much better without one. My answer to my military friends on that point is that the sooner they teach the soldiers to use the new backsight the better, and if they use the facilities given them for improving their shooting by this backsight we shall be very much benefited in any future war. Then there is the improvement introduced of loading the magazine from a charger, by which, at a single motion, five cartridges are introduced into the magazine. We who have criticised the magazine rifle from its introduction have always maintained that a magazine rifle should be loaded by a charger in that way, so, at any rate, that is one thing we have got after this fourteen years struggle. Lastly, there is what I think ought also to be regarded as an improvement, and which is really involved by the use of the charger, namely, the abandonment of what is known as the dust-cover, which was quite a superfluity and was no good for the purpose for which it was intended. These, I think, everybody admits to be improvements, but they do not involve any great expense. I imagine that these improvements could be applied to any one of the existing long rifles now used by His Majesty's forces for about, I should think, 7s.—3s. or 4s. for the backsight, and 3s. or 4s. for the alteration necessary to make the charger; at any rate, the cost of substituting the new backsight for the present one, and enabling the magazine to be loaded by a charger, would not be great, and would not involve any large amount of new manufacturing plant.

Now, my Lords, I come to what I hold to be defects which have existed in the action and stock of the rifle from the very beginning, and which now, though you are by way of introducing a new weapon, you have deliberately determined to continue in that new weapon. In the first place, there is the weakness involved by the stock being in two parts. There is no other military rifle in the world which has this arrangement except the French Lebel rifle. I think most of you who are accustomed to using sporting rifles and guns would think it a very extraordinary thing to use a rifle the stock of which was in two parts fastened together with a screw going through the weakest part of the stock. The next thing I come to is the complicated bolt, with its very weak fastening. We have admittedly the most complicated bolt that is in use in military weapons, and the one that has the weakest fastenings. Go to any gunmaker you like and he will tell you it would not be safe to increase the strain thrown on the bolt of the British rifle, whereas the bolts of foreign rifles would certainly bear 25 per cent. more strain than that which could be borne by the British bolt. What is the reason for that? It is because the fastening of the British bolt is made at the end of the bolt, whereas in the foreign forms of bolt the main fastening is made at its head in the breech of the rifle itself. Two lugs fit in and lock the bolt tight at the place where the strain is greatest, namely, at the breech end of the barrel. Your great rifle-makers here in England are all now manufacturing magazine rifles of ·360 or ·375 bore, which take a heavier bullet and also a larger charge of explosive than is used in the ·303. Ask any one of them whether they would use the British rifle-action for such a weapon and they will tell you no. They will tell you that they will go to the Mannlicher or the Mauser for the pattern of the weapon. Then a small change has been made in the safety catch; but I invite any one of your Lordships to look at the new rifle with its present safety catch and tell me whether it is a comfortable one to use. I think the answer will be that it is a thumb-injuring and nail-breaking sort of article. I would ask you also to compare it with the safety catch to be found on the Mannlicher or Mauser rifle, which has a flap lying at the back of the bolt; it is moved from right to left easily, and certainly, however cold your fingers may be, it is evident at a glance whether it is on or off. Then, my Lords, I say we make another mistake in clinging to our clumsy, cumbrous, flimsy magazine. I think the British magazine is an excrescence and an eyesore on any rifle. I can quite understand, before you adopted the charger method of loading, that a big magazine was a good thing. The rifle was used with a cut off as a single firer, and the magazine was to be reserved for emergency. With the charger we have dropped that theory altogether. The rifle is fired straight from the magazine. You cannot load a magazine with ten cartridges from a single charger, and I say the size of the magazine ought to be measured by the number of cartridges you can put into it at a single motion. As it is now, if you want to fill your magazine with ten cartridges, you have to take, first, one little packet of five cartridges in the one charger, and press that into the magazine. You have to move the charger with your hand. You then have to take another little packet of cartridges in another charger and press that into your rifle, and then your magazine is full. I maintain that it is possible to keep up quite as rapid a fire if you have a magazine that holds only five cartridges. I am quite confident that there would be no loss in rapidity of firing by adopting that system, and then you could have your magazine safely stowed away in the forehand of the rifle, the same as in the Mauser, liable to no injury and offering no impediment to its handling.

I think that, perhaps, the strongest argument against the perfection of the British type of rifle is the fact that no other nation has adopted it. All over the world nations are choosing rifles. The bigger nations have special patterns of their own. The less civilised and the smaller nations have to, and do, adopt the inventions of other countries. They naturally give great pains to the choice. They carry out many experiments before they adopt a particular weapon. You will find that of all these nations not one has adopted the British rifle. You may say, "Oh, well, after all, foreign nations do not know much about it." Then I say, go to the British gunmaker, the British marksman, and the British sportsman. A great deal of the sporting shooting is now done from these very magazine rifles; and I am sure you will find that for one sporting rifle that is made on the British pattern, twenty or twenty-five are made on the Mannlicher or Mauser pattern. In the same way, if you go to the great target marksmen, though I admit that some of the Lee-Enfield pattern are used for target work, I think you will find that the majority of the great British marksmen do use rifles made on the Mauser or Mannlicher patterns in preference to the British one. I think these are strong arguments in favour of my theory that even the action of the British rifle is not all that it might be and could be improved.

Up to the present moment I have, of course, been dealing with matters which appertain to the notice I have put on the Paper, though they do not appertain to the Motion. My point is this, that you have decided to adopt a new weapon only to this extent, that you have taken your old weapon with a shortened barrel. All the faults, if there be faults, in the old system of magazine and in the old system of bolt are retained, and I do say if you are going to spend this large sum of money in re-arming the Army, you ought to have considered the question whether you could not improve the rifle, not only in the barrel, but also in the stock and action. I leave that part, and come now to the question of the short barrel. What was the genesis of this short barrel? It had its origin in the place which has been the origin of many troubles to us in the past, and I am afraid may be also the cause of troubles in the future—South Africa. In South Africa it was found that the British mounted soldier armed with a carbine was absolutely unable to cope with a mounted Boer armed with a long Mauser rifle. That was not wonderful. A carbine, so far as it goes, is no doubt a very pretty little weapon, and up to 600 yards may be very good; but, of course, it could not compete with the long rifle in South Africa. So our cavalry adopted the long rifle and used it, and a way of carrying it on horseback was extemporised. It was carried rather after the fashion of a lance—the stock dropped into a small shoe, and the top part of the barrel fastened by a strap to the arm of the soldier. That, I believe, was successful, and I understand that the cavalry soldiers in South Africa were very well satisfied with their long rifle and with the way that it was carried. But, my Lords, it was decided that it was absolutely necessary, in order that the rifle should be carried comfortably by the cavalry, that it should be a short rifle. It was supposed that a convenient way of carrying the rifle could not be discovered unless it was a short one. I can quite understand that it is easier to carry a short rifle on horseback than a long one, but here is an extraordinary thing. This rifle has now been introduced for two years; it has been in the hands of a considerable body of troops for certainly eight or ten months, and yet at the present moment the method of carrying the rifle on horseback has not been discovered.

THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (The Earl of DONOUGHMORE): Yes, it has.

*LORD TWEEDMOUTH: The noble Earl the Under-Secretary of State for War says it has. Well, is it to be carried in the new long bucket?

THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE: I do not know whether we are thinking of the same bucket; but it is to be carried in a bucket which is different from the old one.

*LORD TWEEDMOUTH: The new long bucket, which is a big and clumsy contrivance, necessary on account of the length of the rifle, once more involves the rifle being attached to the saddle of the horse instead of to the man. Now, I do not care who disputes it, however great the authority, but for service purposes the rifle of the cavalry soldier should be attached to himself. When a man is thrown from his horse it is well that he should have some weapon with him—a sword is no use to a man on foot. If it is decided to carry the new rifle in a bucket attached to the saddle you will be very much injuring the effectiveness of the soldier to whom you give that rifle. We had some little discussion on this point in your Lordships' House last session. I think the noble and gallant Field-Marshal, Earl Roberts, whom I now see on the Cross Benches, told us, while, I think, expressing concurrence with our view that the rifle should be attached to the soldier, that his idea would be that the rifle should be carried one way in peace time, namely, in a bucket attached to the horse, and in another way in war time, namely, attached to the man. I know it is very audacious and impertinent of me to set any opinion of mine against that of the noble and gallant Earl, but I do appeal to you as impartial men to say whether it is not wise that soldiers should be accustomed to their accoutrements in peace time, whether the whole of the training of a soldier in peace time should not be to make him ready for war?

I have carried many different rifles, in many parts of the world, on horseback, and you cannot make it a very comfortable or pleasant thing to carry a rifle on a horse. It must mean a certain amount of discomfort and difficulty. That being admitted, surely it is desirable in ordinary training during peace time that you should accustom your cavalry soldier to that amount of discomfort which is to be inflicted on him in war. Therefore, I say that if once you admit that you have to carry your rifle in time of peace in a bucket for convenience or beauty's sake, whereas in war time you must carry it attached to the soldier, then I say you have condemned the bucket system altogether, and ought not to have considered it. As a matter of fact, by shortening the rifle you have made it impossible to carry it in the way in which it was carried in the South African War. The lance attachment method, as it was called, cannot be used with the short rifle because the rifle is too short, but there are methods of carrying it. I have seen one myself. I have no interest in this particular method, and I do not say it is perfect; but it seems to me there is a great deal to be said in favour of it, or in favour of an improvement by the adaptation of it. It is an attachment which has been invented by Colonel Patterson. With that attachment the rifle is carried in a sling at the left side of the man. Just below the cantel of the saddle a metal clip is placed. The rifle hangs on the soldier's left side, and when he mounts the horse he presses the small part of the stock into this clip. The whole weight of the rifle is thrown on to the clip. On the right side the sword is fixed to the saddle, so that the weight of the sword on the one side is balanced by the weight of the rifle on the other. I have seen that equipment tried. I had a corporal of a cavalry regiment, in my own garden, and tried the equipment in every way that I could. He got off on the right side and also on the left side; he fell off on one side and then on the other; and he fell over his horse's tail. Noble Lords laugh. I would point out that he did it on purpose. So far as I could see, however the soldier might fall, the rifle always came away from the attachment on the saddle and left him perfectly free, the rifle itself remaining attached to the man. I know that attachment has been tried at various military centres in England, and I believe that, on the whole, the decision has been against it. It has been said to be weak in places and to damage the small part of the stock of the rifle round which the clip is fastened. Well, I should like to ask the noble Lord the Under-Secretary if he could give me the report which Lord Kitchener has made upon this equipment.

THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE: I have not got it here.

*LORD TWEEDMOUTH: Well, I may tell the noble Earl that this attachment has been already largely adopted in India, and that no less than 26,000 Patterson equipments have gone to India and are in use there. I think that is a strong argument, I am not saying in favour of the Patterson equipment, but in favour of the view that it is possible to discover a method by which the rifle can be carried comfortably, or fairly comfortably, on a horse by the soldier, and yet when he is thrown from his saddle the rifle shall remain attached to the man. That, it seems to me, is what we have to aim at if we wish to get the best possible weapon attached in the best possible way to a cavalry soldier. And I may say that with this particular form of attachment it does not in the least matter whether the rifle is a long or a short one.

The next point put forward in favour of this rifle is that it is, on account of its shortness, much lighter than the existing one. The short rifle is one pound four ounces lighter than the old rifle, and really to hear the advocates of the new rifle speak you would imagine that this extra lightness had been obtained by the shortening of the rifle. I am going to give your Lordships the exact figures as to the amount of lightness that has been obtained in that way. The thirty-inch Lee-Enfield barrel, ready for mounting, weighs two pounds twelve ounces. Five inches is taken off this barrel; that is to say, one-sixth. Well, one-sixth of forty-four ounces is just over seven ounces. Therefore, if you take a sixth off the barrel you save seven ounces in weight; but the part of the barrel that you are taking this off is the part near the muzzle, which is the lightest part; so that, as a matter of fact, the amount saved in weight by shortening the barrel is just six ounces, or three-eighths of the total lightening, which, apparently, is all set down to the shortened barrel. As a matter of fact, the greater portion of the lightening of the rifle has been attained in a totally different way. The stock has been lightened by boring away the wood, the dust-cover has been done away with, and, as I understand, the rifle barrel itself has been pared down. Whether that is a very wise thing to do I do not quite know. My point is that you have no right to claim that the lightening of the rifle is due to shortening the barrel, because that only accounts for six ounces out of one and a quarter pounds which the rifle has been lightened.

Then it is said that this rifle makes an extraordinarily good weapon for snap-shooting, because it is short. In the first place, I would point out that when you come to snap-shooting for military purposes it means that you are shooting at, say, between 200 and 800 yards, and then you would find nobody standing up and shooting from their shoulder. They would all be taking the best cover they could possibly get, and in that way obtaining a rest for their weapon. I think you will all agree with me that the handiness of a weapon for snap-shooting does not depend on its length. It depends on its balance, and, whether it is a gun or a rifle, the handiness of it for snap-shooting does not depend primarily on the length, but on the general way in which it comes up and the general balance of it. I think any of you who will take up this rifle will say that it is not exactly what you would call a very well-balanced rifle. I think you will find, as those gentlemen who took it down on the 11th of this month to Bisley found, that there is considerably too much weight forward to make it in any sense a particularly well-balanced, handy weapon. The mere fact of shortness certainly does not make it better for snap-shooting, especially when you consider the form of the foresight, which is about as little adapted for the purposes of snap-shooting as the sight of any weapon could be.

This brings me to the question of the sights. I have said that the backsight is a very good sight, but, my Lords, I look upon the foresight as being an extraordinarily bad sight. In the first place, you have arrived at a sort of crescent-shaped excrescence, which is there no doubt for the purpose of protecting the foresight. It certainly protects it from injury from outside, but also most successfully protects the foresight from the light falling upon it, and I defy any man in a bad or failing light to make good shooting with it; and when you come to the question of hurried shooting you would find a man apt enough to take one of these horns and use that as the foresight instead of the real foresight, which lies between the two. Again, you cannot get over the unanswerable criticism that by the reduction of the length of your barrel you bring your foresight and your backsight so close together that you infinitely increase the difficulty of shooting. You cannot bring back the backsight nearer the eye, because you would then get a blurred backsight. It is well known that the longer the radius you can get between the backsight and the foresight the more you reduce the variation of error caused by the unsteadiness of the man or the fault of his aim. For these reasons I cannot see that there is much to be said for the short rifle from the point of view of the man who has to aim with it.

Again, there have been certain changes made in the rifling of the rifle in order to maintain the old velocity. There are two small changes. In the first place, the lead from the chamber into the grooving has been shortened. The result of that is naturally to cause the bullet to go with less ease into the grooves and so set up a greater expansion of gas behind it. I am certain that the result will be a greater amount of erosion in the first part of the barrel, and you will have more and quicker damage done to the rifling at the breech end of the rifle than you have at present. In the last fourteen inches of the barrel the rifling has been deepened from ·005 inch to ·0065 inch. I do not want to go into the question of what effect that may have on the ballistic qualities of the rifle. I think it will make it much more dfficult to clean the rifle. Already it is difficult enough to clean one of these small bore rifles in which the new explosives are fired, and I think by deepening the groove towards the muzzle you will experience great difficulty in thoroughly cleaning the groove. A rifle should be always cleaned from the breech, and therefore whatever you push through the early part of the rifle from the breech will be very apt not to reach the bottom of the groove towards the muzzle, and you will find that that will have its effect also.

Now I come to the ballistic qualities of this new barrel. There is no necessity for me to argue about it or to bring forward any proofs, because I have all the proof I want from what is said by those who are responsible for the rifle. All that is claimed for the rifle is that it has ballistic qualities equal to those of the rifle which it is replacing; that is to say, while the muzzle velocity in the Lee-Enfield barrel amounted to 2,000 foot-seconds, that same muzzle velocity is retained in this new rifle. It seems to me that that alone is sufficient condemnation for the adoption of the new rifle for the whole of the Army. Why should we stick to results which were attained fourteen years ago? Rifles in other countries are attaining velocities up to 2,800 foot-seconds. The last German result was 2,845 foot-seconds with a bullet of 156 grains. It is well known both in Germany and France that these great velocities have experimentally been obtained, and I say that before we adopt a new rifle for the whole of our Army we ought to go into full experiments to see whether we, too, cannot get these high velocities.

I put the ballistic qualities of a perfect rifle for military purposes under four heads—(1) a low trajectory; (2) a long range; (3) force of impact; and (4) accuracy; and the reason why I put accuracy last is that any well-made rifle barrel will give you quite sufficient accuracy, and indeed more accuracy than any but very expert shots can get the benefit of. With regard to trajectory, every hundred yards that you can bring within the fixed sight distance increases the effective power of your troops, and makes it easier for your soldiers to shoot properly and straight. I gave the noble Earl last year some trajectory tables which bear out that now, certainly up to 600 yards, you do not get above the level of the head of a man with the last new weapon, the last new explosive, and the last new bullet. That is a tremendous advance. That is the sort of thing we should aim at. Then I say extreme range is of the greatest importance. I know that at extreme range you cannot hope for accurate shooting. There is no question of firing at individual men or even at individual bodies of men. An army armed with a rifle that carries 300 or 400 yards further than that of its opponents would have a tremendous advantage. I will tell you why. It would have an advantage because it would be able to plant an enormous number of bullets into a particular area, the result being that it would by that means force the enemy to deploy very much sooner than he otherwise would. I think it is perfectly evident that the sooner you can force your enemy to deploy. the better it is for defence.

I know it is said that in this country it does not matter so much about our having these long-range weapons, because if we are attacked here we shall be attacked in a country which is full of small enclosures and in which hedges abound. I believe it is just as important for us to have the long-range weapons as it is for anyone, because, after all, supposing that we are attacked we shall have to take up prepared defensive positions; all the obstacles will have to be cleared away in front of those prepared defensive positions, and therefore exactly the same conditions will obtain as in a more open country. It is evident from our experience in all our distant small wars that the longer range we can get the better it will be. I want to know something about these trials of which we have heard so much. Lately a report was put in from Hythe which gave the figure of merit obtained by the new rifle in competition with French, German, and Italian rifles and with the old long rifle. I want to know more details about how those trials were conducted. I want to know whether they were conducted with rifles fired from fixed rests; what sights the rifles were provided with; whether the new British sights were fixed to all the rifles, so that they were all fired under similar conditions, or whether each had the sight belonging to its own pattern; and, lastly, whether any trial was made with what I may call an improved long rifle, because that, I think, is also very important.

If the trials were made from fixed rests I think they lose very much of their value, because in the case of rifles fired in that way the effect of the short distance between the backsight and foresight is greatly diminished. Again, for a practical military weapon you should have the trial from the shoulders of the man firing it. What you want is to see how the rifle is going to behave in the hands of an expert man. Rifles are very strange instruments, and they have little idiosyncrasies of their own, and those of us who have shot with a rifle well know how much one's shooting varies according to the rifle one is using. Therefore, I say that a trial from a fixed rest is not a sufficient trial. What you want is to try a rifle from the shoulders of the man, and under conditions such as would prevail in the field. That brings me to the trial which was reported in The Times newspaper on Monday. It seems to me to have been an extremely satisfactorily-conducted trial by seven men, who would be admitted to be capable and expert shots. They used three of the new short rifles, they each used their own long rifles, and they used three of the old long rifles fitted with the Peddie wind-gauge sight. The result of these trials was that the long barrel fitted with the wind-gauge sight came out first; the long barrel as used without the above came out second, and the new short rifle came out third, and that was at ranges of 200, 600, and 800 yards. I should like to read your Lordships the heads of the conclusions arrived at by these gentlemen after the trial. They were as follows—

1. "That the new rifle is badly balanced, the weight being too much at the muzzle end.

2. That far from being likely to prove a better snap-shooting arm, it would be easier to fire quickly with the long rifle at any given object because the sights of the short rifle are not adapted to quick-firing, the front sight being too small and greatly interfered with by the enormous protecting flanges on each side

3. "That the recoil was considerably heavier than in the long-barrelled rifle, and would greatly add to the difficulties in teaching recruits on the range and render it more tiring.

4. "That the accuracy of the rifle as a weapon of precision is appreciably diminished, for all experienced the same difficulty in keeping the series of shots within the small limits of angle obtainable with both the long-barrelled rifles employed.

5. "The trials lasted nearly all day, and as evening approached (but before sundown) all noticed the great flash of flame from the short barrel, whereas with the long rifle no flash could be seen."

I do not know whether that last conclusion was justified or not, and I am not going to found any very strong argument upon it. What I hold is, if it is true, that the fact of the flash in a bad light is certainly not advantageous to the man firing the rifle. It shows where he is. But there is this stronger point, that if there is a flash of that sort it shows there is a large amount of unconsumed gas being wasted, and, therefore, you are not getting the full benefit of the charge you are using, which seems to me a very strong argument against this particular rifle I allow these conclusions to speak for themselves.

Lord Tweedmouth.

Then there comes this further point, that by cutting your rifle short you deteriorate your weapon when the bayonet is fixed. You lose five inches in length, for the short rifle with the bayonet fixed to it is five or six inches shorter than that of any other rifle used by a military Power. I know it will be said that that is very easily got over. All you have to do is to lengthen the bayonet. I hope that is not a plan that will be adopted for dealing with this particular difficulty. In the first place, you will probably find yourselves again brought face to face with twisting and doubled up bayonets, and next you will find a great deal of deterioration in the shooting power of your weapons, because you cannot get over this fact, that directly you fix a bayonet on a rifle pro tanto a change is made in its shooting power and the conditions are altered, and the longer the bayonet the greater the variation.

Now I come to the question of cost. This is going to be a most expensive amusement for our country. We have been told that these new rifles are to cost in Government factories £3 10s. and in private factories £4 10s. These are high prices for rifles, and surely they are high prices for a rifle which is not a new rifle, but an old one with a new barrel attached to it. We were told last year that the reason of this high price was that the manufacture of a new rifle involved a quantity of new machinery and apparatus. So far as the barrel is concerned, no doubt a certain amount of new apparatus is required, but with regard to the main part of the rifle, to three-fourths of the rifle, there is no new machinery required, because it is exactly the same weapon, manufactured under exactly the same conditions and to exactly the same pattern. It is said that it costs £2 5s. to convert a rifle, and that the total cost of re-arming His Majesty's Forces with this new weapon will be something like £3,000,000. For this, as I say, you are not going to get a new weapon; you are not going to get a weapon that is even going to fulfil the objects for which it is adopted, because I do not believe it will be any more convenient for the cavalry to carry than the old one. If you are to arm the cavalry with this new short rifle instead of with the carbine, I, for my own part, do not raise any objection; but, because you are going to give the cavalry a better weapon, that is no reason why you should force the rest of His Majesty's Forces to have a weapon which I do not think is quite so good as, and which, at any rate, is not better than, the one they have got. I do hope your Lordships will support me in the Motion I have made. All I want you to do is to express an opinion which will check the issue of these rifles to our infantry and our Navy. A great many of them have been made. I admit that the position of the cavalry with this rifle will be much better than with the old carbine. Let them have it. But it is unnecessary and inexpedient to throw a heavy charge on the nation to re-arm His Majesty's Forces with a weapon which at the best, is no better than the one they now have. I beg to move the Motion standing in my name.

Moved, That, in the opinion of this House, whatever convenience a shortened rifle may afford to mounted troops, it is inexpedient that the whole of His Majesty's Forces should be armed with the recently-approved short rifle.—(Lord Tweedmouth.)

Earl ROBERTS: My Lords, I was under the impression when I came to this House that the question at issue was whether the long or the short rifle was the most suitable for our Army. I did not know that the question was to be raised as to how that rifle was to be carried. As the noble Lord has mentioned that matter and has referred to me, I can on that point satisfy him that I am absolutely with him as to the necessity of the rifle being carried on the man's back, or, at any rate, attached to the man in some way or another. When I spoke last year I had tried in vain to get some arrangement by which the rifle could be attached to the man. Experiments had been tried over and over again at Aldershot, and one after another had condemned what I think the noble Lord calls the Patterson equipment. That, I believe, was due to some fault of the clip. But so anxious am I still that some arrangement should be found by which the rifle may be carried attached to the man in some way or another that I have been in communication with Lord Kitchener on the subject; and he tells me that, although the attachment is not absolutely satisfactory, he is convinced that it is the right way in which the rifle should be carried.

I did at that time relate to your Lordships why I first became convinced that the man must have his rifle attached to him. It was in Afghanistan, where I found that when a horse was killed or fell and the man was therefore dismounted he was separated from the only weapon he could use on foot. I myself directed that a sling should be attached by which the carbine—which he had in those days—should be carried at a man's back. I am certain we must have some attachment by which the rifle can be carried, not in a bucket on the horse, but by the man. When the man is on horseback he uses his sword and when dismounted he uses his rifle, and it is essential he should have that rifle with him, or he will be without means of defence. I will give a short account of how and why the shortened rifle came into existence. The origin was not, as the noble Lord thinks, in South Africa. Poor South Africa answers for many shortcomings, but the short rifle was thought of many years before the war was contemplated.

I am sure that all soldiers, and everyone interested in the efficiency of our Army, must be grateful to the noble Lord for bringing prominently to notice a matter on which that efficiency so materially depends. No one, if I may say so, has a better right than the noble Lord to initiate a discussion on this important subject, for not only is he himself an expert rifle shot, but he has on more than one occasion shown considerable knowledge of rifle manufacture. It was as Mr. Marjoribanks in the House of Commons that the noble Lord in 1890 brought forward a Motion criticising the proposed change from the Martini-Henry to the Lee-Enfield rifle. The noble Lord then based his objection to the new rifle on its cost, the smallness of its bore, its system of rifling for the peculiar kind of ammunition it had been decided should be used for it, its system of breech action, and its complexity and method of working. As a matter of fact, my Lords, the rifle in which the noble Lord found so many faults proved in practice to be a most admirable weapon, and when writing from South Africa in 1900 to the Marquess of Lansdowne, then Secretary of State for War, I expressed the following opinions with regard to its utility—

> "There is no need, I think, to be anxious as to the Lee-Metford rifle; our men are quite satisfied with it, and the Boers show their appreciation of it by using it instead of their own Mauser whenever they get the chance. It can, however, I believe, be improved upon without in any way impairing its shooting power, by shortening, lightening, and adding a clip. The Lee-Metford has stood the test of war in a marvellous manner. It has been in the hands of Irregular troops who, in many instances, have not taken proper care of it, and yet, in no instance that I have heard of, has there been any complaint as to jamming, miss-fire, or inaccurate shooting."

Nothing, my Lords, could, I think, be more gratifying or more encouraging to the members of the Small Arms Committee than to find that their labours had not been in vain, and that the rifle, on the construction of which they had devoted so much time and care, had proved eminently satisfactory on service.

I trust that the noble Lord will excuse me if I express a hope that the objections he now raises to the shortened rifle may prove as groundless as those he pronounced against the introduction of the Lee-Metford rifle fifteen years ago. That rifle, indeed, underwent the same troubled course as the shortened rifle is now going through, and it was several years before any decision was arrived at as to whether the Martini-Henry rifle should be superseded. Several more years were then spent in perfecting the rifle. It underwent trial after trial to make certain that it was in all respects suitable for military purposes. Shortcomings were discovered and remedied, but finally an Army Order was issued doing away with the Martini-Henry rifle and adopting the Lee-Metford in its place. Then, my Lords, came the attack in another place to which I have just alluded.

If I shall not be trespassing too long on your Lordships' patience I will explain to you as shortly as I am able how and why the shortened rifle has come into existence. The Lee-Metford rifle was introduced in 1889. Six years afterwards the Chief Inspector of the Small Arms Factory proposed that a new pattern carbine with bayonet should be prepared to supersede the long rifle, on the grounds that, as the carbine then in the service fired the same ammunition as the rifle, was equal in accuracy, superior in handiness and portability, it would be a better arm than the rifle. The Army Board considered the proposal and refused it on the ground that the length of the barrel was insufficient to ensure the entire combustion of the charge.

In 1898 the question was revived, and the then Commander-in-Chief (Lord Wolseley) stated that he was not prepared to entertain any proposition for shortening the rifle, although he would like to see it lightened. It was decided to try if this could be done, and the following arms were prepared: (a) Service long rifle reduced in weight from 9 lbs., viz., to 8 lbs. 5½ ozs.; (b) ditto reduced in weight to 8 lbs. 6 ozs.; (c) a short rifle, reduced in weight to 7 lbs. 12½ ozs. and with the barrel shortened by 6¼ inches; (d) a short rifle the same length as the carbine, weight 8 lbs. 7 ozs. These four rifles were submitted to a Committee, constituted as follows—viz.: President, Colonel Ian Hamilton; members, Col. The Hon. F. Stopford, and Col. W. N. Lockyer; Secretary, Captain Lloyd. This Committee was formed to consider and report upon the question as to the best practicable method of modifying the design of the present service magazine rifle so as to produce a lighter weapon.

Of these four arms the Committee chose (c), namely, a short rifle reduced in weight to 7lbs. 12ozs. and with the barrel shortened by 6¼ inches, and asked for another similar to this one, but still further lightened, for trial. Twelve of each pattern were ordered, but the outbreak of the South African War prevented the matter being further investigated, and nothing was done until the receipt of the following telegram from me, dated Pretoria, October 10th, 1900, to the Secretary of State for War—

> "As a large number of rifles will have to be made, I would suggest that they should be of the pattern recommended by the Committee of which Colonel Ian Hamilton was president, as I understand this pattern rifle is about to be adopted for the Native Army in India. The new rifle must certainly be loaded on the clip system, and the only question is whether the calibre might not be advantageously still further reduced."

A new Small Arms Committee had, in the meantime, been formed, and had taken up the question of improving the long service rifle. In their Report, dated July, 1900, they raised the question, amongst others, whether in preparing a new pattern of rifle it should have a shorter barrel and longer bayonet in order to be suitable for all services. A decision on this Report was postponed for my return from South Africa, and the Committee continued experiments with a lighter form of long rifle with charger equipment and new sights.

This rifle, together with one five inches shorter, was submitted by the Committee to the Director-General of Ordnance, who, in forwarding it on to the Adjutant-General on January 8th, 1901, minuted as follows—

> "Experiments at Hythe with the barrel shortened six inches have shown that the shortened rifle shoots equally well up to 1,000 yards. Lord Roberts telegraphed from South Africa that future rifles should be with shortened barrels. At the same time there was a general feeling among the cavalry in South Africa that they were handicapped by having the carbine, which has a barrel nine inches shorter than the service rifle, and the Inspector-General of Cavalry asked for a longer carbine. It is hoped that the rifle now submitted will meet the requirements of both cavalry and infantry, and thus enable them both in future to be armed with the same weapon. Longer and shorter bayonets were also submitted."

The Adjutant-General chose the short rifle and short bayonet, and I concurred in the choice on January 10th, 1901. One thousand of the shortened rifles, as well as long and short bayonets, were then ordered for trial.

This, my Lords, is the story of the shortened rifle up to the time it came to be selected as the one likely to prove most suitable for universal use in the Army, provided that its efficiency in all respects passed the proof of exhaustive trials. These trials were carried out during 1901, under the following instructions—

> "All trials are to be carried out in comparison with service rifles. Volley firing will not be used. Every firer will be allotted a service rifle and a shortened rifle. Every practice will be executed first with the shortened rifle and at once afterwards with the service rifle (or vice versa), in order to secure similar conditions of light, wind, and atmosphere. Firers should not be changed during the trials unless unavoidable. The sub-heads of report are to be adhered to and numerical order kept. All firing trials will be reported on in such detail as may be necessary, but deductions from these trials should be embodied under the various sub-heads which apply to them. The sub-heads should be carefully studied, in order that all points to be reported on may be observed during each trial."

"Although the magazine of the shortened rifle will hold ten cartridges, only five will be loaded into it at one time, except as directed in trial No. 8 (c).

"Firers must be trained in charger loading with dummy cartridges before carrying out trials in rapid fire. The shortened rifle will be loaded by charger in all trials.

"Rapid practice will not be carried out until all deliberate trials have been completed.

"Reports to be on foolscap, typewritten if possible, and on one side of the paper only.

"As many sighting shots as are needed should be allowed in trials where they may be required.

TABLE OF FIRING TRIALS.

"1. Deliberate fireat 200, 500, and 800 yards at regulation targets. Position—any. Seven shots per rifle at each distance. Results to be recorded as in annual course of musketry. Registers to be kept and retained for reference.

"2. Snap-shooting practice under the same conditions as practice 10, Provisional Course of Musketry, Table B, 1902. Seven shots per rifle.

"3. Vanishing practice under the same conditions as practice 9, Provisional Course of Musketry, Table B, 1902. Seven shots per rifle.

"4. Moving practice under the same conditions as practice 14, Provisional Course of Musketry, Table B, 1902. Eight shots per rifle.

"Trials 2, 3, and 4 to be carried out twice; each trial on a different day. Results to be shown as averages. Registers to be kept and retained for reference.

"5. Fire at objects large and small, coloured to harmonise with background at varying distances up to extreme range obtainable locally, in bright and dull light, and in falling evening light. This trial is intended especially to afford comparison between the bead and the Service Barleycorn foresight, and to test hood sight protector. Results to be shown in any convenient form.

"6. When range is obtainable, fire at about 2,000 yards at a prepared area of ground, either of close cut rolled turf, or sand, or at a large canvas screen laid horizontally, the area not to be less than fifty yards by fifty yards. A target for aiming purposes should be placed on the prepared area of ground or screen. Fifteen rounds per rifle. Results to be shown as percentages of hits to rounds fired. Dial sights to be used. Registers to be kept and retained for reference. Arrangements to be made locally.

RAPID FIRE.

"7. Trial with fixed bayonet to test the method of bayonet attachment and the result on shooting. 2nd Class target at 200 yards. Thirty rounds rapid fire. Five selected firers. Applicable to shortened rifle only.

"8. (a) Rapid fire for one and a half minutes at a 2nd Class target at 200 yards. (b) Rapid fire for three minutes at a 1st Class target at 600 yards. (c) Repeat (b), commencing with a full magazine in the shortened rifle and recharging it with ten cartridges.

"Results shown as averages. Registers to be kept and retained for reference.

"In these trials note especially if the hood interferes with rapid alignments of sights, especially when D sight is raised at 600 yards."

In order, my Lords, to satisfy you that both in the construction of the shortened rifle and in the manner in which the trials were carried on the officers concerned were in no way trammelled by orders from the War Office, I must ask your leave to read extracts from a letter I received a day or two ago from the officer who was Commandant at Hythe and a member of the Small Arms Committee for the greater part of the time these duties were being carried out. Colonel Pennington writes—

"The correspondence (The Times February 3rd) pictures the Committee as a body oppressed by instructions from the War Office which injuriously limited their field of action and tied them to a narrow issue. This is incorrect and misleading. During my first six months I was in doubt on certain points, and thought it my business to express my views to General Brackenbury. General Brackenbury entirely convinced me that we were dead on the right lines. Trials later on fully confirmed this. The Committee was in no way unreasonably tied down or limited. It was asked to deal with the whole question in the only manner which was practicably possible—The Committee would most certainly have condemned the short barrel had it not given complete satisfaction, and had they not considered it an improvement on the long barrel. The War Office is accused of conducting trials with a view to suit a foregone conclusion. This is almost too foolish to reply to. All trials were suggested by me personally and were amplified by suggestions made by the Committee, who, being nervous about the short barrel, suggested the widest possible trial. The scheme for trials was then accepted by the War Office not directed. My sole idea in framing the Hythe and Army trials was to leave nothing undone to discover defects. The Hythe Staff, as a body, commenced trials with a bias in favour of the long barrel. I believe no trials could be more thorough, more truly comparative, or more practical. The Committee could not have taken up the question of a new type of rifle. It was urgent to deal with the defects in our rifle which the war had brought to light, the chief one being absence of charger loading. The short barrel came up in the connection and was eventually accepted on its merits."

During these trials certain shortcomings were observed in the shortened rifle, and in December twelve more rifles, modified accordingly, were tested at Hythe in comparison with twelve Lee-Metford rifles. The Commandant at Hythe reports that these trials were conducted with rigid impartiality, the short and long rifles being fired alternately, so as to ensure absolutely similar conditions. These trials proved the shortened rifle to be equal to the service rifle in accuracy.

As a further test, my Lords, and to ascertain the opinion of infantry soldiers, it was decided to issue 1,000 shortened rifles to the Army at home for trial, and on March 17th, 1902, a programme for these trials was approved. The trials were carried out at Aldershot, Dover, Portsmouth, and Curragh, Dublin, and Cork, by the various regiments stationed at those places, and by the Royal Navy, and in November of that year the Small Arms Committee reported that they did not regard any further trials as necessary, and that as a service weapon they considered the short rifle superior to the long rifle. My Lords, it was on receipt of this decided opinion, given by the War Office's expert advisers, that I, as the Commander-in-Chief, recommended to the Secretary of State for War that the shortened rifle should be introduced into the service to replace both the Lee-Metford rifle and the carbine. In July, 1903, reports were received from Somaliland that the short rifle which had been issued for trial in that expedition had stood the test well. It was said that—

"The men like it and shoot well with it."

I have now explained to you, my Lords, the reasons for the proposed change, and I have enumerated the measures taken to enable us to arrive at a correct conclusion as to the fitness of the selected weapon for general use in the Army.

Up to the time, my Lords, of the recent appearance of the correspondence in The Times dealing with deficiencies supposed to have been discovered in the new rifle, I had no idea that it had been thought to be in any degree faulty. Since the appearance of that correspondence, I have used every effort to discover whether there are grounds for the objections brought forward by those who, for the most part, are experts as to the requirements of a match-shooting rifle rather than to those of a service weapon. Lord Kitchener, to whom I telegraphed on the subject, replies—

"As far as I have been able to test it, the new rifle fulfils requirements. In my opinion it is a better balanced, handier, as well as a lighter weapon, and more suitable for a man on the Indian frontier than the long rifle."

And yesterday this further telegram was received from Lord Kitchener—

"The 7th Division at Meerut has been practising with the new rifle since the 11th, and all ranks speak highly of it."

This testimony, my Lords, as far as it goes is satisfactory, but in view of the doubts raised in the minds of the public and the Army as to the value of the new weapon, and as it is essential that our soldiers should not be required to take the field armed with a rifle in which they do not entirely believe; and as I am at least as anxious as anyone can be that they should have the best rifle that can be procured, I most earnestly hope that His Majesty's Government will consent to such further tests as will definitely solve the doubts which now exist.

To this end, my Lords, I would suggest that a certain number of civilians (if possible, the very same gentlemen who so patriotically went to Bisley a few days ago to ascertain whether the theoretical complaints advanced against the new rifle were well founded), should shoot against a similar number of soldiers at Hythe, each party firing with the long and short rifle alternately up to a distance of 2,000 yards, and also a certain number of rounds of snap shots at short ranges. The programme must, of course, be prepared so that the trial may be carried on as far as it is practical under service conditions, in order that the qualities claimed for a short and light rifle may be practically illustrated. This, I think, could not fail to enable the country to arrive at a definite conclusion as to whether the long or the short rifle is the best weapon for military purposes.

* THE EARL OF ERROLL: My Lords, I do not share the very gloomy view taken by the noble Lord who introduced the Motion now before the House. I maintain that the superior lightness and handiness of the new rifle constitute a very great improvement on the old rifle, and I venture to say that this improvement has been acquired without any loss either of range or accuracy. It is admitted that it is the best weapon for the cavalry, and I venture to think it will prove a boon to the infantry soldier on service. The idea has got abroad that it is an unserviceable and an altogether bad weapon. This opinion has been fostered by the Press.

LORD TWEEDMOUTH: I beg the noble Lord's pardon; I have never said it was a bad rifle. I wish it to be quite understood that I have never said that.

* THE EARL OF ERROLL: I beg the noble Lord's pardon. In the very temperate speech he made he did not condemn this rifle as a bad one. What I am referring to are the comments that have been made in the Press, and which seem to point out that this rifle is a really bad weapon, and that the Government has been accused of giving a weapon to the Army which places the soldier at a great disadvantage in comparison with soldiers of other countries. I do not hold this opinion at all. It is generally taken for granted in the Press that the cutting off of five inches from the rifle must necessarily reduce the accuracy and the range, and the alteration in the groove has been altogether ignored. In judging of a military rifle there is one point which I think we should never lose sight of, and that is the great difference there is between match shooting and service conditions. For shooting at Bisley a rifle has to be carried perhaps a few hundred yards, while on service men have to carry their rifles long marches and often make an attack immediately afterwards. It by no means follows that a rifle which is a good rifle for match shooting is necessarily a good rifle on service. The cardinal requirements of a rifle for service are handiness and lightness, consistent, of course, with sufficient accuracy to give the soldier confidence in his weapon. Target shooting at home under comfortable conditions is very apt to make us forget this fact. We do not want a match-shooting rifle. What we want is more of a sporting rifle, and I venture to think that if anybody picked up this rifle he would much rather take it out stalking than the long rifle which the infantry have at present.

For these reasons I attach very little importance to the trial which took place a few days ago at Bisley. If these seven match-shooters had marched twelve or fourteen miles first, and had then made an attack across a heather and crawled up to the position from which they were to shoot, I think their opinions would carry much greater weight. Another reason why I think these conditions were not quite fair was that as far as one can see these gentlemen had never practised with a short rifle before, and I think that it is only just to the rifle that it should be tried by persons who have had considerable practice with it. Men always find the drag-pull-of a difficulty at first, though it is almost universally approved of when they have become accustomed to it. I was down at Windsor yesterday, and I questioned some of my old regiment on this new rifle, and they were all warm in its praise. Last year the Blues shot a match against the Coldstream Guards, the Blues using the short rifle and the Coldstream Guards the long rifle, and the Blues won the match. It is true that there was a return match afterwards which they did not win. I have not got the figures, but I was assured that there was very little in it one way or the other. This, I think, proves anyhow that the short rifle is not an unserviceable weapon.

Turning to the statement of those gentlemen who shot at Bisley the other day that this rifle is badly balanced, I certainly cannot agree with them. I think if you take up the two rifles and put them to your shoulder you will find that the short rifle comes up very much better than the old one. The only way for your Lordships to judge of that is to try it yourselves. I wrote to a friend of mine who is in charge of an infantry battalion asking his opinion about this rifle. Whilst being unable to speak as to the shooting of the rifle in his own regiment, which has not been supplied with it, he says—

> "My officers who have been recently at Hythe are warm in praise of its use and accurate shooting. I have handled it and it is a most handy and simple weapon. I fancy the wood casing will require care for fear of damage by falls, and the backsight must also be put down or it will break off. It is extremely light, and I am in favour of it. I do not think the short distance between the backsight and the foresight will affect accuracy of shooting. I have one beside me now and I do not think there can be a better weapon."

This is the expression of opinion of an officer who is at present in command of a battalion. He is a good sportsman, and has seen service in all parts of the world. With regard to snap-shooting, I rather agree with the noble Lord that the sights are a little difficult, but I think that could very easily be remedied. I notice that the noble Lord said nothing about the recoil. I think he admitted last year that the recoil was so small as to be absolutely no detriment to the rifle at all. As to the flash, I have no experience of that. I think the noble Earl the Under-Secretary of State for War will be able to explain it. There was something said in The Times the other day about Colonel Hutton, who had been on the Small Arms Committee, shooting with a long rifle. I have seen that rifle. It is very long and heavy, and I do not think that those gentlemen, if they had made the march that I have suggested, would have approved of it from its weight. Besides, it is in no sense a military weapon, because it has no sights on it at all. I venture to think the opinion of military experts, backed up by the trials which the noble and gallant Earl the late Commander-in-Chief has told us of, and further confirmed by the experience of the rifle in Somaliland, should carry greater weight than the opinions of this self-constituted and irresponsible body of gentlemen who went down to Bisley and in one afternoon solved the whole problem, which, I think, we will all allow is very difficult and very complex.

THE EARL OF LONSDALE: My Lords, we have heard many descriptions of the new rifle, and everybody seems to agree that it is a good one; but I understand that it is not a question whether the rifle is a good one, but whether it is a serviceable one, and I think it would be of very great benefit to the country if we knew to what extent the Government or the War Office are responsible for the new arm. I am sure no body of men are more anxious to benefit the country than the experts at the War Office. It may be the case that they have only under order enough rifles to supply the cavalry. If that be so, that is almost an answer to the noble Lord who moved the Motion now before the House, for surely it would be simple enough, if that be the case, to let the cavalry try the rifle and postpone the issue of the rifles to the infantry till a later date.

*THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE: My Lords, even had there been no debates raised on this subject last year by the noble Lord opposite, I should not have been surprised at a debate such as we have had this afternoon being raised at any time. All re-armaments bring into public notice with considerable prominence the views of two schools of thought. There is, first of all, the school of thought which I would venture to call the Army school—military opinion, which has its views as to what sort of weapon is required for the Army. Then there is the second school, the school which regards a weapon chiefly from a sporting point of view, from the point of view with which, I think, rather naturally, it would be regarded by the majority of your Lordships. This particular school has another wing attached to it consisting of those whom I should respectfully call target experts. Whenever re-armament has been proposed we have invariably seen a considerable contest between these two schools of thought. I was reading the other day a debate which took place in your Lordships' House on March 1st, 1867. It was initiated by the noble Marquess whom I see opposite, Lord Ripon. He asked certain questions with reference to what was then the new rifle—the Schneider—and the Under-Secretary quoted in his answer the military opinion which at the time was supplied to him by the then Commander at Aldershot, Sir James Scarlett. Sir James Scarlett said—

> "I consider the present pattern an admirable weapon and perfectly efficient when well made and well handled."

That is the same sort of answer that we have to give to-day, and it satisfies the critics no more than Sir James Scarlett's opinion did then, for I find that Lord Dalhousie, who followed, expressed considerable dissatisfaction with the rifle. I cannot help saying, by-the-by, that Sir James Scarlett was evidently a strong-minded soldier, who was not afraid of saying what he thought, for in the latter part of the extract quoted he said—

> "My only regret is that the correspondents who furnish information on military matters to the Press do not first make themselves acquainted with the subjects on which they write."

In 1871 there was a similar discussion with reference to the Martini-Henri, which was then being introduced, and in 1891, when the Lee-Metford was brought forward, the same critics who are now so strongly criticising the new rifle expended considerable energy in criticising the Lee-Metford. The noble Lord opposite, Lord Tweedmouth — I daresay he remembers it — initiated a debate in the House of Commons which has already been referred to by the noble and gallant Field-Marshal, and he attacked the Lee-Metford up hill and down dale, if I may put it so, and expressed his love for the Mauser rifle, a love we know he strongly feels. He informed the Secretary of State for War, Mr. Stanhope, that he could obtain these for £3, and I think he even went so far as to recommend that we should adopt these rifles, and your Lordships will probably remember that last year the noble Lord mentioned Mausers again, and quoted the price at from £2 16s. to £2 18s.

Lord TWEEDMOUTH: That was consistent.

*The Earl of DONOUGHMORE: Yes, an excellent example of the growth of the evil of "dumping" into this country. Mr. Stanhope, in reply, quoted the Adjutant-General of the day, who stated that the Mark II. weapon was a thoroughly satisfactory one in every way, but the noble Lord was still not satisfied, and he raised the subject again in the following year. And now, my Lords, we have the same controversy. Why do these two schools always differ? I claim that their views are divergent because their needs are divergent. They regard the rifle from an entirely different point of view. What, my Lords, are the needs of the sportsman? A sportsman needs a rifle of supreme accuracy; an ordinarily accurate rifle does not suit him. It is not only necessary to hit your beast but you have to hit him in the right place. Weight does not matter to the sportsman very much. An extra pound more or less is immaterial, because he does not carry his rifle; he employs a man to carry it for him.

Lord TWEEDMOUTH: That does not apply to me.

*The Earl of DONOUGHMORE: Then I congratulate the noble Lord. He is a very exceptional Scotsman. It does not matter a bit to the sportsman whether or not the rifle is complicated. There is a comfortable gun room upon the hill, with all modern appliances for cleaning the weapon and carrying out all repairs that it may require. What, my Lords, are the needs of the target expert. It is again of primary importance to him that he should have an accurate weapon. A few inches in accuracy at a thousand yards may make all the difference between success and failure. A few extra pounds in weight one way or the other do not matter to him. He has only a few yards to walk to the firing point. It does not matter if the mechanism is complicated; he has the most skilful gunmakers in the world always at hand ready to carry out small repairs, which, of course, are far more frequent in a complicated weapon than in a simple one. It does not matter to him if the weapon is delicate, for he does not go out shooting in boisterous weather.

Lord TWEEDMOUTH: Oh!

*The Earl of DONOUGHMORE: Well, does he?

Lord TWEEDMOUTH: Yes.

*THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE: Ah, yes; but under an umbrella. How different his needs are from the needs of the soldier on active service. It is quite true that the soldier needs an accurate rifle. In this possibly I go further than the noble Lord, but I am quite prepared to take his admission that as long as it is a good accurate rifle it is good enough for the soldier. But, my Lords, he has other needs quite as great as the need for accuracy. First of all, there is the question of weight. I maintain that to the soldier a single pound is of cardinal importance. He has to carry his rifle for long marches, sometimes for forced marches, in all temperatures, in all climates, in Canada, in India, and in the Far East, and he has to carry at the same time a great many other things. I claim, therefore, that it is of cardinal importance that you should consider the weight of a rifle when selecting one for the soldier.

Again, my Lords, a delicate rifle is of no use to the soldier. The Army needs a strong rifle that will stand knocking about from its master, who is, after all, rather a robust practitioner, not over skilful in mechanical niceties. He needs a handy weapon for snap-shooting, for shooting at moving objects, for a mêlée, for hand to hand conflicts such as you do not meet with upon the plains of Bisley. Therefore, I claim that there are cardinal necessities which must be considered in selecting a rifle for the Army that never come into the heads of your sportsmen or your target experts, but which must be given full value by your Lordships in deciding such a matter as this. I might mention in passing that our late foes in South Africa, I am told, found the long rifle not quite so handy as they liked, for I believe many rifles which we had lost and which they had taken into use were found lying about, subsequently, and that almost invariably a great deal of the wood under the barrel had been cut away in order to increase the handiness of the rifle. I only mention this in passing as a testimony from those whom we are always having quoted to us as great rifle experts.

I maintain, my Lords, that the only true test—and in this one can welcome the support of the noble and gallant Field-Marshal—of the rifle for the Army is one made under service conditions. We have had such conditions in Somaliland, and the fact that there is a practically unanimous voice in favour of this rifle and against the old rifle surely should be allowed to have considerable weight in this matter with your Lordships. The noble and gallant Field-Marshal has made it perfectly clear that the attack which has been made upon us of adopting this rifle for the cavalry and subordinating the interests of the infantry is an unfounded one. He has also made it perfectly clear that there was no doubt in the minds of the military authorities in 1901 when this rifle was recommended for adoption, and I think it right to inform your Lordships that there is a similar absolute absence of doubt in the minds of our military advisers at the present moment. There is no hesitation in the mouths of my colleagues on the Army Council in saying that this is the rifle that they want for the Army.

Now, my Lords, I come to some of the detailed criticisms which have been put forward by the noble Lord opposite, and I will do my best to follow such an expert as he is into the very minute details into which he has entered. I would only like to say one thing with reference to the policy of foreign nations. The noble Lord states that no one has adopted our rifle. That is true, but a foreign nation that has re-armed since we commenced re-arming has adopted, not only a short rifle, but a rifle shorter than our short rifle, I mean the Swiss. I admit that the Swiss have not a large army, but they are a nation of marksmen, and have always been held before us as such, and are we not permitted to say that this is perhaps a sign on the other side as to the way things may trend? There is also the United States. In 1898 the United States adopted a short rifle. It is quite true they have stopped the issue, but, if you read the extracts from the American newspapers, you will find that they have stopped the issue not because they are dissatisfied with their rifle, but because they are dissatisfied with their bayonet. As far as we know—of course we have no official reports; but as far as the American newspapers tell us—the United States have stopped issuing their short rifle because they are dissatisfied with their particular bayonet.

Now, my Lords, the noble Lord, in the first sentence of his speech, spoke with considerable feeling, complaining that none of the improvements suggested had been adopted by the War Office. He did not use the word "pig-headed," but I think he considers us pig-headed because we have not adopted some of his improvements. But three minutes afterwards the noble Lord congratulated us on having adopted charger-loading, of which he has been an advocate for years past. Adopting his advocacy of charger-loading is a very bad way of refusing ever to adopt any improvements that are suggested to you. We are often told that second thoughts are best, and in this matter I prefer the noble Lord's second thought.

Now with regard to the accuracy of this short rifle. The noble Lord asked about the trials. I was not present at the trials and I find a difficulty in answering all his minute questions. My impression is—I think I am informing the noble Lord rightly—that those trials were carried out not from a fixed rest—if I understand properly what a fixed rest is. I think they were carried out from the shoulder but on a tripod.

Lord TWEEDMOUTH: With a rest.

*The Earl of DONOUGHMORE: But they were not in a vice. But, my Lords, I would like to say one word with reference to the results of some further trials which were placed in my hands yesterday, and which I think will prove very satisfactory to your Lordships. I would make one remark with reference to this return, and that is that the comparison in it between the short rifle and the foreign rifle is a fair one because it is a trial of one rifle. We have great difficulties in carrying out trials with foreign rifles owing to the difficulty of getting ammunition. The comparison between the long rifle and the short rifle is not a fair one. The short rifle trial is a trial of one rifle, but the long rifle trial is the ordinary trial of twelve rifles. Therefore I do not think that that comparision is a fair one.

Lord TWEEDMOUTH: Had the long rifle the new sights?

*The Earl of DONOUGHMORE: I think not, but I shall be able to say something about that presently in another connection. I have here the results of a number of trials—some nineteen or twenty in all—which have recently been carried out in connection with experiments upon a different point, and therefore I may perhaps claim that they are less open to suspicion upon this point. They had been carried out with a number of different bullets with which we had been experimenting. They were all new rifles, very carefully selected, six of each sort—six against six. Of course, in the figures that I will quote to your Lordships, the same bullet and the same ammunition will have been used in each rifle where one is set up against the other. They were 20 shot diagrams at 600 yards. With the present bullet the long rifle gives a figure of merit of $9\frac{1}{3}$ in. and the short rifle $7\frac{1}{3}$ in., or 2 in. in favour of the short rifle; second trial, $9\frac{3}{5}$ in. long rifle, 8 in. short rifle, a difference of $1\frac{3}{5}$ in.; third trial, $8\frac{3}{4}$ in. long rifle, $8\frac{2}{3}$ in. short rifle, which is practically the same, being a difference in favour of the short rifle of $\frac{1}{12}$ in.

Lord WENLOCK: Will the noble Earl say whether the sights were identical?

The Earl of DONOUGHMORE: Certainly not. I am quoting the old rifle against the new rifle as issued to the troops. I have seventeen or eighteen further trials with which I will not trouble your Lordships, but the total result is $8\frac{2}{5}$ in. for the long rifle and $7\frac{4}{5}$ in. for the short rifle, a difference of $\frac{3}{5}$ in. in favour of the short rifle. I do not want to press that further than to say that these trials distinctly show that the short rifle is not worse than the long rifle, and that in the majority of cases it comes out better than the long rifle. Therefore it is not straining the result to say that the short rifle is not the worse of the two.

Lord TWEEDMOUTH: But you cannot compare them unless you put the same sights on the rifles.

*THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE: I think it is a perfectly fair comparison; it is comparing the rifle as issued to the troops, and I say that we will have a better rifle than the long rifle with which they went to South Africa. I do not want to put it further than that.

THE EARL OF WEMYSS: May I ask as to the extreme range?

*THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE: I am coming to that; I was speaking only as to accuracy. Now, my Lords, I come to the recoil. I know the noble Lord opposite does not attack us on this point; he is my ally in this respect, and I am very glad of it. A great deal has been said about recoil, and I think it right that the proper figures should be mentioned. These are not War Office figures. The experiments were made by the Gunmakers Association of London. Whereas the recoil of the long rifle was 11·9 foot-pounds the short rifle was 13·4, so that the short rifle was about 1½ pounds more.

LORD TWEEDMOUTH: You mean tons.

*THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE: I think not; I copied the expression from the report. At any rate we will not discuss whether it is pounds or tons. The figures are 11·9 and 13·4. I wonder if your Lordships are aware of what is the recoil of the guns with which you yourselves go out shooting. The Gunmakers Association assure us that it is 24; therefore the short rifle with 13·4 is not a very serious thing as compared with your guns with 24, while the old Express rifle which your Lordships used before the small rifle came in was 45.

LORD TWEEDMOUTH: I beg the noble Earl's pardon, but he was right and I was wrong. The recoil is pounds. I was confusing recoil with pressure, which is always given in tons.

THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE; I am glad to hear that I was correct. Now as regards the point raised in the letter which is being quoted from The Times of last Monday with regard to flash. I fully admit that flash so far as regards present ammunition. It is not a very grave defect, because though a flash enables you to see where your enemy is, you cannot tell how far off he is. It is very difficult in the dark to tell how far off a flash is. However, I am glad to be able to inform your Lordships that for a long time we have been carrying out experiments with what is technically known as "M.D. cordite," which is the cordite used in big guns; we have been trying to adapt it to small arms, and our experiments are already sufficiently satisfactory to enable me to say that we have every hope of shortly being able to introduce the use of M.D. cordite into small arms. From a great number of experiments that we have carried out with the short rifle, and even with the Maxim gun, which is always a considerable offender in the matter of flash, we find that with M.D. cordite, there is no flash in the short rifle or in the Maxim; therefore this defect, I admit at once, can be easily met without altering the length of the rifle.

Now, my Lords, as to muzzle velocity. The noble Lord stated that the muzzle velocity of the two rifles was the same. As a matter of fact the short rifle is 30 lbs. more.

LORD TWEEDMOUTH: Feet, you mean.

*THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE: I am sorry, but I have pounds down again.

LORD TWEEDMOUTH: It is 30 foot-seconds.

*THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE: Anyhow, the figures are 2,000 and 2,030, or slightly in favour of the short rifle. Our present bullet we claim is capable of carrying a higher pressure than it does at present, but this higher pressure invariably raises complaints as to kick. But with the same bullet the trajectory is the same in the two rifles.

LORD TWEEDMOUTH: I have not disputed it.

*THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE: No, the noble Lord has not disputed it, but lots of people have. If anything, that of the short rifle is a little flatter. There is one curious thing as regards muzzle velocity which I should like to mention.

Experiments were carried out on the 21st of this month at Enfield, using a long barrel with rifling as for the short rifle, and the result was 21 foot-seconds more than the muzzle velocity of the short rifle. It is quite true that foreign rifles are getting a higher muzzle velocity, but they do it with a smaller bore, and also, I am informed, with a lighter bullet.

Then as regards range, a question raised by my noble friend at the Table. Both our rifles were sighted to 2,800 yards, whereas few foreign rifles are over 2,200 and none over 2,400. I have all the figures here as to foreign rifles, but I do not wish to weary your Lordships with them, but it might be interesting to note that the Japanese rifle is sighted to 2,187 yards—that represents the equivalent in kilometres—and the Russian rifle to 2,096 yards. Therefore in sighting our short rifle to 800 yards farther, we are not very far behind foreign nations.

LORD TWEEDMOUTH: I beg the noble Earl's pardon; the distance to which the rifle is sighted does not in the least guarantee or prove the distance the bullet will carry. We want to know how far the bullet will carry, not the distance to which the rifle is sighted.

*THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE: But would not foreign nations sight their rifles to the distance they think necessary —as far as they want them to carry?

LORD TWEEDMOUTH: That is not the question I want answered. I want to know the absolute fact.

*THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE: We have had no experiments that I know of on that point, but if we have I should be very glad to place the results at the disposal of the noble Lord.

THE EARL OF WEMYSS: Has the rifle been fired at 2,800 yards?

*THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE: I do not know, but again I should be very glad to ascertain. I should think it had, otherwise I do not think it would have been sighted for the distance. Now I come to the question of the sights. Before I deal with that, I may say that a paper has just been put into my hands stating that the rifle has been shot with good results at 2,800 yards. Now with regard to the foresight, I was wondering whether the noble Lord would repeat his complaint of the foresight, because what did he say in 1892? He then threw doubt upon the advisability of the foresight not being protected; he suggested to the Secretary of State in the House of Commons that it was liable to be knocked off. Now, when we have given the foresight protection and prevented it being knocked off, the noble Lord comes down upon us like a cartload of bricks and complains that we are throwing a shadow over it. I confess that in this matter I think the noble Lord is very difficult to please. Now, my Lords, I come to a more important point—the point of bayonet fighting. This is a matter which has caused considerable controversy. It is argued that this rifle being five inches shorter than the old rifle will place men at a considerable disadvantage as compared with the old rifle in a bayonet mêlée. Theoretically it is a very pleasant idea that the longer rifle and the longer bayonet give a man an advantage, but curiously enough our experience is all the other way. In 1888, when the short bayonet was originally adopted, very extensive trials were carried out. The method of procedure was as follows. Two of our best instructors were taken, one was given a long bayonet, and the other a short bayonet, and they were made to fight. After they had fought a certain number of times, they were made to change weapons, and fight again. The result was invariably that the short bayonet won twice out of three times. That is obviously because the shorter rifle is a more handy weapon, and that with a short weapon you can move more quickly. There are also other points in favour of the short bayonet not in connection with the rifle, with which I will not trouble your Lordships. It is, however, a notable fact that at the present moment the Japanese rifle and bayonet together are three and a half inches shorter than the Russian rifle and bayonet, and, on the theory that the longer rifle and bayonet give you such a tremendous advantage, in almost every mêlée that has occurred during the present war the Russians ought to have killed every Japanese, and I hardly think that that is a sort of thing that the newspaper reports tell us has happened. The noble Lord admits that the argument against the short bayonet could be met by lengthening the bayonet, but as that matter is not now under discussion, I will not follow it further.

Now I come to some of the minor criticisms of the noble Lord. He complains of the stock being in two parts—I hope I understand his criticism rightly—and that this will allow the screw to work loose, and that the accuracy of the rifle would thus be compromised. I would only suggest with great humility that the remedy is not to allow the screw to work loose, and to screw it up if it does work loose. Then with regard to his criticism of the bolt. He attacked the bolt twelve years ago, but it has since satisfactorily stood the strain of the Tirah campaign, of the Egyptian campaign, of the South African campaign, of the China campaign, and of Somaliland, and we see no reason to desert our old friend. The same argument applies to the noble Lord's criticism of the magazine. The noble Lord stated in 1892 that the magazine was one which was liable to break down when brought into actual service. It is, I believe, a maxim of life that you should never prophesy unless you know, and on this occasion I am afraid the noble Lord prophesied without knowing. There is also the undoubted fact that a 10-cartridge magazine does not empty so soon as a 5-cartridge magazine, and we adhere to the 10-cartridge magazine. We know that the Boers used invariably to load up their magazines after they had fired a few shots if they had an opportunity for so doing, and the same course of action is open to the British soldier. We have had no complaint that the rifle is difficult to clean.

As regards the other small points, such as, for instance, the necessity of setting up new machinery, I am informed that a lot of new machinery has had to be set up, but I have not the details with me. In answer to the noble Lord, Lord Lonsdale, it is quite true that our present contracts when completed would do little more than supply our mounted troops, for whom, I am sure the noble Lord opposite would agree, a short rifle is essential.

LORD TWEEDMOUTH: It is better than the carbine.

*THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE: Very well, the noble Lord will not admit it. But long before these contracts are out we shall have received the result of extensive trials which are now in progress under service conditions, and I can assure your Lordship that if modifications are found to be necessary we shall not hesitate to say so and to recommend them to your Lordships. In connection with these trials I am prepared to make what perhaps I may call a sporting offer. If any of our friends the target experts would like to join in a trial I should be very glad to arrange it, and I would suggest something like the following conditions, viz., the trial to be carried out with a long rifle one day and a short rifle the next; the trial to consist of a twenty mile march in the most boisterous weather we can get, and to end with a half mile "double" over the shingle at Hythe (that is a very fair service condition); then the rifle to be shot, the number of rounds and the particular targets to be subsequently agreed on. I shall be interested to know whether after this march and this "double" those who participate in the trial still maintain that they like the long rifle better than the short, or that they prefer shooting with a long rifle to shooting with a short rifle. As a purely personal opinion, I should prefer that this offer were accepted by the seven marksmen whose trial is spoken of in the letter in The Times of last Monday.

At present, on the reports that we have, and in the opinion of our military advisers, we have no justification for doing what the noble Lord by his Motion would have us do, namely, to stop existing contracts. The keynote of the whole matter is—and I hope your Lordships will remember it—that the best weapon for target work or sporting purposes is not necessarily the best weapon for the Army. Our military advisers had no hesitation in 1901; Somaliland has come since then, and our military advisers have no hesitation now. Your Lordships have heard the telegram from Lord Kitchener which was read out by the noble and gallant Field-Marshal, and I am sure your Lordships will feel bound to give the strongest possible consideration to the words of the telegram that "the rifle is more suited for war on the Indian frontier than the long rifle." Operations have been frequent on the Indian frontier, and we are constantly being reminded that they are likely to occur there again. I earnestly hope that your Lordships will not take up the directly non possumus attitude suggested by the Motion of the noble Lord, and absolutely refuse to allow any progress to be made in the re-arming of the Army with a rifle which, after all, the Army has chosen for itself.

*THE EARL OF WEMYSS: Before my noble friend Lord Spencer addresses your Lordships I should like to say a word. The Under-Secretary of State for War said it was impossible to give a long rifle to the cavalry. Now, my Lords, why has the whole of this question arisen? We have had a very interesting discussion about sights and weights and everything else, but I would ask my noble friend whether, if it were not that at last the light has dawned on the War Office, after fighting against it for forty years, that the carbine is unsuited in the present day for cavalry, should we have ever had this new rifle? I very much doubt it. The point never arose until the question of the carbine for the cavalry being done away with came up, and that only arose because you sent our cavalry out to South Africa with a weapon absolutely useless as compared with that to which they were opposed; they were under fire for about 2,000 yards or 1,500 yards before they could return it. Their carbines would shoot up to about 1,000 yards, while the weapons of their opponents would carry 2,500 yards, and some of them even up to 3,000 yards; therefore I am correct in saying that the cavalry were sent out with an absolutely useless weapon, and that much life was lost in consequence of their being under fire for so long before they could return it. The result is that the carbine has been condemned and the cavalry are to be armed with a rifle; so that the question is what rifle should that be? My noble friend said just now that it was impossible for the cavalry to carry a long rifle. Why? Forty years ago the most perfectly mounted cavalry force ever seen—the Hampshire Mounted Horse under Colonel Bower—carried the rifle in a way which elicited from the late Commander-in-Chief these words. I may say that I last year produced photographs showing how the rifle was carried. The noble and gallant Field Marshal Earl Roberts then said—

> "I admit that the photograph shows a pleasant way of carrying a long rifle; moreover I think it is in that way it will have to be carried in peace time."

That is to say, carried in a bucket, attached not to the man but absolutely to the horse. Carried in a way, which, instead of interfering with the man when riding, enables him to ride over fences or anywhere, without convenience, and that acts as a buck-jumping saddle and prevents his being kicked off if need be. My noble friend the late Commander-in-Chief also said—

> "It is an admirable way of carrying a rifle in peace time, but not in war."

But what is war? He means in the face of the enemy. But when they are in face of the enemy the troops would take their rifles out of the bucket and carry them in a sling round their shoulders. There is no difficulty in that. The question, therefore, is reduced to this—whether it is a wise or necessary thing, putting aside the questions of accuracy and the improvement of the weapon, because you are going to give the rifle instead of the carbine to the cavalry, to arm the whole infantry and cavalry with a new rifle and spend at least £3,000,000 upon what I hold to be an unnecessary arm. I venture to think it would be more practical and more sensible to give the cavalry a long rifle and to carry it in the way I have suggested, than to spend £3,000,000 of money, and give every sort of abstract reason why this new rifle is better than the old rifle, when you would never have thought of having this new rifle at all had it not been for the question of substituting something for the carbine for the cavalry. I think we are indebted to my noble friend for bringing this question before the House, and on the broad issue—not on the question of sights or of weights, or of powder—but on the broad issue that the expenditure is unnecessary, I hope the Motion will be supported. You ought to give the cavalry a long rifle, and have it carried in a way which everybody who has seen it admits to be excellent. For years I have tried to get the authorities of the War Office to look at this method of carrying a rifle, but none of them have done so, and now they are adopting a new-fangled idea by which the rifle is to be carried half on the man and half on the animal. I think the whole thing is a mistake, and therefore I shall heartily support my noble friend.

*EARL SPENCER: My Lords, I am quite aware that your Lordships are always surprised if a Member of this House rises to speak on a subject about which he is supposed to know very little. I venture, however, to address you to-night, not as a sporting shot with a rifle, not altogether as a target expert, but as one who has had at any rate some experience in this matter, and I will tell your Lordships what is that experience which justifies me in supporting the Motion of my noble friend. When President of the National Rifle Association in succession to my noble friend beside me, I was appointed by the War Office in 1867 and 1868 and served on an important Committee for nearly two years, on the subject of the new rifle for the Army. I had already had considerable experience of shooting, having been one of the first Volunteers to go to Hythe. Before going to Hythe I doubt whether I could have hit Buckingham Palace at fifty yards, so that I owed a good deal to the Hythe course of instruction. After that, I did a considerable amount of shooting with various Volunteer corps; I drilled Volunteers in rifle shooting myself, and during that time they were more successful at Wimbledon than they have ever been since. I shot in a great many matches, not with a sporting or match rifle, but with the old muzzle-loading Enfield rifle, then with the Schneider, and subsequently with other rifles, so that I can claim to have had considerable experience both of shooting personally and of teaching others to shoot. While serving on the Committee to which I have referred, I went through a long period of inquiry on the subject of these rifles; we had an enormous number of rifles before us, though I forget exactly how many. Two of the members of the Committee were connected with the Volunteers and rifle shooting, one besides myself being Mr. Edward Ross, whom your Lordships will doubtless remember and admire as a most distinguished shot. The other members were military men, Colonel Fletcher of the Scots Guards, who served as chairman, two other military men, and a Royal Artillery Secretary. I may say that a friend of mine who happens to live in Northamptonshire and I are now the only survivors of that Committee with which I worked. I quite admit that our work and recommendations on that Committee are now antiquated and out of date, for a rifle, like a ship, has a very short life and is soon over-ridden by new ideas, but I think that much information that I gained during that inquiry justifies me in criticising the action it is now proposed to take. I always feel proud of having been a member of the Committee which recommended the Martini-Henry rifle, because, although it has now been superseded for some fifteen years, it provided for the Army one of the very best arms then in existence, and for nearly twenty years that rifle was used with great success. That Committee was appointed also to consider the question of magazine rifles, but these rifles had advanced only such a very small way in 1867–8 that we practically did not go into that matter, so that I do not speak with any experience on that point. I must also admit that at that time I was strongly against the bolt system, preferring the block system. I had an experience which perhaps justified me in holding that view, because while I was carrying out an experiment for the Committee to see whether the rifles would bear the rough usage of war, one of the bolt rifles blew up on my shoulder, the whole of the bolt going by my head, and I suppose I was never nearer to sudden death than then. I believe that experiment and accident greatly influenced the Committee in recommending the block system. But I am not going to argue in favour of that system now. I am quite aware that the bolt system has been adopted, and I believe successfully, and that the dangers we felt then as attending its use have been overcome by practice, and that under war conditions, which is the greatest of all tests, the bolt system has not been found deficient.

I want, my Lords, to refer to two points on which the noble Earl opposite has spoken. He seemed to throw a little doubt on the authority of men who came forward as sportsmen. But my noble friend does not urge that the experience of sportsmen completely exhausts the arguments in favour of one rifle or another. He does feel, however, and I agree, that the experience of sportsmen like himself with various rifles has an important bearing on rifle-shooting generally, whether in sport or with the Army. We often hear, too, some almost sneering remarks—I do not use the word offensively—with regard to Bisley and Wimbledon. I was closely connected with the meeting at Wimbledon, and I think that those who make such slighting references forget what those two great meetings for rifle-shooting have done for the Army and for the rifle in this country. If it had not been for the shooting at Wimbledon we should never have had so good an arm in the Army as we have had. That is a point that ought to be borne in mind.

I am afraid the noble Earl has not had much experience of shooting. I have had rather more, for I once shot for the Queen's Prize at Wimbledon with a military rifle, so that I know very well the conditions under which shooting takes place. I do not for a moment say that those conditions would outweigh the actual service conditions in the Army, but still they are important. One of the most trying conditions in the great matches at Wimbledon and now at Bisley, is the requirement to shoot in the most violent storms. I certainly have never heard of shooting from under an umbrella. Anybody who has shot at Wimbledon would ridicule the suggestion of the noble Earl; in fact, the idea as to that being one of the conditions under which shooting is conducted is absolutely absurd.

My Lords, we can quite admit that the noble and gallant Field Marshal has disposed of one argument which has been used in the course of the debate, namely, that the question of the short rifle was raised by the South African War. We will admit that. But speaking not as a sporting man—I have done very little deer-stalking myself—but as one with some experience of shooting with a military rifle in matches, I say there is nothing which makes a greater difference in rifle-shooting than the range between the backsight and the foresight. I have tried shooting with a short rifle, and it is almost impossible to do so with great accuracy. The difference it makes is enormous, and I think that that consideration alone is of great importance. You may ridicule extreme accuracy, but I think that when you have in your Army some of the best shots in the world you should seek to put into their hands a rifle which will enable them to make the most accurate shooting. Time after time, in South Africa and elsewhere, these experienced shots have done great service to the country by the marvellous accuracy of their shooting; therefore, I do not think you ought at all to minimise the importance of accuracy, and accuracy of shooting with all men, whether they are good or bad shots, is enormously affected by whether a long or a short rifle is used. The question of weight is one which need scarcely be considered when it is remembered that in this case the shortening of a long barrel to a short barrel only reduces the weight of the arm six ounces.

I do not want to trouble your Lordships at great length to-night, but I should like to say that with regard to cartridges I can conceive that it would be of enormous importance not to have two kinds of cartridges used on service. If you have two kinds of cartridges the wrong kind may come up just at the moment when you are in need of ammunition. Therefore the question of cartridges is of vital importance—of far more importance, I should say, than having the same arm. I cannot see the force of the argument of the noble and gallant Field Marshal. If you have the same cartridge it will be an enormous advantage.

Now, my Lords, we have to consider what the Government are doing. I understand that what the Government propose will cost about £3,000,000. That is a very large sum. But what will it effect? It will not give you a better arm than the long rifle. We do not say that the short rifle is a bad arm, but according to the arguments of the noble Earl the Under-Secretary of State and of the noble and gallant Field Marshal, the short rifle—though we admit it is better than the carbine—is not a better arm than the long rifle. Why, then, should you go to this enormous expenditure to put into the hands of the infantry an arm which many people think a worse arm than the present arm, and which, according to those who advocate the short rifle, is at any rate not a bit better than the rifle now in use? That, I think, is a point we ought to bear in mind.

Earl Spencer.

I do not dwell on the question of recoil. My noble friend, who knows so much about the subject, has admitted that recoil in this short rifle is a small matter. A heavy recoil is doubtless very serious, but we do not say that recoil is a serious point here. The question of flash is of more importance, because the very existence of flash shows that the whole power of the powder has not been developed and brought to bear on the bullet which is to be propelled. The point on which I wish to lay particular stress is that for this enormous expenditure you will not get a better rifle. We believe that with very slight changes the long rifle could be enormously improved and that it might be made very superior to the rifle now in the hands of other armies. We quite admit the desirability of putting this rifle into the hands of the cavalry, as there is no doubt that the present carbine is very deficient.

Now, my Lords, I leave the case as it stands. I should have left it absolutely alone, but I thought that in a debate of this character I ought to make a few remarks. The case has been ably put by my noble friend, and I sincerely trust that your Lordships will not blindly follow the Secretary of State for War in sanctioning so enormous an expenditure for so small a gain.

THE MARQUESS OF RIPON: My Lords, I rise not for the purpose of continuing the debate, but simply with a view to pointing out a curious mistake made by the noble Earl in his reference to me. The noble Earl treated me as a critic of the Schneider rifle. If there is one thing in connection with my proceedings as the head of a public department with which I am well satisfied it is that I was the Secretary of State who introduced the breech-loading rifle into the British Army, and that I selected the Schneider rifle as the pattern to be used. I was shortly afterwards removed to the India Office. My noble friend the Duke of Devonshire succeeded me, and he it was who actually issued the rifles. My object was not to attack the Schneider rifle, which is, so to speak, my own rifle, but to elicit, what I did practically elicit, from His Majesty's Government, namely, the excellent practice which that rifle had always made.

THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE: I should perhaps have described the noble Marquess as a critic of the Government, not as a critic of the rifle.

THE MARQUESS OF RIPON: But I was not criticising anybody.

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (The Marquess of LANSDOWNE): My Lords, we have had a most interesting and instructive discussion, and I do not think that anybody can complain of the manner in which the subject has been dealt with either by the noble Lord on the Front Bench opposite who introduced the Motion, or by my noble friend beside me who spoke on behalf of the War Office. I think we are indebted to them for the clearness with which they handled a difficult subject, although there were moments when we found ourselves in some doubt as to whether we were thinking in tons or in pounds or in that still more elusive quantity, foot-seconds of muzzle velocity. What we have now to consider is the course we can most conveniently adopt with regard to the Motion on the Paper. The Motion is of a very decided and peremptory character. If it is carried by the House it may be either operative or inoperative, if it is operative it will have the effect of interfering abruptly with the proceedings of the War Office, and of throwing upon this House and of taking away from the War Office the responsibility for dealing with the supply of rifles to the British Army. On the other hand if it should remain inoperative I am afraid the result would not be consonant with the dignity of your Lordships' House. I wish therefore to ask your Lordships whether we are really in a position to commit ourselves to the very decided and conclusive view expressed in the Motion of the noble Lord? Surely, my Lords, this is a question which can be decided by experts and only by experts, and although there are no doubt some Members of this House, and I certainly give a high place among them to the noble Lord who moved the Motion, who have a right to consider themselves experts, I take it that what I may call the rank and file of your Lordships' House do not pretend to have any expert knowledge of these matters. We come then to this, that the Secretary of State for War has behind him a very great weight of expert authority. No one could listen to the full statement of my noble friend, or to the observations of the noble and gallant Field-Marshal on the Cross Benches, without becoming aware that this question had been fully and repeatedly examined, and that the Secretary of State's advisers had formed a very strong opinion, to which they adhered. On the other hand, my Lords, there is no doubt a considerable body of public opinion—of expert opinion —which holds a different view, and I am certainly not going to under-rate the importance of such statements as those which have lately appeared in the public Press or have been made by the noble Lord opposite this evening.

How, then, is it possible for your Lordships' House to take upon themselves to decide when these doctors disagree? No doubt there are some points upon which we are perfectly competent to form an opinion. For example, no one will deny, I think, that for a military rifle accuracy is not the all-in-all to be aimed at. There are other qualities for which we ought also to look. I think my noble friend was perfectly right when he argued that this subject should be considered not merely from the point of view of the sportsmen or marksmen. The military rifle will have to be put into the hands of soldiers, often of young soldiers, perhaps of soldiers who have not had a very lengthy training. It is surely of the utmost importance to give them a weapon which shall be simple and handy, and one which they themselves like to use. While I say that, I must protest against the statement of the noble Earl that my noble friend in his speech cast anything like a sneer upon those most valuable institutions, Wimbledon and Bisley. I am sure all of us agree with the noble Earl opposite in acknowledging the great debt which the country owes to those competitions, and the great obligation we are under to those who, like the noble Earl, were concerned in the original institution of those most valuable meetings.

Then, my Lords, other things being equal, it is surely not unreasonable to say that the lighter weapon is obviously a more convenient weapon than the heavier. Again, we may take upon ourselves to say that a single weapon is better for the whole Army than two weapons, and that one cartridge—which I believe we have—is better than a variety of cartridges. But, my Lords, my noble friend claims on behalf of this new short rifle that it possesses these attributes, and, in addition, the merit of equal or even greater accuracy. My noble friend is certainly not open to the imputation of having under-rated the importance of accuracy. I thought he put accuracy rather higher than did the noble Lord who moved the Motion; for he, if I remember rightly, treated the quality of accuracy as fourth in rank of the four essentials which he enumerated.

But, my Lords, my noble friend's statements, full and convincing as they were, are met by a distinct challenge, and it is scarcely for us to deliver judgment. What, then, is the reasonable course for us to adopt? Surely it is that which I understood my noble friend to suggest, namely, that this challenge should be taken up, that further trials—under conditions which will render those trials exhaustive and complete—should be made, and that if the result of those trials should throw any doubt upon the value of the short rifle the responsible department should govern itself accordingly. No harm will be done in the meantime, because I understood my noble friend to say that the whole of the short rifles now under order, or in process of manufacture, will be required for the mounted troops, or for the reserve of mounted troops. We may, therefore, with a clear conscience proceed with the completion of those orders which are now actually in existence. As to the conversion of the existing long rifles into short rifles, to which the noble Earl referred—a conversion which he truly says is an expensive operation—I understand that no conversions are at the present moment in progress; and that none are intended in the near future.

THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE: In the very near future?

*THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE: And that none are intended in the very near future. I maintain, therefore, that your Lordships may safely leave the matter where my noble friend has left it, without committing yourselves to a Resolution so binding upon the House, and so absolutely uncompromising as that which the noble Lord has moved.

A NOBLE LORD: Can the noble Earl say whether the War Office Committee which recommended this rifle, were in any way tied down by instructions as to the length of rifle necessary, or had they quite a free hand?

THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE: I do not quite recognise to what date the noble Lord refers. It was made quite clear by the noble and gallant Field-Marshall that the idea of the short rifle was put forward in 1895 by the Chief Inspector of Small Arms.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY (The Earl of SELBORNE): I was asked what we were doing with regard to the Navy. The rifle is not a weapon for seamen at all; their weapon is the big gun; so that the question of the rifle is one of very second-rate importance to them, and we have not found it necessary to raise any question of a change of arms at present.

LORD TWEEDMOUTH: My Lords, I am afraid some of your Lordships will think me very unyielding, but I do not think that I can accept the offer that the noble Marquess has made. I do not see that I should be in any way advantaged by accepting it. If I withdraw this Motion, and leave the matter in the position that the Government are to go on as they like, on the understanding that there are to be further inquiries into the behaviour of the rifle, well and good; but if I press this Motion to a division, as I am thinking of doing, the Government will still be bound to do exactly the same thing. After the debate which has taken place to-night, and after the discussion in the Press, it is perfectly clear that the War Office and the Government would not think of continuing the manufacture of these weapons without taking further steps to reassure the public mind. If the noble Marquess were in a position to undertake, that in the meantime no further rifles should be manufactured except for the cavalry, and that any further issue of the rifles should be postponed for a considerable time, there might be something in it. I do not wish to put the Government or the War Office into any state of discomfort, nor could I do it if I wished; so that for my own satisfaction, and in order, at any rate, to record the opinions of a certain number of Members of this House, I shall be obliged to ask your Lordships to divide on this occasion.

On Question, their Lordships divided:—Contents, 22; Not-Contents, 55.

CONTENTS.

Bedford, D.
Somerset, D.

Ripon, M.

Chesterfield, E. [Teller]
Dartrey, E.
Ilchester, E.
Kimberley, E.
Portsmouth, E.
Spencer, E.

Gordon, V. (E. Aberdeen.)

Brassey, L.
Burghclere, L.
Chelmsford, L.
Monkswell, L.
Raglan, L.
Reay, L.
Sandhurst, L. [Teller.]
Stanley of Alderley, L.
Tweedmouth, L.
Wandsworth, L.
Welby, L.
Wemyss, L. (E. Wemyss.)

NOT-CONTENTS.

Halsbury, E. (L. Chancellor.)
Vane, E. (M. Londonderry.) (L. President.)
Salisbury, M. (L. Privy Seal.)

Marlborough, D.
Portland, D.

Ailesbury, M.
Bath, M.
Lansdowne, M.
Winchester, M.

Pembroke and Montgomery, E. (L. Steward.)
Clarendon, E. (L. Chamberlain.)
Albemarle, E.
Brownlow, E.
Dartmouth, E.
Denbigh, E.
Hardwicke, E.
Lathom, E.
Lonsdale, E.
Mansfield, E.
Mar, E.
Northesk, E.
Onslow, E.
Roberts, E.
Selborne, E.
Shaftesbury, E.
Stanhope, E.
Verulam, E.
Waldegrave, E. [Teller.]
Westmeath, E.

Churchill, V. [Teller.]
Cross, V.
Esher, V.
Hill, V.
Hutchinson, V. (E. Donoughmore
Knutsford, V.
Abinger, L.
Allerton, L.
Belper, L.
Cheylesmore, L.
de Ros, L.
Dunboyne, L.
Estcourt, L.
Kenyon, L.
Kilmarnock, L. (E. Erroll.)
Lawrence, L.
Muncaster, L.
Oranmore and Browne, L.
Ravensworth, L.
Robertson, L.
Rossmore, L.
Saltoun, L.
Sinclair, L.
Stewart of Garlies, L. (E. Galloway.)
Windsor, L.
Wolverton, L.

House adjourned at half-past Seven o'clock, till To-morrow, half-past Ten o'clock,

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Thursday, 23rd February, 1905.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

SUBSTITUTED BILLS [LORDS] (STANDING ORDERS COMPLIED WITH).

Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in respect of the following Bill, introduced pursuant to the provisions of The Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, and which the Chairman of Ways and Means had directed to originate in the House of Lords, they have certified that the Standing Orders have been complied with, viz. :—Clyde Navigation [Lords].

PETITIONS.

AGRICULTURAL RATES, CONGESTED DISTRICTS, AND BURGH LAND TAX RELIEF (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1896.

Petition from Kincardineshire, for continuance; to lie upon the Table.

JUVENILE SMOKING.

Petition from Brighton, for legislation; to lie upon the Table.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

ARMY (ADDITIONAL ESTIMATE, 1904–5).

Estimate presented, of the amount required during the year ending 31st March, 1905, to meet expenditure on the military operations in Somaliland, for which no provision was made in the original Army Estimates for the year; also to authorise the appropriation of certain receipts, in excess of those included in the original Army Estimates for the year, to defray expenditure in excess of the sums therein provided for Army services other than the Somaliland operations [by Command]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 57.]

LOCOMOTIVES ON HIGHWAYS ACT, 1896, AND MOTOR-CAR ACT, 1903.

Copy presented, of General Order made by the Local Government Board for Ireland, entitled The Heavy Motor-Car (Ireland) Order, 1905 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table.

RAILWAY, ETC., BILLS.

Copy ordered, "of Report by the Board of Trade upon all the Bills and Provisional Orders of Session 1905 relating to Railways, Canals, Tramways, Harbours, and Tidal Waters, and the supply of Electricity, Gas, and Water."—(Mr. Gerald Balfour.)

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

Separation of Judicial and Executive Functions in India.

MR. HERBERT ROBERTS (Denbighshire, W.): To ask the Secretary of State for India whether he is aware that the Viceroy intimated in his Budget speech on March 25th, 1903, that the question of the separation of judicial and executive functions in India would be dealt with at an early date; and whether he is now in a position to state what steps have been taken by the Government of India to carry out this change.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Brodrick.) I have not received any information on the subject from the Government of India, but will ascertain from Lord Curzon how the matter stands.

Reduction of Establishments of West Indian Colonies.

MR. BUCHANAN (Perthshire, E.): To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies what is the extent of the reductions in the establishments in the West Indian Colonies and Bermuda, which, as he has announced, it is the intention of the Government to make at an early date.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) The garrison of Bermuda will be reduced by a battalion of infantry. The company of Royal Garrison Artillery has already been withdrawn. The establishment of the remaining battalion will be reduced from 920 to 766 rank and file, and that of the two remaining companies of artillery and of engineers is under consideration. As regards the West Indies, St. Lucia will be abandoned as a defended station, and its garrison and that of Barbados will be withdrawn. The garrison of Jamaica is still under consideration.

Vivisection of Cats.

MR. TOMKINSON (Cheshire, Crewe): To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his attention has been called to the cases tried in Bedford Police Court on February 9th last, in which fines were imposed for the stealing of cats, and in which evidence was given that large consignments of cats had been sent by one of the defendants to a house in a London suburb alleged to be visited by medical gentlemen; and whether he will order the publication of the address of the house in question and an investigation into the practices carried on in it.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Akers-Douglas.) Yes, Sir; and I have made inquiry into the matter. The name of the house in question (Brockwell Hall, Herne Hill) is given in the newspaper reports of the proceedings. The premises are registered as a place where experiments can be performed under the Act 39 and 40 Vic., cap. 77, and are under inspection. The experiments there are carried on in strict conformity with the law. The director of these laboratories informs me that the cats were purchased in the ordinary way from a dealer in cats and dogs, and that neither he (the director) nor anyone else connected with the institution had the slightest suspicion that this dealer was other than a perfectly honest man. The director further informs me that on reading the reports in the Press he communicated with the head constable of the Bedford police, and sent to him the cats which had been received from Bedford in order that they might be inspected by any persons who had lost cats. If animals are obtained in an improper manner the offenders are amenable to the ordinary law, and in the present case a conviction has been obtained.

SIR FREDERICK BANBURY (Camberwell, Peckham): To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his attention has been called to the evidence given in the case at the Bedford Police Court on Thursday, the 9th inst., when three men were convicted of cat-stealing, to the effect that the animals stolen by these men were consigned to the Licensed Vivisectors' Laboratory at Herne Hill; and whether, in these circumstances, he will institute inquiries as to the sources from which animals are generally obtained by vivisectors for the purpose of experiments.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Akers-Douglas.) The facts of this matter are given in my Answer to the previous Question. As I there stated, persons who improperly obtain possession of animals can be dealt with by the ordinary law. It would be beyond the functions of the Secretary of State, under the Act 39 and 40 Vic., cap. 77, to institute such general inquiries as are suggested by the hon. Baronet; but I am always ready, as in the present instance, to investigate any particular case in which alleged abuses are brought to my notice.

Newcastle as Examination Centre for Naval Cadets.

SIR WALTER PLUMMER (Newcastle-on-Tyne): To ask the Secretary to the Admiralty, with reference to the approaching open competitive examination of candidates for entry as engineer cadets in His Majesty's Navy to be held in London, Edinburgh, Dublin, Devonport, and Portsmouth, if the Admiralty will consider whether Newcastle-on-Tyne, as the centre of the Tyneside engineering industry, might in future be added to the places where candidates are examined; and if the usual announcement of the date of such examinations could be inserted in one of the principal north country newspapers.

(Answered by Mr. Pretyman.) The date fixed by the Civil Service Commissioners for the sending in of names by candidates, February 15th, has now been passed, so no change would be possible in regard to the forthcoming examination in March. Newcastle was one of the centres of examination until the year 1899, when it was omitted, together with three other centres (when the regulations were under revision), for the reasons that there was a difficulty in conducting an examination at the same time in so many centres, and the number of candidates who came forward there was so small (in 1898 four only) as to make it a very expensive matter in proportion to any possible advantages to the services. The Civil Service Commissioners will be asked to notify the date of the next examination in the north country newspapers.

Education—Payment of Grants.

MR. SOARES (Devonshire, Barnstaple): To ask the Secretary to he Board of Education whether he is aware that inconvenience to local education authorities has been caused by the delay in paying the balance of annual and fee grants to those authorities whose school year ended October 31st last, such grants in some instances not having been paid until January last, and in some not yet paid; and, if so, whether any assurance can be given that the grants for the present year shall be paid at regular intervals.

(Answered by Sir William Anson.) The Board regret that there should have been a delay in some cases in the payment of the annual grant and final instalment of fee grant, due for the school year ending October 31st last, and they are making special efforts at the present time to pay off all such cases with as little delay as possible. The delay, in so far as the Board are responsible for it, is largely due to special pressure some months ago in another department of the Board's work, of which the effect is only now being felt. The Board have every reason to hope that the delay will not again occur.

Building By-Laws in Country Districts.

MR. HENRY HOBHOUSE (Somersetshire, E.): To ask the President of the Local Government Board if he will lay before the House a Return of the building by-laws made by rural district councils which affect the construction of cottages; and if he proposes to have any inquiry into the subject.

(Answered by Mr. Walter Long.) I am afraid that, looking to the differences in detail between various series of by-laws, it would scarcely be practicable to indicate by means of a Return the by-laws in force in each area. I am receiving representations from various quarters with respect to building by-laws in rural districts, and the whole question is engaging my attention. I have not at present arrived at a decision with regard to the course to be adopted in the matter.

Railway Construction in the Neighbourhood of the Persian Gulf.

MR. REGINALD LUCAS (Portsmouth): To ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he can give any information as to the present prospect of railway construction in the neighbourhood of Bagdad and the Persian Gulf; whether any schemes are known to be now under consideration; and, if so, by whom they are promoted; and whether His Majesty's Government are exercising any influence in the matter.

(Answered by Earl Percy.) His Majesty's Government are not aware that any steps have been taken for the construction of the Bagdad Railway beyond the Koniah-Eregli section, which was completed in October last, and paid for by a loan raised at Berlin; and they have no knowledge of any schemes for raising the funds necessary for the continuation of the line to the Persian Gulf.

Income-Tax.

MR. FIELD (Dublin, St. Patrick): To ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Treasury have suggested to their officials to press for the immediate collection of income-tax and issue threatening notices; and whether it has been hinted, especially in Ireland, that increased assessment on problematical anticipated profits is desirable.

(Answered by Mr. Austen Chamberlain.) The Answer to both these Questions is in the negative.

Suggested Import Duty on Diamonds and Gold from South Africa.

MR. FIELD: To ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in view of the outlay entailed by the Boer War and the failure of the mineowners to bear their promised share of the expenditure incurred, he will consider the advisability of introducing into the Budget a recommendation to impose an import duty on diamonds and gold received from South Africa.

(Answered by Mr. Austen Chamberlain.) I cannot anticipate in any way the Budget Statement.

Salt Tax in India.

MR. WEIR (Ross and Cromarty): To ask the Secretary of State for India if he will consider the expediency of recommending the Governor-General of India in Council to endeavour to arrange for the abolition or further reduction of the salt tax.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Brodrick.) I am confident that the question of the salt duty will be considered, together with other questions of taxation, by the Government of India in connection with the financial arrangements for the year, and as I have already been in communication with them on these subjects I do not think it necessary to make any recommendation to them.

Indian Irrigation.

MR. WEIR: To ask the Secretary of State for India if he will state the precise character of the irrigation scheme which is said to have been recently sanctioned, and when the work is expected to be commenced.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Brodrick.) The scheme presumably referred to by the hon. Member is the combined Upper Jhelum, Upper Chenab, and Lower Bari Doab Canal projects in the Punjab. The Upper Jhelum Canal, drawing its supply from the Jhelum, will irrigate the Upper Jech Doab, and will pass its surplus water into the Chenab River above the head of the existing Lower Chenab Canal. This will render an equal amount of water available for withdrawal from that river by the new Upper Chenab Canal, which will take off opposite Sialkote and irrigate the Upper Rechna Doab, then passing under the Ravi by a syphon fifteen miles south of Lahore, it will supply the water for the Lower Bari Doab Canal. The combined canals will have 225 miles of main canals, 293 miles of branch canals, and 2,714 miles of distributaries. They will command an area of 3,997,434 acres, of which 1,875,855 may be annually irrigated. The total estimated cost is Rs.7,82,38,925, on which the direct and indirect receipts are expected to give eventually a return of over 9 per cent. Sanction has been given to the immediate commencement of the work.

Irish Education.

MR. DILLON (Mayo, E.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he proposes to introduce any legislation dealing with Irish education during the present session.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) No, Sir.

Publication of Report of Irish Poor Law Reform Commission.

MR. SLOAN (Belfast, S.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he can state when the Report of the Irish Poor Law Reform Commission will be laid upon the Table.

CAPTAIN DONELAN (Cork, E.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Report of the Poor Law Reform Commission will be issued in time for action to be taken by Parliament, so that effect may be given to it at the forthcoming triennial elections for Poor Law guardians.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) Inquiries have been held by the Commission in every county in Ireland except Cork. The Commissioners hope to complete their inquiries in that county early in April. It is not at present possible to state, even approximately, when their Report will be issued.

Assimilation of Taxation Arrangements in Great Britain and Ireland.

MR. FIELD: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether it is intended to assimilate the taxation arrangements and procedure in Ireland with that existing in Great Britain by appointing local authority assessment valuation committees.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) It is not proposed to introduce legislation of the character suggested.

Distribution of Grazing Land on the Isadore Bourke Estate.

MR. JOHN O'DONNELL (Mayo, S.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that in the distribution of some grazing farms on the Isadore Bourke Estate, near Claremorris, county Mayo, the Congested Districts Board gave two large holdings to a grazier named Connaughton, who has already over 300 acres of land on that and neighbouring estates; and, if so, whether steps will be taken to get back these holdings with a view to relieving congestion in the district.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) The land (142 acres) to which reference is made had been in uninterrupted possession of Thomas Connaughton for many years. When the Board acquired the estate in 1902 the lands were partitioned into five holdings on which suitable dwellings were erected. One of these holdings (49 acres) was given to Connaughton by the Board. It is not proposed to disturb him in the occupation of the holding.

Grazing Lands on the Nolan-Farrell Estate.

MR. JOHN O'DONNELL: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the tenants on the Nolan-Farrell Estate, situate at Logboy, near Ballyhaunis, county Mayo, have agreed to purchase their holdings from the Congested Districts Board at twenty and twenty-three years purchase; and, if so, whether, seeing that there are a number of grazing farms on this estate, some of which are held by parties who already hold substantial residential farms, the Congested Districts Board will refuse to sanction the giving of any of these ranches to any person other than the occupier of an uneconomic holding, or who has no land at present.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) The Congested Districts Board has arranged for the purchase of the estate on the basis of twenty years for first-term and twenty-three years for second-term rental of permanent agricultural tenancies. The Board has also arranged for the purchase of the demesne and other lands let under temporary lettings and to obtain clear possession of these lands, which will be utilised for migration and the enlargement of small holdings on the estate.

MR. JOHN O'DONNELL: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that two graziers on the Nolan-Farrell Estate, situate at Logboy, near Ballyhaunis, county

Mayo, who hold portions of a grazing ranche on what is known as the Rockfield part of the estate, have applied for a grant to the Congested Districts Board to enable them to become owners of these grazing lands; and, if so, whether, in view of the number of uneconomic holdings on this estate, he will give instructions to the Board not to give any grant to these persons, but to take steps towards the dividing of all grazing farms on the estate, with a view to enlarging uneconomic and creating new holdings.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) The grazing lands at Rockfield are held under yearly tenancies. When the Board acquire the ownership of the estate it will consider the question of obtaining possession of these lands.

Appointment of a Maternity Nurse for Ballyhaunis Dispensary District.

MR. JOHN O'DONNELL: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that a copy of the evidence taken at the recent sworn inquiry at Claremorris regarding the appointment of a maternity nurse for Ballyhaunis Dispensary District has been applied for by a member of that board of guardians, and refused; and, if so, whether he will have one supplied to this gentleman at the earliest opportunity.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) No such application has been received. A copy of the minutes of evidence has been before the board of guardians since December last, and it is open to any guardian to read the evidence contained in this document, which is the property of the guardians.

MR. JOHN O'DONNELL: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the Local Government Board has issued a sealed order compelling the Claremorris Board of Guardians to elect a trained maternity nurse for the Ballyhaunis Dispensary District, that the medical officer and other representative men from the district swore there was no necessity for the appointment of such a nurse, that there are two medical doctors and two trained maternity nurses already practising in that district, and that the evidence of the relieving officer of the district showed there was an average of only three or four applications from the poor each year for assistance; that some of the parties whose names were put to a memorial praying for a nurse have repudiated all knowledge of the matter; and, if so, whether he will give instructions to have the sealed order withdrawn.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) The evidence of the medical officer at the local inquiry was not to the effect alleged. His evidence clearly showed that no provision existed for the skilled nursing of midwifery cases amongst the poor, and that the appointment of a midwife for the purpose was essential. He stated that the births during the past three years averaged 282; that two deaths had occurred in the same period, one of which, in his opinion, was preventable if the services of a trained midwife had been available; and that there had been a number of still-births in the district attributable largely to the absence of a skilled attendant. The relieving officer stated he had been obliged to requisition the assistance of a midwife on four occasions during the year. It is understood that there is a midwife resident at Ballyhaunis, but she is not an officer of the union and her services are not, therefore, available for the poor free of charge. It is not proposed to withdraw the sealed order.

Army Recruiting.

MR. MARKS (Kent, Thanet): To ask the Secretary of State for War if he will state in detail the progress made in recruiting for the General Service Army on the new lengthened terms of enlistment, viz., nine years with the colours and three years with the Reserve, giving the number of recruits obtained, specifying those in the Metropolitan area and those in the provinces, together with the figures for November, and December, 1904, and January, 1905, and those for November and December, 1903, and January, 1904, when the short term of three years with the colours was the rule; and whether he can say how far the long-term men now being obtained have made up for the deficit of last year in the drafts for India and the Colonies caused by the failure of the three-year men to re-engage.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Arnold-Forster.) In reply to the first part of the Question, the numbers of infantry recruited for the periods mentioned are as follows:—

For three years Colour Service and nine years in the Reserve.

	Number raised.	Number raised in London.	Number raised in Provinces.
November, 1903 - - - -	2,638	287	2,351
December, 1903 - - - -	2,207	200	2,007
January, 1904 - - - -	3,698	432	3,266
	8,543	919	7,624

For nine years Colour Service and three years in the Reserve.

	Number raised.	Number raised in London.	Number raised in Provinces,
November, 1904 - - - -	2,337	167	2,170
December, 1904 - - - -	2,182	171	2,011
January, 1905	2,852	206	2,646
	7,371	544	6,827

In reply to the second part of the Question there was no deficit in the drafts last year for India or the Colonies. Men who had failed to extend were sent out as drafts to obviate any possible deficiency.

Officers Transferred to the Militia—Mess Subscriptions.

DR. THOMPSON (Monaghan, N.): To ask the Secretary of State for War if he is aware of the regulation which compels an officer of His Majesty's Army who is obliged on resigning his commission to serve for a certain number of years in the Militia, to subscribe in full to the mess subscription of the particular regiment to which he is appointed; and if, considering that the officer so transferred has already paid to the mess of the Line regiment and may have only a few years to serve in the Militia to complete his term of service, he will direct that such officer shall only pay a mess subscription in proportion to the further number of years he has to serve in the Militia.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Arnold-Forster.) The question of granting this concession has been already considered, and it was decided that it was not possible to make it. The officers referred to are in effect making use of the Militia in order to enable them to retire voluntarily from the Regular Forces, and it would not be fair upon the Militia unit concerned that these officers should be relieved of the payment of their full subscriptions.

Sentences on Chinese Labourers.

MR. HERBERT SAMUEL (Yorkshire, Cleveland): To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies if he will furnish a statement of all sentences which have been inflicted by Courts in the Transvaal upon Chinese labourers, showing what was the offence in each case, and, where the option of a fine was given, whether the fine was paid or other punishment suffered.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) I will furnish such a statement; but I do not expect to receive the information asked for in the last part of the Question under some weeks.

Duty on Price Lists in Australia.

MR. RUNCIMAN (Dewsbury): To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether his attention has been drawn to the fact that price lists over a certain size are subjected to an import duty in Australia when sent from the United Kingdom; whether he has drawn attention to the amount of irritation which this has caused amongst English and Australian traders; and whether he is prepared to suggest to the Commonwealth Government the advisability of removing these restrictions.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) I have received several communications drawing attention to the duty imposed in Australia on the importation of trade catalogues and price lists. These communications have been forwarded to the Government of the Commonwealth, and I have been informed by that Government that the primary object of the duty in question is not for the purpose of revenue, but for the encouragement of local printing, and that the Government has no present intention of altering the law in this connection.

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

Naval Training Ships.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Admiralty what is the number of ships of the Royal Navy set apart for the training of boys and youths; and how many boys and youths are at present receiving instruction and under training in these ships.

THE SECRETARY TO THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. PRETYMAN, Suffolk, Woodbridge): Twelve ships, including three sea-going cruisers, are set apart for the training of boys and youths, of whom 4,193 are at present receiving instruction and under training in these ships. In addition, 100 youths have been temporarily embarked in two other cruisers.

Rosyth—Expenditure on Naval Station.

MR. BRIGHT (Shropshire, Oswestry): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Admiralty what has been the expenditure to date on the naval station at Rosyth, and what further expenditure is at present contemplated upon that station.

THE CIVIL LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. ARTHUR LEE, Hampshire, Fareham): With regard to the first part of the Question, the expenditure to date amounts to £153,830. As regards the latter part of the Question, the matter will be dealt with when the Naval Works Loan Bill is introduced.

MR. EDMUND ROBERTSON (Dundee): Has any estimate been arrived at of the total probable expenditure?

MR. ARTHUR LEE: No, Sir.

MR. EUGENE WASON (Clackmannan and Kinross): Does the £153,000 include the initial cost of the land?

MR. ARTHUR LEE: Yes, Sir.

Case of Colonel Morgan.

MR. CHARLES HOBHOUSE (Bristol, E.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War whether any, and, if so, what report was made by the General Officer Commanding in South Africa on the case of Colonel Morgan of the Army Service Corps; whether Colonel Morgan has brought any action against persons in connection with alleged improper sale of warlike stores in South Africa; if so, what has been the result of such action; what action has the Secretary of State taken in regard to Colonel Morgan's alleged relation to this matter.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. ARNOLD-FORSTER, Belfast, W.): I have nothing to add to the reply which I gave the hon. Member on July 5th† last, with the exception that the case has not yet come into Court.

MR. CHARLES HOBHOUSE: Is there any anticipation that the case will be brought into Court?

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: Yes, Sir, I believe it will very shortly.

---

† See (4) Debates, cxxxvii., 634.

Mr. SWIFT MACNEILL: Is it not the fact that the right hon. Gentleman, on behalf of the War Office, refused to put Colonel Morgan under an obligation to bring the action, and is it not likewise a fact that the Chief Justice of the Transvaal accused him of malversation of public funds?

*Mr. SPEAKER: Order, order!

Mr. SWIFT MACNEILL: Yes, Sir, I think I am in order. May I read an Answer given by the right hon. Gentleman on this question on August 2nd——

*Mr. SPEAKER: No, that would be very irregular. Notice must be given of any further Question.

Waterford Artillery Horses—Outbreak of South African Disease.

Mr. POWER (Waterford, E.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War whether his attention has been drawn to the fact that South African disease has broken out among the horses of the artillery stationed at Waterford, and to the fact that veterinary authorities consider this disease, though slow of development, highly infectious and incurable; if so, will he say when was the first case reported and when was the animal suffering from it destroyed: whether the Army veterinary surgeon recently stationed at Waterford reported that if the disease was to be stamped out all the horses then in barracks should be destroyed, and the stables thoroughly disinfected; and whether it is the intention of the War Office to have that recommendation carried out, or what steps do they intend taking to prevent the spread of this disease.

Mr. ARNOLD-FORSTER: Epizootic lymphangitis appeared at Waterford among horses of the Royal Artillery in November and December, 1903, in two instances, which were both cured, the last case was admitted in October, 1904, and at once destroyed, since when there have been no more cases. The veterinary authorities do not consider this disease to be absolutely incurable, although many cases have to be destroyed as a precautionary measure. There is no doubt as to its infectious character. The disease is now practically stamped out of the Army, only isolated cases being occasionally reported. The precautionary measures taken have therefore proved to be sufficient. The veterinary officer at Waterford had received instructions as to all precautionary measures to be taken to stamp out the disease, and we have no knowledge that he suggested that all horses in barracks should be destroyed.

Mr. POWER: Seeing that a case has appeared in county Waterford, will the right hon. Gentleman institute inquiries by competent people?

Mr. ARNOLD-FORSTER: Yes, I can give a most positive assurance that any case will be carefully inquired into.

South African Soldier Convicts.

Mr. PATRICK O'BRIEN (Kilkenny): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War what were the offences for which the seven prisoners were convicted by Court-Martial in connection with the South African War, who were confined in Irish prisons and recently discharged; what were the grounds upon which they were discharged; and how much of their respective sentences had each served.

Mr. ARNOLD-FORSTER: The detailed statistics required are too long to read out to the House, but I will hand them to the hon. Member for his information.

Mr. PATRICK O'BRIEN: Cannot the right hon. Gentleman state the charges and how much of the sentences was served.

Mr. ARNOLD-FORSTER: There are two pages of details. I do not think the House would deem it convenient to have them read.

Mr. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I claim that the Answer ought to be read.

*Mr. SPEAKER: The right hon. Gentleman can give any Answer he pleases.

Mr. PATRICK O'BRIEN: He has it in his hands. I think I have a right to have it read.

*Mr. SPEAKER: It is not a question of right. It is for the right hon. Gentleman to exercise his judgment on the matter.

Appended is the Answer referred to :—

Name.	Charges upon which Convicted.	Sentence and Date.
William Sherry -	(1) When on active service—drunkenness. (2) Shooting with intent to do grievous bodily harm.	5 years penal servitude on 12th February, 1901.	Released on 12th May, 1902, on completion of fifteen months of sentence, by order of the Commander-in-Chief.
James Halvey -	(1) Striking superior officer on active service. (2) Violence to superior officer on active service.	7 years penal servitude on 27th May, 1901.	Commuted by Commander-in-Chief to two years hard labour in June, 1902; released on 13th October, 1902, on his embarkation for India after completing sixteen and a half months.
Thomas Ryan -	(1) Releasing a prisoner from lawful custody. (2) Insubordinate language to superior officer on active service. (3) Inciting mutiny	5 years penal servitude on 28th May, 1901.	Commuted by Commander-in-Chief to eighteen months hard labour in June, 1902; sentence expired 27th November, 1902.
Thomas Coughlan	(1) Murder - -	Death. 28th June, 1901.	Commuted to penal servitude for life; released on 21st December, 1903, by Commander-in-Chief after completing two and a half years in prison, it being considered by the Judge Advocate-General that the case was one in which a verdict of manslaughter might properly have been found, there being an absence of motive.
John McDonagh -	(1) Housebreaking (2 charges).	3 years penal servitude on 18th April, 1902.	Released on 17th October, 1903, on completion of eighteen months of sentence, by order of Commander-in-Chief.
Martin Kavanagh	(1) Receiving stolen goods (2 charges).	3 years penal servitude on 19th April, 1902.	Released on 17th April, 1903, on completion of one year of sentence, by order of the Commander-in-Chief.
Charles Kavanagh	(1) Insubordinate language and striking his superior officer.	5 years penal servitude on 22nd November, 1902.	Commuted to one and a half years hard labour on 11th February, 1903, by order of the Commander-in-Chief. Sentence expired 21st October, 1904.

Artillery Armament Estimate.

MR. BUCHANAN (Perthshire, E.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War, when will the Supplementary Estimate for the new armament of the artillery be brought forward.

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: No Supplementary Estimate in respect of the guns will be presented.

MR. BUCHANAN: How, then, does the right hon. Gentleman propose to meet the charge?

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: In the ordinary way – in the Estimates.

MR. BUCHANAN: But the expenditure in the current year?

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: The expenditure has been provided for.

Military Depôt for Ross-shire Regiments.

MR. WEIR (Ross and Cromarty): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War whether he is yet in a position to state whether, under the new scheme of Army Reorganisation, the depôt of all Ross-shire regiments will be established at Dingwall, the county town.

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: If the hon. Member will kindly refer to the Special Army Order of January 6th last, he will find the details of the organisation of the Scottish Command; from which he will see that the depôt of all Ross-shire regiments will not be established at Dingwall.

Strength of the Auxiliary Forces.

CAPTAIN ELLICE (St. Andrews Burghs): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War, what is the present nominal strength of the Militia; what is the actual strength; what is the present nominal strength of the Volunteer force; and what is the actual strength.

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: The figures available are as follows:—Militia (United Kingdom only), all ranks, nominal strength (establishment), 131,582; actual strength on February 1st, 1905, 96,449. Volunteers (United Kingdom only), all ranks, nominal strength (establishment), 344,279; actual strength on January 1st, 1905, 245,359.

Chinese Labour—Restriction of Importation into the Transvaal.

DR. MACNAMARA (Camberwell, N.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether, having regard to the fact that over 27,000 Chinese coolies are now on the Rand, that 7,500 more have been already recruited, and that 50,000 in all are expected to be on the Rand by June, and to the fact that Sir George Farrar, in commending the introduction of the Chinese coolies to the people of the Transvaal, mentioned from 20,000 to 30,000 coolies as the limit of requirement, and to the fact that Lord Lansdowne, in another place, gave the assurance, on February 12th, 1904, that the proposal of the Government was to try the experiment of introducing Chinese coolies to the Transvaal on a limited scale, he will now put a limit to the further importation of Chinese coolies into the Transvaal.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (MR. LYTTELTON, Warwick and Leamington): The hon. Member does not appear to have rightly quoted Sir George Farrar's statement to the Legislative Council. I am not prepared to set a limit as suggested, but I understand that the present requirements of the mines are for no more than 55,000 Chinese, and that after that number has been introduced the rates of increase, if increase there be, will be very moderate. The cost of recruiting and maintenance of the Chinese is very heavy in comparison with the Kaffir, and it is obvious that ordinary prudence will dictate that the introduction of Chinese should be limited to supplementing the deficiency between the number of Kaffirs who can be obtained and the total number of unskilled labourers which the mines may require. The experiment and all its consequences have received, and are receiving, the closest attention of the Transvaal Government and His Majesty's Government, and we have no doubt that the representative Government about to be introduced with even better opportunities for vigilance will scrupulously maintain that attitude.

MAJOR SEELY (Isle of Wight): Is the House to understand that the Government propose to put no limit of any kind to the importation of Chinese?

MR. LYTTELTON: I have already answered that Question. I cannot say more.

Geldenhuis Deep Mine—Discharge of White Labour.

MR. SHACKLETON (Lancashire, Clitheroe): On behalf of the hon., Member for Derby, I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether the Geldenhuis Deep Mine is now employing 1,100 Chinese coolies; and whether the seventy-five unskilled white men working there in August last have been discharged?

MR. LYTTELTON replied that he was not in a position to answer that Question.

MR. SHACKLETON: When will an Answer be given?

MR. LYTTELTON: When the information arrives.

Rose Deep Mine—Discharge of White Labour.

MR. SHACKLETON: On behalf of the hon. Member for Derby, I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether the Rose Deep Mine in the Transvaal is now employing 1,340 Chinese coolies; and whether the unskilled white labourers working there in August last have been discharged.

MR. LYTTELTON: I have not the information which would enable me to answer this Question, but I will inquire as to the facts.

MR. BAYLEY (Derbyshire, Chesterfield): Will the right hon. Gentleman cable for it?

MR. LYTTELTON; No, Sir.

Chinese Riots on the Simner and Jack Mine.

MR. SHACKLETON: On behalf of the hon. Member for Derby, I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he has any particulars of the riots which took place amongst the Chinese indentured coolies on the Sumner and Jock Mine on Saturday, January 21st last, when thirty-one coolies were arrested, and another coolie, in order to avoid arrest, jumped down No. 3 Shaft and was killed: and will he state what were the sentences inflicted on the prisoners.

MR. LYTTELTON: I presume the hon. Member refers to the Simmer and Jack Mine. The local newspaper of January 23rd contains nothing about any disturbance, and I have received no reports of this occurrence, but I will make inquiry.

Transvaal and Orange River Colonies Constitution.

DR. MACNAMARA: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether the House will be afforded an opportunity of discussing the proposals for conferring local self-government upon the Transvaal and Orange River Colonies before those proposals become operative.

The hon. Member also had the following Question on the Paper:—To ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he will afford the House an opportunity of discussing the Report and recommendations of the Physical Deterioration (1904) Committee.

THE PRIME MINISTER AND FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): With the permission of the hon. Member I will answer both his Questions together. I could not give a pledge as to finding facilities for discussing either of the topics to which he refers.

DR. MACNAMARA: The right hon. Gentleman has not answered the first Question—namely, whether an opportunity will be afforded to the House of discussing the proposals for conferring self-government upon these colonies before such proposals come into operation.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL reminded the right hon. Gentleman that a similar form of government given to Cape Colony was given by statute by Parliament, and was at least considered by the House of Commons first of all. This was a most unheard-of thing.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: Well, it does not seem to me that the exact mode in which the new Constitution is established is at all relevant to the Question asked me. With regard to the Question asked me, I think I answered it. We certainly shall not postpone our policy with regard to the Transvaal in reference to any debates which may take place in this House. All I say in regard to the Question is that I am afraid I cannot undertake to give the House an opportunity of discussing the matter.

Mr. SYDNEY BUXTON (Tower Hamlets, Poplar): Does the right hon. Gentleman seriously mean to say that this House is not to have an opportunity of discussing this most important question in connection with the government of the Transvaal; that he can make no promise that some time during the session the House will have an opportunity of discussing it?

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: No. The hon. Gentleman has made a strange mistake. In the first place, there has never been a precedent, so far as I know, in the many cases in which a Constitution has been granted to a colony, of a special day being allocated for discussing the provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. SWIFT MACNEILL: Annexation.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: Well, what is the difference?

Mr. SWIFT MACNEILL: A Constitution is given by statute.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: I think if you go through the history of the Colonies you will find that a larger proportion than are present to the mind of the hon. Gentleman have been obtained by annexation. There is no precedent at all. In the second place, it is obvious that the House will have an opportunity of challenging the course the Government have taken on the salary of the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary for the Colonies.

Mr. BRYCE (Aberdeen, S.): Will the right hon. Gentleman undertake that the House shall have an opportunity of discussing this before and not afterwards? Will he not undertake that the scheme of government which it is proposed to introduce into the Transvaal shall be laid upon the Table of the House before it is enacted, and that a sufficient interval shall be left to the House to discuss it?

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: I certainly am not in a position to give any such pledge. I am ready, of course, in deference to the right hon. Gentleman's wish, to consider the matter, but I cannot give a pledge.

Mr. SWIFT MACNEILL: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that every Constitution in which representative or responsible—certainly representative—Government has first been conferred on a colony has been given by statute of this House, which gives an ample opportunity of discussion?

*Mr. SPEAKER: Order, order! That is a larger Question than that on the Paper.

Cabul Mission.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India, can he state what was the purpose and object of the Mission to the Amir of Afghanistan, Habibullah Khan, which was despatched from Peshawar to Cabul on November 27th last; and, generally, what instructions and what powers were given to its chief; what steps were taken to secure the safety of the Mission during its journey to Cabul, its stay there, and its return to India; what news has since been received of the Mission; has it yet left Cabul on its return; and, if so, when; when is it expected to reach Peshawar; and when will Papers be laid giving an account of its proceedings.

The SECRETARY of STATE for INDIA (Mr. Brodrick, Surrey, Guildford): The Mission is still at Cabul. The arrangements for its safety while in Afghan territory rest with the Amir, and while on the British side of the border with the Government of India. As I stated on the 16th† in reply to a Question from the hon. Member for West Denbigh, it would not be in the public interest to make any statement at present as to the object of the negotiations, or to publish Papers on the subject.

---

† See page 307.

Mineral Deposits in India.

Sir MANCHERJEE BHOWNAGGREE (Bethnal Green, N.E.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India if he has any official information on the subject of recent discoveries of iron ore and aluminium in the Central Provinces in India, and if claims are being staked out in the new fields, where it is alleged these materials are found in large quantities.

Mr. BRODRICK: The report on the mineral production of India which the Government of India have recently published contains the latest information as to the deposits of aluminium, manganese, and iron ores in the Central Provinces. I shall be glad to send my hon. friend a copy. During the year ending March 31st last twenty-one prospecting licences and mining leases were granted in the Provinces for various minerals.

Catholic Army Chaplains in India.

Mr. SWIFT MACNEILL: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War whether he is aware that a petition has been presented to Lord Kitchener, Commander-in-Chief of the British Forces in India, on behalf of the Catholic chaplains in that Army, stating among other matters that some of them had served in India for periods of from twenty to forty years, and had not during the whole period of their divinity been granted leave of absence, while when through illness or other unavoidable cause they were compelled for a few days to relinquish their duties their stipends suffered a proportionate deduction, and that when Catholic chaplains become incapacitated through illness or old age they are dismissed without any pension, whereas Church of England and Presbyterian chaplains are entitled to an annual leave of two months without deduction of salary, and can claim pensions for life after fourteen years service; whether the War Office authorities have any and, if so, what explanation of this differentiation of treatment in the cases of Catholic chaplains and in the cases of Church of England and Presbyterian chaplains; on what ground have Catholic chaplains been placed in an inferior position to Protestant and Presbyterian chaplains; and what steps does the Government propose to take with reference to the granting of the prayer of the Catholic chaplains for equality of treatment and equal rights and privileges with Church of England and Presbyterian chaplains.

Mr. BRODRICK: I am not aware that a petition to the effect stated by the hon. Member has been presented to Lord Kitchener; an inquiry on this point will be addressed to the Government of India. The difference of treatment in the case of Roman Catholic chaplains and in the cases of Church of England and Presbyterian chaplains is due to the fact that the latter are appointed by Government, and form a branch of the public service, while the Roman Catholic chaplains are appointed and controlled by the authorities of the Roman Catholic Church in India, and are liable to be removed or exchanged by their Bishops without any formal reference to the Indian authorities.

Infant Mortality in Egypt.

Mr. WEIR: I beg to ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he is aware that in Egypt one-third of the children of the native population die within twelve months of birth, and that another third die before they reach five years of age; and will he consider the expediency of suggesting to the Government of Egypt that some inquiry should be made with a view to arrest this heavy infant mortality.

The UNDER-SECRETARY of STATE for FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Earl Percy, Kensington, S.): No, Sir, we have no such information.

North Sea Fisheries Arbitration.

Mr. JOHN ELLIS (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe): I beg to ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether the Government have received any information as to the finding of the International Commission which was appointed to investigate the responsibility for the deaths of the fishermen in the North Sea last autumn; and, in that case, will he inform the House of its nature and terms.

EARL PERCY: No, Sir; no information on the subject has been communicated to the Government.

Post Office Savings Bank Deficiency.

DR. MACNAMARA: I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether it is the intention of the Government to omit the deficiency in the Post Office Savings Bank from the usual statement of contingent or nominal liabilities given in the Finance Accounts.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN, Worcestershire, E.): Yes, Sir, this course follows from the discontinuance of the annual valuation of assets, in pursuance of the recommendation of the Select Committee of 1902.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: Does the right hon. Gentleman remember that the omission of this sum this year—an amount of between £13,000,000 and £14,000,000, will entirely falsify the accounts?

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: That is a very argumentative question and is a matter for debate rather than for Question and Answer.

Income Tax Collection.

*MR. McCRAE (Edinburgh, E.): I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the recent instructions permitting further delay in the payment of income-tax apply equally to England and Scotland; and if he will grant a Return showing the amounts and percentages of income-tax recovered as at January 31st and February 28th for the years 1903–4 and 1904–5, in continuation of Return 129 (Revenue, Collection of Taxes) of April 19th, 1901.

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: The recent instructions issued by me, under which the Board of Inland Revenue may, on receiving a definite promise to pay at a reasonably early date, grant delay where they are satisfied that the concession is required to prevent serious hardship, and is not likely to be abused, apply equally to England and Scotland. With regard to the second part of the hon. Member's Question, I am informed that the Return for which he asks can be given, but that it would not be possible to have it ready until well on in March. I would suggest that the hon. Member should include the year 1902–3 as well as the year 1903–4, as the latter year was exceptional in England and Wales owing to its being one of re-valuation for Schedules A and B.

MR. FLYNN (Cork, N.): Will the instructions referred to in this Question also extend to Ireland?

MR. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN: The instructions in the words I have read to the House apply to all parts of the United Kingdom.

Vaccination Exemption Certificates.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is aware that Mr. James Richards, of Tunbridge Wells, appeared on six different occasions before the local bench of magistrates before he could procure a certificate of exemption from vaccination for his infant child, and, seeing that on each occasion he based his objection on the same ground, will the Secretary of State consider the advisability of directing the attention of the bench of magistrates to the remarks made by the Lord Chief Justice on July 27th last, when addressing the Grand Jury at Birmingham relative to the principle on which the Act ought to be administered.

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Mr. AKERS-DOUGLAS, Kent, St. Augustine's): I have no information respecting the case referred to by the hon. Member. The attention of magistrates has already been drawn, by a circular issued in September last to all justices' clerks, to the remarks made by the Lord Chief Justice at the Birmingham Summer Assizes on the subject of the principles which ought to guide magistrates in dealing with applications for certificates of exemption from vaccination.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: Has the right hon. Gentleman observed that the circular has had no effect whatever on the magistrates to whom it was addressed?

*MR. AKERS-DOUGLAS: I do not quite agree with that view. It may not have done so in this case, but in many cases it has been extremely useful.

Poor Law Finance.

MR. FLYNN: I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board if he will state the date of the Order in which they have prescribed the system of forms and accounts for the Poor Law Unions in England and Wales.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (Mr. WALTER LONG, Bristol, S.): The date of the General Order on the subject referred to, which is in force in most of the Poor Law Unions in England and Wales, is January 14th, 1867.

Heavy Motor-Car Regulations.

COLONEL LOCKWOOD (Essex, Epping): I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board what steps he took before issuing the Heavy Motor-Car Regulations to ascertain whether the safety of the travelling public was adequately protected thereunder.

MR. WALTER LONG: I appointed a Departmental Committee, of which my right hon. friend the Member for East Somersetshire was good enough to act as Chairman, to inquire and report with regard to any regulations which should be made on this subject. The Committee took evidence from persons representing a variety of interests, and the regulations which I have now issued are founded on the Report and recommendations of the Committee.

COLONEL LOCKWOOD: May I ask if the Board of Trade concur in the view that the safety of the travelling public is adequately protected?

MR. WALTER LONG: I am not quite sure what my hon. friend means by the travelling public. Is it people travelling by motor-cars or those on railways?

COLONEL LOCKWOOD: Both.

MR. WALTER LONG: As far as travellers by motor-cars are concerned the Board of Trade have nothing on earth to do with them, and as to railway travellers their only concern is as to possible danger in crossing bridges over railways. I have communicated with the Board of Trade on that subject.

School Attendance Officers' Superannuation.

MR. DUNCAN (Yorkshire, W.R., Otley): I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board when he proposes to issue the regulations under which school attendance officers, who have contributed to a Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Fund, can continue their contributions and receive benefits as officers of the local education authority.

MR. WALTER LONG: The Order modifying the provisions of the Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act, 1896, is in preparation, and will, I hope, be issued at an early date.

Local Authorities and the Maintenance of Public Clocks.

SIR MANCHERJEE BHOWNAGGREE: I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board if his attention has been called to the fact that a number of clocks in towers of churches and other buildings abutting on public thoroughfares are not kept going for want of the necessary funds; and that, as the borough councils and other local authorities do not possess the power of defraying the cost of winding them and keeping them in repair, will he consider the advisability of conferring upon them such power in cases in which they think fit to set the clocks going for the convenience of the public.

MR. WALTER LONG: Outside London, the council of any borough or other urban district can, under the powers conferred by Section 165 of the Public Health Act, 1875, provide a public clock, and they can maintain a clock so provided. Further, they can, if they adopt Part III. of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, pay the reasonable cost of repairing, maintaining, winding up, and lighting any public clock in their district, although it is not vested in them. A rural district council can, on application, be invested with these powers by an Order of the Local Government Board. As regards London, Section 65 of the London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1903, confers on every Metropolitan borough council powers similar to those possessed by borough councils outside London under the enactments above-mentioned.

Skigersta Pier, Island of Lewis.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord-Advocate if he will state whether any progress has been made with the construction of a protecting wall for the Skigersta Pier, Island of Lewis.

*THE LORD-ADVOCATE (Mr. SCOTT DICKSON, Glasgow, Bridgton): I refer the hon. Member to the Answer given by Mr. Graham Murray to a similar Question on February 17th, 1904.† Since that date the Congested Districts Board have twice asked the county clerk—on July 14th, 1904, and January 11th, 1905—whether the county council propose to go on with the work, but no reply has been received to either inquiry.

Island of Lewis—Report on Social Condition.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord-Advocate if the Secretary for Scotland will state when he proposes to deal with the recommendations contained in the Report on the Social Condition of the Island of Lewis published more than two years ago.

*MR. SCOTT DICKSON: Steps have already been taken to meet certain of the suggestions advanced in the Report of the Lewis Local Committee. If the Congested Districts Amendment Bill, which will be immediately introduced, is passed into law, the Secretary for Scotland will be enabled to give effect to further recommendations to which he attaches importance.

Skye Roads.

MR. JOHN DEWAR (Inverness): I beg to ask the Lord-Advocate, as representing the Secretary for Scotland, whether he is aware that the Congested Districts Board promised the Skye District Committee that they would give a contribution of 75 per cent. towards the cost of the construction of a road to connect the town of Portree with the populous Staffin District, provided that the road was placed on the list of county highways, and maintained out of the public rates; and that, although the county council at their meeting in October last gave the requisite undertaking, and the district committee have guaranteed the balance of the cost of the road, the Congested Districts Board now fail to carry out their part of the arrangement; and, if so, will he communicate with the Board in order that the promised grant may be made.

*MR. SCOTT DICKSON: The hon. Member has been misinformed when he states that the Congested Districts Board promised that they would contribute to the cost of this road. They stated that an assurance as to the provision from local sources of the usual proportion of cost and as to maintenance by the statutory road authority were essential preliminaries to inquiry and consideration. The Congested Districts Board have now intimated that, in view of the state of their funds and the many claims on their resources, they do not see their way at present to consider, in the interests of those living in the congested districts, whether the large expenditure involved would be justified.

Labour Disputes on Dublin Public Works.

MR. NANNETTI (Dublin, College Green): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that labouring men have been employed at painting work at Newry Bridewell, under the General Prisons Board, and at the Viceregal Lodge, Dublin, under the Board of Works; that remonstrances have been directed to both of these public departments on behalf of the regular painters, employers and employed, of the districts mentioned, claiming that the work done by these labouring men belongs to the painting trade; and, if so, whether, seeing that the Commissioners of Public Works in Ireland define painting work contrary to expert judgment, and in view of the replies received from the departments concerned, he will represent to the General Prisons Board and the Board of Works the desirability of securing competent workmen to perform tradesmen's work in this trade in accordance with the terms of the Fair Wages Resolution.

---

† See (4) Debates, cxxx., 6.

THE CHIEF SECRETARY FOR IRELAND (Mr. WYNDHAM, Dover): Complaints were made to the Prisons Board respecting the manner of the performance of the contract for work at Newry Bridewell. The matter engaged the attention of the Board, and instructions were issued with a view to avoid the recurrence of similar complaints. The remainder of the Question concerns the Board of Works, and I would ask the hon. Member to be good enough to address his inquiries to my hon. friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury.

Land Purchase in County Tipperary—Mr. Delmege's Estate.

MR. LUNDON (Limerick, E.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he is aware that for some time past negotiations for sale and purchase have been in progress between Mr. Stafford Delmege, of Ballymore, county Tipperary, and his tenants in the parishes of Knocklong and Glenbrohane, county Limerick; and, if so, will he say whether the Estates Commissioners have received any communications from either the landlord, the agents, Messrs. Saunders, of Charleville, or from the persons on the townlands of Glenbrohane, Ballingarry, and Garryspillane who are interested in the sale, with the view that the untenanted lands thereon may be purchased by the Estates Commissioners and divided among the labourers, small farmers, and evicted tenants.

MR. WYNDHAM: Representations to the effect stated have been made by tenants and others in the neighbourhood. No originating application in respect to the sale of the estate has yet been lodged with the Commissioners, nor have they received any communication on the subject from the landlord or his agent.

Land Purchase in County Limerick—Synan's Estate.

MR. LUNDON: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, can he say whether the Estates Commissioners have received any communications in regard to the purchase by them of the untenanted lands in Carmane Fedamore, county Limerick, from any person connected with the Messrs. Synan, the owners of the property, from the receiver, or from any one of the mortgagees, so that the Estates Commissioners might purchase those lands and divide them among the inhabitants of this congested district.

MR. WYNDHAM: The Estates Commissioners understand that the solicitors having carriage of this property hope to be able to arrange for its sale.

Exchequer Contribution—Labourers' Cottages.

MR. LUNDON: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he will lay upon the Table a Return showing the amount of the Exchequer Grant apportioned to each of the unions of Ireland; how much of it is now unexpended taken collectively, and how much separately for the various unions; and what do the Government propose to do with those unexpended moneys.

MR. WYNDHAM: The published Report of the Local Government Board for the year ended March 31st, 1904, contains at pages 252–264 full information with respect to the application of the grant and the amount of the unissued balance. I am not yet in a position to recommend an allocation of this balance.

Firearm Regulations in County Longford—Gillespie's Case.

MR. J. P. FARRELL (Longford, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether any representations have been made to the Lord-Lieutenant by the County Court Judge of Longford on the subject of allowing a man named Gillespie to have and carry firearms in the parish of Mullinalaghta, county Longford; whether he is aware that at the October quarter sessions this man was convicted of firing at three young men, and bound over; and, if so, what action the Executive intend taking regarding his revolver.

MR. WYNDHAM: This man's arms licence was revoked in November last. His revolver is in the possession of the police.

Edgeworthstown Loan Fund Society.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether any relief will be afforded by legislation or otherwise to those debenture-holders in the Edgeworthstown Loan Fund Society who lost their property in consequence of the default of a fraudulent secretary, who led them to believe that the society was under the control of the Loan Fund Board of Dublin Castle, which statement induced them to deposit their savings in the society.

MR. WYNDHAM: With respect to the responsibility for losses sustained by the debenture-holders, I refer to my reply to the hon. Member's similar Question of July 26th last.† A Bill has been prepared on the lines of the Bill of last year, but with such Amendments as it is hoped will meet the views of all parties concerned. This Bill will be introduced at an early date.

Youghal Auxiliary Lunatic Asylum.

MR. SLOAN (Belfast, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he is aware that Dr. Kelly, Roman Catholic Bishop of Cloyne, has been permitted by the Lord-Lieutenant, and contrary to the advice and remonstrance of the inspectors of lunatic asylums, to detach 350 lunatics from the County Asylum in Cork and lodge them in an unused industrial school at Youghal, which he had prepared for this purpose, that the Bishop received a capitation grant for each patient, that there is no resident doctor to take charge of these patients, nor any qualified nurses in charge of them, that the house, built and arranged for a doctor, has been handed over to the chaplain, and that the resident medical superintendent of the Cork Asylum has been refused permission to visit the auxiliary asylum; and, if so, will he say what steps, if any, does he intend taking in the matter.

MR. WYNDHAM: In 1901 the Lord-Lieutenant, under Section 9 (4) of the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898, signified his approval of the plans for the conversion of an industrial school building at Youghal into an auxiliary asylum, established for about 400 patients under the 76th Section of that Act. The plans, which were submitted in 1900 by the Cork District Asylum Committee, of which Dr. Kelly, Lord Bishop of Ross, is a member, were recommended for His Excellency's approval by the inspectors of lunatic asylums. A capitation grant of 2s. per week is payable for each patient in the auxiliary asylum under Sections 58 and 76 of the Act. There is no resident doctor, as the committee decided to appoint a visiting medical officer instead, but the consent of the Lord-Lieutenant to the appointment of a visiting medical officer has only been given as a tentative measure, which will be open to reconsideration in the event of the arrangement being found defective. The institution has been placed in charge of a community of nuns, who are assisted by ordinary asylum attendants. It is understood that only Catholic patients are to be sent to the auxiliary. The house, built for a doctor, has been handed over as a residence for the chaplain. The resident medical superintendent of the Cork Asylum has not been refused permission to visit the auxiliary asylum, but the committee of management have passed resolutions taking away from the resident medical superintendent all responsibility for the discipline and domestic management of the auxiliary. The committee have been informed that these resolutions are illegal, and have been called upon to correct this illegality.

MR. SLOAN asked whether the nurses at this auxiliary asylum were fully qualified.

---

† See (4) Debates, cxxxviii., 1214.

Mr. WYNDHAM said he did not think the hon. Member apprehended the facts of the case. These people were harmless lunatics who did not require special nurses. They were gathered out of workhouses and off the hill-side, and were given a comfortable home, such as could not be secured for them in a regular asylum except at a cost to the rates, that was prohibitive.

Captain DONELAN (Cork, E.) asked if it was not the fact that the board of management of the Cork Lunatic Asylum recommended the establishment of the auxiliary asylum at Youghal in order to relieve the overcrowding. Had not the arrangement been productive of great public advantage, and had not the management of the auxiliary branch given satisfaction to everybody?

Mr. WYNDHAM: I have no further information to give to the House. It is a point on which controversy may centre, and I prefer not to answer any Question without having had an opportunity of looking into the matter.

Dernageas Grazing Farm.

Mr. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Estates Commissioners have made any overtures to Mrs. Ledwith, the owner of the Dernageas grazing farm, for the purchase of this farm and its division amongst the tenants entitled to graze thereon; and, if not, will he now undertake to direct their attention to it.

Mr. WYNDHAM: The reply to the first inquiry is in the negative. I see no necessity for taking the course suggested. If the owner of the lands institutes proceedings for sale, the Commissioners will have due inquiries made.

Sir Antony MacDonnell.

Mr. PIRIE (Aberdeen, N.) asked the First Lord of the Treasury a Question of which he had given private notice—namely, whether during the recent events connected with Ireland the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland had tendered his resignation.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: I did not receive the hon. Gentleman's private notice; but I think he will see that, if we are to admit the right of any Member of this House to cross-examine the Government as to any confidential communications passing between colleagues, as in the case of Lord Dudley—if I were to admit that right in the case of one colleague I should have to admit it in the case of all colleagues, and no Government has ever allowed such confidential communications to be made the subject of Question and Answer across the floor of the House.

Mr. PIRIE: Have the recent events any precedent in the history of Ireland?

Mr. DILLON (Mayo, E.): I wish to ask the Chief Secretary a Question of which I have given him private notice—namely, whether any change has been made in the conditions under which Sir Antony MacDonnell holds the office of Under-Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, and, if any change has been made, what is the nature of that change and how has it been carried into effect?

Mr. WYNDHAM: No, Sir, no change has been made. I pointed out to Sir Antony MacDonnell that it would be necessary, in view of the criticism of my Department, to take into fuller account matters which might be made the subject of such criticism. This was not because my confidence in Sir Antony MacDonnell had been in any way diminished, but because it appeared to be a necessity of the constitutional position.

Mr. SLOAN: Are we to understand that the situation is exactly what it was before these debates took place?

Mr. WYNDHAM: No, I do not think that that is the inference to be drawn.

Mr. SLOAN: Then what is the situation?

[No Answer was returned.]

Irish Finance—The Post Office and Inland Revenue.

Mr. PATRICK O'BRIEN (Kilkenny): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury if he will state what is the average amount to be adjusted annually between the Inland Revenue Department in Dublin and the Irish Post Office; why the adjustment is not made at once in Dublin between the Receiver-General of Inland Revenue for Ireland and the Irish Post Office; and what purpose is served by sending the postal and post office orders to London and again returning these papers to Dublin before adjustment is made.

THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY (Mr. VICTOR CAVENDISH, Derbyshire, W.): The sums annually adjusted between the two Departments referred to amount to about £207,000. £87,000 of this represents revenue collected by means of free money orders, and departmental convenience necessitates its adjustment in London; but this arrangement does not involve a two-fold transmission of papers between London and Dublin. The larger portion, viz., £120,000, is adjusted in Dublin.

Dublin Post Office—Learners' Pay.

MR. NANNETTI: I beg to ask the Postmaster-General if he is aware that although there are learners in the Dublin Post Office who cannot obtain more than 6s. per week, employment is found in the sorting office at a higher rate of remuneration for auxiliaries who have no claim whatever on the department; and, if so, will he see that this is remedied, and something done to enable the learners to increase the stipend of 6s. per week. I beg also to ask the Postmaster-General if he is aware that there are numbers of young men and young women acting in the capacity of learner in the Dublin Post Office for periods ranging from over one to more than two years, and that notwithstanding that they are fully qualified for some time cannot obtain more than 6s. and 5s. per week, respectively; and, if so, will he say whether he has received petitions from them asking for more pay; and if he is now in a position to state what steps he proposes to take to grant these learners increased pay.

THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL (Lord STANLEY, Lancashire, Westhoughton): It will perhaps be convenient for me to reply to the two Questions together. I have received petitions from the Dublin learners for higher pay and am dealing with the matter in connection with the general question of the remuneration of learners. I hope to be able shortly to announce my decision on the subject. I should like to have some explanation of the words "employment is found in the sorting office at a higher rate of remuneration for auxiliaries, etc." I confess I do not understand that.

NEW BILLS.

SMALL HOLDINGS (No. 2) BILL.

"To amend The Small Holdings Act, 1892," presented by Mr. Jesse Collings; supported by Colonel Long, Mr. Goulding, Sir Carne Rasch, Mr. Carlile, and Sir Edwin Durning-Lawrence; to be read a second time upon Friday, 10th March, and to be printed. [Bill 56.]

NURSES REGISTRATION BILL.

"To regulate the qualifications of trained Nurses, and to provide for their registration," presented by Mr. Munro Ferguson; supported by Dr. Farquharson, Mr. Haldane, Sir Thomas Wrightson, Sir James Joicey, Mr. Hugh Crawford Smith, Mr. Black, Mr. Eve, and Dr. Thompson; to be read a second time upon Friday, 17th March, and to be printed. [Bill 57.]

PRIVATE BILL PROCEDURE (IRELAND) BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to Private Bill Procedure in Ireland," presented by Mr. O'Doherty; supported by Mr. Hemphill, Mr. Field, Mr. Patrick Kennedy, and Dr. Thompson; to be read a second time upon Friday, 7th April, and to be printed. [Bill 58.]

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [22nd February] to Main Question [14th February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount).

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question to add the words, 'But humbly to represent to Your Majesty that the continuous and continuing changes in the War Office are destructive of the best interests of Your Majesty's Army, have gravely disordered the system upon which the Regular Forces at home and abroad are raised and trained, have discouraged the Militia and Volunteers, and disclose negligence and mismanagement on the part of Your Majesty's Ministers, more particularly as to the armament of the artillery, whereby, in spite of the increased cost of the Army, its efficiency for the defence of the Empire has been diminished.'"—(Captain Norton.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

*COLONEL WELBY (Taunton) said the hon. Member who moved the Amendment to the Address under discussion challenged the position of the Service Members on the Government side of the House, saying that were it not for Party ties they would vote for it. For himself he could only say that in no circumstances would he vote for it, because it would put him into the same illogical position as that in which it placed the hon. Member himself, and because it would defeat its own main object. The hon. Member gave them in the course of his speech a very interesting retrospect of Army changes under the present Government, but during all the time thus covered he believed the hon. Gentleman had always been on the side of change. If he objected to the changes in progress, why did he not set his objection forth in the Amendment; if he objected to "continuous and continuing" changes why had he, during the last ten years, constantly supported those changes, or at any rate the majority of them? The Amendment, as he had said, would defeat its own object. If it were carried it meant a vote of want of confidence in the Government, and then if a new Administration came in what policy was to be pursued? Unless they remained stationary they would either go back or go forward, either of which would be change. The Amendment was not one which Service Members could support. The hon. Member had said that the changes in the last ten years had been made in the interests of Party politics. He was sorry that he should try to make the Army so much a Party question. There was no question on which the Government had won less credit or saved themselves less criticism than that connected with the Army, and it was unreasonable to suggest that the changes were introduced for Party effect. He would very gladly see a continuous policy adopted, not only with regard to the Volunteers but with regard to the whole of our Army, and what he would particularly like to see at the present would be that the leaders of both sides should meet at a round table conference and work out a policy which they believed to be best for the country, working out the principles and leaving the details to be settled elsewhere, but pledging themselves to defend those principles so as to secure a thoroughly efficient service. He was, however, afraid that the day was far distant when they would see the Army treated as he was thankful to say the Navy was treated at the present time in being looked upon as a national question, the object aimed at being the general good of the nation. He had never feared to oppose, and even vote against, the policy put forward by the Government, but he could say with all confidence and pride that he had never criticised nor opposed any change except where he saw a better plan, and as he was not in a position to produce a better plan than the scheme now put forward by the Secretary for War, he was prepared to give it a hearty and thorough support. His only fear was that in view of the conditions of our military service it might be found almost impossible to carry the scheme out practically. He thought, therefore, he might fairly ask whether the right hon. Gentleman could put before the House any information showing that the great changes which he advocated were likely to be practicable and feasible. Was the scheme worked out by him in consultation with his military advisers; were a majority of the members of the Army Council wholeheartedly in favour of it, and could he give more details? Had the striking force been thoroughly and satisfactorily organised; was it ready to be moved anywhere at a moment's notice, or were there young untrained men and horses in it?

Then, again, with regard to the short-service Army, he would ask what the tendency of recruiting had been lately. He had always believed that it was well to see how much cloth was available before a coat was designed, and it must not be forgotten that whatever schemes of organisation were put forward the question always returned to recruiting. Recruiting was the root difficulty of the Army question. The conditions of modern life tended to make recruiting more expensive, and they would never get a satisfactory Army until the people of this country realised that they must pay heavily—either by their pockets or by personal service—for the defence of this country and for the maintenance of the Empire. Speeches had recently been delivered advocating a reduction of as much as £6,000,000 on the Army, but no clue had been given of how it was to be done and the Army kept efficient. The fact was that unknowingly those who delivered the speeches must be in favour of compulsory service. The Government had done their best to deal with the questions of pay, food, liberty, and comfort in barracks, but that was not enough to solve the recruiting difficulty. If the pay of recruits were doubled, even if it were increased to 5s. per day, he doubted whether the Government would be certain of getting men in the numbers and of the quality they required. Yet any such measure would add enormously to our expenditure on the Army. He had always been in favour of economy, but he did not see how it was proposed to maintain the efficiency of the Army and at the same time to avoid the expenditure which it would involve.

Referring to criticisms on the action of the War Office with regard to the Volunteers, he said that hon. Members who were in favour of a great number of Volunteers, Militia, and Yeomanry, regardless of efficiency, were really doing more than anybody else to bring into people's minds the idea that compulsory service was the only solution of our difficulties. He believed that if we had a force of, say, 100,000 auxiliaries trained, organised, and equipped, on an equality with Continental soldiers, ready to repel invasion, no word would be heard of compulsory service. He viewed with the gravest anxiety the future of our military defence. When he saw the enormous number of highly-trained troops which Japan and Russia had put into the field, and realised how quickly the Russians could move down on the North-West Frontier, he thought the country ought to take the lesson which they were receiving to heart. It was of no use talking about economy when their Empire was at stake. Let everybody realise that we must do one of two things—either pay or serve. He hoped some national policy would be worked out for the Army on main principles on which both sides of the House could unite.

*SIR A. HAYTER (Walsall) said the House and the country generally must be very much indebted to the hon. and gallant Member for Newington for having initiated a very interesting debate, and the Secretary for War would surely welcome that opportunity to allay some of the anxiety which undoubtedly prevailed in every section of the community as to the condition of the Army at large. He had the duty of bringing before the House a subject which not only a Royal Commission, but the Secretary of State also, had declared to be vital to the organisation of the Army, and that was the scarcity of junior officers. He would only trouble the House with the condition of two branches of the service which were most popular and therefore most likely to be full; he meant the cavalry and the Guards. At the present moment there were no less than forty-four vacancies in the cavalry. That number made up pretty nearly the strength of two entire regiments in time of peace. That this scarcity was increasing was shown by the fact that in 1903 there were only twenty-three vacancies. A cavalry officer could not be taught in a day. He must be under drill and discipline pretty well eight months before he was fit to take his place in the ranks, and he hoped the right hon. Gentleman would have something reassuring to say as to the steps he was taking towards obtaining a proper supply of officers. As to the shortage in the Guards, in the Grenadier Guards there were fourteen vacancies, in the Coldstream Guards seven, in the Scots Guards fifteen, and in the Irish Guards four, or forty in the brigade. In 1903 the Grenadier Guards had over its full strength, the Coldstreams and the Irish Guards were full, and there were only five vacancies in the Scots Guards. He had also looked through a number of Line regiments and found a shortage in them also. Was there any better look-out in the Auxiliary Forces? In an article in The Times of February 21st it was shown that there was a deficiency of 951 combatant officers in the Militia and of 2,768 in the Volunteers. Thus, taking the Cavalry, Foot-Guards, Militia, and Volunteers together, there were 3,803 vacancies. Of course, he had his ideas as to the causes of this. A great deal was due to changes of plans and the uncertainty as to appointments and promotions, and there was no doubt that the duties in South Africa were very unpopular, while the threats to the Volunteers and Militia had had their effect. Then there was a great change in the daily duties of officers which had made them more harassing. Whatever the cause was it was a matter that should be probed to the bottom.

As to the changes of plan of the right hon. Gentleman, he was perfectly at sea as to which had been carried out. Had the extra battalions created during the war in such regiments as the Northumberland Fusiliers been disestablished? He understood that large depôts were to be created in place of the linked battalions, but he had not seen anything of the change. Then, again, he did not know whether the disestablishment of the Militia was to be carried out. The right hon. Gentleman ought to tell then what plans he intended to carry out. Too much work was now thrown upon the Adjutant-General's Department and there was some ground for the complaint in connection with the Militia that officers in these regiments were never appointed to adjutancies, all those appointments being given to officers of the Regular Army. Surely it was a legitimate ambition of the young officers in a regiment to attain to the adjutancy. Yet that was refused them. It would have been better if the Auxiliary Forces and the recruiting were retained under separate direction. As regarded the rifle controversy, he was deeply interested in it, as two of the experts who had reported belonged to the regiment which he himself had commanded for nine years. The hon. Member for St. Helens, in his interesting speech, missed the principal point of the matter. The hon. Gentleman omitted to add that the experts unanimously reported that the rifle was badly balanced, because there was too much weight at the muzzle end. There was a "nose-cap," as it was called, of heavy metal, and also a wooden covering which threw the balance forward, while much wood had been taken out of the stock. Then the recoil was heavier; and that would make the recruit shy in firing, and make it more difficult to instruct him. The lengthening of the bayonet, as suggested by the hon. Member for St. Helens, would make the balance worse still. Another objection which had been brought to his notice by an officer instructed at Hythe, and who was now on full pay, was that the rifles were to have three different lengths of butt. In the case of a night surprise the rifles might get mixed, and a tall man might find himself with a short rifle or vice versa. There was a charger system of loading without a cut-off, so that, unless the catch were put up, the rifle, when charged, might shoot the man carrying it, because it had to be carried at full cock. The oil can and pull through were in a case attached to the waist belt, and not in the gun stock, and so might be lost. He hoped the right hon. Gentleman would pause before pledging himself entirely to the adoption of this rifle. It had never been tried fully. Why not use it as a carbine, and issue it to a regiment of cavalry, and then have a report on it before going to the expense of £3,000,000. The short rifle should not be tried against the old rifle, but against the old rifles with the new improvements.

*COLONEL WILLIAMS (Dorsetshire, W.) said he wished to refer to the question of the Volunteers, because he believed that their number should not be reduced without due consideration. He bore full testimony to the care and attention which the right hon. Gentleman had given to the question; but he would join issue with him as regarded the reduction of their numbers. It was said that mobilisation facilities could not be provided for more than 200,000 men at one time; but it should be remembered that even during an invasion a certain amount of work would have to be carried out in the country and it would not be necessary to mobilise the same number at the same time. The men might be able to change places, and serve for a week at a time if necessary. That was one of the lessons that was learned from the Boer War. Many of the Boers fought in the trenches, and then went back to work. He did not approve of the reduction of the Volunteers; and he believed that the right hon. Gentleman would easily obtain what he desired if he would make the grants conditional on the number of attendances in camp. He attached very great importance to attendances at camp; and he thought if the right hon. Gentleman would permit two periods of four days each a great many more men would pass through camp. And in the case of town corps where the week's camp was a difficulty some such system might be applied as was now in force in regard to public schools—four days camp on condition there were also at least three field days during the year. If some such alteration were made it was possible that the old system of four day camps at Easter and Whitsun might be revived, which would be a great advantage. He hoped the right hon. Gentleman would pause before he reduced the numbers of the Volunteers. He knew it was stated that the reduction of the numbers was the only way in which the increased grant could be afforded; but he thought the country would not grudge the expense. The scheme for the reduction of the Volunteers should not be hastily entered on. He hoped the right hon. Gentleman would avoid every possible reduction in order that the country might preserve its natural reserve.

* MR. CHARLES HOBHOUSE (Bristol, E.) said that although the Amendment was general in its character, the debate had dealt almost exclusively with details—important in themselves, but still details—and he desired to bring the House back to the spirit of the Amendment, which was a direct and deliberate attack upon the constant changes and chances in the administration of the War Office under the present régime. That régime had been defended in the debate by only three hon. Members, all of whom, extraordinary to relate, voted three years ago for a scheme the direct opposite of the system they were now supporting. It had already been pointed out with conclusive effect that whatever might be said for a policy of delay in re-arming the Army with the new gun, the artillery with which the Army was at present—he would not say armed—provided was in the face of any European force absolutely ineffective and obsolete; while every speech which had been made with regard to the new rifle showed that there was great reason for hesitating before the order therefore was finally given. If the offensive guns were obsolete and the defensive rifles doubtful, the Regular Forces were clearly not in a condition equal to that of any Continental force whatever. Therefore, as a member of the regular Opposition, not only was he justified, but it was his duty to call the attention of the House and the country to the extraordinary variation in the proposals which from time to time had been put forward. In 1902, extreme short service was proposed; the Secretary of State now proposed extreme long service. The scheme of the present Secretary of State for India proposed an enormous increase of the Reserve; the present Secretary of State was cutting the Reserve down to nothing, or at any rate reducing it considerably. The present scheme added enormously to the pay, cost of food, and cost of barracks, while, under the regulations of the right hon. Gentleman's predecessor, the discipline of the Army was considerably relaxed. Officers in the Army viewed this continual chopping and changing with the greatest alarm and distrust. They had drunk the cup of despair to its very dregs, and the deficiency in the numbers of the Army ought to be a warning not to continue in the path now pursued.

The House of Commons had two duties with regard to military matters: one to the nation, concerning the state of Army finance, and the other to the Army itself, in the preservation of a continuity of policy with regard to the practical particulars of the service, discipline, pay, and numbers. That not unreasonable proposition had been honoured far more in the breach than in the observance during the last ten years. It was unnecessary to trace all this confusion back to the fountain head. It began with the refusal of the late Lord Salisbury's Government to make military preparations in time for the outbreak of hostilities in South Africa, but the military organisation was not to be blamed for a purely political fault, committed possibly with the best intentions. Reference had been made to the dangers of a military caste. The dangers of a military caste might be great, but far greater dangers flowed from civilians playing at being military experts. There was a tendency on the part of the present Government, not merely to direct the general policy of the Army, but to intervene—as they had intervened with fatal effect—in matters which really concerned soldiers alone. The result of this interference had been to render Army reform a war cry essential to the safety of the Government. It was essential in 1900 to bring them into power, and it had been played on since to keep them in power. By their various schemes they had eliminated from the War Office soldiers and Civil servants of merit. They were now attempting to carry out their new policy with a new staff, and the result so far had not been altogether satisfactory. The Secretary of State had, however, done good work by the appointment of the Esher Commission, the reorganisation of the work of the War Office itself, and especially by the formal constitution of the Army Council. But what was his position with regard to the Army Council? Was he working in harmony with, or in opposition to, it? If there were opposing sets of views, which were to prevail?

Let the House contrast the two schemes which had been put forward and note the divergency, conflict, and confusion thereby expressed. Three years ago many hon. Gentlemen opposite voted for the Army Corps scheme, and the then Secretary of State declared that it held the field. But what it would not hold was water, and the whole scheme broke down immediately an attempt was made to put it into practice. The very Gentlemen who supported that scheme were now upholding the proposal to organise the Army on a divisional basis. In 1902 the three years enlistment was safe, judicious, and necessary; last year it was a danger to the Empire. The scheme of 1901–2 was built up on a small army, and an enormous Reserve; the present proposals cut the Reserve down by one-third, and yet was held to be the surest and safest scheme that could be put forward. As to the Auxiliary Forces, the earlier scheme maintained the Militia and created a Reserve; the 1904 proposals abolished the Militia, and did away with its reserve. Under the scheme of 1901 the Volunteers were encouraged to recruit as many men as possible, to have maxim guns and mounted infantry companies; the new proposals swept the whole thing away—except that the pressure of public opinion had induced the right hon. Gentleman to say he would further consider his plans. The same had happened with regard to the Imperial Yeomanry; recruiting had been stopped, and the number in the ranks cut down.

The SECRETARY of STATE for WAR (Mr. Arnold-Forster, Belfast, W.) said the number had not been cut down, but increased to a figure it had never before attained.

*Mr. CHARLES HOBHOUSE said that under the scheme of the present Secretary of State for India the establishment of the Imperial Yeomanry was 35,000, whereas the right hon. Gentleman had now fixed it at 28,000, which surely was a decrease, not an increase.

Mr. ARNOLD-FORSTER: What I said was that the number of Imperial Yeomanry had reached a figure last year which they had never reached before.

*MR. CHARLES HOBHOUSE said that the result had been achieved, not under the scheme of the right hon. Gentleman, but under the scheme of his predecessor. In the past there had been no more violent critic of Conservative Secretaries of State for War than the right hon. Gentleman opposite, and his habit of criticism still remained. Therefore, the Secretary of State for War should not grumble when an humble Member like himself criticised his scheme, because in another place the Leader of the Upper Chamber spoke about his scheme as a mere collection of notes for the speech of the Secretary for War, and dismissed the question with that remark. This continual chopping and changing had reduced their military strength to a minimum; it had prevented any real improvement in the Army, had acted as a deterrent to good men coming into the Army, and an inducement to capable men leaving it. He could furnish many instances of distinguished young officers who were going out of the Army because as a career it was not good enough to stay in, the prospects of advancement being so bad. The right hon. Gentleman had divided the infantry into two classes, the home-service Army and the foreign-going Army. One of the Secretary for War's objections when a private Member used to be that the Army was organised only for peace. They had a long-service infantry abroad and a short-service infantry at home, but the moment war broke out they would have to amalgamate those two armies to produce the regiments they would require. They had had examples in the past of the bad effects of such an amalgamation, and this would happen again with the short-service battalions if, unfortunately, the necessity of going to war arose. The new scheme seriously reduced the establishment of the general-service battalions in the Colonies and at home. That establishment had been the result of the experience of a great number of years and numberless campaigns, and although to make them up would make a smaller demand upon the Reserves, they would find that the establishment would have to be increased to meet war requirements as settled by long practice. [MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER dissented.] The right hon. Gentleman shook his head but he did not believe so much in practice as in theory.

With regard to India the Secretary for War had sanctioned the reorganisation scheme of the Indian Army drawn up by Lord Kitchener, and that scheme could not have been undertaken without the consent of the Cabinet. That scheme provided for putting 150,000 men upon the frontier in case of necessity. He thought the military reforms of India were much better understood by the people conversant with military reforms than they used to be. The Indian frontier on the East had been rendered practically impregnable, but the western frontier could undoubtedly be turned by an enterprising foe. Ten years ago that frontier could be watched by a police force, but at the present moment that force had to be replaced by something like the strongest Army they possessed. To reinforce that Army, in case of necessity, by troops from this country must be provided for, and he wished to know how far the right hon. Gentleman's scheme met this necessity. The new scheme maintained in India fifty-two battalions at 1,037 men each, but how were the reserves which would be necessary for this force to be provided? They would have to be drawn either from the colours or from the reserves. The colour establishment could not provide any reasonable number of reserves for the Indian Army, and how about the Reserve itself? The right hon. Gentleman professed to be able to find 20.000 reserves for his long-service Army, but he would remind him that the real strength of the reserves provided by the long-service system was only about 7,000 or 8,000. The 20,000 men referred to were based upon a wastage of 42 per cent., but the real wastage was 65 per cent. upon a nine years service. That fact he got from the Secretary of State for India in December, 1902. The consequence was that 13,000 men had to be deducted, which reduced the 20,000 down to about 7,000. Now would any hon. Gentleman opposite contend that 7,000 Reservists were enough to provide for the needs of India in case an emergency arose. The home service provided a large Reserve, but it provided only half the number of the present reserves. Instead of 80,000 it provided only 54,000.

He would like to draw attention to the opinion expressed by the Inspector-General of the German staff, which was published in The Times of November 28th last year. He said that the two-years system was a serious disadvantage compared with the three-years system, and caused an increased mental strain upon both the officers and the non-commissioned officers and men, and led to other evils previously unknown. What a commentary that was upon the three-years system which the right hon. Gentleman had attempted to introduce, and it showed them the danger of acquiescing in that system. The late Adjutant-General had re-echoed this warning before the War Commission. Consequently any step to introduce short service or relying upon it for an efficient Reserve for the foreign-going Army ought to be entered upon with the greatest caution.

The right hon. Gentleman's proposals had almost all been based on his previous theories and not on actual practice. It was because he misunderstood details that he misapplied principles, and he had committed himself to a scheme full of details which had never been properly digested by himself or those on whom he relied for advice. The right hon. Gentleman might answer, and it was a plausible answer, that other great Army reformers had experienced opposition to the reforms they had suggested. Mr. Cardwell, when he put his proposals before the House of Commons, was opposed by the old superannuated generals, but he was supported by the young generals and the whole of the Civil staff. Could the right hon. Gentleman quote any such authorities in support of his proposals? Was it not notorious that the whole staff of the War Office was opposed to his proposals, and was it not equally generally believed that a majority of his colleagues in the Cabinet were also opposed to his scheme? The right hon. Gentleman gave a pledge—the hon. Member supposed it was a pledge—to the Conservative Union at Edinburgh that if his scheme were kept in abeyance he would not remain longer in office. Was his scheme in abeyance or not? Was it alive and was it going to be presented to the House, or, as he hoped, was it going to be decently buried? Revolutions took place in South American States but they were not found to be salutory because they became monotonous. Revolutions in the Army had become monotonous. They did not want to shoot the right hon. Gentleman as South American revolutionists shot their presidents, but they hoped he would transfer his ability to some other sphere of energy.

*SIR JOHN COLOMB (Great Yarmouth) said he always listened with interest and attention to the hon. Member for East Bristol. The hon. Member had to-day lifted the debate above the minor level at which it was started and maintained on the previous day. Some Members on his side of the House had been taunted with having supported the scheme of the present Secretary of State for India and with now supporting the scheme of the present Secretary of State for War. He was not open to that taunt because he opposed the scheme in speech and writing, and refused to vote for it. Therefore it was not from the Party point of view, but on the broad aspects of the problem that he ventured to offer some observations to the House. Unlike previous speakers in the debate the hon. Member for East Bristol had looked abroad at the Empire as it was. He looked at the military danger as it presented itself to the Empire. Nearly every other speaker from the commencement of the debate had overlooked everything except the defence of this country.

MAJOR SEELY (Isle of Wight): No, no!

*SIR JOHN COLOMB said the whole criticism of the hon. Member for the Isle of Wight in regard to men and efficiency was concentrated upon a demand for support to the Volunteer force. As the Volunteers were not liable to serve out of this country he could not in the least see why the hon. Member should say "No, no."

MAJOR SEELY said that what he stated was that the Volunteer force should be regarded as a school of arms, because, in point of fact, they did go to war oversea.

*SIR JOHN COLOMB said he would come to that point presently. Since the introduction of the scheme of the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary of State for India, a new body had been created to consider the question of the defence of the Empire as a whole—in its naval as well as its military aspects. It had declared, and necessarily declared, that the naval policy dominated the whole of our military policy. The scheme of that right hon. Gentleman contemplated the danger of invasion, though the real business of the Army was fighting oversea. That former scheme ignored that fact practically, though in words it did not. There was great talk of having an Army for fighting oversea, but when they came to the details it was the old, old story—our greatest military danger was the danger of invasion. After all the previous changes which had taken place in tinkering the Army, the broad fact remained that we had never considered what were the real requirements of the Empire, and that we had misconceived the military obligations which rested upon this nation. We were always trying to get an Army mainly to protect these islands from military invasion. Anybody listening to the debate yesterday would have supposed that the Navy did not exist. The re-arming of the artillery was a matter on which they were all agreed, but it was not germane to a debate on the Address when they knew positively that every effort was now being made to re-arm the artillery as fast as possible, so as to meet modern circumstances. Therefore, he could not see the the value of the criticism passed on that matter.

On the question of Army reorganisation he was bound to say that he could not see how any practical good which could come from the Amendment on the Address. In a few days they would enter on the consideration of the Army Estimates when they would have the facts and figures before them, and a full statement from the Secretary of State for War as to the changes which were in progress, what point the changes had reached, and what still remained to be done. He thought they might have possessed their souls in patience for that better opportunity of full discussion. He was not exactly certain how far these changes had gone, and he thought the House ought to know. He wanted to deal with the feature which was most prominent in the debate yesterday—the ignoring of the question of economy. While continual references were made to the improvement of the Volunteers, and abstract references were made to economy, the only suggestions made were such as would largely increase the expenditure on the Volunteers.

MR. GUEST (Plymouth) No, no!

*SIR JOHN COLOMB said the hon. Member who said "No, no" could not have attended to the debate.

MR. GUEST remarked that what he said in the debate yesterday was that if economy were practised in connection with the Regular Army there would be money enough to spare for the Volunteers.

*SIR JOHN COLOMB said an hon. Member stated that he wanted £2,000,000 more. He would not go through the speeches of hon. Gentlemen on that point, but there was a general expression of opinion that if the Secretary of State for War would only spend more money on the Volunteers he would get their support. He was sorry to hear an insinuation from the hon. Member for Plymouth that those who did not see eye to eye with them on the question of the Volunteers were actuated by some class prejudice against the Volunteers. He did not think it worth while to discuss such ideas. He never held them and repudiated them. The hon. Member himself had talked about the blue-water school having a contempt for the Volunteers.

MR. GUEST said that what he had stated was that there was a professional contempt for the Volunteers, and he maintained that opinion still.

*SIR JOHN COLOMB said he understood that the hon. Member had referred to the blue-water school. It was not a question of the blue-water school's opinion, but of the military security of the Empire. They had to provide for military requirements according to some principle, knowing that their funds were exhaustible, and that they must not waste their money. Now, could they rely upon the Volunteer forces for providing those reserves of men who would be available to go where they would be wanted—to go oversea and stay there.

MAJOR SEELY: Hear, hear!

*SIR JOHN COLOMB: Oh, the hon. and gallant Member thought they could. He did not, and he ventured to say that all experience was against that. He presumed they all agreed with the deliberate opinion of the Committee of Imperial Defence that what our military forces were required for was for fighting oversea. If so, the problem presented itself thus: taking the forces created for a totally different purpose, did these lend themselves to such adaptation as would meet the real necessities of the Imperial situation? They knew that the Regular Army was maintained for the special purpose of going anywhere where their services were required. They knew that the Militia was a service created and maintained originally for the purpose of defending these shores against military attack. They knew that the Volunteers created themselves by spontaneous action and patriotic enterprise, and they had now a large force whose patriotism was admitted, and against the individuals supporting that force not a word was to be said. But they had had a war oversea which afforded the opportunity of seeing how far these two forces could be relied on to give the men wanted for oversea service. He was not talking now of the efficiency of the men or their training, but simply of their numbers. If hon. Members consulted the Returns for 1902 they would find some visible, practical proof of the proportion of those forces they were likely to get for fighting oversea. On the outbreak of the war in South Africa the enrolled strength of the Militia was 116,582 officers and men, and of the Volunteers at the same time 231,624. Now, the number of the Regular Forces sent out to South Africa was 246,000; while the Militia of the United Kingdom furnished over 45,000, and the organised Volunteer force of the United Kingdom only sent under 20 000.

MR. FULLER (Wiltshire, Westbury): Does the hon. and gallant Member include the Yeomanry?

*SIR JOHN COLOMB: No, certainly not; and for this reason, that if they looked at the figures it would be seen that it was the patriotism of those men who were called Yeomanry which took them individually oversea. They had no connection with the Volunteers as an organised force.

MAJOR SEELY said that the hon. and gallant Member had fallen into an extraordinary error in making deductions from the figures he had quoted. What the War Office authorities called for was mounted men, and the Auxiliary Forces in this country out of an establishment of 10,000 sent—if he might use an Irishism—30,000 men to the war. If it had been dismounted men that were asked for or required, 200,000 men could have been got.

*SIR JOHN COLOMB said he should be glad to agree if he could with the hon. and gallant Member, for it would be a solution of the whole problem. But what he was dealing with was the organised forces of the Militia and Volunteers as they appeared on the Estimates. Shortly stated, the Militia, out of an enrolled strength, gave 39 per cent., while the Volunteer force only gave 8·5 per cent.

MAJOR SEELY said that that was all that was asked for. They might have got any amount more.

* SIR JOHN COLOMB said that he was not going into speculative figures as to whether the Militia and Volunteers could have done this or that. He was taking the three branches of the service—Regulars, Militia, and Volunteers—as they were trained, and as they appeared on the Estimates; and he held that the Militia gave 39 per cent., and the Volunteers only 8·5 per cent. of their enrolled strength. Of course, if he was wrong, he was wrong; but if he was wrong the Returns were wrong. The Returns showed the enrolled strength in each case, and the number which went to the war; and he was trying to make some deductions from the figures. And he did not see how his argument was to be met by being told, "Oh! If you had done something else, something else would have happened." He was dealing with the point that we could not risk our Empire by a reliance on forces not liable for service beyond the sea.

MAJOR SEELY said that the hon. and gallant Gentleman's argument was wholly vitiated by the fact that all the men that were asked for were obtained; and the War Office could have obtained 30,000 more if they had been required.

* SIR JOHN COLOMB said he still preferred the Returns and the figures in the Estimates. He confessed that he might have misapprehended hon. Members opposite when they said that we had only to spend more money on the Volunteers and treat them properly and the whole question of discharging the obligation of oversea service for the defence of the Empire would be met, because these men must be trained and ready and willing to go oversea and remain there. He did not think, as regarded the point of remaining oversea, that the experience of the War Office established that. Take the very cream of the Volunteer force which went to the front—the C.I.V.'s—they were brought home while the war continued.

MAJOR SEELY: They were ordered home.

* SIR JOHN COLOMB: At all events they were brought home. He knew he was not taking the popular side and he could not take it. It was not easy, really, to make a connected and clear speech if one was continually interrupted. He knew that if that was frequently done it was not easy to explain his position. Therefore, he could not see that if more money was spent on the Volunteers and their numbers enlarged how the power of discharging our obligation of oversea defence of the Empire was going to be discharged, or our military strength maintained. Consequently, he objected to spending more money on the Volunteer forces. No doubt the problem of the requirements of the military forces of the Empire was enormously complicated, and ought to be faced in a larger spirit than it had been. This he would say, the problem was not to be solved by vague iterations against the changes that had taken place in the Army. Changes had been made under the influence of popular emotion, and it had to be remembered in considering this problem that neither popular feeling nor the opinion of this House would alter the military necessities of the Empire. It was the business of statesmen to look at that problem of the defence of the Empire as a whole, and until the last few months that had not been the business of statesmen. There had been no organised means of doing it. The Imperial Defence Committee had placed the obligation on Ministers to look after all these things and to decide how our military power was to be exercised oversea with success.

MR. LAMBERT (Devonshire, South Molton) said that in voting for the Amendment of the hon. Member for West Newington those who sat on the Opposition side of the House did not in the least degree desire to make the Army a question of Party politics. That had been done by hon. Gentlemen opposite, who, wherever they went in the country, had arrogated to themselves the title role of the defenders of the Army. What the hon. Member who moved the Amendment did was to appeal for some continuity in Army politics. Nobody doubted the zeal of the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary of State; they did not assail him, but they did and must assail the policy of the Government in regard to Army reform. During the past ten years there had been a procession of War Ministers, all of whom had advocated changes, all of which had been adopted in haste and abandoned in a hurry. As the hon. and gallant Admiral who had just sat down had said, the Government had been too responsive to public clamour. The War Office was being continually reformed, and the only tangible result was that after all these changes they had £29,000,000 on the Estimates for the year. They had preached economy until they had come to the conclusion that it was no use saying anything further about it; they were now face to face with an automatic increase in the Army Estimates, and what was the state of the Army to-day? In the words of the right hon. Gentleman himself, it was imperfectly prepared, wasteful in its methods, unsatisfactory in its results, and one of the most costly machines ever devised. The extravagance in the expenditure on the Army was sapping the greatest spring of our national strength. We did not come out of the Boer War victorious from any foresight of our own, but because we were able to last out longer than the Boers. Another point to which he would draw attention was that the Prime Minister had made himself the fond foster-mother of every struggling infant of the Secretary of State for War. The right hon. Gentleman had said the three great objects were to prepare an Army for service abroad if required, to keep a prepared Army at home if necessary, and to decentralise instead of centralising the control of the Army, and the right hon. Gentleman further said that that could best be done by the six Army Corps scheme. In order to bolster up the scheme recourse had to be had to the Imperial short-service system, in regard to which the Secretary of State for War had said that it did not appear that the Government's calculations had been sufficiently close, and that he had had to extend it. The fact of the matter was that the right hon. Gentleman had succeeded to a heritage of chaos and confusion, the result of nine years of office of the present Government.

He confessed he was somewhat sceptical as to the scheme of the present Secretary of State. One would have thought the Government would have accumulated all the experience possible from men who had served in the late war and applied it to the re-organisation of the Army. Nothing of the kind. First of all there came the six Army Corps scheme, and then the Esher Committee, in regard to which there was one point which struck every one alike, which was that no member of that Committee had had any experience in the South African War, and if anything ought to have been brought to bear upon the re-organisation of the Army surely it should have been the experience gained in that war. What was the scheme of the right hon. Gentleman? Was the right hon. Gentleman going to carry out the scheme he had adumbrated in the House in the previous July? Was his scheme based on military experience and advice; on the best military judgment of the country? Last year very strong debates had taken place upon this question, and in another place the late Commander-in-Chief, Lord Roberts, said—

> "There are many points in the scheme of the Secretary of State which commend themselves to me but there are others which do not, and which I believe will be detrimental to the interests of the Army."

Were those portions of the scheme to be persevered in? The Government knew perfectly well that the Army Council did not agree with them as regarded the scheme. Neither the Army Council nor Lord Roberts agreed with the whole of the scheme of the right hon. Gentleman, and what he desired to know was, had the right hon. Gentleman modified his scheme so as to conform with the opinion of those two authorities? If not, it ought not to be proceeded with. Was the linked-battalion system to be done away with? Because there was the evidence of the Wantage Committee that the linked-battalion system was one which had done admirable service to the country in the past. He noticed that the right hon. Gentleman was going to start thirteen new depôts at a cost of £3,500,000 in spite of the fact that the Wantage Committee expressed the opinion that the system of depôts could not compare with that of the linked battalions so far as economy was concerned. Would the right hon. Gentleman say whether he intended to go on with his scheme of destroying the linked battalions? At the present moment we had a simple organisation for the Army, Militia, and Volunteers. It appeared to him that the right hon. Gentleman was going to considerably complicate the system. What was to be done with the Militia under the scheme of the right hon. Gentleman? Did he propose to merge the Militia in the regular-service Army? The right hon. Gentleman and those who thought with him had forgotten, apparently, the services done in South Africa by the Militia, but the old scheme was now to be put on one side and in its place they were to have they did not know what.

According to the scheme of [the right hon. Gentleman the Militia was going to be rendered fit for service at home or abroad. Did that mean that the Militia was to be merged in the Regular Forces? The decline of the Militia was, in the previous year, described by the right hon. Gentleman as being the inevitable consequence of the way in which that force had been treated. With that statement everyone agreed. Did the right hon. Gentleman intend to destroy or raise up the Militia? What had been the result of all this tinkering? It was that the Army Corps had been abandoned; that we had artillery unfit to meet anything in Europe, short rifles, hopeless confusion and wasteful extravagance. Was that what the Army existed for? He hoped the right hon. Gentleman would tell the House what the Army did exist for [AN HON. MEMBER: For fighting.] Yes, but where? because an army fighting at home had to be differently organised to an army which had to fight abroad. In the previous year, when the Commission which had to inquire into the efficiency of our military forces was sitting, they asked how many men were required for the defence of this country? The Defence Committee had not then made up their mind upon that point. Had they now come to any decision as to the number of troops required for home defence? Had they made up their minds as to the number required to defend the frontier of India? In conclusion, he asked the right hon. Gentleman to consult the best military authorities and not allow his own theories to run away with him, lest there should be other schemes hastily prepared which would only result in costing the country an enormous amount and give nothing in return. All that the House wanted to see was that they were getting value for the money which was being spent.

COLONEL PILKINGTON (Lancashire, Newton) said he did not propose to speak to-night from the higher level of the Government's general War Office policy, especially as he thought that, after all, it was with questions of detail that the matter to-day had to be chiefly considered. In his opinion the country was far less fitted for war even than it was in 1899. He believed that the reserves were far less, and he much feared, moreover, that his hon. friend had gone astray in losing sight of the value of a large Reserve. The larger we could make our Reserve, the more effective we should be able to make our defence. What happened in the Boer War bore out the contention that we could not always wholly rely on the Regular Army. If we had had, at that time, to rely on the Regular Army alone we might conceivably have been defeated; and it must not be forgotten, in regard to that struggle, that a great proportion of the Imperial Yeomanry, who did so much to decide it, were drafted from the ranks of the Volunteers of England themselves. Personally, he did not see any reason why the present Volunteer system should be altered. For many years past it had been increasing both in efficiency — though slowly, perhaps — and certainly in numbers, and he wished to ask one or two Questions in regard to the Government proposals as to the Volunteers. Under the old system it was perfectly easy to send each Volunteer battalion attached to a Line regiment into its proper line. That led him to the Questions he was going to ask of the Secretary for War. He was sorry not to see him in his place, but he quite realised that he had sat through this debate for a very long time and, really, very patiently. It had been asked in the course of the debate, "Why do you not wait for the Army Estimates?" The answer was simple—that this was a good time for eliciting information, and possibly also for paving the way in some degree for a revision of the proposals of last year. He should like to know, in the first place, whether the right hon. Gentleman proposed to abolish the present battalion system. Because, if he did so, we would at once throw into confusion not only the Line battalions but also the corresponding ones in the Militia and Volunteers. He wanted to ask another question, and it was based on his own experience. For a long time Volunteer corps had been under the supervision of brigadiers, who would, perhaps, be in charge of the brigade for seven, eight, or ten years, and would so get to know the corps under them. He had, he thought, been under three Regular officers as brigadiers, and from all those three officers had acquired some military knowledge. They were all good men, and the last of them, under whom he now was, was not only an exceedingly good officer, but took a real interest in the work of the corps which constitute his brigade. He heard now that the present system was to be altered and that everything in the way of these appointments was to go by chance. He thought it was better for a brigadier to be in a position to take an interest for several consecutive years in a battalion under his charge, for they got to know him and he got to know them.

Then they heard much of the desirability of giving encouragement to shooting. The battalion with which he was connected had hitherto done its shooting at Altcar, one of the best ranges in the North of England. How they were to do without that range he failed to see, but an intimation had come to them that they must not look to it as being available this year. On receipt of that notice they went to the officer in charge of the range, but he said he could give no orders, and that it seemed to be a question for the officer commanding the district. To that officer they went accordingly, but could get no satisfaction. This was but a detail, but it went to show what was happening and might happen in other cases. They spent, only a year or two ago, on this Altcar range, which the Government then said would be available to all Liverpool and West Lancashire regiments, £200 for the erection of a shooting pavilion for the use of officers and men, but, so far as he could see, they were not now going to have that range this season. and it looked, indeed, as if—he supposed in consequence of some dispute between the owner and the Government—it would be shut. If they could not have good shooting practice, for which a good practice ground was provided, it was of but little use to talk much of the need of inducing the young men of England to practise rifle-shooting. There was another question he desired to put, as to what the classification would be in future in regard to efficiency. For forty-four years past the Volunteer battalions had been built up into what was now, at least, real efficiency. Were they now going to have two classes of efficiency? Would the battalions all have one correct mark of efficiency, or would there be two classes? That was a very important question, as to which at the present moment no one knew anything. He did not doubt that the Volunteers would loyally accept any arrangement which the War Office might think necessary, but it did seem hard that they should be told in the House that 60.000 Volunteers were to be done away with, and that the force was to be cut down from 240 000 to 180,000. That, in itself, was sufficient to shake the force from end to end, and had, unfortunately, proved sufficient to discourage Volunteer officers from coming forward. What he asked from the right hon. Gentleman was that when he gave his decision, as he would within the next four weeks, he should be specially careful in regard to the facts which Volunteer officers had laid before him in that House in regard to the Volunteer forces. The case for the Militia and the Line had been ably put, and he had not a word to say in regard to that case, except that he endorsed almost every word that had been said. As to the Volunteers —if they could not be improved, then, at least, let them be left alone.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN (Stirling Burghs): I do not get up to indicate any expression of a desire to bring the debate to a conclusion, but merely to make a few observations and ask a few questions which the right hon. Gentleman later on will be able to reply to. I am not at all surprised, and no one can be surprised, that questions affecting the Volunteers have occupied so large a part of this debate. The Volunteers have been threatened and greatly injured by the threat, and what makes this the more annoying is that the threat was so ill-considered that we are now told that it is not going to be carried out. That haste and want of consideration are at the bottom of nearly all the errors that have been committed in this matter. But I wish to inquire how we stand on the big question of the organisation of the Army. Is there any policy at all with regard to the Army? We are willing to attack or defend the policy, but we want to know, first of all, whether there is a policy. We can at least be told that. Be it remembered that the Government have been in charge of the Army for ten years, I might even say for twenty years, with a short interruption; therefore the Army now is very much what they themselves have made it, and they have had ample time to make it what they wish it to be. Not only that, but it is four years since we had a definite promise and assurance that they would give us a new and vastly improved Army; it is about four years since the last general election when that was promised. It is one and a half years since the right hon. Gentleman himself came into office and told us he knew exactly what was wanted and exactly how to obtain what was wanted. Last year's Estimates were founded not upon any new ideas, but were nominal Estimates founded on what we were told was a doomed system. Then we had another fact in the creation of the Cabinet Committee of Defence, from which great expectations were formed. The next step was that from the War Office were summarily ejected all the old officers who had held positions there, whatever their experience had been; and new minds, we were told, had to be introduced in order to carry out the new ideas. Then the final stage was the laying before the House and the country last year of the scheme of the Secretary of State for War. Now we shall see, no doubt—at least I have formed no other expectation—in the new Estimates which will be laid on the Table as soon as Committee of Supply is set up, the result of the new Army system definitely announced on authority. The Government, we assume, by this time have either accepted or modified or altered the scheme of last year, and they not only will be able to tell us all about it, but they will have founded their Estimates for the coming year on that basis. That is what we expect, and I think it is a reasonable expectation.

An answer will also be given to a question which has been put once or twice in the course of this debate as to what are the real military requirements of the country. Someone said, when this question was asked, that soldiers were wanted to fight; that is hardly what may be called a conclusive and comprehensive answer. We want to know what is the conception of the Government after all these deliberations, all these new organisations of control, and all that has been said, of what the real military requirements are, what the purpose of our Army and other warlike forces is, and what the particular description of force necessary to fulfil that object may be. We have received no information on the subject. A Royal Commission, appointed to inquire into whether the Militia and Volunteers were adequate for their duties, asked the not unreasonable question what these duties were, and they were unable to get an answer. They tried one source after another in the different departments, but as soon as an answer was given it was countermanded and withdrawn, and there the question ends. I think the House of Commons and the country are entitled to that information.

But while we are expecting to hear a definite and absolutely decided and accepted plan in all these particulars, we were rather startled the night before last to hear a new cut-and-dried scheme for the Militia brought forward, totally at variance with all that we have been told before. The Militia, according to the scheme of the right hon. Gentleman last year, were to be obliterated altogether, or at any rate to be fundamentally altered in character, and to be reduced from the prominent position they have hitherto held. Now they are to be put into another form, and every man is to be enlisted with a liability for foreign service, a liability to which he has not been subject hitherto. The Militia has been used for foreign service, but always by volunteering when the necessity arose. There are a few questions I should like to ask, without pronouncing any opinion whether this enlistment for foreign service is advantageous or not. Has any consideration been given to the effect that such a change will have on recruiting? Many a man is quite ready to serve in the Militia under present conditions; but the moment you say he is thereby undertaking liability to be sent abroad whenever his regiment is embodied, and in the case of war, is there not a danger of his being afraid that that would come into conflict with his employer, or his wife, which is much more formidable? Has any estimate been made of the effect upon recruiting of adding the new, certainly serious, and almost terrible obligation to the enlistment of the Militia? The second question I would ask is this:—What effect will it have upon the Ballot Laws with regard to the Militia? Is the ballot to be still alive though never enforced for the Militia after you have made this stipulation? Compulsory service for the defence of the country we could understand. Compulsory service to take the place of the Regular Forces in the defence of certain foreign places we could also understand. But compulsory service, the power of sending a man abroad, in a wide sense has never been contemplated as likely to apply to this country. This is at least a complete change of front, because the Militia was going altogether to disappear, and now it is to be put in the forefront. Why was this very fragmentary reform brought forward in the way it was in Parliament? Why this hurry to introduce piecemeal legislation? Is this total alteration of the Militia to be introduced to fit in with some other scheme or not? What is that other scheme? To proceed to deal in that way with one branch of the service without reference to the effect on others is surely a strange thing. If you were building a house, would it be a wise thing to say, "We will at all events commence to build a wing, trusting that by-and-by we shall build a house which will fit in with our wing?" Suppose the War Office buildings had not been quite agreed upon, and we said, "Oh, let us make a beginning with the Quartermaster-General's department. We can easily fit on the general scheme." That is the way in which the new Army is being built. Hurry is the very worst counsellor you can have. It is to hurry we owe the Army Corps, the short rifle, and the Secretary of State's last year's scheme. How much better it would have been if he had taken another year, if he had said less about it, made fewer promises, gone into the work in a humbler spirit, and said, "I must really have time." Not a bit of it. Within a month or two he must produce a scheme, which, of course, being produced in a hurry, has broken down. These hurried schemes are not only unlikely to produce efficiency, but they are the cause of endless expense. Look at the barracks which have been built on the Army Corps scheme. So also with regard to the rifle, what expense is incurred. The fundamental and fatal mistake has been that desire, first of all, of showing off and making a splash of finding new schemes, and secondly of making a splash in too great a hurry. That is all I have to say with regard to these successive schemes.

We look forward that either to-night or on introducing the Estimates the right hon. Gentleman will be able to tell us exactly what the Committee of Defence have determined is necessary for the country. Recruiting is now going on for nine years, and short-service recruiting has been stopped, temporarily I presume, in order to redress the balance. Long service is destroying the Reserve without the compensating machinery which was suggested last year under the scheme of the right hon. Gentleman. Some men of the very new school and some of the very old may contend that they do not like the short service at all, and that there are great advantages in the long service; but, besides the fact that it is killing the Reserve, it is enormously expensive. The short service was introduced largely to save the expense of long service. If you have a man with his regiment for nine years you must have a large increase in your married service, and that hinders the Army by immobility and by charge in every direction. You have necessarily also the charge for pensions. You cannot keep a man all that time away from his ordinary life without pensioning him. After short service had been introduced, following on a ten-years system, the number of pensions came down to less than a third of the previous number. They were in the process of further reduction when these changes began to be made. This is a very important matter. We must, of course, furnish drafts for India, and we ought to do it in the most economical manner both for India and ourselves. The whole difficulty lies in how to reconcile these things. I venture to hope the right hon. Gentleman will tell us that these nine-years enlistments are only temporarily employed, and that he will soon find himself an opportunity of reverting in one form or another to a shorter service which will give us that system of reserves which we found an undoubted success the other day in the war in South Africa.

SIR JOHN GORST (Cambridge University) said he should not attempt to answer the arguments of the right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition, who had had a very wide experience in these matters. His sole reason for rising was because the mover of this Amendment had alluded to the difficulty of obtaining recruits and the very unsatisfactory condition of their physique. The complaint as to the difficulty of obtaining recruits and as to their quality was not at all a new question, for it had frequently been referred to in the House, and in public by some of the highest officers in the Army most qualified to speak upon it, and it was considered to be of such importance that His Majesty's Government a few years ago approved the appointment of a Departmental Committee to enquire into the alleged physical deterioration of the people. That Committee included some very high officers in the Army and men of great experience like the Inspector-General, and they made a unanimous Report. There had been a great error in regard to that Report for it did not find, as some people imagined, that there had been no physical deterioration. What was reported was that there was no evidence upon which that physical deterioration could be established. In regard to the recruits for the Army they came to this decision for two distinct reasons. In the first place, because no records had been kept which would enable a contrast to be made with the condition of recruits at the present time; and in the second place, evidence was given to show that the class from which recruits were drawn varied according to the amount of employment in the country at different times. When there was a great depression of trade in this country a great number of men of a superior order enlisted as recruits. When employment was common and everybody could get work, recruits were drawn from a lower class and their physique was decidedly inferior. The Committee also reported that there were a great number of causes, affecting chiefly the poorer paid classes of workmen in this country, which tended to physical deterioration. The Report contained a number of perfectly practical suggestions, some of which could be carried out by administrative action, and some of which required the assistance of this House in the reform of our laws. He was extraordinarily astonished to learn from answers recently given in the House that no kind of action was to be taken whatever on this Report, and that no legislation was to be submitted to Parliament on the subject. We were to go on exactly as before, notwithstanding the pregnant and important Report of the Committee. If we wanted strong, healthy, well developed men to serve in the Army—and it was the worst economy in the world to take men of inferior health and constitution—proper attention should be given to the conditions under which they were brought up. In India there were about 50 per cent. of the European soldiers constantly on the sick list, so that we had actually to incur the expense of sending out double the number of men required. We had to reckon that half of the number would always be in hospital on one ground or another. What could be more extravagant than a system of that kind if there was any possibility of preventing it?

Evidence was given before the Committee that the degeneracy of the youth of the country was entirely preventable. If growing boys in the public elementary schools were watched and medically examined such measures could be taken as would secure that they would not grow up into men afflicted with rickets and diseases consequent on bad nutrition and bad conditions imposed upon them in childhood. This Amendment did not apply to women, and he would not refer to the training of girls beyond saying that it was also of importance that those who were to be the mothers of future generations should not grow up under bad conditions. Continental countries were more immediately dependent on soldiers for their safety than we were, and they took good care that their boys and girls were brought up under conditions which conduced to efficiency and health. They were more carefully looked after in the schools, and he did not attribute that to any greater humanity on the part of foreign nations, but to the fact that they were compelled from motives of self-preservation to look after matters which we allowed to drift as they liked. He would press this subject on the attention of the House at every opportunity. He would bring it up on the Irish Estimates, the Scotch Estimates, and the English Estimates, and he would entreat the Government for the sake of the nation, the Empire, and numerous other considerations not to neglect the recommendations of that Committee. The Committee consisted of officials of high rank, and they reported unanimously that the question was very urgent and that there were a great many things that ought to be done at once. It was necessary to have legislation to carry out the Report, and if the Government neglected altogether to consider the question they would incur a most tremendous responsibility. What was the good of having an Army if we could not get people who were fit to bear the burdens of military service? He hoped the Government would take these matters into consideration, and that they would not incur the responsibility of neglecting the duty which had been put before them on such high authority.

Mr. FULLER (Wiltshire, Westbury) said that those who knew the present condition of the Army must realise the importance of the remarks made by the right hon. Baronet the Member for Cambridge University. Some statements were made in the columns of a newspaper a few days ago, on the authority of Mr. Arnold White, drawing attention to the height and weight of our recruits. He hoped the Secretary of State for War would be able to contradict the figures, because if they were facts it was evident that the physical conditions of the recruits now being drawn into the Line regiments were such that the men could not under any circumstances be a credit to the service they joined. It was alleged that the minimum height was 5 feet 2 inches, and the minimum weight 8 stones 3 lbs. He would ask the right hon. Gentleman and the House whether it was worth while discussing the question of long and short rifles when the recruits who were joining the Army were not only not fit to carry a rifle, but not fit to carry a pop-gun. He wished to call attention to the wastage that was going on in the British Army owing not only to the physical condition of the men, but to other factors which were largely due to the policy of continuous change, for which the Government was responsible. In 1902 there were 50,753 recruits attested in the Army. During the same year there was in the United Kingdom an Army, roughly, of 100,000. The number who died was 3,896; there deserted, 7,162; there were invalided, 8,869; there were discharged for misconduct, 2,903; and there were discharged as inefficient, 1,653; making a total wastage under these heads of 24,483. It was one of the contentions of those who opposed the right hon. Gentleman's policy and supported the Amendment that the changes which were continually being made were bringing about discontent and interfering with the discipline of the Army. During twelve months the number of men in the British Army who were in prison was 21,943, or 22 per cent. of the whole of the soldiers in these islands. He thought these figures were alarming and that they should be carefully considered by the right hon. Gentleman.

The hon. and gallant Member for Stepney had stated in reference to the Volunteer force that numbers did not necessarily mean military efficiency and the right hon. Gentleman cheered him. If the facts he had given as to the wastage that was going on in the Army were accurate, it might be said that numbers did not mean military strength. He believed that Members of the Tory Party wished to have a large Army, while Members on the Opposition side of the House desired a smaller but more efficient Army. In his opinion that was the difference between the two sides of the House. He believed that if, under the present system of voluntary enlistment, the Army were increased it would only be at the expense of efficiency. Earlier in the debate a controversy had arisen across the floor of the House, between the hon. and gallant Members for Yarmouth and the Isle of Wight, as to the number of Militia and Volunteers who went to South Africa. The point at issue was that the former asserted that in time of war the gaps and wastage of the Army in the field could not be filled up from the Militia and Volunteers, and the latter that they could be. He thought it would surprise the hon. and gallant Member for Yarmouth to know that there had been drawn from the Militia, Volunteers, and Yeomanry and sent to South Africa no fewer than 101,000 men, and it was common knowledge what excellent service they had performed and that without them the Regular Forces would not have been able to carry the war to a successful conclusion. The Secretary of State for War would, no doubt, when he came to reply, have no difficulty in answering the criticisms made in that quarter. The lines of attack on any policy, and particularly the military policy of a Government, and more particularly when they did not know exactly what that policy was, must be conflicting and divergent. He was certain the right hon. Gentleman must be aware that on both sides of the House, and in the country as a whole, great uneasiness prevailed as to the state of the Army. He did not say that that uneasiness would be necessarily developed in the division lobbies any more in regard to the position of the Army than in regard to other subjects of recent controversy.

The hon. and gallant Member for Taunton told the House that they must cut their coat according to their cloth, but he ventured to think that the policy of both the present and late Secretary of State for War aimed at the creation and maintenance of a larger Army than this country under the present military and financial system could ever supply or support. Two days ago, in another place, the Under-Secretary for War, in discussing a question arising out of the present status of the Militia, said that it was a notable fact that only 250,000 troops out of a total of 605,000 men were ear-marked for service abroad. That was to say, that in the noble Lord's opinion 250,000 were insufficient for service abroad. The right hon. Gentleman the Secretary of State for War himself was even more explicit, for at a dinner at Chelmsford he said in the course of a speech—

"That in the case of India alone, if we are to keep up our Army for war purposes"

He did not know for what else than war an army was kept up—

"We did not want 133,000

—Let the House mark this—

"But four times that number."

That was to say, that in the opinion of the right hon. Gentleman, and, therefore, presumably in the opinion of the Government, we should require in the North-West of India a force of no less than 532,000 troops. He would remind the House that the North-West of India was not the only land frontier with which this Empire had to deal, and if there was danger there—he admitted that many able authorities said that there was problematical danger on the North-West frontier—the whole House would admit also that there was a problematical danger on the Canadian frontier. And if it was necessary to find over 500,000 men for the defence of India alone, what was the policy of the Government in regard to the whole Empire, and how far were they going on those lines sketched by the Secretary for War? He ventured to think that the maintenance of this enormous land Army was beyond the permanent possibilities both of the voluntary and financial systems under which the country at present existed. If we were to keep a land force fully equipped in all details, ready for active service in the field, on the lines suggested by the noble Lord and the right hon. Gentleman, the financial burden in itself would be greater than the people of this country could bear and we would have to adopt a protectionist policy, not for the purposes of protection but for the purpose of raising revenue to meet the expense. And if we asked the country to supply a sufficient number of recruits to feed an Army of the kind sketched, we would have to abandon the system of voluntary enlistment and adopt the Continental system of conscription. He thought it possible and probable that a good number of hon. Gentlemen opposite would not regret to see the adoption of protection for revenue purposes or of conscription for military purposes. Neither policy, he believed, was one, in the opinion of those on his side of the House, which would be of advantage to the country or the Empire. Therefore, if we were to keep our military forces within the financial abilities of the people of this country, and voluntary enlistment, it was high time that we cried "Stop" to military expenses and did something to show the country that, at any rate in the opinion of hon. Members on that side of the House, it was not necessary to maintain for the services of this country and the Empire even so large an Army as at present existed.

*CAPTAIN JESSEL (St. Pancras, S.) said he did not believe that the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary of State for War or the noble Lord the Under-Secretary intended to advocate the extension of the standing Army to the very large body of men mentioned by the hon. Gentleman opposite. Their only wish was to draw attention to the elementary fact that it might be necessary to mobilise and recruit a very large body of men. Considering that in this country and the Colonies and dependencies we had over a million of men under arms in one shape or form, he did not think it was very wrong of the right hon. Gentleman and the noble Lord to point out that we could, under existing conditions, only send a quarter of a million of men for an oversea campaign. The recent campaign in Manchuria had shown us the probability of very large forces being employed. The North-West Frontier of India required a much larger Army than was thought possible before. It was the paramount duty of the War Office and those who advised the Secretary of State for War to be prepared with a sufficient number of men to meet any possible emergency. When it was remembered that the Under-Secretary stated that we could only send across the sea 250,000 men, he did not think the War Office could be blamed for taking steps to make that number stronger if the occasion arose. The Amendment set forth—

> "That the continuous and continuing changes in the War Office are destructive of the best interests of His Majesty's Army."

[OPPOSITION cries of "Hear, hear!"] He was somewhat surprised to hear that cheer from hon. Members opposite considering that year after year they had denounced the War Office and all connected with it. The recommendations of the Esher Committee were approved of by every Member of the House with the exception of the right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition, and now the Government was blamed for attempting to carry out the changes so urgently demanded. There was another very curious thing; the system of Army Corps initiated by the Secretary of State for India divided this country into various districts for the better organisation and decentralisation of the various troops in the different commands. This system was condemned, whereas administrative commands of the Esher Committee answering the same purpose were approved. He was sure the House would agree that the War Minister was wise in introducing changes which created a general staff. For many years complaints had been made that there was no general staff in the Army and the Intelligence Branch existed only as a sort of post office and the letters did not always reach the proper authorities. But they had now got a proper general staff. In his opinion it was not quite big enough, but he felt quite sure that they were now proceeding upon the right lines.

He had listened very attentively to the debate yesterday, and what impressed him was that so many hon. Members spoke about the Volunteers. He believed in the efficiency of the Volunteer Auxiliary Forces, but it was rather hard when the War Office wished to make a change in their condition that so much comment should be made. The Volunteers had grown up in the past in a sort of hap-hazard fashion. In Scotland there were fourteen regiments of Volunteer artillery for which no possible place could be found upon mobilisation, and therefore it seemed to him that such corps must be redundant. He did not think the House would approve of spending money upon redundant units. He agreed, however, that they should keep up the Volunteers and make the most of them as a very useful reserve force. A most important announcement had been made in another place as regarded the conditions of service in the Militia. He thought that if the Militia were liable to be sent abroad without volunteering it would free the heads of the Army from a vast amount of anxiety in time of need. It seemed to him that this policy in regard to the Militia needed very careful inquiry, because it showed a somewhat remarkable change of front on the part of the War Minister. They would remember that last year the Militia was going to be ended and abolished, but now it was to be placed in the forefront, and he hoped that this would have the effect of creating a more useful force. The more troops they were able to send abroad and across the sea the better would be the forces of the British Empire.

There was another point upon which a mistake seemed to him to have been made. They had increased the pay of the private soldier. The hon. Member who spoke last and the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Cambridge University had called attention to the low physique of many of our recruits, and notwithstanding this they had increased the pay of the private soldier by nearly one-half. Was that a satisfactory state of affairs? He was not satisfied with the prevailing condition of things, because he had been told that by this increase of pay they had not attracted very many more men, and the money which the men got was of no benefit to them under the present system. The men got their money and they spent it in a way which did them no good at all. He would suggest that it would be a good plan if part of this money could be earmarked for an old-age pension, and this they would be able to hold out to the men as an extra inducement which would really help the soldier when he left the Army. It might be said that this principle had been tried before in the shape of deferred pay, but his idea was that this pension should not be paid in a lump sum but should be paid weekly or quarterly so that the soldier would have something to look forward to. It was a great pity, in his opinion, that money should be wasted in this way, and he did not think the War Office had shown the necessity of so very largely increasing the pay of the soldier. Attention had been drawn to the want of officers in the cavalry and the Guards, and he thought the question of the pay had something to do with that state of things; for they could not expect men under modern military conditions, where leave was not so readily obtained as it used to be, and when the duties were much heavier, to join the Army, where they had to work so hard, if they did not give them proper pay. There was no doubt a very sincere feeling that the expenses of an ordinary officer were much too high. He did not think, however, that in most regiments that was the case. No doubt a certain amount of economy could be practised, but, on the whole, the standard of life was not at all superior to what those officers enjoyed in their own homes. If they were going to have a professional Army they must pay the officers properly and in accordance with the same standard of pay which they would get in other walks of life. He did not think 5s. 3d. a day for a second lieutenant was sufficient for a man of twenty years of age to live and dress himself upon. He knew that in most professions men did not make sufficient money at the start to keep themselves, but the difference between what an officer in the Army got and what they would get in other professions was so marked that if the Government did not see their way to increase the pay of the officers and extend to them other advantages he was afraid they would still go on experiencing this scarcity of men in the commissioned ranks. Then, again, very little consideration was given to the officers or the men in regard to their movements. He knew an instance where, recently, a cavalry regiment was ordered for service abroad and where the officers sold their horses and the non-commissioned officers got rid of their furniture, and just before they should have left this country the order for them going abroad was cancelled. That sort of thing did not make soldiering popular. If any regiment were sent abroad earlier than was expected it threw out of order the arrangements of all the regiments on the roster, and placed them in very peculiar difficulties.

The Leader of the Opposition had touched upon the terms of enlistment. The three-years system of enlistment had broken down because it was incapable of furnishing sufficient men for the foreign drafts. A great deal of abuse had been put upon the unfortunate head of the late Secretary of State for War because he had introduced this system. He remembered the Army debates which had taken place in this House, and if there was one question which had been pressed upon the attention of the Secretary of State for War in the past it had been the question of a short-service system. The Leader of the Opposition, when he talked about nine-years service, appeared to forget that in his time the ordinary period for any man serving abroad or in India was eight years; and therefore very little change was being made. It was true that the nominal period was seven years with the colours and five years with the Reserve. But if a man happened to be abroad during his seven years service he was detained for eight years. He agreed that sooner or later it would be possible to enlist men for the shorter service because of the importance of keeping up the Reserve. At the present time they were sending out men to India who had not served two years, and some who were under twenty years of age. With regard to the artillery they knew it was to be re-armed. It might be argued that the Secretary of State for War might have done this before, but he thought, when he gave his explanation, he would be able to furnish them with very good reasons why this re-armament of the artillery had not taken place before.

There was only one other matter which he wished to refer to. He wished to ask what the meaning of reducing our garrison on the colonial stations was. In Egypt the cavalry regiments had been taken away and they had been replaced by a troop of military police. He should have thought that near a great town like Cairo would be a suitable place for mounted troops. In India they always kept a number of mounted troops near the large centres of population. He hoped that when the right hon. Gentleman considered the cost of the Army in Egypt he would be able to see his way to induce the Government of Egypt to contribute to the cost of the British force there. He wished to know for what reason the garrisons all over the British Colonies and Dependencies had been diminished. He was afraid that debates of this kind did not lead to very much except finding fault, because at the present juncture it was impossible to criticise the real military policy of the Government. Last year they had a plan sketched out at the end of the session, and they did not yet know what had been the effect of that plan, what progress had been made with it, or how they stood as regarded recruiting. They did not know what the real intentions of the Government in regard to the Volunteers, the Militia, and other branches of the service were. He was perfectly sure, however, that in the Secretary of State for War they had a man who had earnestly studied the various problems of Army reform, and they could rely upon him doing his best. He was sure that they would listen with a considerable amount of interest to the right hon. Gentleman's summing up of the various points which had been made in the debate.

*SIR MARK STEWART (Kirkcudbrightshire) said he spoke upon this question with some knowledge of the Volunteers, because he happened to have had the command of one of those fourteen Volunteer artillery regiments extending over the three southern counties of Scotland for which the hon. and gallant Member for South St. Pancras had stated there could not be found a place in any mobilisation scheme of the Army. He desired to make a few remarks upon this branch of Army reorganisation. In the first place he hoped that the number of men would not be reduced, and he trusted that some steps would be taken not only this year but in succeeding years to provide for their efficient maintenance. It was no doubt true that the older Volunteers might never be able to lie in a trench all night as was necessary on active service, but their presence in the corps gave stability to it, and induced the younger bloods to join. He should have no objection to a system under which there would be two standards of grants to Volunteers, one for the younger men who were fit and able for war, and who ought to have a good capitation grant; while the grant to the older men need not be so high, but sufficient for men who were doing useful work in affording others a good example, and giving an air of respectability to the corps. In this way the Volunteers would take the bottom step in the Army ladder, and if called upon in time of war they would be able to give valuable help to the Regular Army. He thought that his suggestion in regard to two standards of capitation grants would encourage the patriotism of the country, and induce the young and strong to join. With regard to camps, he spoke as a large employer of agricultural labour, and he knew how difficult it was to spare men to go to camp at certain periods of the year. In his district, however, they had got over the difficulty by having the camps in the early spring as well as in summer, which enabled certain hands who could not leave later in the season to go. They were very thankful to hear that no reduction was to be made this year, and he also hoped that no reduction would be made next year. He would like the right hon. Gentleman to explain in more detail the district barrack depôts of Militia which had been created at very great expense. A fear existed that these depôts were going to be done away with, but he hoped that in future they would continue to use them. What the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Cambridge University had said as to the physique of the men was very important, but they all knew that the Volunteers from the country were of better physique than those from the town, for they were stronger and better able to shoot. He hoped something would be done to encourage the young men in the country districts to join, because unless some further inducement was offered them they were apt to remain outside the force. He trusted that the capitation grant would not be reduced unless they were prepared to adopt more than one standard. He thought that was a very important matter. He also asked for information as to what changes were likely to take place with regard to University candidates for commissions in the Army. It was most important that they should do all they could to induce young men to join the Army straight from the University. He hoped the right hon. Gentleman would recognise that it would be somewhat dangerous to reduce the strength of the Volunteers.

*CAPTAIN ELLICE (St. Andrews Burghs) thought the argument that we must either pay for our Army or serve was fallacious. The hon. Member for Taunton had asserted earlier in the debate that we must either pay or we must serve—either we must pay for our dinner or else we must cook it ourselves. No one objected to paying for a good dinner, but a sovereign was too high a price to pay for a mutton chop and a pint of ale. What he complained of was that we paid too much for the result attained. In 1896 the Militia establishment was 191,000 men, and those enrolled amounted to 117,000, whilst the expenditure was £500,000. In 1905 the establishment was the same, the number of enrolled men 96,000, and the expenditure £817,000. How was it that in 1905 we were spending nearly double what we spent in 1896, and were only getting 96,000 instead of 117,000? We were spending more on the Army every year and getting less for our money. That was one of the strongest reasons for attacking the Government on the inefficient way in which they had tackled this problem. With regard to the shortage of officers, no doubt on their return from the South African War our officers thought they were entitled to a period of rest, and that they could serve their country in a more peaceful way, but instead of there being a period of rest there had been a succession of changes; officers had no idea what was coming next; and the consequence was, instead of keeping our officers we lost them by retirement. There would be no reform in the Army until these constant changes ceased. He sincerely hoped the right hon. Gentleman would consult the convenience of the officers, and make them love the service instead of hating it as they did at the present time. He believed both the problems of the Militia and that of the scarcity of officers could and would be settled if the Secretary of State would himself take the matter in hand.

*MR. PEEL (Manchester, S.) drew attention to the fact that from both sides of the House there had been a considerable amount of criticism upon the schemes of reform that had been brought forward during the last five years, but he thought from what he had heard to-day and yesterday that, were any misfortune to happen to the present Government, the House would be faced with yet another scheme introduced by hon. Gentlemen opposite. Many hon. Members had congratulated the right hon. Gentleman on the way he had carried out the reorganisation of the War Office, and upon being able to carry out many of the recommendations of the Esher Commission, whilst other Members stated that owing to the many changes in it the War Office was in a state of chaos and confusion. In fact, anybody who talked about the War Office immediately plunged into almost Oriental exaggeration. What he himself wished to know was whether the change could now be considered complete, and whether the recommendations applying to the organisations of the different staffs both at the War Office and in the districts were being carried out, because those two things were complementary to each other. He would also like to know what the Secretary of State himself thought about the new arrangements for decentralisation which were part and parcel of the reorganisation of the War Office. Was the right hon. Gentleman satisfied with the progress made? He hoped the observations of hon. Gentlemen opposite with regard to the recruits we were getting into the Army were exaggerated, because if, after all these changes as to pay and so forth had been made, we were getting no better men than before it seemed almost hopeless to improve the class of men who entered the British Army. A rumour was going about—whether true or false he did not know, but at any rate it was a disturbing rumour—that the Committee who considered the question of the new rifle had not absolute freedom of choice as to the best kind of rifle which could be obtained, and that they were limited, especially in respect to the length of the rifle—a most important limitation. He wished to know about that. It was stated that their anxiety was to produce a rifle that could be used by the cavalry as well as the infantry. He was told by cavalry officers that they were pretty well satisfied with the rifle as a cavalry carbine, and that it was an improvement on the old carbine. In view of the criticisms of the new rifle, many of which came from expert sources, he wished to know whether the Committee had absolute freedom to select the best possible kind of rifle.

Under the present scheme were we to rely entirely on the Volunteers and Yeomanry for home defence? In the previous scheme it was not so, but there was to be a stiffening of the Regulars to supplement the Volunteers and Yeomanry and to occupy, he supposed, the most difficult position. As to the reduction of the Volunteers, of course there were several ways in which that could be done, and the method by which it might be done was quite as important as the reduction itself. It was one thing to reduce the inefficient members of the Volunteers and to say that there should be a higher standard of drill attendance, or of physique, and another thing to reduce the number of corps into which the Volunteers were divided. If it was the first course, he thought the Secretary of State for War would find it far less difficult than if he were to reduce the number of corps. At what point of efficiency did the right hon. Gentleman actually aim? They knew from the Duke of Norfolk's Commission what were the changes and improvements to which the Volunteers as at present constituted might fairly be called upon to submit in order to fit themselves to fight foreign troops. What was the assumption of the Committee of Defence? Of course it was impossible to provide for everything in war, but there should be some hypothesis. Were they to go on the hypothesis that a certain time was to elapse before these troops would be actually called upon to take the field to meet a foreign army? If so, how many weeks or months were to be allowed to give a further polish to these troops? He quite understood that in producing his scheme the right hon. Gentleman was hampered a good deal by the legacy of his predecessor, and that it was very difficult to pay the death duties upon it. The figures had been given in another place as to the number of men who had been enlisted up to February 11th for service in India or long service on the nine-years system. He quite understood that until the Indian drafts were provided, and the security of India made perfect in that way, it was impossible for the Secretary for War to commence the new system at all. He wished to know how soon they might expect the Indian drafts to be provided for, so that they might know when the new system was likely to be ready.

Perhaps the most important and vital matter in the scheme had reference to the Militia. The idea last year was to abolish the Militia, and now it was to so alter that force as to make it available for service abroad in case of necessity. That was a far-reaching change indeed, and they had to look to the effect which a change of that kind might have not only on the recruiting of men, but on the condition of the officers who would be put in a very different position from that which they occupied under the old system. He would like to have more information on that matter from the Secretary of State for War, because it bore on another important point, namely, the depletion of the Militia during the last few years through men passing from the Militia into the Line. If the Militia was to be made a foreign-service force it was quite clear that that temptation would no longer exist except for the purpose of attracting Militiamen to the Line long service battalions. That would have an immense effect on the position of the Army. It would be very convenient now if the right hon. Gentleman would give a little more information about his whole scheme. A most important point was the precise relations between the territorial Army and the foreign-service Army. How were they to be connected as regarded change of officers, non-commissioned officers, and grouping, because the proposed territorial regiments, the long-service battalions quartered at home were not for home defence, but for foreign service? They were only separate armies in time of peace. Would there not be a tendency in those separate armies for one to regard itself as superior to the other? The whole future of the Army depended on the connection and the training of those two armies; therefore it was most important to know the relation in which they were to stand to each other. He hoped the Secretary for War would very frankly explain these matters so as to enable the House to discuss, on the Estimates the new ideas as to the relationship between the territorial and the foreign-service armies.

*MR. LLEWELLYN (Somersetshire, N.) said he wished to devote his remarks to matters connected with the Militia. The hon. Gentleman who had last spoken had expressed his views in regard to the advisability of compelling men to enlist for foreign service in case of need. For a long time he had had an open mind on the matter, but he thought the weight of evidence was in favour of the proposal of the Secretary of State for War. It was somewhat dangerous to postpone the decision whether the battalion should go on foreign service or not till the emergency arose. During the late war nearly every regiment was only too willing to go, but there were others not willing, and pressure was put on them not to volunteer. He should prefer to have a small number of regiments enlisted for foreign service in case of necessity. The present uncertainty as regarded the future of the Militia service was very much against the efficiency of the regiments, and recruiting generally. It was perfectly true that the physique was not satisfactory. Mere boys came up for enlistment, and although they conformed to the requirements at the time, they were an unsatisfactory lot. However, what with the training at the depots, good food, and good housing their condition very soon greatly improved. He knew that a very large proportion of Militia recruits passed into the Army, and that was supposed to be unsatisfactory. From the point of view of officers commanding Militia battalions, it was not satisfactory that out of a hundred of their best recruits seventy passed into the Army. But it was good for the Army, as they went of their own free will and became admirable soldiers. He thought that the hon. and gallant Member for Sheffield and other Volunteer colonels were apt to take too narrow a view in connection with the position of the Volunteers. They should look at the usefulness of the force generally and not be content to count the noses under their own command. Occasionally great sympathy was expressed with the Volunteers, especially when an election was approaching. That, he thought, might have something to do with the criticisms of his hon. friends with reference to the reduction of the Volunteers. He himself did not hesitate to say that the Volunteer force might be reduced by one-half, and still be as valuable as it was at present. An hon. Gentleman opposite said that it was unnecessary to pay a soldier £10 a year when a Volunteer could be got for £6. There was, however, such a thing as having a Regular Army too cheap and a Volunteer force too dear. What was the present difficulty? It was that they were now taking into the Volunteers men who were not intended for that force at all; men who required to be paid; and who would be much better in the Regular Army or the Militia. The fact must be faced that at present patriotism was penalised. Why should one man give up his holidays for the good of the country, and another man do nothing? Why should one employer allow his employees to join the Volunteers and another not? That was a source of danger. He could not see how the Volunteers were treated badly. Last year an hon. and gallant friend of his stated in this House that he found the capitation grant sufficient for his expenses, and they all knew that his regiment when he commanded it was one of the best. As to shortage of officers, was it not to be accounted for in the fact that amusements were now more general, and the facilities for attending them were greater than when the Volunteer force was established; and, also, Volunteer officers were now called upon to bear expenses which they ought not to be asked to defray.

And, it being half-past Seven of the clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS.

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [February 22nd] to Main Question [February 14th], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But humbly to represent to Your Majesty that the continuous and continuing changes in the War Office are destructive of the best interests of Your Majesty's Army, have gravely disordered the system upon which the Regular Forces at home and abroad are raised and trained, have discouraged the Militia and Volunteers, and disclose negligence and mismanagement on the part of Your Majesty's Ministers, more particularly as to the armament of the artillery, whereby, in spite of the increased cost of the Army, its efficiency for the defence of the Empire has been diminished.'"—(Captain Norton.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

*Mr. HUNT (Shropshire, Ludlow) said it seemed to him that the new short rifle it was now endeavoured to force upon the infantry had been condemned, not only by experts outside the War Office, but by all who were fond of rifle-shooting and knew anything about it. Except that the new rifle was one and a half pounds lighter to carry, it had nothing to recommend it. For the last twenty years there had been no improvement in the shooting power of the rifle. When the new rifle was fired there was a very distinct flash to be seen, which was in itself a very great disadvantage, because it would point out to the enemy the exact place were the men who were firing were, and show them the way to get round their flank. The great horns which were put on as sight protectors must, in his opinion, of necessity interfere with the sight of the man who was looking down the barrel, one of them being large enough to obscure a man's head at 200 yards, and such a thing must militate against quick and correct shooting, for which the rifle was particularly designed. In fact, it was pretty generally acknowledged that the old rifle, in spite of the absence of the improvements which had been made in the new, was even now the better shooting weapon. However, they were told that the War Office knew best, so that all that they could do would be to take what the War Office gave, although it was not so many years ago that the War Office discovered that the rifle they were then manufacturing was absolutely useless after they had turned out 100,000. It might also be recalled that this same Department sent out rifles to South Africa sighted to shoot inaccurately, and bandoliers that shed their cartridges directly the men began to trot and scattered them on the ground like shelled peas, which cartridges were picked up by the natives and sold to the Boers. He knew that the present Secretary for War was not responsible for these things or for the new weapon, as it had been decided on two years ago. Still, hon. Members on the Government side ought to intimate to the right hon. Gentleman that unless he could show that the new rifle had been fairly tested in all ways, they would feel unable to follow him into the same lobby on the Army Estimates. As the feeling of the country was dead against conscription, he thought boys should undergo a certain amount of military discipline and training for two or three years before they left school. They might also be taught shooting with an air-gun, which was practically the same thing as teaching them to shoot with a small rifle. He had tried the air-gun for boys at an elementary school, and he could say that the results were very satisfactory. He thought they should also teach boys the enormous extent of the British Empire and the sacrifices their forefathers had made to secure it, and the easiest way to do this would be to get Mr. Rudyard Kipling to write a history of the British Empire, somewhat in the style of the Jungle Book. He thought that with the encouragement of rifle and air-gun clubs they might get a million riflemen with a certain amount of training, and it need not cost more than 26s. per man per annum. If they had had a million good marksmen during the war they need not have sent to South Africa men who could not hit a galloping elephant at 100 yards. In conclusion, was it well that the men of this country should be encouraged to believe that it was neither their business to guard against starvation in time of war, nor their duty to defend their country in time of peril?

*Mr. EUGENE WASON (Clackmannan and Kinross) hoped that none of them would ever live to see the blood tax of conscription adopted in this country. The hon. Member had suggested the use of the air-gun, but he did not know what use that would be against galloping elephants, although it was sometimes used against cats in the back garden. He did not think it would require a Rudyard Kipling to inspire our youth to shoot either galloping elephants or tom-cats with an air-gun. As an old Volunteer officer, he associated himself with all that had been said as to the lamentable falling off in the Volunteers, and he thought something might be done to encourage that force. He called the right hon. Gentleman's attention to the tribute that was paid to the City Imperial Volunteers by Lord Roberts, and he only took the City Imperial Volunteers as an illustration, because what was said of them could be said of all the Volunteer force. Speaking of the City Imperial Volunteers, the late Commander-in-Chief said they had done magnificently; that they were clever fellows and that they got better as time went on; that he would like to lead an army composed of such men. The Volunteer forces had now decreased by 50 per cent., and he thought they should be encouraged and not snubbed as they had been in the past. Was it fair that during the late War the Colonial Volunteers received 5s. a day, while our Volunteers only received 1s. a day? That was a colonial preference of which he did not think the late Colonial Secretary would approve. He suggested a medal for Volunteers of ten instead of twenty years standing, and possibly a bar for every extra five years, and a brighter ribbon. Everything should be done to encourage the force. As to the merits of the long and short rifle, it must be remembered that shooting was not the only thing for which the rifle was required. What chance would the man with the short rifle have if it came to the bayonet? He asked whether or not the inoculation against enteric had been found to be effective, and whether it was intended to make it compulsory?

SIR ALBERT ROLLIT (Islington, S.) complained of the indiscriminate criticisms of the Volunteers made by the hon. Member for North Somerset, and said the measure of their value could be estimated from the assertion of the hon. Gentleman that Members of this House were prone to support the Volunteers in order to get their votes at elections. Upon a question of such vital importance surely no such consideration could apply, especially in the case of men a very large proportion of whom were young fellows without votes at all. Since the formation of the Volunteers in 1859, when he joined, he had had many opportunities of taking part in their work and of observing the progress of various corps, and he believed that as a general rule the Volunteers deserved well of the country. If the matter were put to the test there would doubtless be found throughout the land a volume, not of depreciation, but of appreciation, and a determination to maintain what was at once a cheap, and with ordinary encouragement might be made a most efficient, force. In 1859 the formation of the Volunteers probably deterred a contemplated attack on this country, while their conduct in the recent campaign, although the duty had been discharged under most invidious conditions as to comparative pay and so forth, was of the most patriotic character. It should never be forgotten that to the Volunteers was probably due that intense feeling in favour of national defence which their establishment evoked and which had since been retained, and also the escape of the country from conscription.

The suggestion that the Volunteers should be reduced, on the plea of smaller numbers and greater efficiency, was curiously coincident with a depleted Exchequer, and he could not help thinking that probably the latter fact was a potent factor in the decision. He believed, however, that in this matter parsimony would not be economy, and that a reasonable expenditure might be made most productive to the country. Further consideration was to be given to the question, but he hoped the force would not be kept for a whole year in its present condition of uncertainty and suspense, which was doing vast injury, especially to metropolitan corps. People were apt to forget the great sacrifices made by officers and men, and the debt due to them for their maintenance of the spirit of duty instead of the spirit of leisure and pleasure. The Volunteers had done their duty to the State; had the State done its duty to the Volunteers? Whatever had been achieved had been effected in the face of every form of sentimental and practical discouragement—obsolete guns, which made training unreal, lack of or inaccessible ranges, insufficient grants for transport and equipment which had to be supplemented by the officers and themselves, and so forth. The regulations of 1901, prefaced almost by an insult, showed an utter lack of knowledge of the country and a failure to realise local conditions on the part of the War Office. The real remedy was decentralisation and more trust in the officers commanding, who knew their men and the point of efficiency they had achieved. The real requirements in a Volunteer were a knowledge of shooting, ability to march twenty or thirty miles without undue fatigue, a spirit of discipline, and some drill, but by no means the amount of parade drill hitherto exacted. If those cardinal qualities were secured a force of excellent soldiers could be turned out in a comparatively short period equal to the discharge of the duties of home defence, in regard to which they had been unduly discouraged. If instead of wasting money in the many directions in which it could be shown to have been wasted, a little more liberality were shown with a view to preventing officers and men suffering actual out-of-pocket loss, much more good would be done than by the proposed reductions. He hoped the right hon. Gentleman, who had expressed sympathy with the force, would take into careful consideration all that had been said on this matter, and come to a wise and speedy conclusion, but if he underestimated public feeling in the matter public feeling might become a very potent factor in the solution of the question.

He desired to ask the right hon. Gentleman what was intended with regard to the Militia submarine mining divisions, in one of which he was serving, the instructions for the continuance of training having been countermanded in the South of the country for this year. He also referred to what he thought was an inadvertent injustice inflicted on a class of University students who had served their country well, but who under the new regulations as to Army commissions were unfairly treated. The University of London had been reorganised, and now consisted of internal and external students, but according to the regulations only students in residential Universities were eligible for the commissions, the internal students being regarded as residential, which they were not. This, in a sense, made a distinction between the richer and the poorer classes, and he submitted that knowledge, wherever obtained, if it was able to secure the stamp of the University, ought not to have placed upon it a different value from that given to knowledge acquired by the more fortunate men who could afford to attend residential Universities.

MR. OSMOND WILLIAMS (Merionethshire) said it was unnecessary for Members of the Opposition to condemn the Government for their management of the Army; their strongest critics came from their own ranks. After nine years of Unionist control the Secretary of State was able to inform the country that the Army in its present condition was unsuited for the requirements of the nation, unready for war, and unable, as regarded either composition or numbers, to satisfy the needs of the Empire. Our Army, imperfectly organised, wasteful in its methods, unsatisfactory in its results, was one of the most costly machines ever devised. The history of the last five years abundantly attested to the truth of the right hon. Gentleman's remarks, and they were borne out by the evidence of such authorities as Sir Ian Hamilton, Lord Roberts, Lord Wolseley, and Sir Frederick Treves. Here was the stewards' account of their stewardship, and yet the Prime Minister had asked at Glasgow, What had the Government done in regard to the defensive position of the country? What they had done was obvious. They had concealed at one and the same time the almost incredible confusion of their administrative ideas and the dangerous tendencies of their foreign policy, and were now claiming as a merit that they were re-arming the artillery, and that in two years time the Army would have a gun fit for modern use. After all these years they were commencing to reform the War Office and to provide suitable guns. These were, indeed, great performances, such as no other Government could hope to excel. The same condition of affairs prevailed with regard to the Navy. The country had recently been told that the Fleet was to be disposed in the best strategic manner. The men who put that forward as a virtue had no claim on the approval of the country. Why had not the Navy always been disposed to the best advantage, and why should it ever be disposed in any other way? As to the claim that the War Office was now approaching the state of absolute perfection, it was an absolute delusion. In the opinion of experts the War Office and the Army had been changed for the worse by the Esher-Forster scheme, and he certainly did not think the nation could have any confidence in the critical sense of Ministers who had declared that the rejection of the discredited Brodrick system would be a crime against the country.

* MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: I shall have a somewhat difficult task in addressing the House to-night. I feel in the position of Mr. Midshipman Easy in his triangular duel, with the boatswain on one side of the House, and the purser's mate on the other. I can only hope that, in spite of these difficulties, I shall escape unscathed this evening. The fact of the matter is that we are discussing not one Amendment, but three Amendments. I greatly regret, in view of the interest of the subjects, that these Amendments could not have been separated. I asked the hon. Gentleman the mover of this Amendment whether he could not adopt that arrangement, but he was unable to do so. I say that not by way of reproach, but to explain why it is that I find myself called upon to deal as best I may with three important, but dissimilar, subjects which have been attacked from very dissimilar points of view by the hon. Members who have spoken. I am very glad to have this opportunity of saying to the House what I have to say on all these questions. I have always been frank with the House, and I think if I have sometimes presented a doleful view, a discouraging view, of Army matters, I think they might take that as an earnest that I shall not mislead them, intentionally at any rate, if I represent some things as not being as bad as they would have us suppose, and if I give them some encouragement, which I am afraid very few of them have found for themselves.

There have been two branches of attack. One has been general and the other, which again divides itself into two parts, has been specific. Let me remind the House what this attack is. We are told, in the words of the Amendment, that the policy of the Government has been "destructive of the best interests of His Majesty's Army, has gravely disordered the system upon which the Regular Forces at home and abroad are raised and trained, has discouraged the Militia and Volunteers, and discloses negligence and mismanagement on the part of His Majesty's Ministers, more particularly as to the armament of the artillery, whereby, in spite of the increased cost of the Army, its efficiency for the defence of the Empire has been diminished." I intend to traverse by a direct negative every one of those assertions. I propose to traverse them in general and in detail. I propose to assert and to prove that not one of those propositions is correct.

I will deal first with the general attack. We have been told that the Regular Army has been disordered, that the Auxiliary Forces have been discouraged, and that the efficiency of the Army for the defence of the Empire has been diminished. I am going to endeavour to prove to the House—and I think I shall prove—that the Regular Army is not disordered, that the Auxiliary Forces are not discouraged, and that the efficiency of the Army for the defence of the Empire is not diminished. I do not say now, I have never stated in this House, and I am not likely to say, that either the Army or the Auxiliary Forces are as efficient as they ought to be, or as efficient as we should desire to see them. The whole raison d'etre of my being here at all, as far as I know, is that I have done my best in the time that has been given to me to alter a state of things of which I, in common with most of the Members of this House, do not approve. My point is, and always has been, that our forces are not in the state of efficiency that they ought to be in; and my endeavour has been—and I think I shall show I have endeavoured with some success—with the aid of my colleagues on the Army Council, to make them more efficient than they were. Let hon. Members recall one small circumstance. I had not been long in the office I now occupy when, in July last, I was permitted to submit a proposal for the reorganisation of the Army, and much earlier for the reorganisation of the administration of the Army. Now I ask hon. Members whether seven months is a very long time wherein to perform a task of that kind? I ask hon. Members to remember when they charge me with being dilatory—for that is one charge, while another is that I have been too hasty—that up to this moment I have not been able to submit Estimates since I made my proposals to the House, and to remember that the whole of the Army and the Auxiliary Forces are serving under engagements, and that anything you can do to alter these must take a long time. The work of putting the Army on the basis on which we should like to see it will occupy the House and the country for many long years. The most I can hope to prove—and I have this hope—is that during these seven months I have been able to devote to the reorganisation of the Army I have not been idle, and that the comparatively longer time devoted to the reorganisation of the administration of the Army has been equally well occupied.

I should like to say a word or two about the administration of the Army. We have been told that we have disorganised the whole system. Let me briefly recount what has taken place. At the beginning of last year the Esher Committee reported, and I was appointed to carry out the recommendations made. The Committee recommended the institution of an Army Council, and that Council has been formed; the appointment of an Inspector-General, with the subordinate officers necessary to carry out his duties, and these appointments have been made, the officers carrying out with satisfaction the duties entrusted to them: while a staff of Directors has been appointed, their functions defined, and they are now working harmoniously and successfully in their separate departments. The whole of the financial department, in pursuance of the Committee's recommendations, had to be reorganised and decentralised. I do not know whether hon. Members suppose this can be done in a day. I can assure them it was a laborious and complicated operation. These are early days, and I am not so sanguine as to prophesy that the system now instituted for the whole of the United Kingdom will work as successfully as we hope it will, but it has been a very difficult and elaborate piece of work which we have at length brought to a conclusion. The House has expressed a preference for a division of the Army not into Army Corps. I never personally attached so much importance to that system as others did, and my only objection was that the name was inaccurate, for the divisions did not correspond to what is known in military language as Army Corps. It has been the work of the War Office to replace this organisation by a divisional organisation more suited, as we believe, to the needs of the country. We were charged with the creation of a General Staff, and we have formulated the whole of the duties of the staff, their emoluments have been approved by the Treasury, and their duties defined. We have not made the whole of the appointments, for I think we could not make a graver mistake than to hasten in a matter of this kind. We must take care to get the best qualified men and to have a General Staff worthy of the name. The Intelligence Department has been practically doubled, and many new branches have been added. The Leader of the Opposition spoke of the heavy cost of barracks, but I may remind him that we have given effect to our promise, and have already stopped barrack-building to the extent of £1,500,000; we have created a new barrack-building organisation at the War Office, and we have put the business of barrack-building under the supervision of an experienced civilian, who has had the control of the erection of such buildings as the Rowton Houses in London and Birmingham. The experience he has had well qualifies him for devising barrack accommodation for the comfort and welfare of the soldier. The hon. Member for Ilkeston asked whether we have made any progress with the medical service. When I tell him that not only have careful observers made themselves acquainted with developments during the Russo-Japanese War, but we have at last commenced the erection of the medical college in which he is interested, I do not think there is altogether a bad record for the first half year of the work of the Army Council. I can assure the House these things take considerable time. I will not say more of the Army Council than that I believe it is destined to be of enormous value to the Army. I also believe that the Selection Board, which is part of the organisation, has given to officers and men of the Army an absolute assurance that recommendations for promotion will be influenced by no other considerations than the recommendations of the officers acquainted with the men who are serving under them.

Now, we are told that the efficiency of the Army has been diminished and the cost increased, and I counter that by a denial, and will prove that the cost has not been increased but diminished, and that efficiency has been increased. Hon. Members have said there has been a great increase in cost since the period before the war, and that there has not been corresponding efficiency. Now let me deal with that. Is it true that there has been a large increase of cost since the war? A great deal has taken place since the war. We have learned a great deal, and hon. Members who deprecate any change seem to forget the charges brought by the War Commission in respect of nearly every branch of the Army. The expenditure before the war was £20,617,000; now it is £28,830,000. That, of course, is an increase in expenditure. But we are told that there is no increase of efficiency, and I will, therefore, point out what has been the increase in efficiency corresponding to this increase in expenditure. I am speaking of the period before the war. There has been added to the Royal Artillery, in obedience, I believe, to the opinion of every military authority, sixty-six units of Artillery, batteries or companies, and twenty-two and a half troops to the Royal Engineers. There had been a deficiency in the technical departments of the Royal Engineers. New needs have caused new developments, and telegraph and bridging troops, post office and wireless telegraphy men, have all had to be added to the Army. The infantry has been increased by fourteen battalions, the Army Service Corps has been increased by 1,263 men and the Army Medical Corps by 462 officers and 1,210 men. Is that not some value for the money we have spent? We have added 35,000 men to the Army during that time; and when you put that result against the expenditure I think that it is not an unsatisfactory equivalent. But a great deal more has been done. An hon. Member spoke of a deficiency of stores. What has happened since the war? We have put the British Army in regard to stores in a position it has never been in since it was an Army. The whole of the Mowatt programme has been initiated and carried out to the last item. Is that no addition to the efficiency of the Army? What has happened in recent years? Has there been no reduction? The normal Estimates of 1903–4 were £29,800,000; last year they were £28,830,000, or a reduction of £970,000.

I think, therefore, that I have proved to the satisfaction of the House that we have got value for the money we have expended. But I cannot prove that the expenditure as it now stands is the expenditure as it ought to be. I believe that, despite what has been said to-night and last night, when every speech delivered was one in favour of more expenditure. Last year I said that the first rule we have to lay down is that true economy consists in making a machine to do our work, that anything short of that was a waste of money, and anything in excess of it was extravagance. I by no means assert that our Army is perfectly adapted to our needs; and in so far as we are spending money on things we do not want we are wasting money. It is my desire to do everything I can to produce a state of things wherein the expenditure shall be on the right thing and for the right purpose. I desire reduction of expenditure but you cannot make great changes in six months, or perhaps in six years. The whole of our Army is serving on engagements, and when suggestions are made for disbanding hon. Members must remember that any step of the kind would immediately mean an increased cost in the Estimates for the remuneration we have to give to the men whose engagements are suddenly broken off. This process must be in all respects gradual and consistent. If we are to reduce the cost of the Army I think I can show that there is but one way, and that is to reduce the number of men in the Army. Until you make up your minds to do that there will be no serious reduction in the expenditure on the Army. It is said in the Amendment that the Army is inefficient. The strength of the Army now stands at 275,551 men. I believe that in every material particular, except one, our Army has never been more efficient than now. The Leader of the Opposition made a statement which, if it had been true, would have been serious. He said that we were sacrificing the Reserve for the Army. That is a misapprehension. I am positive that the present administration of the War Office would never have taken any step so fatal as that would be. What are the facts? In the last six months the Army Reserve has increased from 74,000 to 77,673 men; and during the coming year there will be an increase in the Army Reserve larger, I believe, than has ever been made to it in the same length of time. So far, therefore, from its being true that the Army Reserve is falling, I say that it is increasing by leaps and bounds, and bids fair to become the largest it has ever been.

I do not, therefore, think the charge that the policy of the Government has rendered the Army inefficient has been established. But there is a point which is a weak one. It was thought necessary during the war to create a new species of enlistment. It was suited to the circumstances of the war, and it brought the men that we required. It carried us through the crisis. But the crisis has passed, and the need has gone for a system not suited to our present requirements. I mean the system of three years enlistment. The result of the three-years system has caused the War Office very grave anxiety, so grave that it has had a very marked effect upon the policy of the War Office. It is our primary business before we undertake any changes, even if they be improvements, to keep the Army fit for war; and if we had allowed the three-years enlistment to go on unchecked the Army would have become totally unfit. What were the conditions to which some of the battalions were being reduced by the continuance of the three-years system of enlistment? One battalion at home had 623 men under two years service and 42 per cent. of the men under twenty years of age. Another had 700 men under two years service and 44 per cent. under twenty years of age. Another had 77 per cent. under two years service and 55 per cent. under twenty years of age. Some of the battalions in the Colonies were in the same case. There was a battalion in South Africa which had, out of a total strength of 842 men, 391 under two years service and 233 under twenty years of age; another that had 38 per cent. under twenty years of age and 65 per cent. under two years service. So serious was the condition of things that when we came to arrange for the Indian drafts we found ourselves face to face with a condition which it was impossible to continue. There was a battalion that required 483 men for the Indian drafts, and had 78 men available to fill the drafts. Another required 263 men and had 25 available for the draft. It was necessary to take immediate steps to remedy this great deficiency. The Army Council took those steps. I was gravely warned that the step would be a failure, and would be productive of most serious consequences. But my anticipations were favourable, and they have been absolutely realised. We decided that as a temporary measure—and it is temporary only—we would have a system of nine years enlistment for the infantry. Hon. Members have spoken of that as a long term. As a matter of fact it is but one year longer than the ordinary term which it superseded. The seven-years term was, as regards two-thirds of the Army, and all the Army that went to India, in reality an eight-years term. But we have decided, for reasons which I think I could show to be adequate, on a nine-years term, and what has been the result? We have already taken over 7,500 long-service men for the infantry, and in a few months we shall add 30,000 long-service men to the infantry; and I hear from every side that the quality of the recruits shows improvement. Were we not justified in taking that step? It has also had the incidental advantage of wiping out the serious deficiency in the Brigade of Guards. The Army is thus being strengthened and is being brought back after the war to a position to furnish all the Indian drafts, and the Brigade of Guards has been brought up to full strength. But this process has had one inevitable consequence. It has put off the commencement of short-service enlistment. That would have been a grave thing indeed, if it were not for the immense influx into the Reserve which has taken place and which is to be increased in the coming year. Because we shall have an unparalleled entry into the Reserve in the coming year, it has become not only safe, but most desirable, to continue this long-service recruiting; and we shall continue it until we have restored the full measure of the long-service element in the Army necessary to furnish the Indian drafts.

A word about the Militia, the Leader of the Opposition commented upon the Bill which has been introduced in another place, and he asked whether the utilisation of the Militia, or the taking of powers to send the Militia abroad, would affect the ballot. No, Sir, that is not the case. Militia enlisted under the ballot are under a different Act from those enlisted for ordinary purposes. They are called the territorial Militia; and the possibility of recruiting men compulsorily for service abroad can never arise. I have been somewhat misrepresented with regard to this question of the Militia. It was stated by several hon. Members that I had proposed to get rid of the Militia. There is no foundation at all for that statement. I had expressed, and I have always entertained the view, that it would be far better to ally a portion of the Regular Army with the Militia as the territorial Army of this country; and I have little doubt that that will be the ultimate solution of this problem. But I said last year that I was not in a position to make that proposal to the House. On the contrary, I said—

> "We must maintain the Militia; and we must endeavour to make it effective for its work. . . . In a great national force of that kind no Minister can effect a change like this unless he has the good will of Parliament and of the nation. . . . If it be the will of the House that we should maintain the Militia, then we must do it; but on one condition only—that the Militia must be made effective for the purpose of war."

I also said, and I repeat—

> "We must cut off from the Militia those units whch are plainly redundant for our requirements."

That was my intention then, and it is the intention of the Government now; and we have given an earnest that we do intend to make use of the Militia by introducing this Bill, which will add the Militia to the ranks of the Army for the purpose of fighting over-seas. We have given another earnest of our intention. We have raised the physical standard for the Militia. I do not myself think that these steps alone will be sufficient to make the Militia all that the Militia ought to be. I am inclined to agree with the hon. Member for Bristol when he said that even a two-years period was too short to make a soldier. That is an opinion which is entertained by the vast majority of soldiers; but if that be so, then I think we shall have to consider carefully whether a period so short as we now impose on the Militia is enough, under any conceivable circumstances, to qualify them for taking the field against a foreign enemy.

I now come to the question which has really occupied the whole attention of the House during these two days. I have been astonished to find that two not unimportant parts of our military forces have been almost entirely left out of sight. I dimly realised from one or two references that were made that we had a Regular Army. I did not realise and I heard nothing to make me realise, that we had a Navy. [Mr. SEELY: This is an Army debate.] That is precisely the point. It is because we will persist in discussing the Army as if it had no connection with the Navy that so many of our mistakes have been made. I come now to the matter which has excited so much attention in the House—the Volunteers. I have had many counsels in regard to the Volunteers. My hon. friend the Member for the Isle of Wight told us that the Volunteers were not intended for the defence of this country, but that they were to preserve the military spirit. They were to be a school of arms, and they were to be chiefly utilised for going across the sea in time of war. I do not quarrel with that application; but I confess that I do not exactly see at the present moment that the Volunteers are calculated to fulfil that particular purpose. I have a view from which I have never varied in regard to the Volunteers. If they do fulfil, and so far as they do fulfil, a real purpose, it is our business to make them as efficient as we can, and if they do not fulfil that purpose or are in excess of that purpose we must face the fact. We have heard it stated on evidence to which there is no contradiction that there is in the Volunteer force a large number of men who ought not to be in it; that the Volunteer force in its present condition is not fitted for war. Let us get it out of our heads at once that there is any distinction between war with a foreign enemy and war with any one else. If our troops fight any one it will be a foreign enemy, and if they do fight that enemy he will be under the best leadership and under the conditions most unfavourable to ourselves. If the Volunteers cannot undertake that task they are not fitted to perform service for this country. But I believe the verdict which has been pronounced upon the Volunteers is not a final verdict, or one which we ought to accept. I believe that we ought to deal with the Volunteers so that it will be impossible for any Commission to say in the future that they are not fit to face foreign troops; and it is the desire and intention of the Army Council so to deal with them that it shall be impossible to say in the future that they will be unfit to face foreign troops. I have had to face this problem from the point of view, not only of a person responsible for the Volunteers, but for the whole of the armed forces of the country, and also as a member of a Government and, indeed, of a House of Commons absolutely pledged to a reduction, or at any rate a curtailment, of the expenditure on the Army. I ask, is it really contended that we should reduce largely upon the Regular Army, that we should reduce expenditure upon the Navy, and on the Militia, and that the one purpose for which large additions are to be made to the Army Estimates is the Volunteers? I do not believe that that is a proposition which any one in his cooler moments will sustain. I believe that when this House comes to consider what are the needs of the Regular Army and the calls upon it, they will determine that those needs shall be filled in the first instance. They will insist upon economy and reduction, but they will not rob the Regular Army even for such a laudable idea as increasing the Volunteers. The hon. Member for Sheffield spoke of some words of mine with regret. I am sure no words of mine could bear the construction he put upon them. I was explaining to a gathering of Volunteer officers—and many Volunteer officers have given me their confidence—what I believe to be the real truth of the situation. I believe every Volunteer officer, with very few exceptions, who cares about the force, who understands its difficulties, and who is anxious about its future, agrees with me that it would be wise and well for the Volunteer force to consent to a reduction in its numbers in order to obtain an increase in efficiency.

Sir HOWARD VINCENT (Sheffield, Central): No.

*Mr. ARNOLD-FORSTER: At present you have a vicious system existing in the Volunteers under which the capitation grant is so allotted that it is absolutely the interest of the commanding officer to take in men independently of their merit or efficiency. Now that is a system which, I think, stands self-condemned. It is a system which we ought to alter. We ought to make it the duty and the interest of a commanding officer to make his battalion as good as it can be made, and at the same time to make him certain that by doing so he will not lose the money which is necessary for the purpose. That is what I believe we can do, and what I believe we ought to do. Here again I come to one of those direct traverses which I have had to make so often of what has been said. My hon. friend the Member for the Isle of Wight spoke of the Volunteers as dwindling away.

Major SEELY: I said the officers of the metropolitan forces.

*Mr. ARNOLD-FORSTER: Well, I am glad to accept his limitation, and I am very glad it has been made. But I should like to point out that, so far from its being the fact that the Volunteers are dwindling away, the Volunteers, who have been so discredited and ill-used, have increased during the last year by no less than 4,000 men, and during that year the regulations which have been so trying have resulted in 175,000 men—a larger force by far than we have ever had before—going into camp. Now, Sir, there must be some slight exaggeration in the charges made in regard to the Volunteers.

Sir HOWARD VINCENT: Does my right hon. friend not remember that the officers are 2,700 short?

*Mr. ARNOLD-FORSTER: Yes, I remember it well, and I am going to speak of it in a moment. That is the really serious question in regard to the Volunteers, not only in regard to the Volunteers, but in regard to the Army generally. But it is not correct to say that the Volunteers have dwindled or are dwindling. So far from that being the case, I have reports of increased enlistments in the force.

Sir HOWARD VINCENT: No, no!

*Mr. ARNOLD-FORSTER: No one knows the Volunteer force, or at any rate a portion of it, better than my hon. friend doe[illegible]nd he has said that certain of the L[illegible] Volunteer corps have suffered. He has spoken of what are known as the special corps, and he has suggested that some special treatment should be applied to those corps. Well, I am not quite prepared to agree with that proposal, because I think that special treatment involves differentiation among the corps, which is very hard to frame, and which I think produces jealousies and difficulties. But I do believe that the object which the hon. Member has at heart can be obtained without classification of that kind. While I am speaking about classification I should like to say, for the comfort of those members of the Volunteer force who have so greatly disliked the idea of classification—which, by the way, exists now—that I do not desire or propose to press this plan of dividing Volunteers into two classes. I have taken the advice of Volunteer officers, and taken it all the more readily because I believe that we can arrange matters so to their entire satisfaction that this classification will take place of itself. Let me state my proposition. We cannot add money to the Army Estimates. I do not believe this Government or any other Government can do it. We can, however, enormously add to the money available for the effective Volunteers. The Vote for next year is really a Vote in arrear, a Vote on account of the expenditure of last year. It is impossible to make any large changes during the coming year. Something we can do; something we intend to do. The hon. Member spoke of the difficulty of getting ranges. It is an enormous difficulty. If you cannot get the range to the men you must get the men to the range. We hope to make much larger provision than hitherto for assisting Volunteer corps to take men to the ranges. We hope to increase the grant to the Militia and Volunteer artillery. But those are small matters, and the large matters, the really important matters, can never come until there are ample funds available for granting those increases. I have taken a great deal of counsel with Volunteer officers; and I ask every one in this House whether I do not correctly interpret their views when I say that the present needs of the Volunteers are more officers, better trained officers, more ranges, more firing, both rifle and artillery firing, more training of non-commissioned officers, larger contributions towards the expenses of the officers in camp, a longer time in camp, greater freedom as to going into camp and stopping out of it, and, at any rate, the embryo of a transport organisation and a divisional organisation. Those things, I believe, we could get if there is only reasonable co-operation on the part of the Volunteers, as I am persuaded there will be. We can get all those things, and more, if this reduction—not a large reduction, I speak of a moderate reduction—of the Volunteer force be effected. It will involve a change in the incidence of the grant. It will be impossible to continue the grant which brings in as a matter of finance a number of men who are not required in order to keep the force going. I think, and I hope we shall in the future—we cannot commence this year, the expenses are far too great—be able to get that liberty of going into camp for a fortnight which is now accorded to only a few special corps. We ought to give to men who go into camp a much larger allowance than a man can get for one week; and if this reduction be effected we can give the whole of that allowance, which comes to as much as £4, in addition to the capitation grant for a fortnight's camp. It will involve a sacrifice in respect of those men who do not go to camp at all; but I have gone very carefully into the case of nearly every Volunteer regiment, and I assure hon. Members that if this is accepted and put into operation there will be no loss to regiments which can fall in, with any reasonable closeness, with the duty which I think we are entitled to ask them to face.

An hon. Member has spoken of there being some want of confidence between the Director of Auxiliary Forces and myself. That is a dream. It is perfectly true that the Director of Auxiliary Forces said he hoped all uncertainty with regard to the Volunteers might soon be swept away; but it was not in his power, or in my power, to forestall the decision with regard to questions of finance, over which he has no control, But to suppose that the Director of the Auxiliary Forces and myself are not in constant and confidential communication with regard to all matters concerning the Volunteers is an entire mistake. I have made a very short and imperfect statement about the Volunteers; and I should like to go into the matter more fully on the Volunteer Vote when we reach the Estimates. I maintain, however, that we are entitled to ask the Volunteers to submit to the same reduction we desire to enforce in other branches of the Army.

If they submit to that reduction we can place at their disposal in a reasonable time all those advantages which will tend to make them what I know they all desire to be—a real contribution to the defence of the Empire. I must at the same time call attention to one view of the Volunteer force, with regard to the truth of which it would be unfortunate if the House were led astray. It has been suggested that the Volunteer force is by itself an immense contribution to the Army in the field. That is a delusion. I am not blaming the Volunteers, who have other calls and duties to meet. I would remind hon. Members what took place during the South African War. There were three calls for Volunteers. We obtained first 11,000 men, then we obtained 5,300. The war still went on and the whole Army Reserve was called out, and men were brought from every part of the world. We then obtained 2,580 Volunteers. What had happened in the meanwhile? The Volunteers had increased by 40,000 men. I do not blame the Volunteers for a moment; they are enlisted for work in this country; but it is an absolute delusion to suppose that they can be relied on for furnishing those great additions which war would certainly demand for the Regular Army.

SIR HOWARD VINCENT: Does the right hon. Gentleman include the Volunteers who joined the Yeomanry to the number of many thousands and the number who joined the Regular Army?

* MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: I have not included those who joined the Yeomanry, because many joined merely for the purpose of going out at 5s. a day. The number who joined the Yeomanry was 6,209.

I will summarise what I have said in regard to this part of the indictment. It is not true that while the Army has increased in cost it has diminished in efficiency. I deny that it is disordered, that it is less efficient for the defence of the Empire. But I must not forget that I have to meet not only one Amendment, but two or three Amendments.

I must say something on two very important questions. The first is the question of field guns. No one can doubt the importance of this matter, but I do believe there has been an enormous amount of misconception in regard to it. What has taken place? It has been said that every other country in Europe has quick-firing guns and that we have not quick-firing guns. As a matter of fact, the United States of America have not quick-firing guns. Austria is supposed to have adopted a design, but it is not known that any guns are actually under manufacture. Belgium is still making trials. France and Denmark have a quick-firing equipment. Bulgaria has adopted a quick-firing gun, which is under manufacture. Germany recently armed with a gun that is not a true quick-firer, and that country is consequently in great difficulties, as expense prohibits re-arming again. It is now proposed to mount these guns on long recoil carriages and so convert them into quick-firing guns. Italy partially re-armed in 1901–2 with a gun which is not a true quick-firing gun. Portugal has adopted a gun, which is under manufacture. Russia obtained a gun in 1901–2 that is not quick-firing. In Switzerland and Turkey the gun is still under manufacture. Spain is still making trials. These facts do not quite bear out the statement that the whole of Europe except England is already armed with quick-firing guns. As far back as 1900 inquiries were begun as to whether a new gun should not be substituted for the old one. In January, 1901, a Committee was appointed and a Report was received on May 8th. In July, 1901, conditions were formulated and designs called for. In February and March, 1902, orders were given to the trade and Ordnance Factories for trial guns, in August and September the guns were supplied, and in December, 1902, four experimental batteries were ordered. In September, 1903, the trials of the guns began, and in October a report was made that alterations were necessary owing to the weakness of some of the designs of the carriages. On March 30th, 1904, the equipment was finally recommended. It may be said that this experimental period was unduly prolonged. I will give the opinion of one of the most powerful and urgent critics of the Government—

"It may seem that two-and-a-half years was an inordinate time for the Committee to have taken in submitting its recommendations, but only those who are acquainted with the minute details of modern equipment and the work involved in manufacturing a specimen gun of a new type can appreciate the difficulties of coming to a decision on the several points involved and the inevitable delay before the trials could have taken place. It would undoubtedly have been a mistake if the War Office had at once come to a decision based on the sample guns at first produced. . . There can be no doubt that the guns eventually recommended by the Committee are as good as any that can be produced at the present day, and are probably superior to those with which any other European army is equipped."

The Report of the Committee was received in March last, and on May 5th an order was given for the manufacture of the guns. The preliminary processes are exceedingly long and difficult, but the manufacture of the guns was proceeded with as rapidly as possible after the necessary preliminaries were completed. I said last year that we were going within the space of one year to produce 126 of these guns at a certain cost. We are going to produce 126 guns at a less cost. It appears to be supposed in some quarters that no order was given until late last year. That is an absolute delusion. An order was given for all that could be made, and I still think the factories may be unable to earn all the money we may be able to pay them within the time. We anticipate that by the end of the financial year we shall have 126 guns with almost all their wagons, by July another fifty, and that within thirty months of the first order we shall have nearly 1,000 guns with eighteen wagons per battery, 1,000 rounds of ammunition per gun, all spare parts, and the harness. The idea that we were going to wait years to get these guns is an absolute myth. There has been, and there will be, no delay, and I think that if hon. Members who criticise the War Office would look a little further they will find that the record we are making is not a bad one, when I say that in the United States the completion of the gun programme will have taken six years, and that the number of guns produced will be 160, and fifty of these made in Germany.

Now, Sir, I come to the question of the rifle. Here, again, I do not think the whole of the facts are fully in the possession of the House. I trust the House will not think I am insensible to this important question. Within a fortnight of going to the War Office I wrote a memorandum to Sir Henry Brackenbury, and I put to him a whole series of questions with regard to the rifle. He answered them in a way entirely reassuring, and the rifle then decided upon was allowed to proceed; but it is impossible for any one to be insensible to the great variety of opinion on this question. I do not over-value, but I do value, the reports of experts; but I think that men who are firing with their own rifles and under all the Bisley conditions are not the best judges, perhaps, of the real military value of a rifle, and it would, perhaps, be more interesting if in that report we had had some details of the actual results arrived at. It is not the fact that this rifle was produced primarily as a cavalry rifle. It was originally designed in response to a request for a shorter and lighter rifle for the Army as a whole. The Committee recommended the rifle on that basis, but the operations of that Committee came to an end on the outbreak of the South African War. During the war the Commander-in-Chief, recognising that a short rifle was most desirable, requested that the work of the Committee might be taken up where it had been dropped, and a short rifle produced. And the short rifle was produced, and, with many improvements, it is now the rifle which is being issued. But I am as sensible as any Member of this House of the theoretical advantage of a long over a short rifle. Against that advantage you must put the advantages which are claimed by soldiers for short rifles. Hon. Members seem to suppose that no trial has been made, but we have issued large numbers to seven different regiments. We have had reports from the officers in command of the men who have had those rifles, and in every instance, with only some exceptions as to technical details which always occur in such cases, their report has been most favourable to these rifles in the hands of the men. We have sent the rifle to India, and Lord Kitchener telegraphs—

"As far as I have been able to test it the new rifle fulfils the requirements. In my opinion it is a better balanced, handier, as well as lighter, weapon, and more suitable for war on the Indian frontier than the long rifle."

Another telegram from the commanding officer of the Seventh Division, dated February 22nd, says—

> "Practising daily with short rifle since 11th. All ranks speak highly of it. Other reports from regiments all favour it in comparison with the long rifle. With so short an experience can hardly express definite opinion. Its merits appear to be lightness, handiness, better sighting, balance, and pull off. Defects principally in cavalry, weak safety catch; bolt and rifle should be connected, lower band attachment insecure, these can all be easily rectified."

In the face of that and of the universal recommendation of every military authority whom I have consulted it would be a rash act to accept the adverse view of the rifle expert; but I do not under-value the enormous importance of certainty in a matter of this kind; and I assure the House that we intend to make the fullest and most exhaustive trial of this rifle in the hands of the troops before we commit the country or the Exchequer to the large expenditure which the adoption of the rifle would involve. We must adopt it for the mounted troops. We shall continue to manufacture rifles sufficient to supply the wants of the cavalry and artillery; and in the time that must elapse before these have been manufactured we shall have carried out most exhaustive trials both at home and abroad which will put beyond a shadow of doubt all question as to the merits or demerits of this rifle. I do not believe the House of Commons can demand less; I do not think it could require more. Another feature is the cost of converting the long into the short rifle. It is possible it may be desirable, when the time comes for considering the conversion of the long rifle to a short rifle for the use of the Auxiliary Forces, it may be deemed better, as the Volunteer force would not be campaigning in foreign countries, to content ourselves with adding the charger-loading instead of converting the barrel as well. That, however, is not a matter which affects the immediate present, but the comparatively distant future. If the War Office is then as at present there will be no slackness in experiments which will leave no doubt whatever that we are taking the right course. I have tried to rebut as far as I was able the charges brought against His Majesty's Government. I said at the outset and now repeat that we have done something, but far less than must be done before we have reached anything like the position which we consider essential.

If I were to put one question above all others which must occupy the attention of the Army Council it would be the question of officers. It is the question of the Army. We are doing our best to solve that question. It is not correct that the change in the Army is discouraging officers or is depriving us of a supply. In the Guards there is a lamentable shortage, due to causes easily explained. I hope we may be able in a few weeks to propound a plan by which this emergency may be met by what I may call emergency measures, and a proper number of officers found for the brigade of Guards. But as regards the Army generally, the difficulty is not reluctance of officers to come forward. It is an unfortunate fact that no fewer than 400 young men properly qualified could not be taken into the Army because the accommodation for them at Sandhurst and Woolwich is not adequate. That state of things we must remedy at an early date; and not only must we get more officers into the Army, but we must have a large reserve of officers, because the demand for officers when war comes will be enormous. We must, in preparing the Army for peace, contemplate the contingency of war. We have to keep up an Army on a basis on which no other nation in the world keeps up an Army—an Army which has to perform in peace the duties other armies perform in war—an Army serving abroad. We require a very large number of officers for the Army, and we shall require in war time an increase of officers which has to be counted by thousands. That is one of the points now engaging the attention of the Army Council. We have already arrived at a conclusion, and I shall make a proposal before long with regard to a reserve of officers for the cavalry. We have appointed a very well-manned and competent Committee to inquire how we can increase the reserve of officers we already possess for the Regular Army. We are fully alive to the need for getting more officers for the Volunteers; and the way we can get them is by making them feel they are wanted, by making their regiments efficient, by making them feel there is need for them in the military scheme of the country, and by relieving them of the cost they are now called upon to undertake.

I have seen much criticism, and some of it, no doubt, has been just. A great deal of it, I think, has not been just. I have been asked whether I took military opinion with regard to the conclusions I have formed. I think, perhaps, I have been somewhat unjustly accused in that matter. I should like to read to the House the views of a military officer of distinction, who has a knowledge of the Army, and who has a knowledge of the War Office; and, speaking of the proposals I have the honour of laying before the House, and which have been so much criticised, he says—

> "The evils stated exist, one and all, and it has been long patent to anyone who would see, that the condition of matters in the Army have been going from bad to worse; and further, that nothing short of very drastic measures, which it was not hitherto thought that any Minister or Government would have the courage to adopt, could give us a satisfactory Army, and one at all commensurate with the public money expended on it. Matters have gone from bad to worse ever since the Cardwell reforms with their unpractical and impossible schemes were set on foot, and all attempts at reform which have since been adopted have been at the best new patches put upon rotten cloth. The present scheme is a complete one as far as the infantry is concerned, the backbone of the Army, to whom the other arms are subsidiary. For years past most men who have thought much on Army matters have watched the decadence of the Army under the present system, and have come to the conclusion that our only chance of meeting our military requirements in a satisfactory manner lay in our having a long service and a short service Army, the former for general service at all times, the latter for home service, except in the case of serious war. This, I am convinced, would be the solution of our difficulties. The Militia question is far more difficult. No one can doubt but that sixty such battalions as proposed will be worth as a fighting force far and away more than the whole of the present Militia force, which by sundry means is being killed. The proposed system would change all this, and raise the status and efficiency of the Militia to a very high degree. The scheme appears to be quite sound, but the difficulties appear to be the abolition of a number of Militia units. On every occasion on which it has been proposed to disband a depleted Militia unit, or to amalgamate two weak ones, strong opposition has been raised, and, as a rule, the county influence, backed by a Member of Parliament, has been too strong, and the unit has been left. The plan of making the battalion a home for the men throughout their service is excellent. The establishment of the large depôts is the only sound way of feeding the battalions abroad. The territorial system has been, as stated, hitherto a sham; if it is to be otherwise, the county battalions should be as far as possible in their counties, and only away from them for manœuvres. The strength which would be attained under this proposed scheme is highly satisfactory, and no previous system has given anything like the number of men who have had so much training. The establishment of the ready or striking force has long been felt to be a necessity. No one has, however, hitherto attempted seriously to arrange it. I venture to consider the scheme as one perfectly adapted to fulfil the needs of our most difficult and complex system, and the only considerable difficulty I foresee is that of making clear to the public that sixty battalions of such Militia as proposed are infinitely preferable to the present force, which, out of an establishment of 3,400 officers, has a deficiency of over 800, and out of one of 123,510 Militiamen has a deficiency of over 31,000, to make good either of which under present conditions passeth the wit of man."

[Opposition cries of "Name."] The name was that of General Sir Alfred Turner.

I apologise for keeping the House so long, but I have had to deal with a variety of subjects. I maintain that the position I have maintained from the first has been correct. I believe my crime, if I have committed one, is that I have attacked this matter too zealously. I do think that an Army which is not thoroughly serviceable is too expensive a luxury for this country to keep up. An hon. Member has said that Volunteers had ceased to have any fun, and, therefore, were going out of it. I do not believe that is the spirit of the Volunteers at all, and I think that is a very dangerous spirit in which to approach Army matters. I believe absolutely in two main propositions. We must, in the first place, have a reduction of expenditure, and, secondly, we must have greater efficiency; and I can see no way of arriving at these two conclusions other than by cutting down expenditure and by altering organisation. If the House is content with the state of things that existed after the war there will be no change; if they are content to pay a larger sum on the Army Estimates they will maintain the present organisation: but if they do believe that economy is essential we must at any rate have very clear ideas as to how that economy is to be obtained. Hon. Gentlemen who believe that a change is necessary and economy essential will be as struck as I have been during these debates by the want of any constructive plan of anything but criticism, of any proposal that could result in economy or contribute to the efficiency of the Army. I contend that every item of the indictment is incorrect—that we have not diminished the efficiency of the Army, that we have not disordered the Regular Forces at home or abroad, that we have not discouraged the Militia and Volunteers, that we have not been negligent in the matter of the re-armament of the artillery, that we have pursued a perfectly reasonable course in regard to the armament of the infantry; and on all these grounds I may truly say that the efficiency of the Army for the defence of the Empire has not been diminished, but has been increased.

MR. WINSTON CHURCHILL (Oldham) said that the House would readily acknowledge the lucidity and the earnestness of the statement of the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary of State for War, and he believed that from that side of the House there was a very sincere desire to spare him, as far as possible, unnecessary trouble and anxiety at a time when his physical strength caused some concern to his friends. He must submit to the House, however, that the right hon. Gentleman had not made any real reply to the main outlines of the charge contained in the Amendment, and in the speeches of the mover and seconder. The right hon. Gentleman had told a very fine and glowing tale of the multitudinous activities of the Department of which he was the head. He had given glowing accounts of almost every branch of the military service, and one would have thought from his language that the War Office was at the present moment a very near approach to a heaven upon earth. But if they were to judge from private accounts of the condition of the Army, very different language would have to be held. The right hon. Gentleman's tale was full of promises and of glorification, but they had heard this sort of thing more than once before in the course of the present Parliament. Almost every year when the time came round to discuss Army matters they were offered something entirely new which occupied the attention of the War Office, but after a few short weeks these new proposals vanished into nebulous, but usually costly, obscurity. Those statements should always be judged not at the moment they were made or in detail, but by main results spread over a period of years. Four years ago, when the present Parliament was elected, military matters were necessarily paramount, and the number of military men returned to the House was necessarily more numerous than on former occasions. He would point out the great power which had been bestowed on those gentlemen. The whole fortunes of the Army had been placed in their hands. Nothing they asked for had been refused; every scheme brought forward, however grotesque and costly, had been carried through by force of the Government's obedient majority. Well, as they had had all the power, so must they have all the responsibility.

He should like to notice one or two main facts which seemed to him to derogate from the general statement of the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary of State for War as to the efficiency and economy of the Army. There had been a great lack of continuity in our military policy during the last four or five years. Nothing was more important than continuity in the policy of the Army. It was not a limited liability company which could be recast or reconstructed in accordance with the state of the money market; and if subjected to frequent and violent changes very grave and grievous consequences might ensue, which it might take years to repair. He asked the House to notice one or two of these changes in policy. Of course there was the Army Corps scheme, with large staff organisation, barracks, and so on. All that had been swept into the past. Four years ago the late Secretary of State for War proposed to add the garrison battalions to the Army at a cost of half a million of money. These battalions were added, but where were they now? No sooner had they been created at great expense than they were swept away. Four years ago the late Secretary of State for War increased the Militia to a nominal strength of 450,000, increased the pay, and offered a bounty, which added to the cost of that force £200,000 a year. Now that increase had been knocked off, and the strength of the Militia reduced. Four years ago the late Secretary of State for War created a Militia Reserve, and the Prime Minister, in winding up the debate on the matter, spoke of the great Militia Reserve as the strength of the Army! Not a single man ever enlisted in that Reserve! Then there had been in the space of these four years two complete sweeps of the War Office from the highest official down to the messenger boys. He wondered if the new staff was an improvement on the old. He did not wish to say anything disrespectful of it, but he believed that it was not untrue to say that the present administration at the War Office was less representative of the ability and experience of the Army than any preceding administration.

The vital foundation of any Army system was the period of enlistment. Foreign nations hardly ever changed the period of enlistment, but during the last four years it had been five times altered in this country. In 1901 we had seven years service with the colours, and five in the Reserve. It was altered in 1902 to three years with the colours and nine in the Reserve. Last year, at the end of the session, the present Secretary of State for War proposed a long period of enlistment for the foreign-service Army, and two years with the colours for the home Army with six in the Reserve. After Parliament had risen he changed it to a uniform nine years service with the colours and three years with the Reserve; and there might yet be a departure from long service and a resumption of short service at some future date. Five separate changes within that brief period of time! Of course, it was quite true that during that period there were two different Secretaries of State for War and, they were naturally not responsible for each other's proposals and not bound to carry them out. But there had been only one Leader in the House of Commons, who was not there at present, and it was perfectly true to say of the right hon. Gentleman that he had consistently supported each and everyone of these inconsistent changes. The Prime Minister had been loyal to everybody and to every plan. When they remembered the exalted terms in which the Esher Committee spoke of the military talents of the Prime Minister, they could only regret that talents so distinguished and so rare had been so unhappily applied. One result of all this was the lack of continuity of policy as very fairly expressed in the terms of the Amendment. In fact, he thought that the Secretary of State for War should himself vote for the Amendment, and the only reason why he would not was probably because he was too modest. If the right hon. Gentleman had had the drafting of the Amendment he would have probably made it more violent, concluding with some such phrase as that the condition of the Army really constituted a very great danger to the existence of the Empire. He could not think that it was a very wise thing for the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary of State for War to talk as he had done in the hearing of foreign nations about the demoralisation which the administration of his own Government Department had produced in the Army; that the Army was not suited to the requirements of the country or adapted for war. He might have added that it was an Army with no properly organised staff, equipped with obsolete artillery and with bad rifles. The right hon. Gentleman did not realise what a bitter reproach that was to his own colleagues.

It could not be fairly urged against the taxpayers that they had grudged the money which was said to be necessary to put the land forces into a state of efficiency. We went into the South African War with a £20,000,000 Army. The country had now got a £30,000,000 Army. The £10,000,000 difference in the cost was a very big sum. It would make a difference in the comfort of every householder. For another thing, it would go a long way to enable the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham to redeem his pledges with regard to old-age pensions; or in adding to the Development Grant in Ireland. Two principal causes had led us into this deplorable administrative and financial catastrophe. First, we had tried to keep up too large an establishment in time of peace. There had been hitherto a reduction of the military establishment after every great war. Secondly, we had acted in much too great haste. It would have been much better for the cause of reform if in 1900 the right hon. Gentleman the present Secretary of State for India had said, as he could have said with perfect force, "I have got to finish the war; I cannot reform the Army until Lord Kitchener and other distinguished generals come home," and no Party in the House would have challenged that attitude. But the prudent counsels which the experience and precedents of the past might have suggested, and the circumstances of the moment almost dictated, were brushed aside by the Government. Expenditure was popular; the House of Commons was what the Prime Minister called "in a hot fit," a phrase which he thought rather revealed the Prime Minister's processes in regard to political principles. In order to satisfy this hot fit something had to be produced, and it was—the Army Corps scheme was produced. The Resolution of that Army Corps scheme was still on the books of the House, one of the most solemn, elaborate, and enduring mockeries that could be imagined. That Army Corps scheme had gone, and so completely that they were reproached for suggesting that it had ever existed. The Secretary for War alluded to it tonight as the "so-called Army Corps scheme," and last session the right hon. Gentleman said—

> "Why worry about a name? You might as well have called them Sunday-school districts."

Yet it was only two years ago that some of them were vehemently asserting that the Army Corps were real Army Corps, and that the right hon. Member for Guildford, with great rhetorical skill, was strenuously asserting that they were, in fact, real Army Corps equipped for war. And the right hon. Gentleman published in support of his theory a White Paper which showed three Army Corps complete, horse, foot, and artillery, a force which he believed was to come into existence on April 1st. They were all gone now, the great organisation which the right hon. Gentleman devised, down to the Teutonic headgear which his fancy suggested. All the great officers who were concerned in preparing that scheme had been scattered far and wide over the surface of the globe, the right hon. Gentleman himself had been translated to another sphere, and that fertile imagination which used to call forth armies so easily was now condemned to a chilly exile in the frozen deserts of Tibet. That was another instance of the lack of continuity in Army policy.

As to the remedy proposed by the right hon. Gentleman opposite, they had waited all last session to know what his plan was. At the end of the session he detailed an extensive and revolutionary scheme of Army reform, and embodied his proposals afterwards in a Memorandum. Was that scheme operative or not? The right hon. Gentleman had addressed the House at length on all sorts of subjects, but he was at a loss to know whether the scheme embodied in his Memorandum last autumn was an operative scheme at this moment. One word would clear up the mystery. If it were operative it proposed a complete revolution. It proposed to divide the Army into two armies, the home Army serving two years with the colours and six in the reserve, and the foreign Army serving nine years with the colours and three in the reserve; to disband nineteen battalions existing at present, and to add to the Army thirty-three battalions carved out of the Militia, thus making a net increase of fourteen battalions, or 175 battalions altogether, exclusive of Guards, as against 161, which we had at present. The right hon. Gentleman had made out the Estimates for the year, and must, therefore, know what was to be done. Last year he said he would not hold office unless he was able to carry his scheme. The scheme at first contemplated two kinds of Volunteers—that had been abandoned. It still contemplated two kinds of soldiers—fighting soldiers, who were to go abroad, and other soldiers. It also involved a great increase of skeleton cadres, which, he thought, should be avoided. The right hon. Gentleman added fourteen battalions, as the result of his economies, to the cadres of the Army. There was not one single particular in which those battalions were not inferior to the battalions which the—he believed the word was "rotten"—Cardwellian system produced.

What was the financial result of this extraordinary military revolution proposed by the right hon. Gentleman? The right hon. Gentleman had published a table in which he showed all the economies which his scheme would produce. Five of the items which he claimed as economies which his scheme would produce were economies which could be produced without any of the alterations which his scheme required—they could be effected under any scheme. The total net balance of economies, if we had this extraordinary military revolution, this turning of the Army upside down and inside out as it had never been turned before, was no more than £63,000. When they considered the results of the disastrous experiments in the past, he thought they had a right to ask the Government, for the sake of such a small economy, not to embark on such a surprising adventure.

The right hon. Gentleman had stated that the statement contained in the Amendment that the Auxiliary Forces had been discouraged was not true. It was true, and if anything could prove it that debate had proved it. And if that were not sufficient he would point to the reduction of the strength of the Volunteers. In the period since this Parliament began the Volunteers had been enormously reduced. They were 288,000 men in 1900. They were less than 240,000 men to-day. And the officers which, as the hon. and gallant Member for Sheffield had pointed out, were deficient in 1898 by 1,300, were to-day deficient by 2,700 from the number properly required. If they poured buckets of cold water upon the Volunteers, as the right hon. Gentleman did in speech after speech, if they made their intention perfectly clear to boil them down into a sort of bastard infantry of the Line, without the intelligence of the Volunteers and without the cohesion of the Regulars, if they put them into a state of uncertainty, the natural, the inevitable effect was that they discouraged all those spontaneous forces of patriotism in the country which had led to the creation of what was a unique force, and one which contributed largely to the greatness and security of these realms.

And what about the treatment of great officers under this Government? What had been the relations of the Government within the lifetime of this Parliament to the great officers of the Army? He did not remember the Wolseley epoch, though he was told that the name of Lord Wolseley was one to conjure with when Ministers were in difficulties. Yet he had heard, in another place, Lord Lansdowne doing his best to demolish any reputation Lord Wolseley had achieved. Then came the Buller epoch. The Marquess of Salisbury once said that his confidence in the British Soldier was only equalled by his confidence in Sir Redvers Buller. He was not going to examine whether that confidence was misplaced or not. Sir Redvers Buller was not dismissed and disgraced because he lost battles. It was not until he made a silly speech that the War Office came forward as severe disciplinarians who would not brook, even in a popular hero, the smallest infraction of military etiquette. Then came the epoch of Lord Roberts. For two years the Government lived upon Lord Roberts. Every scheme, no matter how fantastic or doubtful, was commended to that House by the simple expedient of the Secretary of State's observing, "I may add that in all this His Majesty's Government have the support and concurrence of Lord Roberts." But there came a day when Lord Roberts had been made responsible for too many of these schemes, when he had been made the scapegoat of too many failures and misfortunes; and when he arrived at his office one morning he found a piece of blue paper on his table, which had been thoughtfully placed there by the right hon. Gentleman, directing him not to trouble to come back to the office on any following morning.

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: That statement is absolutely without foundation.

MR. WINSTON CHURCHILL said that at all events he was accurate in stating that Lord Roberts only heard of his dismissal on the day when that dismissal took place.

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: The hon. Gentleman is entirely misinformed.

MR. WINSTON CHURCHILL said he would withdraw the piece of blue paper with the greatest satisfaction. The Government had by these various methods lost the confidence of the great officers of the Army, and they could not get any great military name in support of this new scheme. The right hon. Gentleman had been reduced to appealing to them to adopt his policy upon his own authority, and in the name of General Turner, whose victories he did not remember to have heard of, but who seemed to be very anxious to write polite letters to the right hon. Gentleman. Last year they recognised what was due to a Minister who had just taken office, and permitted the Army Estimates to pass through the House without adequate scrutiny. This year they would examine the Estimates with the closest and most unrelaxing attention. He would advise the right hon. Gentleman not to worry too much about details, because, after all, there would be an election some day, and when it came the waters of the boundless ocean would come in and all the castles on the sands would be washed completely away. The Opposition would take no responsibility for any of these new and extravagant schemes. They were under no obligation to put forward alternative proposals, because only Governments could put forward large constructive schemes. Five years of thrifty and unostentatious administration would be required before the injuries lately inflicted on the military system would be repaired. Even then there would be an abiding reminder of the extravagance which now existed in the shape of taxes burdensome to the masses of the people and to the trade of the country. He did not deny that that was a partisan indictment. But even if the Government took credit to themselves for the highest motives and the best intentions, there would still remain a record of profusion and flagrant incapacity, on which the nation, and not the House of Commons, would finally have to decide.

Question put.

The House divided:—Ayes, 207; Noes, 254. (Division List No. 8.)

AYES.

Abraham,William (Cork.N.E.)
Abraham, William (Rhondda)
Allen, Charles P.
Ambrose, Robert
Ashton, Thomas Gair
Asquith,Rt.Hn.Herbert Henry
Barlow, John Emmott
Barran, Rowland Hirst
Barry, E. (Cork, S.)
Bayley, Thomas (Derbyshire)
Beaumont, Wentworth C. B.
Bell, Richard
Benn, John Williams
Black, Alexander William
Bolton, Thomas Dolling
Brigg, John
Bright, Allan Heywood
Broadhurst, Henry
Brunner, Sir John Tomlinson
Bryce, Rt. Hon. James
Buchanan, Thomas Ryburn
Burke, E. Haviland
Burns, John
Buxton, Sydney Charles
Caldwell, James
Campbell, John (Armagh, S.)
Campbell-Bannerman, Sir H.
Causton, Richard Knight
Cawley, Frederick
Channing, Francis Allston
Cheetham, John Frederick
Churchill, Winston Spencer
Cogan, Denis J.
Condon, Thomas Joseph
Crean, Eugene
Cremer, William Randal
Crombie, John William
Cullinan, J.
Daves, Alfred (Carmarthen)
Davies, M. Vaughan (Cardigan)
Delany, William
Devlin, Chas. Ramsay (Galway)
Dewar, John A. (Inverness-sh.)
Dilke, Rt. Hon. Sir Charles
Dillon, John
Donelan, Captain A.
Doogan, P. C.
Douglas, Charles M. (Lanark)
Duffy, William J.
Duncan, J. Hastings
Edwards, Frank
Ellice,CaptEC(S.Andrw'sBghs)
Ellis, John Edward (Notts.)
Emmott, Alfred
Esmonde, Sir Thomas
Evans,SirFrancisH.(Maidstone
Eve, Harry Trelawney
Farrell, James Patrick
Fenwick, Charles
Ferguson, R. C. Munro (Leith)
Ffrench, Peter
Fitzmaurice, Lord Edmond
Flavin, Michael Joseph
Flynn, James Christopher
Foster, Sir Walter (Derby Co.)
Fowler, Rt. Hon. Sir Henry
Freeman-Thomas, Captain F.
Fuller, J. M. F.
Gilhooly, James

Gladstone, Rt. Hn. Herbert John
Goddard, Daniel Ford
Grant, Corrie
Griffith, Ellis J.
Guest, Hon. Ivor Churchill
Gurdon, Sir W. Brampton
Haldane, Rt. Hn. Richard B.
Hammond, John
Hardie, J. Keir (Merthyr Tydvil)
Harwood, George
Hayden, John Patrick
Hayter, Rt. Hon. Sir Arthur D.
Helme, Norval Watson
Hemphill, Rt. Hon. Charles H.
Henderson, Arthur (Durham)
Higham, John Sharpe
Hobhouse, C. E. H. (Bristol, E.)
Hutchinson, Dr. Charles Fredk.
Hutton, Alfred E. (Morley)
Isaacs, Rufus Daniel
Johnson, John
Joicey, Sir James
Jones, David Brynmor (Swansea
Jones, William (Carnarvonsh.)
Joyce, Michael
Kearley, Hudson E.
Kennedy, P. J. (Westmeath, N.)
Kennedy, Vincent P. (Cavan, W
Kilbride, Denis
Kitson, Sir James
Labouchere, Henry
Lambert, George
Law, Hugh Alex. (Donegal, W.)
Lawson, Sir Wilfrid (Cornwall)
Layland-Barratt, Francis
Leese, Sir Joseph F. (Accrington)
Levy, Maurice
Lewis, John Herbert
Lloyd-George, David
Lough, Thomas
Lundon, W.
Lyell, Charles Henry
Macnamara, Dr. Thomas J.
MacNeill, John Gordon Swift
MacVeagh, Jeremiah
M'Arthur, William (Cornwall)
M'Crae, George
M'Fadden, Edward
M'Hugh, Patrick A.
M'Kean, John
M'Kenna, Reginald
M'Killop, W. (Sligo, North)
Markham, Arthur Basil
Mooney, John J.
Morley, Rt. Hn. John (Montrose)
Murnaghan, George
Murphy, John
Nannetti, Joseph P.
Newnes, Sir George
Nolan, Col. John P. (Galway, N.)
Nolan, Joseph (Louth, South)
Norman, Henry
Nussey, Thomas Willans
O'Brien, Kendal (Tipperary Mid
O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
O'Brien, P. J. (Tipperary, N.)
O'Connor, John (Kildare, N.)
O'Connor, T. P. (Liverpool)
O'Donnell, John (Mayo, S.)
O'Dowd, John
O'Kelly, Conor (Mayo, N.)
O'Kelly, James (Roscommon, N
O'Malley, William
O'Mara, James
O'Shaughnessy, P. J.
O'Shee, James John
Parrott, William
Partington, Oswald
Paulton, James Mellor
Pease, J. A. (Saffron Walden)
Pirie, Duncan V.
Power, Patrick Joseph
Rea, Russell
Reckitt, Harold James
Reddy, M.
Redmond, John E. (Waterford)
Reid, Sir R. Threshie (Dumfries)
Richards, Thomas (W. Monm'th
Rickett, J. Compton
Roberts, John Bryn (Eifion)
Roberts, John H. (Denbighs.)
Robson, William Snowdon
Roche, John
Roe, Sir Thomas
Rose, Charles Day
Runciman, Walter
Russell, T. W.
Samuel, Herbert L. (Cleveland)
Scott, Chas. Prestwich (Leigh)
Shackleton, David James
Shaw, Thomas (Hawick, B.)
Sheehan, Daniel Daniel
Sheehy, David
Shipman, Dr. John G.
Sinclair, John (Forfarshire)
Slack, John Bamford
Smith, Samuel (Flint)
Soames, Arthur Wellesley
Soares, Ernest J.
Spencer, Rt. Hn. C. R (Northants
Stevenson, Francis S.
Strachey, Sir Edward
Sullivan, Donal
Taylor, Theodore C. (Radcliffe)
Tennant, Harold John
Thomas, Abel (Carmarthen, E.)
Thomas, Sir A. (Glamorgan, E.)
Thomas, David Alfred (Merthyr)
Thomson, F. W. (York, W.R.)
Tomkinson, James
Trevelyan, Charles Philips
Ure, Alexander
Waldron, Laurence Ambrose
Walton, Joseph (Barnsley)
Warner, Thomas Courtenay T.
Wason, Eugene (Clackmannan)
White, George (Norfolk)
White, Luke (York, E. R.)
Whiteley, George (York, W.R.)
Whitley, J. H. (Halifax)
Whittaker, Thomas Palmer
Williams, Osmond (Merioneth)
Wills, Arthur Walters (N Dorset)
Wilson, Fred. W. (Norfolk, Mid.)
Wilson, John (Durham, Mid.)
Woodhouse, Sir J T (Huddersf'd)
Young, Samuel
Yoxall, James Henry

TELLERS FOR THE AYES—Captain Norton and Major Seely.

NOES.

Agnew, Sir Andrew Noel
Allhusen, Augustus Henry Eden
Allsopp, Hon. George
Anson, Sir William Reynell
Arkwright, John Stanhope
Arnold-Forster, Rt. Hn. Hugh O
Arrol, Sir William
Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
Aubrey-Fletcher, Rt. Hn. Sir H
Bagot, Capt. Josceline FitzRoy
Bailey, James (Walworth)
Bain, Colonel James Robert
Baird, John George Alexander
Balcarres, Lord
Balfour, Rt. Hn. A. J. (Manch'r)
Balfour, Rt Hn Gerald W. (Leeds)
Balfour, Kenneth R. (Christch.
Banbury, Sir Frederick George
Bartley, Sir George C. T.
Bathurst, Hon. Allen Benjamin
Bentinck, Lord Henry C.
Bhownaggree, Sir M. M.
Bigwood, James
Blundell, Colonel Henry
Bond, Edward
Boscawen, Arthur Griffith
Bowles, Lt.-Col. H. F. (Middlesex
Bowles, T. Gibson (King's Lynn)
Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John
Brymer, William Ernest
Bull, William James
Burdett-Coutts, W.
Butcher, John George
Campbell, J. H. M. (Dublin Univ.
Cautley, Henry Strother
Cavendish, V. C. W. (Derbyshire
Cecil, Evelyn (Aston Manor)
Cecil, Lord Hugh (Greenwich)
Chamberlain, Rt Hn. J. A. (Worc.
Chapman, Edward
Coates, Edward Feetham
Cochrane, Hn. Thos. H. A. E.
Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
Colomb, Rt. Hn. Sir John C. R.
Cook, Sir Frederick Lucas
Corbett, T. L. (Down, North)
Craig, Chas. Curtis (Antrim, S.
Cross, Alexander (Glasgow)
Crossley, Rt. Hon. Sir Savile
Cubitt, Hon. Henry
Cust, Henry John C.
Dalkeith, Earl of
Dalrymple, Sir Charles
Davenport, William Bromley
Davies, Sir Horatio D (Chatham
Denny, Colonel
Dickinson, Robert Edmond
Dickson, Charles Scott
Dimsdale, Rt. Hn. Sir Joseph C.
Disraeli, Coningsby Ralph
Dorington, Rt. Hon. Sir John E.
Doughty, Sir George
Douglas, Rt. Hn. A. Akers
Doxford, Sir William Theodore
Duke, Henry Edward
Dyke, Rt. Hn. Sir William Hart

Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
Fardell, Sir T. George
Fergusson,RtHn.SirJ. (Manc'r)
Fielden, Edward Brocklehurst
Finch, Rt. Hon. George H.
Finlay,SirR.B. (Inv'rn'ssB'ghs)
Fisher, William Hayes
Fison, Frederick William
FitzGerald, Sir Robert Penrose
Fitzroy, Hn. EdwardAlgernon
Flannery, Sir Fortescue
Flower, Sir Ernest
Forster, Henry William
Gardner, Ernest
Garfit, William
Godson, Sir Augustus Fredk.
Gordon,Hn J.E.(Elgin&Nairn)
Gordon, J. (Londonderry, S.)
Gordon,MajEvans-(Tr H'mlets
Gore, Hon. S. F. Ormsby-
Goschen, Hon. G. Joachim
Goulding, Edward Alfred
Graham, Henry Robert
Gray, Ernest (West Ham)
Greene,SirEW (B'rySEdm'nds)
Greene, Henry D. (Shrewsbury
Greene, W. Raymond (Cambs.)
Grenfell, William Henry
Gretton, John
Greville, Hon. Ronald
Guthrie, Walter Murray
Hall, Edward Marshall
Hambro, Charles Eric
Hamilton,Marq. of (L'nd'nd'rry
Hardy,Laurence(Kent,Ashford
Hare, Thomas Leigh
Harris, F.Leverton (Tynem'th)
Haslett, Sir James Horner
Heath,SirJames(Staffords N.W
Heaton, John Henniker
Helder, Augustus
Henderson, Sir A. (Stafford. W.
Hermon-Hodge, Sir Robert T.
Hoare, Sir Samuel
Hogg, Lindsay
Hope, J.F.(Sheffield Brightside
Hoult, Joseph
Houston, Robert Paterson
Hozier, Hn. JamesHenry Cecil
Hunt, Rowland
Hutton, John (Yorks. N.R.)
Jeffreys, Rt. Hn. Arthur Fred.
Jessel, Captain HerbertMerton
Kennaway, Rt. Hn. Sir John H
Kenyon, Hn. Geo. T. (Denbigh)
Kenyon-Slaney, Rt.Hn. Col.W.
Kerr, John
Kimber, Sir Henry
Knowles, Sir Lees
Lambton, Hon. Frederick Wm.
Laurie, Lieut.-General
Law, Andrew Bonar(Glasgow)
Lawrence, Wm. F. (Liverpool)
Lawson, Hn. H.L.W.(MileEnd
Lawson, JohnGrant(Yorks NR
Lee,Arthur H(Hants.Fareham)
Lees, Sir Elliott (Birkenhead)
Legge, Col. Hon Heneage
Leveson-Gower, Frederick N.S.
Llewellyn, Evan Henry
Loder, Gerald Walter Erskine
Long, Col. Chas. W.(Evesham
Long,Rt.Hn.Walter (Bristol,S.
Lonsdale, John Brownlee
Lowe, Francis William
Lowther, C. (Cumb., Eskdale
Loyd, Archie Kirkman
Lucas, Col. Francis(Lowestoft)
Lucas,Reginald J.(Portsmouth
Lyttelton, Rt. Hn. Alfred
Macdona, John Cumming
MacIver, David (Liverpool)
Maconochie, A. W.
M'Arthur, Charles (Liverpool)
M'Calmont, Colonel James
M'Iver,Sir Lewis (EdinburghW
Majendie, James A. H.
Malcolm, Ian
Manners, Lord Cecil
Marks, Harry Hananel
Martin, Richard Biddulph
Maxwell,Rt.Hn.SirH.E(Wigt'n
Maxwell,W.J.H.(Dumfriesshire
Mildmay, Francis Bingham
Milner, Rt. Hn. Sir Frederick G
Mitchell, Edw. (Fermanagh, N.
Molesworth, Sir Lewis
Montagu, G. (Huntingdon)
Montagu, Hn. J. Scott (Hants.
Moon, Edward Robert Pacy
Moore, William
Morgan,DavidJ (Walthamstow
Morpeth, Viscount
Morrell, George Herbert
Morrison, James Archibald
Morton, Arthur H. Aylmer
Mount, William Arthur
Mowbray, Sir Robert Gray C.
Murray, Charles J. (Coventry)
Palmer, Sir Walter (Salisbury)
Parker, Sir Gilbert
Parkes, Ebenezer
Pease,Herbert Pike(Darlington
Peel,Hn.Wm. RobertWellesley
Percy, Earl
Pierpoint, Robert
Pilkington, Colonel Richard
Platt-Higgins, Frederick
Plummer, Sir Walter R.
Powell, Sir Francis Sharp
Pretyman, Ernest George
Pryce-Jones, Lt.-Col. Edward
Purvis, Robert
Pym, C. Guy
Quilter, Sir Cuthbert
Randles, John S.
Rankin, Sir James
Rasch, Sir Frederic Carne
Reed, Sir Edw. James (Cardiff)
Remnant, James Farquharson
Ridley, S. Forde
Roberts, Samuel (Sheffield)
Robertson, Herbert (Hackney)
Rolleston, Sir John F. L.
Rollit, Sir Albert Kaye
Round, Rt. Hn. James
Rutherford, John (Lancashire)
Rutherford, W. W. (Liverpool)
Sackville, Col. S. G. Stopford
Sadler, Col. Samuel Alexander
Samuel,SirHarryS. (Limehouse
Sandys, Lieut.-Col. Thos. Myles
Sassoon, Sir Edward Albert
Seton-Karr, Sir Henry
Sharpe, William Edward T.
Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
Skewes-Cox, Thomas
Sloan, Thomas Henry
Smith, Abel H. (Hertford,East
Smith,H.C (North'mbTyneside
Smith, RtHnJ. Parker(Lanarks
Smith, Hn. W. F. D. (Strand)
Spear, John Ward
Stanley, Hn. Arthur (Ormskirk
Stanley, Rt. Hn. Lord (Lancs.)
Stewart, Sir Mark J. M'Taggart
Stock, James Henry
Stone, Sir Benjamin
Stroyan, John
Strutt, Hn. Charles Hedley
Talbot, Lord E. (Chichester)
Taylor, Austin (East Toxteth)
Thorburn, Sir Walter
Thornton, Percy M.
Tollemache, Henry James
Tomlinson, Sir Wm. Edw. M.
Tritton, Charles Ernest
Tuff, Charles
Tufnell, Lieut.-Col. Edward
Tuke, Sir John Batty
Turnour, Viscount
Valentia, Viscount
Vincent, Sir Edgar (Exeter)
Walrond,Rt.Hn Sir William H.
Wanklyn, James Leslie
Warde, Colonel C. E.
Welby,Lt.-Col.A.C.E. (Taunton
Welby, Sir Charles G.E.(Notts.)
Whiteley, H.(Ashton und.Lyne
Willoughby de Eresby, Lord
Wilson, A. Stanley(Yorks. E.R
Wilson-Todd, SirW.H. (Yorks.)
Wolff, Gustav Wilhelm
Wortley, Rt. Hn. C. B. Stuart
Wrightson, Sir Thomas
Wylie, Alexander
Wyndham, Rt. Hon. George
Yerburgh, Robert Armstrong

TELLERS FOR THE NOES—Sir Alexander Acland-Hood and Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes.

Main Question again proposed.

And, it being after Midnight, the debate stood adjourned. Debate to be resumed To-morrow.

Adjourned at five minutes after Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Friday, 24th February, 1905.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

The LORD CHANCELLOR acquainted the House, That the Clerk of the Parliaments had laid upon the Table the Certificate from the Examiners that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bill have been complied with :—Highland Railway.

And also the Certificates that the further Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have been complied with :—Rhymney Railway [H.L.]; South-Eastern and London, Chatham, and Dover Railways [H.L.]; Commercial Union Assurance [H.L.].

The same were ordered to lie on the Table.

Clyde Navigation Bill [H.L.]. Presented, and read 1^a.

Barry Railway Bill [H.L.]; Hessle Gas Bill [H.L.]; Leeds and Liverpool Canal Bill [H.L.]. Read 2^a, and committed. The Committees to be proposed by the Committee of Selection.

Mortgage Insurance Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Metropolitan District Railway Bill [H.L.]. Read 2^a, and committed.

NEW BILLS.

CONGESTED DISTRICTS (SCOTLAND) BILL [H.L.].

A Bill to amend the provisions of the Congested Districts (Scotland) Act, 1897, as to the style and title of the Commissioners, the execution of deeds by them, and the application of the fund constituted by the said Act. Was presented by the Marquess of Linlithgow; read 1^a; to be printed; and to be read 2^a on Tuesday next. (No. 14.)

ADVERTISEMENTS REGULATION BILL [H.L.].

A Bill for authorising local authorities to make bye-laws respecting the exhibition of advertisements. Was presented by the Lord Balfour; read 1^a; to be printed; and to be read 2^a on Thursday the 9th of March next. (No. 15.)

STANDING ORDERS COMMITTEE.

Appointed. The Lords following, with the Chairman of Committees, were named of the Committee—

M. Salisbury.
(L. Privy Seal.)
D. Bedford.
D. Marlborough.
D. Northumberland.
M. Lansdowne.
M. Bath.
E. Derby.
E. Denbigh.
E. Chesterfield.
E. Jersey.
E. Lauderdale.
E. Waldegrave.
E. Cadogan.
E. Howe.
E. Amherst.
E. Camperdown.
E. Dartrey.
E. Lytton.
E. Carrington.
E. Crewe.
V. Sidmouth.
V. Knutsford.
V. Churchill.
L. Zouche of Haryngworth.
L. Barnard.
L. Balfour.
L. Ribblesdale.
L. Colchester.
L. Poltimore.
L. Kintore.
(E. Kintore.)
L. Belper.
L. Brougham and Vaux.
L. Kinnaird.
L. Fermanagh.
(E. Erne.)
L. Herries.
L. Monkswell.
L. Newton.
L. Welby.
L. Ludlow.
L. Glanusk.

All petitions relating to the Standing Orders which shall be presented during the present session referred to the Committee unless otherwise ordered.

HOUSE OF LORDS OFFICES.

Select Committee appointed. The Lords following, with the Lord Chancellor, the Lord President, the Lord Privy Seal, and the Chairman of Committees, were named of the Committee :—

D. Northumberland.
M. Bath.
M. Cholmondeley.
M. Ripon.
M. Breadalbane.
E. Clarendon.
(L. Chamberlain.)
E. Chesterfield.
E. Waldegrave.
E. Spencer.
E. Mount Edgcumbe.
E. Belmore.
E. Cawdor.
E. Camperdown.
E. Cranbrook.
E. Ancaster.
V. Gordon.
(E. Aberdeen.)
V. Hampden.
V. Cross.
V. Peel.
V. Knutsford.
V. Churchill.
L. Windsor.
L. Balfour.
L. Ribblesdale.
L. Colchester.
L. Rosebery.
(E. Rosebery.)
L. Kintore.
(E. Kintore.)
L. Belper.
L. Tweedmouth.
L. Monk Bretton.
L. Macnaghten.
L. Welby.
L. Burghclere.

Committee of Selection. The Lords following, viz.:—

E. Chesterfield.	V. Churchill.
E. Waldegrave.	L. Ribblesdale.

with the Chairman of Committees, were appointed a Committee to select and propose to the House the names of the Five Lords to form a Select Committee for the consideration of each opposed Private Bill.

Standing Committee. Ordered, That a Standing Committee be appointed for the consideration of such Public Bills as may be committed to it by the House.

Committee of Selection for the Standing Committee appointed. The Lords following, with the Chairman of Committees, were named of the Committee:—

E. Cowper.	L. Balfour.
E. Stanhope.	L. Ribblesdale.
E. Waldegrave.	L. Kintore.
E. Carrington.	(E. Kintore.)
V. Churchill.

RESERVE FORCES BILL [H.L.].

[SECOND READING.]

Order of the Day for the Second Reading read.

THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (The Earl of DONOUGHMORE): My Lords, this is substantially the same Bill as that which your Lordships passed last year, and it embodies the Amendments that I was glad to make to meet the views of my noble friend Lord Monkswell. I do not think it is necessary to explain the Bill at length to your Lordships, having done so last year, and I will therefore content myself with formally moving that it be read a second time.

Moved, That the Bill be now read 2ª.—(The Earl of Donoughmore.)

On Question, Bill read 2ª and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Tuesday next.

BISHOPRIC OF BRISTOL BILL [H.L.].

Order of the day for the House to be put into Committee, read, and discharged.

SEAMEN'S AND SOLDIERS' FALSE CHARACTERS BILL [H.L.].

Read 3ª (according to order), and passed, and sent to the Commons.

House adjourned at twenty-five minutes before Five o'clock, to Monday next, a quarter before Eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday, 24th February, 1905.

The House met at Twelve of the Clock.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER 62 COMPLIED WITH).

Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bills, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order 62 has been complied with, viz.:—Baker Street and Waterloo Railway Bill; Brompton, Chatham, Gillingham, and Rochester Water Bill; Central London Railway Bill; Charing Cross, Euston, and Hampstead Railway Bill; Edgware and Hampstead Railway Bill; Epping Gas Bill; Gas Light and Coke, South Metropolitan, and Commercial Gas Companies Bill; Great Eastern Railway Bill; Great Northern (Ireland) and Midland Railways Bill; Great Northern, Piccadilly, and Brompton Railway (No. 1) Bill; Great Northern, Piccadilly, and Brompton Railway (No. 2) Bill; Great Northern Railway Bill; Great Western Railway (New Railways) Bill; Higham and Hundred of Hoo Water Bill; Hull, Barnsley, and West Riding Junction Railway and Dock Bill; London and North Western Railway Bill; Midland Railway Bill; North Eastern Railway Bill; North Eastern Railway (Steam Vessels) Bill; Nottingham and Retford Railway Bill; Southampton and Winchester Great Western Junction Railway (Abandonment) Bill; South Metropolitan Gas Bill; South Suburban Gas Bill; Ulster and Connaught Light Railways Bill; Walker and Wallsend Union Gas Bill; Whitechapel and Bow Railway Bill;

Wrexham Gas Bill. Ordered, That the Bills be read a second time.

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER 63 COMPLIED WITH).

Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bills, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order 63 has been complied with:—Andover Lighting and Power Bill; Weybridge and Walton-upon-Thames Electric Supply Bill. Ordered, That the Bills be read a second time.

PETITIONS.

JURORS' SERVICE.

Petition from Streatham, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table.

JUVENILE SMOKING.

Two Petitions from Edinburgh, for legislation; to lie upon the Table.

LICENSED PREMISES (HOURS OF CLOSING).

Petition from Bath, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table.

OUT-DOOR RELIEF (DISFRANCHISEMENT).

Petition from Poplar, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table.

RE-VACCINATION.

Petition of the Cumberland County Council, for alteration of Law; to lie upon the Table.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

RAILWAY, ETC., BILLS.

Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 23rd February; Mr. Gerald Balfour]; to lie upon the Table; and to be printed. [No. 58.]

WOODS, FORESTS, AND LAND REVENUES.

Abstract Accounts presented, for the year ended 31st March, 1904, together with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 59.]

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

Claims against Venezuela.

MR. MOON (St. Pancras, N.): To ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether any Report has been published, and, if not, can any statement be made of the proceedings at the Hague in regard to the claims against Venezuela.

(Answered by Earl Percy.) The hon. Member will find the award of the Tribunal in Venezuela (No. 1, 1904).

Annual Reports of the Hague Tribunal.

MR. MOON: To ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs if any Annual Report or Reports of the Hague Tribunal, under Article 28 of the International Convention, has or have been issued.

(Answered by Earl Percy.) The Reports have been issued annually since 1901, and are communicated to the contracting parties.

Armour for Cruisers.

MR. J. F. HOPE (Sheffield, Brightside): To ask the Secretary to the Admiralty when he expects that orders will be issued for the armour required for the three dockyard-built cruisers included in the programme of the current year.

(Answered by Mr. Pretyman.) The prosecution of the work on the three dockyard-built cruisers, laid down as part of the further programme for the current year, has not yet necessitated the ordering of their armour. Specifications of this armour are being prepared, and the invitations to tender will be issued as soon as they are ready. It is not anticipated that any armour for these ships will be actually ordered till early in the next financial year.

Belfast Post Office.

MR. SLOAN (Belfast, S.): To ask the Postmaster-General if he can state why, and under what circumstance, a male learner at Belfast, who recently submitted a simple application regarding his transfer from one department to another, was severely taken to task as to the authorship of the application, and made to state from whom he had sought and obtained assistance in the drafting of the application.

(Answered by Lord Stanley.) I will inquire into the matter.

Belfast Post Office Medical Officer.

Mr. SLOAN: To ask the Postmaster-General if he has received a communication recently with reference to the performance of the duties of the medical officer at Belfast; and, if so, what steps it is proposed to take in the matter.

(Answered by Lord Stanley.) The reply is in the negative.

Erection of Buoy at Tuns Bank, Lough Foyle.

Mr. O'DOHERTY (Donegal, N.): To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will state the cause of the delay by the Commissioners of Irish Lights in the erection of the gas and bell buoy at the Tuns Bank entrance to Lough Foyle promised by him two years ago; and if he will make representations to the Irish Lights Commissioners with a view to accelerate their action in this matter.

(Answered by Mr. Gerald Balfour.) The Commissioners of Irish Lights informed me in November last that the delay in placing this buoy in position has been due to difficulties in obtaining the necessary supply of gas. After vainly endeavouring to obtain it in the district they found it necessary to manufacture gas themselves for this and other buoys. The Commissioners now inform me that the buoy was completed some months ago, that since then the bad weather has been the only cause of delay, and that the buoy will be placed in position as soon as possible.

Russian Import Duties on Indian and Ceylon Tea.

Mr. PARTINGTON (Derbyshire, High Peak): To ask the Secretary of State for India whether the import duties on tea from India and Ceylon into Russia have been increased since the Sugar Convention was signed; and, if so, whether, with the powers possessed by the Government, any retaliatory measures are in contemplation.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Brodrick.) The answer to the first part of the Question is in the affirmative, so far as the European ports and frontiers of Russia are concerned, but there was no increase of duty by Vladivostock and the other Pacific ports, by which Indian teas were admitted to Russia before the war. With regard to the second part of the Question I am not prepared to make any statement, so far as India is concerned.

Dredging of Burtonport Harbour.

Mr. HUGH LAW (Donegal, W.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland when the dredger which has just been constructed for the Board of Works will be available for the improvement of the harbour at Burtonport, county Donegal.

(Answered by Mr. Victor Cavendish.) I understand that a number of previous applications have been made for the use of the dredger, and that there is little prospect of it being available for Burtonport this year.

Irish-Grown Beetroot.

Mr. O'DOWD (Sligo, S.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that on analysis it has been found that Irish-grown beetroot is superior in quality to that raised in Germany; and, if so, what steps, if any, the Board of Agriculture intend to take towards encouraging the growth of that crop in Ireland.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) The average analyses of sugar beet grown on small plots in selected districts have shown that beet of good quality can be grown in Ireland. There is no evidence, however, to show that this crop if grown widely in Ireland would yield a profitable return when the comparatively high cost of cultivation and of the necessary apparatus are taken into consideration. At present the Department do not feel that they would be justified in recommending beet as a general crop.

Dublin Police Commissioner and Irish University Education.

Mr. SLOAN: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he can say if, in the negotiations stated to have taken place between Dublin Castle and Lord Dunraven in regard to Irish University education, the Chief Commissioner of the Dublin Metropolitan Police took any part, and, if so, to what extent.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) I am informed by the Chief Commissioner that the reply to this Question is in the negative.

Marine Works in Ireland — Expenditure of Grants.

Mr. O'DOHERTY: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether all the moneys voted by Parliament under the Marine Works Act have as yet been allocated; and, if so, how; if not, what is the surplus remaining, and how does he propose to allocate the same.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) The estimated cost of approved works, apart from local and other contributions in aid, is £30,663. Negotiations are proceeding in respect of other works estimated to entail an additional charge on funds provided by the Act amounting to £56,100. The reserve, £13,237, will be required to meet possible excesses on estimates.

Case of Nurse Holland of Monaghan and Cavan Asylums.

Mr. SLOAN: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been called to the Report of Inspectors of Lunacy which was submitted to a meeting of the Committee of Management of the Monaghan and Cavan Lunatic Asylums on the 16th instant, in which Nurse Holland was condemned as unfaithful and untrustworthy in the discharge of her duties, and was found guilty of perjury against another official; and, if so, will he consider, in the interest of the public service, the advisability of demanding Nurse Holland's resignation.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) The inspectors in their report expressed the opinion that Nurse Holland, on whose statements the charge against one of the other asylum officials was based, is entirely unfitted for her position having regard to her faithlessness in the discharge of her duties and the untrustworthiness of her statements. The Committee of Management by a majority decided, however, to retain her services. The matter is engaging the consideration of Government.

Nationalist Procession through Coagh.

Mr. DOOGAN (Tyrone, E.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that a meeting of magistrates was held yesterday at Coagh, county Tyrone, with the object of having a proclamation issued to prevent the free passage of the Nationalist bodies of Arboe, in accordance with immemorial custom, through the village of Coagh to attend a public meeting which is to be held at Drummullen, near Cookstown, on St. Patrick's Day; and whether, if such proclamation has been recommended, the Irish Administration will refuse to deprive the people of a Nationalist district of their right to traverse the public thoroughfares on their legitimate business.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) There was no meeting of magistrates on the 23rd instant. The hon. Member presumably refers to their meeting on the 14th instant, when they expressed the opinion that a Nationalist procession through the district of Coagh, which is predominantly Orange, would be calculated to endanger the preservation of the public peace, and would in all probability lead to rioting and serious disturbance. It is incorrect to say that it has been the immemorial custom for such processions to march through Coagh; on the contrary, it has been the recognised rule for many years to abstain from marching through the district. Government is unable to entertain any arrangement which contemplates a departure from this rule.

Encouragement of Thrift in the Army.

Sir HOWARD VINCENT (Sheffield, Central): To ask the Secretary of State for War if he is aware that the United States of America, with a view to encouraging thrift in the Regular Army, urge non-commissioned officers and privates instead of drawing their pay at short intervals to leave it with the Government, receiving interest thereon at 4 per cent. per annum from the day it is due; and, if so, whether he will consider the advisability of adopting a similar system in the British Army.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Arnold-Forster.) I am acquainted with the system adopted in the United States Army for the encouragement of thrift among the soldiers. In view, however, of the advantages and general accessibility of the Post Office Savings Bank it does not appear necessary to adopt a system similar to that of the United States Army.

Whites Employed in Transvaal Gold Mines in 1905.

MR. SYDNEY BUXTON (Tower Hamlets, Poplar): To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies what was the number of whites employed in gold-mining operations in the Transvaal in January, 1905.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) The figures asked for have not yet been received, but Lord Milner has informed me that the further increase of white workmen in the Witwatersrand mines in the month of January is officially returned as 527.

Chinese Labourers and Kaffir Women.

SIR BRAMPTON GURDON (Norfolk, N.): To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether his attention has been directed to the disturbances in the Transvaal on the 11th and 12th December last between Kaffirs and Chinese, alleged to be consequent on the interference of Chinamen with women in Kaffir kraals, resulting in several deaths; whether a report on the circumstances which caused these disturbances has been or will be called for; and whether His Majesty's Government is satisfied with the extent to which the provisions of the Chinese Labour Ordinance as regards communications between Chinese labourers and outsiders are being enforced.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) I have seen a newspaper account of the disturbances, and I will call for a report on the circumstances in continuation of previous reports which I have received. With regard to the alleged cause, I may say that the information I have received at a later date than their occurrence is that no real difficulty had yet arisen out of the relations between Chinamen and Kaffir women, and that no serious trouble is apprehended in the future. I am not aware that there is cause for dissatisfaction in regard to the enforcement of the provisions of the Labour Ordinance to which reference is made.

ADJOURNMENT.

Resolved, That this House, at the rising of the House this day, do adjourn till Monday next.—(Sir A. Acland-Hood.)

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Main Question [14th February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament." — (Mr. Mount.)

Question again proposed.

*MR. CHANNING (Northamptonshire, E.) said he wished to move as an Amendment to the Address, at the end, to add—

> "But we humbly beg to represent to Your Majesty that, in view of the continued depopulation of rural districts and of the overcrowding and lack of employment in large towns, it is expedient to promote the more thorough cultivation of the land and to extend agricultural employment by legislative and administrative measures to give more security and freedom to agricultural tenants, and to encourage combination in the effective and economical working of the agricultural industry."

He had read the actual words because he wished at once to draw attention to the omission of words originally in the Amendment referring to small holdings. As there were now two Bills on that subject before the House it was not in order to discuss that question on the present occasion. He also wished to point out that the Amendment had been expressly drawn in the form it was in order to remove any idea of its involving censure on the Government. They had recently had presented to them most lurid pictures of decay and impending ruin as threatening all manner of industries, but these had been promptly white-washed over by the figures issued by the Board of Trade. But the agricultural position was somewhat different, and those of them who had followed the varied fortunes of agriculture knew it had really suffered heavily during the last twenty-five years. The main fact on which the Amendment hinged was that the existing and the continuous depopulation of the rural districts was a real solid fact staring practical statesmanship in the face and demanding a solution. Whether the House looked at the subject as it affected the national physique or as it tended to aggravate the industrial problem and the social misery of the great towns—which he was heartily glad to know the Government were preparing to deal with in some form by extending the powers of the local authorities—rural depopulation was one of the most serious problems confronting reformers of to-day.

The causes of it were plain enough. He had the honour of acting with a gentleman whose absence from the House they all mourned—Mr. James Lowther—who was opposed to a great many of his views, and together they drew up a report to the Central Chamber of Agriculture on this very question of rural depopulation, indicating causes which were familiar to the minds of most hon. Members. He was aware that it would be improper for him on that occasion to introduce into that discussion any considerations of the fiscal question, and he would therefore only allude to it in order to express his own opinion that rural depopulation had not been caused by free trade and could not be cured by protection. Free trade had helped farmers even in the past almost as much as it had hindered them, and it had done immeasurable good to the agricultural labourer. He turned in other directions for his remedy, because he had come to the conclusion that the various suggestions made by the Tariff Reform League meant in their present form a heavy loss to the farmer, and absolute ruin to the more progressive branches of the industry. These proposals would compel the farmer to pay £3 additional for every £2 that was added by increased prices, while they would hang round the neck of the labourer an additional income-tax of 4d. in the £. At present agriculture was emerging into something like a state of equilibrium from a long and desperate period of depression. There was a modest and limited well-being, but agriculture was to a large extent starved both of capital and labour: it was only carried on—except in special and highly organised branches—at a minimum of profit. This greatest of national assets, the land, was being worked at far less than its true value if dealt with in a rational manner. What really stood in the way of agricultural prosperity could be summed up in two points—the insecurity of tenure and the lack of business organisation. Such a state of affairs would be deemed to be absolutely impossible in any other industry in this country. No one doubted for a moment that the land could be made to produce vastly more than it was now producing, and it might carry a very much larger population and give a very much larger range of employment. We had in our great centres of population practically inexhaustible markets for any amount of supplies were agriculture carried on under proper conditions. He did not believe in hot-house methods or in the State trying to create prosperity by ukase. We should never get what we wanted till we stimulated the strongest human motives, till we organised our methods scientifically, and till we created a solid hope of greater and more certain returns from capital and from labour.

They had before them the astounding fact of the enormous growth of Danish prosperity within the last twenty years. The Danes were actually exporting at the present time from £9 to £10 per head of the entire population of agricultural products alone, whereas we, even in this record year of industrial exports, were only exporting from £6 to £7 per head in all kinds of exports. How had it been done? Exactly on the principles he had laid down. The Danes had security of tenure, and were thus enabled to throw their skill, their energy, and their capital into the endeavour to bring out better results year by year. Most of them were of course freeholders, but there was also in Denmark a landlord class, and in the relations there between landlord and tenant there was harmony and freedom. There was no such thing as confiscation of improvements; no such thing as running out the fertility of the land in order to reduce the rent, but landlord and tenant worked side by side, joining in the most energetic effort to stimulate and expand the progress of agriculture. There was a solid business position and an absolute community of interests in Denmark. And then, too, there was the wonderful spirit of combination which had enabled them to attain the highest standard in stock and products, and a most thorough systematisation of the grading and placing of products on the market so as to minimise the cost of production and marketing. These were the corner-stones on which this miracle of progress had been built up. It might be asked why they could not have just the same results in England. Though the soil of Denmark was thin and unproductive, and the original stock of cattle was below the level of that possessed by most nations, the Danes had quadrupled their agricultural exports in the last twenty years, and raised themselves to their present astounding position. Here we had a soil twice as rich as that of Denmark, with millions of consumers close at hand in our great towns, a race as industrious, intelligent, and masterful; and we had too in this country the highest spirit of co-operative enterprise together with the widest understanding of co-operative methods. It might be said that co-operation was a slender reed to lean upon. But he had talked with some of his friends who had made a study of what was going on in Denmark and who had described experiments there in agricultural co-operation. In this country, as the right hon. Member for Bordesley knew, experiments in the farming of a single farm by a number of men had sometimes proved disastrous economic failures, but every one knew that the co-operation practised by the Danes was something of a wholly different kind. While its object was to work up to the highest point every detail of the industry by combined action, the system rested on individual force and energy of character in working the land. He was glad to see the hon. Member for Chester in his place who was rendering such great services through the Agricultural Organisation Society, of which he (Mr. Murray) was also a member. This was not a Party question. He was glad to do honour to such agricultural reformers as the late Earl of Winchilsea, Sir Horace Plunkett, the hon. Member for Chester, and other Gentlemen belonging to the Party opposite. He had divested his Amendment of anything like a Party aspect.

Sir WILLIAM TOMLINSON (Preston): If you carry the Amendment, you turn the Government out.

*Mr. CHANNING said the hon. Member might rest assured that that result would not happen. He had expressly disclaimed any Party hostility, and the Amendment would only be made hostile by the Government themselves. He might be expected to offer some practical suggestions. He did so with great diffidence. In inserting the term "administrative measures" in his Amendment he had wished to point to direct or indirect action of Government Departments in stimulating organisation of this nature. He hoped that his hon. friend the Member for South Molton would, in the course of the debate, throw some light on the proceedings of the Departmental Committee on Railway Rates. That was a very important Committee. He was not sure as to the scope of its reference, but he did trust that the initiative which had very wisely been taken by the Board of Agriculture in this matter might lead up to something more than mere fixing of railway rates. He wished to see the service of our railways simplified and cheapened so as to secure to the British producer the most direct command of his gigantic and inexhaustible markets, and if this Departmental Committee could recommend a way of organising the collection, grading, packing, and despatching of the produce of the land, in truck loads or train loads, they would solve a double problem; they would increase the dividends of the railway companies and they would enable a large reduction to be made in railway charges. They would also solve the vexed question of the preferential treatment of foreign produce. He invited them to follow up this good example and he would suggest to the hon. Member for North Huntingdonshire, who represented the Board of Agriculture in this House, that they should hold conferences, to which the best men in each district should be called; that, if possible, those conferences should be held in connection with the great agricultural societies, and that their object should be to discuss, formulate, and start combined action in regard to the whole systematising of the collection, grading, and forwarding of articles of agricultural produce. He would advise similar consultations for better systematising the methods of stamping out cattle disease and for raising to a high uniform level the qualities of the stock and produce. The report obtained from Denmark for Sir Horace Plunkett's department by Lord Ikerrin's Committee showed how societies could help individual agriculturists to raise the level of the quality of their stock and produce to the highest point. The hon. Member for South Molton had taken a very active part in the question of agricultural education, and he would not, therefore, touch upon that beyond pointing out that there was obviously a field for useful activity on the part of the Board of Agriculture in stimulating and helping to organise these various reforms which could but develop the strength of the agricultural community. Agriculturists did not want State help, but State direction and the removal of unnecessary difficulties. The key of the success attained in Denmark had been reliance on self-help and mutual help. They could not import into England the mere Danish methods. They had only to learn this lesson and apply it to English conditions in their own English way and according to the conditions and limitations with which they had to deal with agriculture in this country.

He had ventured to allude to two or three lines of administrative action which ought to be taken to encourage agriculture, and doubtless other hon. Members might later on suggest additional points. The whole of this group of combined activities for the benefit of agriculture was a work of peace, getting rid of the conflict of interests and cementing the interests of the various classes engaged in agriculture, and harmonising the relations of landlord, farmer, and labourer so that they might all join together in building up the common interests and in working for the welfare of the whole community. That, he thought, was a noble object for statesmen to aim at, and he trusted that whatever Party might be in power in the near future some such policy as he had put forward would be initiated and carried through. But it was mere folly to talk about any such policy for agriculture; it was to build a house upon the quicksands unless there could be laid down a solid foundation of absolute security for the individual workers. Sir James Caird, one of the wisest advisers agriculture ever had, had said that it was time that land tenure should not be any longer a matter of mere sentiment, but should be placed on a business footing. This view could not be better put than in a passage of the Report of the Welsh Land Commission, drawn up by one of the wisest and most generous landlords in the country, Lord Carrington—

> "The partnership was unbusinesslike and unfair. In practice it secures to one partner the whole of such larger share of the profit as he may, under the disguise of re-valuation or re-fixing rents, choose to exact, while there is this curious feature, that either partner may determine the arrangement by a year's notice. Looking at it from the tenant's side, after carrying on the business for twenty years with perhaps only a very moderate profit, just when times have become better, and partly because of his long continued attention to his farm, he finds himself at last in a position to make a larger profit, he may then be met by a demand from his partner for such an increase in rent as will absorb the additional percentage he reasonably expected to enjoy, or else have to give up the business under circumstances which entail an inevitable shrinkage of his capital. We cannot conceive a more unjust arrangement from a true business standpoint."

He (the hon. Member) was not one of those who wished a revolution in the existing land system; he had no sympathy with those who desired to tax landlords out of existence. He held that if there was to be a new system, a re-arrangement of land tenure in this country, it must grow up, like the present system, out of the instincts of the people, and from conciliation and kindly feeling between the different classes interested in the land. On many large, historic estates, and on many small estates, too, tenants were as safe as if they were freeholders; rents had been fixed not by reckless competition, but by fair estimate of the productive power of the holding at the current prices, and tenants had gone on continuously doing their best by the land. But it was unfortunately the case that in many districts the tenants held their holdings on a very precarious tenure. Leading tenant farmers from all parts of the country gave evidence before the late Commission of the insecurity which allowed the tenants' capital in one form or another to be transferred to the pockets of the landlord, not always, or even generally, from ill will or injustice on the part of the landlord, but rather from the operation of a system which was unworkable and undesirable in itself. The record of the long depression had been of the keeping up of rents long after they had ceased to be earned by the land. Mr. Wilson Fox prepared a table from an analysis of a large number of farmers' accounts in Lincolnshire, which showed that the rent instead of being from twice to three times the tenants' profit, as was estimated for income-tax, ranged in a period of depression from seven to nearly fifty times that profit. That indicated a considerable transfer of the economic burden of loss from the landlord to the tenant, and of the value of the tenant's improvements and capital to the landlord.

One of many illustrations was the laying down of permanent pasture by the tenant. In many cases the only remedy to secure compensation the tenant had was to tear up the land and take a couple of white crops before his term was out. That was reckless farming, and worked injuriously to both landlord and tenant. He submitted that when there was a change in the term of the tenancy a fair calculation should be made of the amount each partner had put into the concern as a going concern, and some method provided of paying over to the tenant the value he had created. The landlord then could fairly charge the full rack-rent value of the land. There ought also to be additional compensation where a tenant farmer had worked the land right up to the hilt, and by continuous good farming had considerably added to the value of the landlord's property. An effective check ought to be put on unreasonable interference with the tenant's enjoyment of a holding which, with his skill and capital, he had been cutivating to the best of his ability. There was no point on which an amendment of the law was more needed than in the direction of thus strengthening the position of the tenant so as to give him a fair chance in bargaining with his landlord. It had been calculated that the loss by removal might be from 10 per cent. to 40 per cent. on the valuation, while if the removal was at very short notice the loss might be even greater, because a pressed sale inevitably led to stock and implements being sold at much below their value.

Then, too, the over-preservation of game was a thing against which protection should be given to the tenants. And there could be unfortunate and serious interference with the civil and religious liberties of tenant farmers. In the past, in Wales, in the Lothians, and other parts of the country, there had been unjust and cruel exercise of power on the part of landlords, who, mistaking their functions as the owners of great estates, had arrogated to themselves the right to dictate to their tenants what they should do and think and say in their daily life, altogether apart from the plain agricultural obligations which landlord and tenant had entered into. In these days, when there was such a strong tendency amongst all Parties to unity and goodwill in promoting the development of agriculture, and when such wide and inspiring conceptions of a new future seemed to have been brought within our reach by the efforts of such men as Sir Horace Plunkett, and of many others who were working for the common interest, which all might take their part in building up, it seemed to him to be a very sad anachronism that they still had an antiquated survival of a feudal order of things cropping up. Within the last few weeks attention had been drawn to a very ill-judged letter written by a noble Lord claiming authority to show how his tenants should vote at a certain election. They had also recently had a case which affected a right hon. and gallant Member of this House. He thought that any one who had known him during the twenty years he had been a Member of this House would know that the last thing he would wish to do was to make a personal attack or to say a word which would give offence or pain to any of his colleagues. With regard to the case to which he referred there was this striking circumstance that the right hon. and gallant Member had admitted that his tenant, Mr. Horne, was an excellent farmer of whom he had no reason to complain. He had received a letter from Mr. Horne expressing approval of the right hon. and gallant Member's provision of buildings and cottages upon his estate. This was a case in which both sides had discharged their duties in a proper spirit and in the way that such a duty ought to be discharged as regarded an agricultural contract. But these two gentlemen happened to be very keenly opposed to each other in politics. Mr. Horne not only felt very strongly upon political questions generally, but he also felt very strongly upon the question of land reform. He wished to lay this matter before the House in a temperate spirit and simply as a definite matter of principle. The question was solely this: whether Mr. Horne was to be free to argue the case of tenant right in his village meetings, and to urge reforms he thought essential for farmers like himself, or whether that course was to involve him in disability and loss. That would be, in his opinion, carrying the claims of landlordship too far. It seemed to him that it was wrong to import into a purely agricultural contract an obligation that the tenant farmer was to hold his tongue upon questions in regard to which he happened to feel most strongly. This was a practice against which he felt bound to enter a most emphatic protest. It was true that the right hon. and gallant Member did not give Mr. Horne notice to quit, but when the right hon. and gallant Member wrote to all the other farmers on his estate that for Mr. Horne to advocate such reforms as those he had ventured to lay before the House to-day, reforms which the best tenant farmers in the country, men whose names were household words, had expressed themselves in favour of before the Agricultural Commission, and at the same time to retain his farm, upon which he was admittedly doing his duty under his agricultural contract, would be contrary to self-respect, the action of the right hon. and gallant Member came as near to evicting his tenant as could very well be done. It made it impossible for a high-spirited man to retain his holding. He had a letter from Mr. Horne in which he stated that a paper was signed between himself and the agent in which Mr. Horne while offering the option of immediately giving up his farm, or of leaving it in twelve months time, he recorded his own willingness to stop, and his own appreciation of the farm, the ultimate result was that he was obliged to look out for a farm elsewhere and to part with his stock at a moment's notice, and undoubtedly at great loss to himself. He had not made any personal attack on the right hon. and gallant Member opposite, nor had he imputed motives, but he wished to make in the House of Commons an emphatic protest against the importation of this sort of consideration into purely agricultural contracts. It was absolutely impossible for them to arrive at the satisfactory results which most agricultural reformers wished to see if a tenant farmer, as a condition of holding his farm, had to surrender convictions which he rightly or wrongly conceived it necessary to advocate on behalf of the men engaged in the same industry as himself. It was possible to attach too much importance to such action, which naturally tended to correct itself. It was against the spirit of the times. He only alluded to it as a jarring note in the general tendency to the harmonious working out of the agricultural future. In view of the present position of agriculture, and in view of what had been done by small communities like Denmark and in Ireland by combination, conciliation and self-help, he appealed to the Government and to the House to receive favourably this amendment, and to welcome and push forward the reforms which he had endeavoured to lay before the House.

MR. WHITLEY (Halifax) said his excuse for speaking upon this question was that ever since he had taken an interest in politics the question of the land, and its relation to the economic welfare of the country, had been one of the chief spheres of his interest and study. If he were to say what he intended, he should throw himself counter to what was evidently going to be the mainstring of this debate. He agreed with his hon. friend the Member for Northamptonshire in every one of the minor agricultural reforms which he had raised, for they were every one needed in order to improve the agriculture of this country. He was one of those who thought that any or even all of these minor remedies would not do very much good in the direction of solving the land question of this country unless they went very much deeper and further than was now suggested. Why was it that Denmark, as they had been told, was able to produce and export in agricultural produce alone a larger amount per head of its population than this country was able to export with all its manufactures? There was only one answer which he had been able to discover, and it was that the land system of Denmark was infinitely better than our own. The land in Denmark and the climate were not so good as ours, and yet that country furnished an illustration of prosperity which had been built up in about twenty years by the industry of the people, because those who laboured enjoyed the results of their labour. He did not hesitate to say that in this country they had the worst land system of any civilised country in the world. This state of things had come about because when they were going through the period of transition from the feudal system to the present system, unfortunately, largely by an accident, the land was enabled to escape its proper responsibilities, whilst at the same time it was allowed to retain its privileges. That, in his opinion, was the reason why they could never hope to put the land of this country to the use it ought to be put to, and never obtain from the land the produce which they ought to get until they had brought about a fundamental alteration in the system. He was not going to labour that question, because it was quite clear that the debate would be devoted mainly to the question of minor agricultural improvements.

He would just take one illustration which he thought would enforce what he had been saying. It was a case which he came across a few weeks ago in Scotland, where they had been developing a new fruit-growing industry. The new industry of fruit-growing was entered upon in Perthshire. The land had been originally rented at £1 an acre, but for this new industry the rent was doubled. When the industry had proved a success the landowner was enabled to ask for and to obtain £10 an acre for the land required for the extension of the industry. It was obvious that so long as that could exist it was a direct barrier in the way of increasing the produce of the country. He was talking the other day to a farmer who, complaining bitterly about the state of agriculture, was inclined to go in for the quack remedies of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Sleaford in the way of protection. He asked him what was, on the average, the amount that would remain to him after his hard labour on the land, and he replied that for the expense of his household it was less than £200. The rent of that man's farm was £400 a year. The hon. Member had never been able to see what principle of justice there was in a system by which the man who worked received only one-half from the result of his labour as compared with the person who happened to own the land on which he was permitted to work. During the period of the Corn Laws in this country, rents went up 150 to 200 per cent. above what they were at the end of the preceding century. Taking this country as a whole, rents had never yet returned to a proper economic level, and if we required to turn out in this country the amount of produce of which the land was capable we should have to alter our system in such a way that land would come into the market upon a free-trade basis, so that it would go at its real value to those who could use it best.

He was one of those who believed there was a close and intimate connection between the condition of agriculture and the unemployed in our large towns. He did not mean to say that he believed that the present industrial population could be removed from the towns and placed on the land with any great economic advantage, but he believed that the evils of our land system were very real. We had almost perpetually a large class of unemployed in our large towns, and a large number of them were in poverty. So long as it was in the power of a class to control land, and to deny the access of labourers to land which they ought to have, it was natural that many people should be kept practically in perpetuity below the level of proper existence. A remedy was tried in one of our Colonies a few years ago which, in his opinion, would be more effective in this country than any that had been recommended. It was to take off the shoulders of those who worked the land the burdens they at present unjustly bore and to place them on the ownership of the land, in order to give a motive to all owners that their land should be put to the best possible use. In New South Wales that took the form of a small tax on the capital value of the land, and the result of that reform had been very striking in relieving the burdens of those who occupied the land. He quite agreed that there were many burdens on the shoulders of agriculturists which they ought not to be called upon to bear. It was in 1896 that this reform was adopted in New South Wales, and he had seen a report giving the results which had arisen from it. In the four years prior to the adoption of this change the number of unemployed registered in New South Wales was respectively 18,606, 12,145, 13,500, and 14,000; but in the three years immediately following the numbers fell as follows—6,400, 4,100, and 3,400. He did not know of any influence in the colony during that period which could have brought about that result except the change of which he was speaking. In one year after the adoption of that Act a great speculative estate known as the Peel River Estate, which had previously been withheld from use, was broken up into farm lots and offered at auction. During the three years following the adoption of the Act the area of land under cultivation increased by 905,000 acres—50 per cent. over the entire area previously under cultivation. He believed we should have to adopt some such remedy in this country in order to relieve the farmers of the burdens which at present were placed on the practical machinery of their industry, and which ought to be borne by other parties. He did not suppose these views would find the support of a majority in the House at the present moment, but he was glad to have the opportunity of seconding the Amendment in order that he might say so much on the security of the tenants, and the bringing of the land into agricultural use at its real value. These two things were required to enable us to make the land as productive and useful as that of Denmark.

Amendment proposed—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But we humbly beg to represent to Your Majesty that, in view of the continued depopulation of rural districts and of the overcrowding and lack of employment in large towns, it is expedient to promote the more thorough cultivation of the land and to extend agricultural employment by legislative and administrative measures to give more security and freedom to agricultural tenants, and to encourage combination in the effective and economical working of the agricultural industry.' "—(Mr. Channing.)

Question proposed, "That those words be there added."

*LORD WILLOUGHBY DE ERESBY (Lincolnshire, Horncastle) said he noticed that the present Amendment had a feature in common with the others which had been moved on the Address. It contained a number of propositions which, no doubt, did great credit to the framer of the Amendment, because by those numerous propositions an effort was made to draw into the net all those who were in favour of the various propositions put forth. There was a suggestion in the Amendment that efforts should be made to bring more people back to the land. It was suggested that there should be greater security, that fixity of tenure should be granted, and that the system of combination should be encouraged among the farmers of this country. Though several of these propositions were good, he was afraid that, unfortunately, they were mutually destructive. It appeared to him that by establishing another lot of owners, or half owners, on the land, they would make the acquisition of small holdings and the bringing of the people back to the land far more difficult than it now was. The supporters of the Amendment appeared to desire the Government to set about land reform, and to entirely alter the land system of this country, giving existing tenants and occupiers practically fixity of tenure, freedom of cultivation, free sale, and all those other reforms which some gentlemen were very anxious to see carried. He was bound to say that if they carried any such scheme as that they would make the task of bringing the people back to the land and the establishment of small holdings far harder than it was at the present moment. Speaking from pretty large experience he could state that frequently one of the difficulties in providing allotments for labourers was the difficulty of getting out the tenant and meeting the heavy tenant-right he demanded for clearing out. So far as his personal experience was concerned, he could say that his tenants had behaved well in that respect. They had given up land on several occasions, but many of them had required a deal of pressing to do it.

He was not surprised that a certain confusion of ideas existed in the minds of some gentlemen on this subject. It was only the other day that the Leader of the Opposition made a speech on agricultural questions to a deputation which came to him to ask for the repeal of the law by which Canadian store cattle were admitted into this country. The reply of the right hon. Gentleman showed the same confusion of ideas. He said he was in favour of the repeal of the Act which admitted Canadian stores into this country. So far, so good; that was a matter on which there might be difference of opinion. The right hon. Gentleman said that that would bring back the people to the soil. Now, he believed that that was a fallacious argument. He should have thought that the introduction of cheap Canadian store cattle would have sent the agricultural labourers to the towns, because more land would be laid down in grass and less would be kept under the plough. From his own practical experience he could say that land laid down in grass employed fewer people than land under the plough; and if he could buy Canadian store cattle cheap he would put land now under the plough under grass. There was often a confusion of ideas on the part of those who advocated agricultural reforms, which were very pleasing in theory. No doubt he would be told that he was going on wrong lines. The mover of the Amendment, in his able and temperate speech, argued that if greater security were given to the sitting tenant or occupier he would be more inclined to use his capital, and by that means to employ more labour. Did the hon. Member really know of any concrete case of a tenant who did not now receive ample compensation for his improvements? The hon. Gentleman had quoted a case from Wales where the landlord was an authority on this subject, and a noble relation of his own.

MR. CHANNING said that the whole of the evidence he had laid before the House was given before the English Agricultural Commission, on which he had the honour of a seat.

*LORD WILLOUGHBY DE ERESBY said he had not heard all the hon. Gentleman's speech, and he certainly did not hear him quote an English case, only a case of Lord Carrington's, who was a statesman that had stuck well to his Party. But passing to the question of security for improvements and the capital expended on a farm, he would ask any hon. Gentleman opposite who had taken a farm and had paid the outgoing tenant compensation for seeds, manure, etc., whether he considered he had disgracefully robbed the outgoing tenant. Was it the case that when he came to reap the first year's harvest he thought it was a shame that the outgoing tenant had got too little money? Could a single tenant farmer be got who would give evidence that the money he had paid to the outgoing tenant was not sufficient? After all, that was the best test of whether the existing system was a just and proper security for the improvements, work, and manure the outgoing tenant had put into the farm. He was sorry to say that his experience was just the reverse. It had been his fate to take a good many farms, and on every occasion he had had to pay the outgoing tenant very heavily; and so far from feeling that he had done him injustice in what he had paid for cake, seeds, permanent pasture, and winter crops, he found that on almost every occasion his first year's return resulted in a loss or a blank failure, and in addition he had to pay the outgoing tenant compensation for much that he did not want. Practice wae better than theory. At the present moment what happened in Scotland in the case of an outgoing tenant of a sheep farm? Both the outgoing and the incoming tenant appointed a valuer, and they appointed what was called an oversman to give a sort of final decision. The three gentlemen laid their heads together and said that the value of the sheep stock was so much. In almost every case the incoming tenant had to pay a third more for the sheep stock than it was worth. He himself had taken over the sheep stock of a farm for £3,000, and after having kept the sheep for four or five months he had sold them at Perth auction mart for £2,000. These were facts. This system of valuation affected the whole state of agriculture in this way. The incoming tenant had to take over the sheep stock worth £2,000 at the price of £3,000, and, therefore, he had to farm his holding under similar conditions as a company whose undertaking was over-capitalised.

There was another aspect of this question. The system advocated by the Amendment would amount practically to the establishment of dual ownership. The seconder of the Amendment went into the whole principle of the land tenure of the country and asked whether the landlord was right or wrong in trying to get as much out of his estate as possible. He would not go into the ethics of the question, but why should not a man invest his money in land and try to get as much out of his investment as a grocer tried to get the best out of his investment in his shop? If it was right for the grocer, why was it wrong for the landlord? Why not apply the same principle to a newspaper proprietor, or to a large and successful grocer like Sir Thomas Lipton? An hon. Gentleman opposite said that the land system of England was the worst in the civilised world; but would any gentleman say that dual ownership was better than the existing system? The precedent of Ireland did not encourage the adoption of such a system. It had been given a fair trial in Ireland, and when it was first started they were told that it would cure the Irish land difficulty. They knew that it had had exactly the reverse effect. It had, indeed, been found such an utter failure that recourse had again been had to single ownership under the recent Irish Land Act. There could not possibly be a better case for not altering the present system to dual ownership.

But could not anything be done to assist agriculture as a whole? His own opinion was, and he had often heard it expressed on the other side of the House, that they would never be able to get agriculture into a proper position until they had some real security under the existing system with some finality about it. He had heard hon. Gentlemen opposite saying on Army and tariff reform questions that the very greatest disasters were being caused by the uncertainty; that trade was being unsettled, and that there should be an instant appeal to the electorate. It was acknowledged that agriculture was not in a satisfactory condition at present, and the uncertainty as to the future of the agricultural system caused by the suggestions contained in the Amendment was unprecedented. He did not know whether it was the recognised policy of the Opposition to alter the present system of land tenure if they were returned to power; but as long as uncertainty existed there would be hesitation in investing money in land. He was absolutely convinced that it would be an enormous benefit to this country if the number of small freeholders were increased. The question that was to be solved was how that could be brought about. That excellent result would never be achieved by taking away from the landlords a certain number of rights and handing them over to the tenants. Then there would be two joint owners. The question of increasing the number of small freeholders was one of enormous difficulty. He knew in his own experience that when tenants were asked to purchase they replied, "Oh, no; we would much sooner remain tenants and make the best bargain we can with the landlord." That was perfectly easily explained. If a man wished to buy a small holding he required a certain amount of capital. But what would be his position? One bad year would very nearly break him, and two bad years would certainly accomplish it. If the roof of his farmhouse were blown off in a storm he would have to borrow more money to replace it. If he were a tenant the landlord would have to bear the expense, but as a peasant proprietor the man would have to stand the racket himself. Again, a man with a small capital could farm many more acres than he could buy. Therefore, although he desired to see a greater number of small freeholders, he was afraid it was only a dream except on certain land specially adapted for small proprietors.

A great deal had been said by the mover of the Motion with reference to co-operation and combination. The other day he attended a meeting convened by his hon. friend the Member for Chester, to whom all honour was due for his efforts to promote this excellent object. He himself was only too anxious to assist this movement, and should be delighted to hear from the Government that they were prepared to help it forward. But he did not believe that any immediate good would be obtained from this movement. Old customs were hard to get over, and no people were so conservative as farmers. The system of paying by instalments and payments in kind was engrained in them, and it would require a great deal to get rid of it. What was wanted was a better understanding with the railway companies. It was admitted that preferential rates were given for bulk; and it was stated that if the farmers combined they might be able to beat down the railway companies. He did not charge the railway companies with dishonesty; but undoubtedly they carried foreign produce at a far cheaper rate than home produce. What was the reason? It was because the railway companies had spent millions in erecting docks and warehouses at ports in order to encourage foreign trade. Had the railway companies spent even a thousand pounds in erecting warehouses in country towns where produce could be stored until there was a full train load? In conclusion, he would say that there was no advantage in tinkering with our land laws He was not a protectionist; all he wanted was free trade and equality with foreign producers. Until they were placed on an equality with foreigners they could never hope to compete successfully. He hoped that the Government would look with more sympathy on the question than previous Governments had done.

Mr. MUNRO FERGUSON (Leith Burghs) could not help thinking that when the noble Lord referred to the confusion of ideas existing upon the question of the importation of Canadian stores into this country, that the confusion of ideas rested with the noble Lord himself. He understood the noble Lord to argue that the importation of Canadian stores into this country encouraged the laying down of grass on English farms, whereas it had the exactly contrary effect. As a matter of fact, Canadian stores were imported into the arable districts, where the ground was ploughed up for the very purpose of providing them with food stuffs. It was the stoppage of the importation of the Canadian stores which had resulted in the laying down of land to grass, because farmers had now to depend upon home-bred stock, which required a certain amount of grass upon which to feed. He had in his mind several farms, where, after the importation of Canadian stores was prohibited, the land was laid down to grass, and cows were kept. It had been realised in Canada itself that the prohibition of the importation of this class of animal had been of great advantage to the agriculture of that country, because instead of sending this stock straight from the prairie, as before, it was now fed in Canada and imported into this country in the shape of beef. He very much doubted whether, even if the prohibition were taken off, there would ever be that free importation of stores which there had hitherto been, because to-day it had been found to be more profitable to feed them at home and export them as beef. There was no ground for the fear which the noble Lord had expressed. The feeling of uncertainty in the minds of the farmers with regard to the future of agriculture in this country must be looked for in other directions. He rather thought those fears had their foundation in the Tariff Reform Association and its programme, rather than any other source.

The Amendment before the House raised a point, however, which must appeal to all, whether they agreed on the question of Canadian stores or not, and that was the depopulation of the country districts. That question had been used as an argument for a change in the fiscal policy of the country, but the depopulation of the rural districts was not a sign of the failure of agriculture in the country. Probably at the present time there was no country where agriculture was so prosperous or where the system of small holdings, which was the real cure for rural depopulation, had been extended with greater effect than in Denmark. Denmark was a free-trade country, and in no other country was agriculture more prosperous, or did people make money more regularly out of it. Small holdings brought them to the question of the way in which tenure effected the population of the country districts. He did not think that the alteration of tenure of land in this country would affect the question of population, though much might be done by the extension of small holdings. If they wanted to encourage small holdings the simplest method was to try and preserve those which existed, and, if possible, to have a valuation rent of every holding under £50 a year—every holding where the work was done mostly by the occupier and his family. He believed that the bulk of the farm valuations in Scotland or in this country were conducted with perfect regularity and honesty. He himself had had valuation rents fixed on farms large and small, and he believed that those valuations had been fixed with the utmost fairness, and therefore he did not assume that, because the sheep valuations of Scotland had been conducted on an improper basis in the past, it was impossible to fix these valuations rents as he suggested on a fair basis. There was nothing in the Motion that suggested that the sheep farm valuations should be adopted as a basis of the valuation here.

He thought the encouragement of small holdings with the view of checking the depopulation of the country districts was the first step to take into consideration before touching the general question. It was not always the case that the large tenant farmers desired to remain on one farm; some of the most enterprising farmers in Scotland were those who liked to change their farms frequently, who would go to a farm and build up a good stock and then have a sale, because they knew they could get a good price for the stock which they had, and then go to another farm and have another sale. So far from these being farmers who ran away from their farms, they were among the most enterprising agriculturists in Scotland. Apart entirely from the question of small holdings and the creation of small holdings, he thought the scale of unused improvements ought to be revised as a knowledge of their value became greater. We knew a good deal more now about unextracted manure and unexpired improvements than when the scale was evolved, and the Board of Agriculture ought to avail itself of the increase of such knowledge so that it might alter the scale.

There was another point which required attention, and that was the damage done by game, not only furred but feathered. Now that pheasant breeding had become almost universal, game inflicted a considerable amount of damage on farmers. He had always looked upon the death of the late Mr. Hanbury as a great national loss. He had just made a start at the Board of Agriculture and its methods when he died, and it would be a most deplorable thing if the impetus which he gave to this matter should be lost. The literature which the Board of Agriculture sent out with regard to improvements of agricultural methods and the introduction of scientific and business-like methods in the prosecution of this industry was admirable, but he thought the Board might do a great deal more for the industry in the way of object-lessons, for which we now had to go abroad. He regarded the rural depopulation of the country as a grave danger. They had heard that day much of the self-reliance of agriculturists, and he trusted that that self-reliance would always be a leading characteristic. But, at the same time, let them have along with that intelligence and industry, which had been so remarkably demonstrated both in the old world and the new, that efficiency in methods of collection of marketing and agricultural produce which was the real root of success in the agricultural system of any country. There had been a great revival of agriculture in many foreign countries, and a far greater revival amongst ourselves. It was far more difficult for a Government Department here to give agriculture that assistance which it received in other States because it had no control over the railways, but it might foster combination and it might take a direct interest in experiments which were made. It might show a little of that activity which was shown by corresponding departments in America and on the Continent, and in so doing it would eventually check that process of depopulation which was a matter of great concern to them all.

Mr. SPEAR (Devonshire, Tavistock) said he shared the regret of the mover of the Amendment at the continued depopulation of the rural districts, and the consequent overcrowding and lack of employment in some of our large towns. One of the evils involved lay in the fact that the scarcity of men left in the rural districts led to a limitation of the output of our food supply, with the result that our position was made more precarious in that we were rendered more dependent on foreign supply in time of war. Another consequence of the movement of the population from the country must be the physical degeneration of the race. One of the chief causes of the exodus seemed to him to be the greatly reduced prices of agricultural produce, and another was the present system of education in the rural districts, which had not hitherto been of a character likely to make boys and girls take an interest in rural pursuits. He expressed a hope that the recent Education Bill, by placing education under the control of people acquainted with the needs of the districts, would do something to remedy this, and to secure for rural lads and girls in agricultural neighbourhoods an education better calculated to induce them to follow the normal pursuits of the districts in which they lived. With respect to the reduction in the price of agricultural produce, he pointed out that while the annual value of such produce sold in the country in the six years 1872 to 1877 was £255,000,000, the value of such produce sold in the period 1892-97 was £175,000,000. Such a falling-off must seriously affect employment in the rural districts and tend to force the people into the towns. The agricultural classes had, of course, shared with other sections of the community the advantages of cheap food, but it was evident that upon an industry so reduced there could not legitimately be placed burdens which were no doubt just and equitable in times of greater prosperity. The average British agriculturist had, he ventured to say, received during the last twenty-five years no interest whatever on the capital invested in his holding, but had simply gained a bare living as the result of his labour and often that of his family.

One remedy for the evil seemed to him to be in making it better worth while for the rural classes to stay in the country districts. Many would say that a return to protection would be the most effective means of bringing this about, and he was inclined to agree that it would do much to increase the well-being of the rural population, but he doubted the expediency of increasing the income of the agricultural community by a tax upon the necessities of life required by the whole of the population. And, apart from that, he thought much could be done by giving greater security for capital invested in a holding by a tenant. A farmer could hardly be expected to make a free expenditure of capital on his holding unless it was made clear to him that he would have security for that capital. An important step in this direction had been taken by the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1900, but there were still directions in which he thought it would be wise for the Government to expand the principle which underlay that measure. He thought it was also reasonable to ask that the burdens at present borne by the agricultural community should be reduced on the lines of a re-adjustment of the basis of local taxation. When the present basis was adopted there existed little but real property in certain districts, on which contributions could be levied for police, education, and road maintenance. Now personal property was valued, perhaps, at more than real property, and yet the owner of personal property—one, for instance, whose money was invested in the Funds and who, very likely, was better off than many men who had the same amount of capital invested in land—contributed nothing directly to such local expenditure as had been mentioned, though he derived as much benefit from it as the real property owner. It was high time a re-arrangement of the basis of local taxation was made, for it was in such a re-arrangement that the chief hope of a return of agricultural prosperity lay.

He congratulated the Government on the success of their efforts to stamp out pleuro-pneumonia and foot-and-mouth disease, and trusted that they would continue to prohibit the importation of cattle from foreign countries where such disease existed. Farmers were entitled to greater consideration at the hands of the railway companies, and it seemed to him that better arrangements should be made to enable the former to send their goods to market more conveniently, and at somewhat less expense and consequent disadvantage as compared with the foreigner. He approved the action of the Government in extending to the agricultural labourers the principle of the Workmen's Compensation Act. The Friendly Societies Act of last year had also been of service, but more needed to be done in regard to the securing of better housing accommodation for agricultural labourers. The better housing of the working classes was a most important question, and the extension of the period for the repayment of loans, as proposed by the Government, would greatly assist landlords to provide cottages at rents which labourers could afford to pay. He was glad the Government had promised the re-introduction of the Butter Bill, and he hoped it would be pressed to a successful issue, for, although he did not ask for protection for the agriculturists, he thought they ought not to have to compete with adulterated articles from abroad, while they themselves were liable to prosecution if they placed anything impure upon the market. Other directions in which assistance could be given to the interests of agriculture and at the same time of the general community would occur to all practical men, but one of the main hopes of prosperity must rest in the cordial co-operation of landlords, tenants, and labourers. Rural depopulation was a menace to the social well-being of the State, and he hoped the Government would continue their efforts for the amelioration of the lot of the agricultural community. The greatest help the Government had given was by the passing of the Agricultural Ratings Act, and he was grateful for the announcement of their determination to renew the measure during the present session. Personally, he wished the measure of relief had been larger, and he would suggest that a re-arrangement of the basis of local taxation offered the best hope of a remedy for the agricultural depression and rural depopulation deplored by the Amendment, and that the Agricultural Ratings Act was a recognition of the reduced paying powers of the agriculturists.

He wished in conclusion to make it clear that he must vote against the Amendment, because its result, if it were carried, would only be to turn out the Government and replace by another Party which had, on every possible occasion in the past, done its best to deprive the British agriculturist of the measure of justice accorded by the Agricultural Ratings Act. Indeed, he believed no better means could be taken of aggravating the evils under which the agricultural community laboured, and of still further embarrassing its position, than for the House to pass the Amendment before them.

*MR. BRIGHT (Shropshire, Oswestry) said that although it was true that rents had fallen during the last thirty years, and that possibly a holding then worth £130 would now fetch only £100 rent, it should be remembered that the purchasing power of £100 now was about equal to that of £130 in the earlier period. If, however, landlords had over-mortgaged or over-charged their property on the basis of the valuation of 1870–1873 they had only themselves to thank for it, and it was no argument for the State stepping in to assist them. As to the suggestion that personalty should be rated, that was an old proposal which Cobden tore to pieces long ago when he pointed out that the first person to suffer would be the tenant farmer himself, for he would be rated on his dead and live stock. Consequently that would not relieve agricultural depression. A challenge had been thrown out on the question of dual ownership. Dual ownership, in the case of Ireland at any rate, had been the stepping-stone to the substitution of a peasant proprietary for a system of great landlords. A system under which the community owned the holdings and let them to the people would afford to the tenants fixity of tenure, and thereby greatly assist the agricultural community, because one of the main reasons for the rural depopulation deplored by the Amendment was the feeling of insecurity felt by all classes. Hon. Members opposite seemed to forget that land was a natural monopoly, and should be dealt with on a different basis from other property. To compare land-owning with a grocery business was to contrast two unlike things. Private ownership of land was in the nature of trusteeship for the whole of the community, and if a private owner of land exercised the power of turning a whole community out of occupation no one could deny that a great wrong would be perpetrated. It was the sense of prevailing insecurity in respect of land tenure running throughout the whole community which created damage and helped to drive the agricultural population into the towns.

In connection with this insecurity of tenure he desired to refer to a personal matter—the controversy between the right hon. and gallant Gentleman the Member for the Newport Division of Shropshire and Mr. Fred Horne. For seventeen years Mr. Horne was a tenant farmer on the right hon. Gentleman's property; he farmed well, and was a leading light amongst Shropshire agriculturists. For many years Mr. Horne and his landlord got on very well together; in fact, on one occasion when Mr. Horne was ill the right hon. Gentleman did him a special kindness. Unfortunately, politics had been running high in the county, and Mr. Horne came into collision with his landlord over the Ludlow Election. Shrewd blows had been given on either side, but it was with feelings of pained surprise that the people of the district heard that the right hon. Gentleman had written to his tenantry at the annual audit dinner a letter in which the following sentence occurred—

> "It will be recognised that while one of my tenants finds his chief occupation in denouncing landlords and opposing the system under which land is occupied, while at the same time he has not sufficient self-respect to give up the holding he occupies, it makes it difficult and unpleasant for me to come to such gatherings and to exchange ideas with my tenants as I have been so fond of doing."

That was a taunt Mr. Horne could not sit under, and he went to the agent and offered either to leave at once or to accept twelve months notice. It was agreed that he should leave at once, but before doing so he got a memorandum from the agent.

MR. LLEWELLYN (Somersetshire, N.) asked, on a point of order, whether the hon. Member was not introducing a personal matter altogether outside the Amendment before the House.

*MR. SPEAKER: I do not think I can exclude it. It may be a personal and separate question, but the Amendment among other things speaks of want of security of tenure, and it is competent for hon. Members to speak of the want of security arising from sudden disputes with landlords and to give illustrations.

*MR. BRIGHT said that he called attention to the incident of a man leaving his farm after a long and satisfactory tenancy owing to a political dispute with his landlord. When Mr. Horne met the agent to discuss the question of his leaving the farm the agent was told that he must sign a memorandum stating that he (Mr. Horne) had no wish to leave, that he was perfectly satisfied with the farm, and that he left because Colonel Kenyon-Slaney wanted him to go off the farm. The agent signed this. When they held a meeting in a village they were afraid of taking a vote because the people felt insecure, and the agent of the landlord would be sure to be somewhere about. Now-a-days the people were educated beyond that state of things. They had eaten of the fruit of the tree of knowledge, and they would not stand this kind of treatment. Not long ago one noble Lord spoke of his tenants as "his belongings." Surely that was a strange thing to say in this century. It was with pain that he alluded to the personal incident, but he did so because he felt that the welfare of the whole agricultural community was at stake. This was an illustration of that feeling of want of security in land tenure which permeated the whole community and inflicted an injury on agriculture. He earnestly entreated hon. Members on both sides of the House to vote for this Amendment, and so do something to express their opinion that something ought to be done to give greater security to the agricultural community.

*MR. AILWYN FELLOWES (Huntingdonshire, Ramsey) said he thought this would be an opportune moment for him to reply to certain things which had been said in the course of the debate. If any other matter should arise which it might be necessary for the Government to deal with, his right hon. friend the President of the Local Government Board would reply to it at the close of the debate. In the first place he wished to say that he had absolutely nothing to complain of in the speech of the hon. Member for East Northamptonshire, which had been very moderate in tone and fair all round. He only wished that one or two of the speeches which had followed had been in the same tone. The mover of the Amendment had, however, said one thing which rather surprised him. He stated that this Amendment was not brought forward as a vote of censure against the Government, but rather as a friendly Amendment. He must remind his hon. friend that an Amendment to the Address was always regarded in the light of a vote of censure on the Government if carried to a division, and so this proposal was really a vote of censure upon the Government of the day.

The hon. Member had alluded to the case of Denmark, and had contrasted the state of things there with that which was to be found in this country. He made special mention of the system of combination and co-operation. As a matter of fact, Denmark was rather different to this country. In Denmark there was a mass of small holders who enjoyed a great deal of State aid, and they consequently stood in a different position to the agriculturists of this country. With reference to what had been said about combination and co-operation, he should like to associate himself most strongly with every word that had been said in regard to the action of the hon. Member for Chester and Sir Horace Plunkett. Great credit was due to both those Gentlemen for the manner in which they had brought this question to the front, and he should like to say a few words later on about that question.

The first thing which his hon. friend's Amendment alluded to was the question of the depopulation of our rural districts, and he did not suppose that there was a single man in the rural districts who would disagree with what the hon. Member had said upon that point. He did not, however, think it was possible to point to any one thing as the real cause of this depopulation. If they considered the state of things in the United States of America, in Australia, France, Germany, and, in fact, in practically all other civilised countries, they would find that the one thing which agriculturists complained of more than any other was the great depopulation of the rural districts. Therefore this was not a phenomenon peculiar to our country alone. As regards this country a great many reasons had been given to account for this state of things. His hon. friend who moved the Resolution rather thought that it was due to the insecurity of tenure in land, but one or two other hon. Members had accounted for it by difficulties in regard to housing and such other matters. He regretted that he was debarred by the Rules of the House from alluding to a question which no doubt would have some effect in stopping depopulation, and that was the question of small holdings. He thought there were one or two other reasons besides those given by his hon. friend which were worthy of consideration. In some measure the exodus to the towns was due to the enormous amount of poor land which had recently been laid down to grass in this country; and in a large measure it was due to the increased use of agricultural machinery. But most important of all was the fact that the rural population had got into their minds the idea that life in the towns was much more attractive than life in the country. It was just the same in foreign countries. And as a consequence almost every hon. Member of this House was constantly receiving applications from the young men in rural districts for posts either in the police or on the railway, in order that they should be able to leave the villages and go into the towns for better recreation and more amusement.

MR. JESSE COLLINGS (Birmingham, Bordesley): They have no alternative.

*MR. AILWYN FELLOWES said it was difficult to say exactly how this depopulation could be stopped. The hon. Member for Leith said that the Board of Agriculture might be able to do something. They tried to do a good deal, but he was afraid that upon this particular question they were not prepared to say at the moment exactly how they could stop this exodus from the rural districts. He felt sure that if any Government could bring forward a scheme which would successfully counteract this tendency, such a measure would be favourably received in the House of Commons and by the country.

With reference to the case of Mr. Horne, that was rather a personal question which should be left to the hon. and gallant Member for Shropshire, who was quite able to take care of himself.

With regard to the question of preferential rates, the work of the Committee on that subject had been disappointing up to now, but owing to no fault of the Committee. Every chamber of agriculture, every farmers' club, and every agricultural society had been asked to send up witnesses to give evidence before the Committee on the question of preferential rates; but at present the response had been very small. The Board of Agriculture was always prepared to send down experts to any place where there was a dispute between the railway company and agriculturists. The work that had been done by the Board in stamping out the diseases of animals should not be forgotten. Pleuro-pneumonia, foot-and-mouth disease, rabies, and cattle plague had been extinguished; and the Board only asked for a little more time and consideration to enable them to stamp out swine fever and sheep scab. In many directions the Board had by administrative measures endeavoured to help the agricultural interest; but the question remained, would greater security and freedom for the agricultural tenant have the effect of bringing people back to the land? The farmers were not the class that was leaving the rural districts. In 1891 there were 223,000 farmers and in 1901 there were 224,000. The loss was mainly in agricultural labourers.

MR. KILBRIDE (Kildare, S.): Because the three acres' cow did not calve.

*MR. AILWYN FELLOWES said that the extension of the allotment system had done something to check rural depopulation. The question of security for compensation was dealt with in the Act of 1900, and the tenant farmer owed much to it. But security of tenure was quite a different thing. That could only be obtained by dual ownership. There was no agriculturist in the country, there was nobody in that House, except possibly the hon. Gentleman who preceded him, who wished to see established here the same system as that which was set up in Ireland some years ago. The last Royal Commission on Agriculture, of which his two hon. friends were members, said in their Report—

> "As a general rule the landlords are most anxious to keep their tenants, and in many cases have made great sacrifices in order to retain them, and we believe that cases of unfair and capricious eviction are exceedingly rare."

He thought that Report bore out what had been continually said on the subject, that farmers did not complain of insecurity.

MR. CHANNING: I dissented from that.

*MR. AILWYN FELLOWES said the Report expressed the views of the majority of the Commission.

In regard to combination, he knew what the feelings of his noble friend at the head of the Department were upon this question, and would remind them that at every meeting of agriculturists which he had addressed in the country he had drawn attention to the advantages of co-operation. It ought not to be forgotten, when combination in Ireland was put forward as an object-lesson, that this country was different from Ireland, just as it was different from Denmark. In Ireland there were a large number of small holdings, and combination was naturally far easier to organise amongst small holders than amongst large farmers. The British farmer was very conservative in his ways, and it would take him a long time to see the advantages of combination; but he thought that among small owners there was a great opening for co-operation. Take the question of railway rates alone. He believed that if small owners would combine and get their produce together, they would be able to send it by the railway much more cheaply than at present, and would thus save a great deal of expense in the future.

There was also the question of rating. He believed the agricultural tenant was rated far above his due, and he believed that the question was much more present to the minds of tenants than was the question of an alteration in land tenure. Whatever might be said of our land laws, he thought that it could not be disputed that we had the finest agriculturists in any part of the world, and also that we had the finest market in the world for pedigree stock and stock of all kinds. To his mind what agriculturists wanted was to be left to make their own bargains as to the terms upon which they occupied their holdings; and although he was sure that his hon. friend had brought forward this Amendment in no way in opposition to agriculturists, yet he was perfectly convinced that they did not hold the views which his hon. friend had, even so moderately, put forward, and would prefer to go on under the system which for so many years had been, as he believed it would continue to be, a success in this country.

MR. BRIGG (Yorkshire, W.R., Keighley) said he was acquainted with the methods followed in some of the principal counties in migrating people from the rural districts into manufacturing districts, and it appeared to him that it might interest the House to hear something on that matter. When workers were wanted in the manufacturing districts advertisements were circulated throughout the rural districts in the neighbourhood inviting labourers of a certain class, and telling them where to apply. On the applications being received, the employers set before them new, well-built, clean cottages, and offered generally a much higher rate of wages than they had been accustomed to get. Children who were half-timers got 4s. 6d. a week, ordinary children 9s. to 10s., women 12s. to 15s., and ordinary labourers, who had not been trained to any particular branch of work, 15s. to 18s. a week. Under these circumstances it was not wonderful that many were induced to leave their occupations in the country to take up positions in the manufacturing towns. In addition to the inducements he had mentioned, there were good schools, where parents could hope to have their children properly educated, there were night schools, where the children might continue their education after leaving the day schools, and there were libraries which could be used by the working class. There had been, and there still was, a strong disposition on the part of parents to sacrifice themselves and their own position on behalf of their children. He did not say that disposition was carried to the same extent in England as in Scotland, but he thought all who took an interest in the welfare of the country would be glad that such a feeling prevailed. Another reason which made people in the rural districts desire to come into the towns was that in the towns they became connected with churches and chapels and other places, where they could form friendships, so that young women had better chances of marriage. Under these circumstances it was difficult to see how the population could be retained in the rural districts. But there were some things that could be done in the rural districts to retain the population on the land. There should be a considerable improvement in the day and night schools, clubs should be provided where young people could gather together for social intercourse, and the better classes living in the villages must make some sacrifice of their own comfort and convenience after the ordinary working hours in order to attend meetings and take part in the social life of the people. By these means they might hope to effect something in the way of keeping young people in the villages. There was one great difficulty in connection with the question of keeping people on the land, and that was the difficulty of erecting cheap buildings. He felt sure that much might be done in the way of inducing people to remain on the land by the provision of small holdings and cheap buildings.

*MR. JESSE COLLINGS said he must take exception to what his hon. friend the Member for the Ramsey Division asserted when he stated that the migration of the rural population in the United Kingdom was adequately explained by the fact that a similar movement towards the towns was also to be observed in other countries. If the people here were given a chance of going back to the land under satisfactory conditions, there was no doubt what the result would be. The hon. Member who moved the Amendment spoke of the great benefit which free trade had been to the agricultural labourer. Free trade had conferred on him this benefit, that it had squeezed him off the face of the earth. There were hardly any of them left. He was somewhat disappointed at not hearing very much more in this debate than palliatives—railway rates, co-operation, and so forth. It had been urged that any new system that was set up should not be created by State money or legislation, but should be allowed to grow up naturally, as the present system had grown up. The present system had not grown up naturally. It had grown up under about 4,000 or 5,000 Acts of Parliament, and if we were to restore this country to the old condition of land tenure it could only be done by State legislation and State money. Security of tenure had been recommended, but he held that all the legislation which had been tried for the purpose of giving security of tenure had failed. It passed the wit of man to provide security of tenure, compensation for improvements, and the like, in such a way as to guarantee both landlord and tenant from harm. There was only one principle that settled questions of security, compensation, and all other difficulties, and that was for the cultivator to be the owner of the soil.

It was said that this Amendment was not a hostile Amendment; but it would, if carried, turn out the Government, and that was one reason why he could not vote for it. During the past twenty years the Government had done a good deal, though not enough, for agriculture. But supposing the other side were to come into office, how was agriculture to fare? The Cattle Diseases Act had been alluded to, and according to the leaders opposite that would be repealed. There would then be no security for the farmers' flocks and herds from disease. He believed his hon. friend who moved the Amendment was opposed to the Agricultural Ratings Act, and if the Liberals came in they would not renew it. He should like to hear a denial of their intentions with respect to that Act. They had an illustration of what might be expected from a Liberal Government on the question of agriculture in what happened in 1886. "Once bitten, twice shy." Once in office, on that occasion, instead of dealing with the question which placed them there they never even mentioned it. If hon. Gentlemen opposite were to come into power they would be in the same position to-morrow as in 1886, when the Liberal Party rode into office on the backs of the agricultural labourers, and then kicked them aside as soon as they got in. He would make a recommendation to his hon. friend the Member for East Northamptonshire. This Government had passed a Small Holdings Act, which had not been generally brought into operation because the county councils had shirked their duty in relation to it. He would recommend his hon. friend to go down into the country and persuade them to put in operation that practical measure which was ready to their hands. There was demonstration in the places where it had been acted upon of the splendid results which could be obtained under it. The hon. Member for Halifax had suggested that there should be free trade in land. What was desired was a multiplication of ownerships, but he was opposed to free trade in land unless it was accompanied by State aid to help cultivators to buy it. Free trade in land must be accompanied by State aid to enable men to buy holdings, or else the landed aristocracy would be supplanted by a landlord plutocracy, and of the two he preferred the former. They would simply have a change of owners, and the new ones would not be of the best type.

The noble Lord the Member for Horncastle had made a landlord speech pure and simple. He spoke as to the ethics of the question, and asked why a landlord should not be able to do with his land what a grocer did with his goods. On that point he joined issue with the noble Lord. Land was different from any other commodity. Everything we ate, drank, or handled, came from the land. It was as much a necessity of existence as air, water, or any other element. There was no such thing as unconditional property in land in the sense that there was possession in personal property. He was not saying this from any ill-feeling towards landlords, but he advised his noble friend not to challenge the people of this country on that point. They knew what the landlord and tenant system had brought the country to. It had brought agriculture to ruin. Go through the country by rail and nothing would be seen but grass everywhere. If that went on, the time would come when the sight of a field of corn in this country would be the rarest thing possible. It must not be imagined that an ownership system would not succeed. That system obtained in every country in the civilised world but our own, and our own system had been a failure. He maintained that the only remedy to bring back prosperity to agriculture was the adoption of ownership of farms, large and small. He did not mean that anything should be confiscated, but that farms, large and small, should be purchased at a fair price. He had no sympathy with land nationalisation, both on account of the ethics of the case, and because they would have to wait a long time for it, even if it were in the least desirable. When he spoke of ownership, he did not mean that the land should be cut up into small squares, but that there should be all kinds and sizes of holdings, as was the case in every other country in Europe except in the extreme East, where, as in England, there were vast estates. He believed in the ownership system also because of its political effect. Fancy a Butter Bill lingering in the Danish Parliament three or four sessions before it could be passed! That was because in that country there was a myriad of owners. The land-owning which he wished to see in this country was that under which the owner would live on his own estate, knowing all about it and every man on it. He said with all confidence that as surely as the latifundia ruined Rome, the creation of vast landed estates would ruin England.

In Germany they noticed with what care agriculture was kept in the forefront. That was because German statesmen regarded agriculture as the strong anchor of the ship of State. He urged the Government to pay attention to that side of the question, which was the social side, and to set about getting as many people planted on the soil as owners as they possibly could. That could only be done by the help of the State, and it was for the benefit of the whole nation that it should be done. They spent days on the discussion of the Army and Navy, but this was a far more important question as regarded national defence than either the Army or the Navy. It was our first line of defence, and it was the only way which would solve the social problems which occupied the minds of every thoughtful man. The slums in our cities, the depopulation of the rural districts, the increasing number of vagrants, all arose out of the present land tenure system, and he hoped his friends in the Government would pay attention in that direction. They would find that they would soon get the people back to the land if they gave them an open career on it. He did not urge it for the sake of the farmer or for the good of the peasantry, though that was important, but for the sake of the country. If they looked back at the legislation in Germany at the beginning of the last century it would be found that it had not been passed for the sake of the farmer or the peasant but for the sake of the country as a whole to make it strong. German legislators saw then that the country could not survive without the great mass of the people being rooted to the soil. If a great war came upon us it would be found that our commercial riches would not help us, because we stood alone in the peculiar position of having the great mass of the people divorced from the soil. He would press home on all Governments and on hon. Members on both sides of the House to carry their minds through history when they would see that England was strong above all other nations as long as her rural population was strong. In the stress of war it would be found that though their wealth of two thousand millions per annum might carry them on a little while, for the permanent success of the country they might as well have two thousand million paving stones without a rural population. He asked all sides to remember that we had in this country alone a proletariat that did not exist anywhere else, and that worst, most fatal of all phenomona, a landless people.

Mr. TOMKINSON (Cheshire, Crewe): said that there was one satisfaction about this debate, and that was that although they could not all see eye to eye—there was some disagreement as to causes and remedies — nevertheless, the disclaimer of his hon. friend who moved the Amendment, and of the seconder, of any partisan feeling had been generally accepted by both sides of the House. There was substantial unanimity as to the depopulation of the rural districts and congestion in the towns, and that these were highly injurious to the national welfare in its moral, material, and social aspect. He might be allowed to tell the House some of his own experiences. He lived in a county which was looked upon as one of the most prosperous in England from an agricultural point of view. Whenever he mentioned that he was told that he was fortunate to live in a county which possessed every exceptional advantage—an excellent climate, a good soil, markets close at hand, good landlords, farms well equipped, and almost every possible advantage for the successful carrying on of the agricultural interest. He fully admitted the whole of that statement, but there was something a great deal beyond it, and that was the system of land tenure. In the first place they had a vast number and a great variety of holdings. It was a county more or less of small holdings. A farm of 200 or 300 acres was reckoned a large one, and the holdings ranged from that size down to an acre. The small holdings were looked upon as stepping stones for the industrial labourer to rise to greater and better things. The result was that they had an agricultural population thrifty, industrious, and with an intense love of the soil. Consequently, so far from the rural population fleeing from the country to the towns, there was an immense land-hunger, and indeed the rents for small pieces of land were astonishingly high, almost rack rents. He knew numbers of instances of small pieces of land, seven or eight miles from a market town, the rent of which was £4, £5, £6 an acre, without a brick upon them. He would guard himself from having it thought that the country squires ever exacted such rent; but they knew that when a small piece of land was held by a man who did not work it himself he could let it at a fabulous rent. The reason was that there was not enough of these small farms. What a pity it was that this state of things could not exist in other counties! Why was it that elsewhere there was this rural depopulation? They were told that it was because of the superior attractions of the towns over the country that the people would not stay there. He denied that in toto. The chief reason was that the people were not allowed to remain in the country. There were not places for them to live in. He knew of instances of villages, the property of a single owner who would neither build new cottages, repair old ones, or let a small piece of land on which other people might build cottages. The consequence was that the cottages fell into ruin, the local sanitary authority stepped in and condemned the property, and in order to conform to sanitary requirements two cottages were knocked into one. Therefore, there was a progressive reduction in the number of cottages.

One of the greatest causes of the rural depopulation was the most unfortunate departure, after the Crimean War, from the system of moderate sized holdings and the consolidation of these into excessively large farms. That was now admitted to have been a terrible mistake, because it drove the people from the soil, and the loss following the decrease in the number of farm labourers and small tradesmen had recoiled on the heads of those who had brought it about. There was at present difficulty in letting very large farms, while there were any number of offers for farms of 100 to 200 acres. He agreed with the noble Lord the Member for Horncastle that one of the great difficulties in providing small holdings was that farmers were disinclined to give up land for that purpose. That was his own experience, and it was a strange commentary on the cry that agriculture was so depressed that it would not pay, and that it was hardly worth carrying on. If a tenant farmer were asked to give up a piece of land to divide into small holdings to provide the labourers with three acres and a cow, it was quite certain to be the best piece of his farm he was asked to give up! He wished that some people would take a run down to Cheshire and see Lord Carrington's estate, where he had spent many happy days. Lord Carrington was a model landlord, and had put thousands of people on the land in small holdings.

*MR. JESSE COLLINGS: They have not bought the land; they are merely tenants.

MR. TOMKINSON: Yes; he was speaking of occupants. Now, Lord Carrington on his properties never dispossessed a tenant, but when a farm fell vacant naturally, the first offer was given to the Small Holdings Association, who cut up the farm into small tenancies, and these were speedily taken up by industrious and prosperous small farmers. The same thing had happened in the Channel Islands, the whole area of which was purely agricultural. He himself was Chairman of the Cudworth Small Holdings Association, which bought a farm, nearly derelict and hardly worth cultivating, thirty miles from London, at £12 per acre, and practically no tithe. They advertised that they were prepared to sell it in lots up to twenty acres in extent, and what was the result? In the first six months they had 1,150 applications for purchase. Of course a vast number of these applicants were people not likely to succeed, but by the end of the third year of the existence of the Association all the land would be sold, and something like forty hardy, prosperous, industrious small farmers would be located there.

Something had been said about Denmark and the advance of Danish agriculture. Between 1885 and 1901 the value of the harvest, without including straw, had advanced by rapid strides from 272 million kronen to 338 millions. The number of cattle, which in 1888 was 1,460,000, had increased in 1898 to 1,743,000, swine had increased during the same decade from 771,000 to 1,179,000, and poultry from 4,592,000 to 8,748,000. It was no wonder that 30,000 Jutland small cultivators signed a memorial to the King of Denmark, the Crown Prince, and the Reichstag, in which the following passage occurred—

> "We, Danish peasant proprietors, demand no protection at the cost of our fellow citizens. We do not wish that the necessaries of life of our people should be increased by artificial means."

The noble Lord the Member for Horncastle spoke of the confusion of ideas on the part of the supporters of the Amendment, and asked why a landlord should not get as good a profit out of his land as a grocer out of his shop. The confusion of ideas was on the part of the noble Lord. He should have compared the grocer not with the landlord, but with the tenant farmer. As long as the grocer paid his rent and taxes nobody would disturb him, and the object of the Amendment was that the agricultural tenant should be as safe as long as he paid his rent and taxes. The hon. Member for Bordesley had said that the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1890 was final, and that all that could be done under it had been done. The hon. Member further said that it was impossible to conceive of any other Act which, by endeavouring to do justice to one of the parties, did not do injustice to the other.

*MR. JESSE COLLINGS said he did not mean to say that the Act was final, but that however that Act or any other Act was improved, it passed the wit of man so to do it that no injustice would be done to either landlord or tenant.

MR. TOMKINSON said that there should be provision for securing all improvements which he had made on his farm to the sitting tenant, and also for securing him from a rise of rent in prosperous times and compensation for disturbance in case of capricious eviction. He was not an advocate of dual ownership, although in Ireland the tenants had always been co-owners. What he wanted was not so much freeholders, but free tenants — free access to the soil and fair security of tenure. He would not go into the question of agricultural rates, but gave it as his opinion that there would never be an increase in the number of occupiers of the soil without compulsory powers being given to the local authorities to acquire land compulsorily for division into small holdings.

MR. YERBURGH (Chester) said he agreed that it was desirable, in the interests of the country, that the number of small holders of land should be increased. His right hon. friend the Member for the Bordesley Division stated that legislation was necessary; but he wished to know what limit his right hon. friend would put on the proposal.

*MR. JESSE COLLINGS said that in a few days a Bill would be introduced which would explain his position.

MR. YERBURGH said he gathered that his right hon. friend was not an advocate of universal peasant proprietorship; but that his intention was to multiply the number of small holders in this country. The argument was that the land should be put in the occupation of more people, whether as tenants or freeholders, because that would add largely to the fertility of the soil, and increase its value. That was a very strong argument indeed. In Denmark, for example, it was found that, while the value of the larger farms had decreased, the value of the smaller farms had increased. Besides, with small tenancies, they obtained the best kind of men and women trained to agricultural work and farm management. The system, however, had been in force in Lincolnshire, and it had been found in experience that when a period of depression came the small tenants had not capital to fall back upon, and they were swept away. If small holdings, therefore, were to be created some elaborate system must be devised to enable these small owners to compete on equal terms with the larger farmers, say in the provision of capital, seeds, artificial manures, and other things, so as to enable the small owners to conduct a profitable business. It was erroneous to state that Danish agriculture owed its wonderful prosperity to State aid instead of to the farmers themselves. The two pillars of Denmark's agricultural success were co-operation among farmers and a wonderfully complete system of agricultural education, which was brought within the reach of the farmer's wife and children. They were now obtaining in this country a similar class of education through the medium of the county councils. It was recognised that education was necessary. What was needed was that farmers should apply to agriculture the same methods of business as were in force in the other industries of the country—in short, they must "industrialise" agriculture. By co-operation, material and machinery could be obtained at a lower rate. A small farmer could have all the machinery he required, and also the advantage of pedigree stock and credit. It was stated that co-operation would not suit the interests of the larger farmers; but the larger farmers were now beginning to find out that their interests were the same as the smaller farmers. If the railway companies were to blame—and he was not going to offer any opinion as to the general rates—the farmers also were not blameless. Certain advantages were offered to the farmers by the railway companies if they bulked their produce—a reduction in one case of as much as 60 per cent. was offered—yet but few took advantage of it. In the Newport district only 20 per cent. of the farmers had availed themselves of the facility offered by the London and North-Western Railway by the provision of a depôt to which they could send their produce. In Yorkshire, he might mention, the North-Eastern Railway had established a motor service for the benefit of those farmers who were at a distance from the railway. These facts showed that the railway companies were not altogether to blame.

He wished to call attention to the good work done by the Agricultural Organisation Society, of which he had the honour to be president, and which in three years had formed 107 co-operative farming societies. The Organisation Society was doing in England a work similar to that done by Sir Horace Plunkett in Ireland, the average reduction effected by their co-operative farming societies being from 20 to 25 per cent.—a reduction which went into the pockets of the farmers. He suggested that these societies should be utilised as the vehicles for conveying to the farmers, big and small, the very admirable information collected by the Board of Agriculture. The Organisation Society owed a great deal to the Board of Agriculture for the great interest it had taken in the movement. Mr. Hanbury, whose loss was severely felt by the agricultural industry, had addressed a meeting on its behalf; and now that he had passed away they had another gentleman in his position who also displayed great interest in the work of the organisation. The movement was based entirely on self-help for farmers, rather than that they should rely on the State as a crutch. On behalf of the Organisation Society he thanked the hon. Gentleman for his speech.

MR. LAMBERT (Devonshire, South Molton) said he hoped he would be allowed to congratulate the representative of the Board of Agriculture in this House on his admirable speech, and to express the confident opinion that in him the Department had a very admirable representative. The hon. Gentleman stated that the Motion was a vote of censure on the Government; but this would probably be the only opportunity which would be afforded the House of discussing the subject. Last session the Vote for the Board of Agriculture did not come before the House at all. He entirely agreed with the hon. Gentleman that there was rural depopulation in the United States, in Australia, and on the Continent, as well as in England and Scotland; but there was a moral to be drawn from that. It was that the panacea of protection was no remedy for agricultural depression. He thought that was an admirable commentary on the present protectionist campaign in the country. He welcomed the speech of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for the Bordesley Division. The right hon. Member had said that great estates were the ruin of England; what would the right hon. Gentleman's great master, the right hon. Member for West Birmingham, have said to that pronouncement if it had been made just before the aristocratic Welbeck meeting? Special trains would hardly have been run to Welbeck to bring agricultural labourers and others to hear that sentiment. As a member of the Railway Rates Committee he should only be too glad if they could obtain evidence as regarded preferential rates; but the difficulty was that farmers would not avail of the invitation to give evidence which was scattered broadcast. Something had been said about rates on land. He was not in favour of overburdening land with rates; but, undoubtedly, the Education Act of 1902 did cast a very heavy burden on the agricultural interest. The right hon. Gentlemen the Member for the Bordesley Division said that what was required was to get the people back on the land, but when people once lived in towns it was difficult to get them back to the land. A most intelligent farmer told him the question was not to get the people back to the land, but to prevent them leaving it. There was no greater delusion than that no skill was required to be an agricultural labourer or a farmer. It was most desirable that the number of small holders should be increased.

The right hon. Gentleman the Member for the Bordesley Division said that there had been a good result from the Small Holdings Act. Unfortunately that was not the case. The whole operation of the Act up to August, 1903, amounted to 570 acres, divided between 196 owners. In Worcestershire, to which the right hon. Gentleman referred, the result was 140 acres divided between thirty-two owners. That was not a very great result. He would like to compare the condition of England under the Small Holdings Act with the condition of Ireland. His Irish friends sometimes got the best of the bargain. The English tenant who wanted to buy a small holding of twenty acres, value £500, would have to pay £100 down and instalments amounting to £19 10s. a year, which was practically his old rent; but in Ireland the tenant paid nothing down and got an immediate reduction in his rent. For a holding for which he used to pay £20 he would only pay £16. He thought there was some leeway to make up in this matter so far as England was concerned, and that the English law should be made similar to the Irish law in this respect. He thought British credit ought to be used more for British purposes, and for his part he would use £10,000,000 a year of the money which appeared in the Army Estimates for putting people on the land. The Annual increase for the Army would enable 16,000 cultivators to be put into small holdings of 25 acres of land at £25 an acre. There must, of course, always be upon the land owners and occupiers. They might increase the number of owners, but so far as tenant farmers were concerned what was wanted was to make them good farmers, and that could only be done by giving them absolute security for the capital invested. No one would wish to rob a good landlord, but what all tenant farmers wished to do was to compel bad landlords to do by law what good landlords did without law. The Act of 1900 was not the last word in this matter. He felt that there should be absolute freedom of cultivation, provided the men were not allowed to come in and rack out a farm and then leave it for somebody else. With regard to compensation for disturbance, if a man was capriciously turned out of his farm he should have enough compensation to enable him to take another farm without loss to himself. Let them regard the case of the late candidate for the Ludlow Division of Shropshire. Was he to go all over the country looking for a farm? Was it to be expected that he would get a farm in Shropshire where most of the landlords were of the same political persuasion as the hon. Member for Newport? There would have to be a system to enable such men to buy their own farms in order that they might get their living out of the land. A tenant had as much right to his own opinion as a landlord.

With regard to agricultural education he would recommend the Board of Agriculture to lead the way instead of following, as they were doing at the present time. He would have them go into each county and find out the best system of agriculture in that county and disseminate that information throughout the length and breadth of the land and they should guide county councils in this matter. The money spent on agricultural education in England was a miserable pittance compared to that which was spent in the countries of Europe. He did not believe in agriculture being coddled, but he did think the Government should do something to enable farmers to help themselves.

SIR CARNE RASCH (Essex, Chelmsford) said it was nothing less than a national scandal that land within thirty miles of Whitechapel Church should go derelict, as it was, and out of cultivation; and when land went out of cultivation the agricultural labourer, unfortunately, went out of cultivation too. The reason why agriculturists were ruined was because of high rates and low prices. Hon. Gentlemen opposite had not helped them very much in times past. They were full of promises and expressions of sympathy when they were out of office, but when they were in office they did nothing for anybody. He was in the House of Commons from 1892 to 1895—in opposition—and he took considerable interest in what hon. Gentlemen opposite, who were then in power, said they would do for agriculture. The gentleman who was appointed the Minister for Agriculture did not—so he was told—know the difference between barley and oats. The only thing the Liberal Party ever did for the agricultural interest was to introduce the foot-and-mouth disease into this country. The hon. Member for Northamptonshire spoke about legislative measures. What was the good of legislative measures? If they could legislate to put up the price of wheat 40s. a quarter, there might be something in it. This was not a question of rents, at all events in Essex. It was a question of supply and demand, and when there might be two men after a farm anywhere else, there were two farms after one tenant in Essex. He did not believe in small holdings. If the right hon. Member for the Bordesley Division differed from him, he should like to put him down on twenty acres of Essex clay. There were means by which the agricultural situation might be improved. The reason why agricultural labourers crowded into the towns and pulled down wages was that there were no cottages for them to live in in the country. Under the existing rural by-laws cottages cost £600 the pair to build. [Cries of "No."] He had paid that price for them the other day. In those circumstances a man could not get more than 1 per cent. on his outlay. Agriculture might be helped in the matter of rates, and a bounty on wheat might help the situation. The late Lord Salisbury and Mr. Disraeli had a certain amount of common sense, as most people would admit, and what they said was that if protection was abolished, rates and taxes on the land should be abolished too. He failed to see why they should not have a bounty on wheat of 10s. a quarter. Such a bounty would not be expensive. It would be the price we should pay for keeping the agricultural population that we were losing. Agriculture would also get a good deal if all the rates and taxes were swept off the land. If we did not preserve our agricultural industry, he should like to know how we were going to feed our Army and our population in time of war.

*Mr. J. H. LEWIS (Flint Boroughs) said he only intervened in the debate in order to ask whether His Majesty's Government intended to carry out the recommendation of the Committee which sat three or four years ago on the question of British afforestation. The question was one of great and growing importance, the timber supply of the world showing as it did a considerable shrinkage. We were now in this country importing timber, which we ourselves could grow, to the amount of £20,000,000 a year, and we had 20,000,000 acres of waste land, a large portion of which was suitable for afforestation. It was under these circumstances that he put the question.

Mr. AILWYN FELLOWES: The matter referred to by the hon. Member is now being considered by my noble friend.

Question put.

The House divided:—Ayes, 165; Noes, 241. (Division List No. 9.)

AYES.

Abraham, William (Cork, N.E.)
Abraham, William (Rhondda)
Allen, Charles P.
Ambrose, Robert
Ashton, Thomas Gair
Atherley-Jones, L.
Austin, Sir John
Barry, E. (Cork, S.)
Benn, John Williams
Black, Alexander William
Blake, Edward
Bolton, Thomas Dolling
Bright, Allan Heywood
Bryce, Rt. Hon. James
Buchanan, Thomas Ryburn
Burke, E. Haviland
Buxton, Sydney Charles
Caldwell, James
Campbell-Bannerman, Sir H.
Causton, Richard Knight
Channing, Francis Allston
Cheetham, John Frederick
Churchill, Winston Spencer
Cogan, Denis J.
Condon, Thomas Joseph
Craig, Robert Hunter (Lanark)
Crean, Eugene
Crombie, John William
Cullinan, J.
Dalziel, James Henry
Davies, Alfred (Carmarthen)
Davies, M. Vaughan (Cardigan
Delany, William
Devlin, Chas. Ramsay (Galway
Dewar, John A. (Inverness-sh.)
Dillon, John
Donelan, Captain A.
Doogan, P. C.
Duffy, William J.
Dunn, Sir William
Edwards, Frank
Ellice,CaptE.C (SAndrw'sBghs

Sir Carne Rasch.

Ellis, John Edward (Notts.)
Emmott, Alfred
Esmonde, Sir Thomas
Evans, Sir FrancisH(Maidstone
Eve, Harry Trelawney
Farrell, James Patrick
Fenwick, Charles
Ferguson, R. C. Munro (Leith)
Ffrench, Peter
Fitzmaurice, Lord Edmond
Flavin, Michael Joseph
Flynn, James Christopher
Fowler, Rt. Hn. Sir Henry
Gilhooly, James
Grant, Corrie
Griffith, Ellis J.
Gurdon, Sir W. Brampton
Hammond, John
Hardie, J Keir (MerthyrTydvil)
Harmsworth, R. Leicester
Harwood, George
Hayden, John Patrick
Hayter, Rt. Hn. Sir Arthur D.
Helme, Norval Watson
Hemphill, Rt. Hon. Charles H.
Higham, John Sharpe
Hutchinson, Dr. Charles Fredk
Jacoby, James Alfred
Joicey, Sir James
Jones, DavidBrynmor(Swansea
Joyce, Michael
Kennedy, P.J. (Westmeath, N.
Kennedy,Vincent P.(Cavan,W.
Kilbride, Denis
Labouchere, Henry
Lambert, George
Law, Hugh Alex (Donegal, W.)
Lawson, Sir Wilfrid (Cornwall)
Layland-Barratt, Francis
Leese,Sir Joseph F.(Accrington
Lewis, John Herbert
Lloyd-George, David
Lough, Thomas
Lundon, W.
Lyell, Charles Henry
Macnamara, Dr. Thomas J.
MacNeill, John Gordon Swift
MacVeagh, Jeremiah
M'Fadden, Edward
M'Hugh, Patrick A.
M'Kean, John
M'Kenna, Reginald
M'Killop, W. (Sligo, North)
Mitchell, Edw. (Fermanagh, N.
Mooney, John J.
Murnaghan, George
Murphy, John
Nannetti, Joseph P.
Nolan,Col.John P. (Galway, N.
Nolan, Joseph (Louth, South)
Norman, Henry
Norton, Capt. Cecil William
O'Brien, James F. X. (Cork)
O'Brien,Kendal(Tipperary Mid
O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
O'Brien, P. J.(Tipperary, N.)
O'Connor, John (Kildare, N.)
O'Donnell, John (Mayo, S.)
O'Dowd, John
O'Kelly, Conor (Mayo, N.)
O'Malley, William
O'Shaughnessy, P. J.
O'Shee, James John
Palmer, Sir Charles M (Durham
Parrott, William
Partington, Oswald
Paulton, James Mellor
Perks, Robert William
Pirie, Duncan V.
Power, Patrick Joseph
Reckitt, Harold James
Reddy, M.
Reid, Sir R. Threshie(Dumfries
Rickett, J. Compton
Roberts, John H. (Denbighs.)
Robson, William Snowdon
Roche, John
Rose, Charles Day
Runciman, Walter
Schwann, Charles E.
Scott, Chas. Prestwich (Leigh)
Seely,MajJ.E.B.(Isle of Wight
Shackleton, David James
Shaw, Thomas (Hawick B.)
Sheehan, Daniel Daniel
Sheehy, David
Shipman, Dr. John G.
Sinclair, John (Forfarshire)
Smith, Samuel (Flint)
Soares, Ernest J.
Spencer,Rt.Hn C.R. (Northants
Stevenson, Francis S.
Strachey, Sir Edward
Sullivan, Donal
Taylor, Theodore C. (Radcliffe)
Thomas, Abel (Carmarthen, E.
Thomas, Sir A. (Glamorgan, E.
Thomas,David Alfred(Merthyr
Thomson, F. W. (York, W. R.
Tomkinson, James
Ure, Alexander
Waldron, Laurence Ambrose
Wallace, Robert
Walton, Joseph (Barnsley)
Warner, Thomas Courtenay T.
Wason, Eugene (Clackmannan
Weir, James Galloway
Whitley, J. H. (Halifax)
Whittaker, Thomas Palmer
Williams, Osmond (Merioneth)
Wilson, Chas. Henry (Hull,W.
Woodhouse, SirJT (Huddersf'd
Young, Samuel

Tellers for the Ayes—Mr. Herbert Gladstone and Mr. William M'Arthur.

NOES.

Agnew, Sir Andrew Noel
Allhusen,AugustusHenry Eden
Allsopp, Hon. George
Anson, Sir William Reynell
Arkwright, John Stanhope
Arnold-Forster,Rt.Hn.Hugh O
Arrol, Sir William
Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
Aubrey-Fletcher, Rt. Hn. SirH
Bagot, Capt. Josceline FitzRoy
Bailey, James (Walworth)
Bain, Colonel James Robert
Baird, John George Alexander
Balcarres, Lord
Baldwin, Alfred
Balfour, Rt.Hn.A. J. (Manch'r
Balfour, RtHnGerald W(Leeds
Balfour, Kenneth R. (Christch.
Banbury, Sir Frederick George
Barry, Sir Francis T. (Windsor
Bartley, Sir George C. T.
Beach,RtHn. SirMichael Hicks
Beckett, Ernest William
Bentinck, Lord Henry C.
Bhownaggree, Sir M. M.
Bigwood, James
Bill, Charles
Blundell, Colonel Henry
Bond, Edward
Boscawen, Arthur Griffith
Boulnois, Edmund
Bowles, T. Gibson (King'sLynn
Brodrick, Rt. Hn. St. John
Brown, Sir Alex. H. (Shropsh.
Bull, William James
Burdett-Coutts, W.
Campbell, Rt.Hn.J.A.(Glasgow
Campbell, J.H.M.(DublinUniv.
Cautley, Henry Strother
Cavendish, V.C.W.(Derbyshire
Cecil, Evelyn (Aston Manor)
Cecil, Lord Hugh (Greenwich)
Chamberlain,Rt Hn J.A(Worc.
Chapman, Edward
Clare, Octavius Leigh
Coates, Edward Feetham
Cochrane, Hon. Thos. H. A. E.
Cohen, Benjamin Louis
Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
Colomb, Rt. Hn. Sir John C. R.
Compton, Lord Alwyne
Corbett, A. Cameron(Glasgow)
Corbett, T. L. (Down, North)
Cox, Irwin Edward Bainbridge
Craig, Charles Curtis (Antrim,S
Cross, Alexander (Glasgow)
Crossley, Rt. Hn. Sir Savile
Cubitt, Hon. Henry
Dalkeith, Earl of
Davenport, William Bromley
Davies, Sir Horatio D(Chatham
Denny, Colonel
Dickson, Charles Scott
Disraeli, Coningsby Ralph
Dixon-Hartland,Sir FredDixon
Doughty, Sir George
Douglas, Rt. Hn. A. Akers
Duke, Henry Edward
Dyke, Rt.Hn. Sir William Hart
Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
Fardell, Sir T. George
Fergusson, Rt. HnSirJ(Manc'r.
Fielden, Edward Brocklehurst
Finch, Rt. Hn. George H.
Finlay, SirR.B(Inv'rn'ssB'ghs)
Firbank, Sir Joseph Thomas
Fisher, William Hayes
Fison, Frederick William
FitzGerald, Sir RobertPenrose
Fitzroy, Hn. Edward Algernon
Flannery, Sir Fortescue

Flower, Sir Ernest
Forster, Henry William
Gardner, Ernest
Garfit, William
Gibbs, Hon. A. G. H.
Godson, Sir Augustus Fredk.
Gordon, Hn. J. E. (Elgin & Nairn
Gordon, J. (Londonderry, S.
Gordon, Maj Evans-(T'rH'mlets
Gorst, Rt. Hn. Sir John Eldon
Goschen, Hon. George Joachim
Goulding, Edward Alfred
Graham, Henry Robert
Gray, Ernest (West Ham)
Greene, Henry D. (Shrewsbury
Greene, W. Raymond (Cambs.)
Greville, Hon. Ronald
Guthrie, Walter Murray
Hain, Edward
Halsey, Rt. Hon. Thomas F.
Hambro, Charles Eric
Hamilton, Rt Hn Lord G (Midd'x
Hamilton, Marq. of (L'nd'nderry
Hardy, Laurence (Kent, Ashford
Hare, Thomas Leigh
Haslett, Sir James Horner
Hay, Hon. Claude George
Heath, Sir James (Staffords. NW
Helder, Augustus
Hope, J. F. (Sheffield Brightside
Hornby, Sir William Henry
Horner, Frederick William
Houston, Robert Paterson
Hozier, Hn. James Henry Cecil
Hunt, Rowland
Hutton, John (Yorks. N.R.)
Jessel, Captain Herbert Merton
Kenyon, Hn. Geo. T. (Denbigh)
Kenyon-Slaney, Rt. Hn. Col. W
Kerr, John
Kimber, Sir Henry
King, Sir Henry Seymour
Knowles, Sir Lees
Lambton, Hn Frederick Wm.
Laurie, Lieut.-General
Law, Andrew Bonar (Glasgow)
Lawrence, Sir Joseph (Monm'th
Lawrence, Wm. F. (Liverpool)
Lawson, Hn. H. L. W. (Mile End
Lawson, John Grant (Yorks NR
Lee, Arthur H. (Hants Fareham
Legge, Col. Hon. Heneage
Leveson-Gower, Frederick N. S.
Llewellyn, Evan Henry
Lockwood, Lieut.-Col. A. R.
Loder, Gerald Walter Erskine
Long, Col. Charles W. (Evesham
Long, Rt. Hn. Walter (Bristol, S
Lonsdale, John Brownlee
Lowe, Francis William
Lowther, C. (Cumb., Eskdale)
Loyd, Archie Kirkman
Lucas, Reginald J. (Portsmouth
Lyttelton, Rt. Hn. Alfred
MacIver, David (Liverpool)
Maconochie, A. W.
M'Arthur, Charles (Liverpool)
M'Calmont, Colonel James
Majendie, James A. H.
Malcolm, Ian
Manners, Lord Cecil
Marks, Harry Hananel
Martin, Richard Biddulph
Massey-Mainwaring, Hn. W. F.
Maxwell, Rt Hn Sir H. E. (Wigtn
Maxwell, W. J. H. (Dumfriesshire
Milner, Rt. Hn. Sir Fredk. G.
Molesworth, Sir Lewis
Montagu, G. (Huntingdon)
Montagu, Hn. J. Scott (Hants.)
Moore, William
Morgan, David J (Walthamstow
Morrell, George Herbert
Morrison, James Archibald
Morton, Arthur H. Aylmer
Mount, William Arthur
Mowbray, Sir Robert Gray C.
Murray, Charles J. (Coventry)
Palmer, Sir Walter (Salisbury)
Parker, Sir Gilbert
Pease, Herbert Pike (Darlington
Peel, Hn. W. Robert Wellesley
Pemberton, John S. G.
Percy, Earl
Platt-Higgins, Frederick
Plummer, Sir Walter R.
Powell, Sir Francis Sharp
Pretyman, Ernest George
Pryce-Jones, Lt.-Col. Edward
Purvis, Robert
Pym, C. Guy
Randles, John S.
Rankin, Sir James
Rasch, Sir Frederic Carne
Ratcliff, R. F.
Reed, Sir Edw. James (Cardiff)
Remnant, James Farquharson
Ridley, S. Forde
Roberts, Samuel (Sheffield)
Robertson, Herbert (Hackney)
Rolleston, Sir John F. L.
Rollit, Sir Albert Kaye
Rothschild, Hn. Lionel Walter
Round, Rt. Hon. James
Royds, Clement Molyneux
Rutherford, W. W. (Liverpool)
Sackville, Col. S. G. Stopford
Sadler, Col. Samuel Alexander
Samuel, Sir Harry S. (Limehouse
Sandys, Lieut.-Col. Thos. Myles
Seton-Karr, Sir Henry
Sharpe, William Edward T.
Shaw-Stewart, Sir H. (Renfrew)
Simeon, Sir Barrington
Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
Skewes-Cox, Thomas
Sloan, Thomas Henry
Smith, Hn. W. F. D. (Strand)
Spencer, Sir E. (W. Bromwich)
Stanley, Rt. Hn. Lord (Lancs.)
Stewart, Sir Mark J. M'Taggart
Stone, Sir Benjamin
Stroyan, John
Strutt, Hon. Charles Hedley
Talbot, Lord E. (Chichester)
Taylor, Austin (East Toxteth)
Thorburn, Sir Walter
Thornton, Percy M.
Tollemache, Henry James
Tomlinson, Sir Wm. Edw. M.
Tritton, Charles Ernest
Tuff, Charles
Tuke, Sir John Batty
Valentia, Viscount
Vincent, Col. Sir C. E H (Sheffield
Vincent, Sir Edgar (Exeter)
Walrond, Rt Hn. Sir William H.
Warde, Colonel C. E.
Welby, Lt-Col. A. C. E (Taunton
Welby, Sir Charles G. E (Notts.)
Whitmore, Charles Algernon
Willoughby de Eresby, Lord
Wilson, A. Stanley (York, E.R.
Wilson, John (Glasgow)
Wilson-Todd, Sir W. H (Yorks.)
Wodehouse, Rt. Hn. E. R. (Bath
Wolff, Gustav Wilhelm
Worsley-Taylor, Henry Wilson
Wortley, Rt. Hn. C. B. Stuart
Yerburgh, Robert Armstrong

TELLERS FOR THE NOES—Sir Alexander Acland-Hood and Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes.

And, it being after half-past Five of the clock, the debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed upon Monday next.

NEW BILLS.

PUBLIC ENTERTAINMENT.

Bill to amend the Law relating to Public Entertainment, ordered to be brought in by Captain Jessel, Mr. W. F. D. Smith, Sir Robert Mowbray, Sir Ernest Flower, Dr. Macnamara, Major Jameson, Mr. Crooks, and Mr. Shackleton.

PUBLIC ENTERTAINMENT BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to Public Entertainment," presented accordingly, and read the first time; to be read a second time upon Monday, 6th March, and to be printed. [Bill 59.]

Adjourned at twenty-five minutes before Six o'clock till Monday next.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, 27th February, 1905.

INTRODUCED.

George Rodney Lord Bishop of Wakefield was (in the usual manner) introduced.

SAT FIRST.

The Duke of Brandon (D. Hamilton) sat first in Parliament after the death of his kinsman.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

The Lord Chancellor acquainted the House, That the Clerk of the Parliaments had laid upon the Table the Certificate from the Examiners that the Standing Orders applicable to the following Bill have been complied with:—Clyde Navigation (Reconstitution).

And also the Certificates that the further Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have been complied with:—South Lancashire Tramways [H.L.]; Western Valleys (Monmouthshire) Water and Gas [H.L.]; Metropolitan Railway [H.L.]; Medway and Thames Canal [H.L.]; Mexborough and Swinton Tramways (Extension of Time) [H.L.]; Oldham and Saddleworth District Tramways [H.L.]; Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation [H.L.]; Tyneside Tramways and Tramroads [H.L.]; Central Electric Supply [H.L.].

The same were ordered to lie on the Table.

Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation Bill [H.L.]; Charing Cross and Strand Electricity Supply Corporation Bill [H.L.]; City of London Electric Lighting Company Bill [H.L.]. Read 2^a, and committed. The Committees to be proposed by the Committee of Selection.

Cordoba and Rosario Railway Bill [H.L.]. Read 2^a, and committed.

East Cowes Gas Bill [H.L.]. Read 2^a, and committed. The Committee to be proposed by the Committee of Selection.

Entre Rios Railways Bill [H.L.]; Gosport and Fareham Tramways Bill [H.L.]. Read 2^a, and committed.

Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Acton District) Bill [H.L.]; Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Various Powers) Bill [H.L.]; North Metropolitan Electric Power Supply Bill [H.L.]; Truro Water Bill [H.L.]. Read 2^a, and committed. The Committees to be proposed by the Committee of Selection.

West Cumberland Electric Tramways (Extension of Time) Bill [H.L.]. Read 2^a, and committed.

Workington Harbour and Dock Bill [H.L.]. Read 2^a, and committed. The Committee to be proposed by the Committee of Selection.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

RUSSIA, No. 3 (1905) NORTH SEA INCIDENT (INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION OF INQUIRY).

Despatch from the British Agent forwarding the Report of the Commissioners.

Presented (by Command), and ordered to lie on the Table.

UNIVERSITIES (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1889.

Annual report on the state of the finances of the University of Aberdeen, under the provisions of Section 30 of the Universities (Scotland) Act, 1889, for the year 1903–1904.

Annual statistical report by the University Court of the University of Aberdeen, to the Secretary for Scotland, under the provisions of Section 30 of the Universities (Scotland) Act, 1889, for the year 1903–1904.

Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table.

BRIDLINGTON PIERS AND HARBOUR.

Abstract of the general annual account for the year ended 26th July, 1904. Delivered (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table.

An Asterisk (*) at the commencement of a Speech indicates revision by the Member.

INEBRIATES.

Petition for amendment of law respecting; of Manchester, Salford, and District Temperance Union; read, and ordered to lie on the Table.

NEW BILLS.

SALE OF INTOXICANTS TO CHILDREN BILL [H.L.].

A Bill to amend the law in relation to the sale of intoxicating liquors to children. Was presented by the Lord Dunboyne; read 1ª; to be printed; and to be read 2ª on Tuesday the 7th of March next. (No. 16.)

NEWCASTLE CHAPTER (AMENDMENT) BILL [H.L.].

A Bill to make further provisions for the foundation of a dean and chapter of Newcastle, and for other purposes connected therewith. Was presented by the Lord Bishop of St. Albans; read 1ª; to be printed; and to be read 2ª on Monday next. (No. 17.)

THE LATE EARL OF MORLEY.

The SECRETARY of STATE for FOREIGN AFFAIRS (The Marquess of Lansdowne): My Lords, a very short time ago we were referring in this House, in terms of deep regret, to the fact that Lord Morley, owing to the aggravation of his illness, had found it necessary to resign the office of Chairman of Committees, and both from this bench and from the bench opposite testimony was borne to the respect and affection with which we regarded him, and to the gratitude which he had earned by the manner in which, for many years, he had discharged the duties of Chairman of Committees. My Lords, we can add little to what was then said. I may, perhaps, say that I thought it my duty to send Lord Morley a full report of the conversation which then took place, and four days ago I received from him a letter expressing the deep satisfaction it had given him to read the words which had been used by myself, and, he added, especially those which had fallen from the noble Earl opposite, the Leader of the Opposition. He said that, having nothing but the life of an invalid to look forward to, these marks of the confidence and the goodwill of his friends were one of the few consolations that were left to him. Alas, my Lords, we now know that Lord Morley's illness has terminated more rapidly that anyone could have supposed. It is a melancholy satisfaction to know that his end was peaceful and painless. I am sure that on both sides of the House we shall feel that we have lost one of the most beloved and respected of our Members, and that we shall desire to offer to those who are mourning him the assurance of our deep and heartfelt sympathy.

Earl SPENCER: My Lords, I rise to add a few words to those of the noble Marquess the Leader of the House, and to say how entirely I agree with all that he has said in reference to the sad news that we so suddenly and unexpectedly read in the newspapers to-day. We had no idea that Lord Morley's end was so near when we were speaking of him the other day. I can only repeat how deep our grief is at the loss of so able a Member of this House and so true a friend. I, too, received a long letter from Lord Morley, dated the 24th instant, expressing his satisfaction at what was said concerning him, and how grateful he was for the kindness of the references to himself. I am glad that the noble Marquess has expressed, I will not say the feelings of noble Lords on the opposite side, but the feelings of the whole House, in this matter, and I most heartily join with him in all that he has said.

The LORD CHANCELLOR (The Earl of Halsbury): My Lords, I cannot forbear from associating myself entirely with all that has been said by both the noble Marquess and the noble Earl. I have been associated with Lord Morley officially for many years, and I cannot but bear my testimony to his invariable kindness and courtesy, and I feel that we have lost not only a most admirable and efficient administrator, but also a dear friend.

The LORD BISHOP of ROCHESTER: My Lords, I do not know whether the ordinary traditions on such an occasion allow me to intervene, but I should like to add one or two words to what has fallen from those occupying the leading places in your Lordships' House with regard to Lord Morley. My reason for doing so is this. In the old days at the University Lord Morley and I were side by side, and, carrying back my thoughts to that time, I cannot help remarking how the uprightness, conscientiousness, and dutifulness which marked then the young beginner were fulfilled in his whole career, and in what we saw of him in this House.

SOUTH AFRICA (LABOUR IN THE MINES).

Lord MONKSWELL: My Lords, I rise, in accordance with the notice standing in my name on the Paper, to move for a Return of the number of white men employed in the erection and preparation of Chinese compounds in the Rand; and to ask the Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies how long the employment of these men will last, whether any provision for their further employment has been made, and whether they are included in the list of those employed in and about the Rand mines; and also, having regard to statements that have appeared in the public Press, to ask whether rock-drilling by white labour is being superseded by the employment of coloured labour, and, if so, how far this change can proceed without infringing the provisions of the labour Ordinance against the employment of Chinese labour in skilled work.

In submitting this Motion I desire to say a few words to guide the noble Duke in the reply which he will make. In the first place, I am happy to be able to congratulate the noble Duke and His Majesty's Government on the increased sanitation in the mines and the consequent diminishe death rate, and I can assure the noble Duke that my object, and my only object, in moving this Motion is to elicit information that will guide public opinion in expressing an informed view with regard to the merits or otherwise of the Chinese Ordinance. I have not the slightest intention of raising any further discussion on this Ordinance, which was debated pretty fully in both Houses of Parliament last year. The noble Duke will no doubt have observed that I omitted all matters of Party contention from my notice of Motion. I do not, for instance, say a word about the wife and children question, nor do I say anything about the limitations in the number of Chinese. The Secretary of State for the Colonies in another place has given answer on these two subjects, and I am afraid it is not probable that the noble Duke will be able to add anything material to those answers. Therefore, I have not troubled him in the matter, but it may very possibly be that either on this occasion or on some future occasion noble Lords behind me may raise this question, and may even wish to take the opinion of your Lordships upon it. No doubt it is the case that part of the information which I desire was asked for only very recently in the House of Commons; but, my Lords, it appears to me that the answers given to these interrogations in the House of Commons by the Secretary of State were not very full and not very satisfactory, and I hope and believe that the noble Duke will give me fuller and more satisfactory replies.

Without going into the merits of it, the Government case with regard to the importation of Chinese labour is very largely based, and properly so, upon their contention that white labour, at all events skilled white labour, whatever may be the case with unskilled white labour, will be, and has been, rather increased than otherwise by the importation of Chinese. If that is, as it clearly is, the contention of the Government, surely it is very important to know how many white labourers, particularly white skilled labourers, are now employed in the construction and maintenance of the Chinese compounds. The Secretary of State has merely told us in general terms that some white labour is so employed. He does not give us the number. I want the number, and I want to know what has been done to secure that these men, when their temporary employment is finished, have something else to do. With regard to rock-drilling, it seems to be the intention of the mineowners to do away as far as possible, if not absolutely, with skilled labour in this work, for we have it on the authority of Mr. Gillam, himself the chairman of the Van Ryn Mine, that when the Chinaman has been taught how to drive hand-drills, machine-drills will be absolutely superseded, and that view was also taken by Mr. Albu on January 18th last. The Secretary of State, too, acknowledges that the proportion of white men to black or coloured men has been steadily decreasing and is likely to still further decrease in the future. What is taking place with regard to rock-drilling raises the question —the vital question to white workmen in South Africa—of the demarcation between skilled and unskilled labour.

The question of overseers was debated last year to some extent in the House of Commons, and opinion runs extremely high in the Transvaal with regard to yellow and black labour ousting white labour, especially skilled white labour. With regard to overseers, very intemperate language has been used in the Transvaal, language which I do not in the least defend, but I will quote one specimen of it in order that your Lordships may realise how strong the feeling is in this matter. The president of the Miners Association expressed his opinion on the question in the following words, which were quoted by Mr. Malcolm, M.P., who is very much in favour of Chinese labour—

> "With regard to the introduction of Chinese, they were now informed that they were bringing overseers with them, but if such a state of things took place after the public statements made by Lord Milner and Sir George Farrar, they could write those gentlemen down as being the greatest and most arrant liars of the day."

I hope that language is exceptional, but it at all events shows very strong and high feeling in the matter. When the Secretary of State is asked any question with regard to this line of demarcation between skilled and unskilled labour, and when he is asked whether any particular operation is skilled or unskilled labour he always shelters himself behind the plea that it is not for him to say whether or not certain work is unskilled labour, and that the skilled labourers on the Rand are perfectly capable of taking their own part in the matter. It seems to me rather doubtful whether the employment of these overseers is not an infringement of the Ordinance. At all events, Chinese overseers are there, and the skilled labourers have not been able to prevent their importation.

It is perfectly certain that the unskilled labourers are quite helpless, and it is equally certain that the Rand mineowners intend they shall remain perfectly helpless. The skilled labourer stands in a somewhat stronger position, but I very much doubt whether he is able to hold his own against the enormous influence wielded by the mineowners. I should like to ask the noble Lord opposite, Lord Harris, whether he believes that in the event of any skilled labourer or any combination of skilled labourers taking steps to get the mineowners fined £500 for a breach of the Ordinance, that skilled labourer or that combination would ever get another job on the Rand. I very much doubt it. Surely, while the Transvaal remains a Crown colony, it is the duty of the Secretary of State to see that the Ordinance is properly enforced. He cannot shelter himself behind the plea that the white men can look after themselves. Your Lordships may, perhaps, have thought that I ought to have left it to Members of the House of Commons to ask these questions, and not troubled your Lordships with the matter. I have ventured to put these questions in this House because there is in the House of Commons an atmosphere of reticence over the Treasury Bench which it is extremely difficult to penetrate. That atmosphere of reticence has not permeated this House; on the contrary, we find it not in the least difficult to get from noble Lords on the front bench opposite the frankest possible declarations. I trust, therefore, that the noble Duke the Under-Secretary may be not only willing but anxious to give me every information that it is in his power to obtain.

Moved, "That an Humble Address be presented to His Majesty for a Return of the number of white men employed in the erection and preparation of Chinese compounds in the Rand."—(Lord Monkswell.)

THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (The Duke of MARLBOROUGH): My Lords, I can assure the noble Lord who has just spoken that it is our wish, so far as lies in our power, to give him all the information he desires with regard to the number of Chinese employed in South Africa, and the manner in which they are treated. I do not know that the attitude of the occupants of the Treasury Bench in the House of Commons has been very reticent upon this matter of Chinese labour. I read with great care the debate in another place the other night, and it seemed to me that the Secretary of State gave all the information that was at his disposal; and, further, I think he disposed altogether of the objections and criticisms of the Members of the Party to which the noble Lord opposite belongs. I will not, however, discuss what took place in the other House. It would be improper to do so. But I fear I cannot add very much to the information which the Secretary of State has already given in regard to the particular questions which the noble Lord has put to me to-day.

The noble Lord wishes to know the number of white men employed on the Rand to-day in erecting and looking after the compounds. At present we have no official information as to the exact number of men employed there, but the Secretary of State is perfectly willing that a communication shall be sent to Lord Milner asking him to furnish us with a Return, and I can assure the noble Lord that as soon as we receive it he will have full access to it. He is perfectly right in assuming that the white men engaged on the compounds are included in the gross total. The noble Lord went on to ask whether we could give any information as to how long the employment of these men will last. I confess I think that is a remarkable question to put to us. After all, no employment is of a permanent character. The humblest man in this country cannot tell how long his employment will last, and what applies to the humblest individual applies equally to those who are in more important positions. In fact, noble Lords opposite have reminded us on more than one occasion that the employment of those who are now responsible for the government of this country may terminate at no distant date. Since, therefore, all employment is of a transitory, and not of a permanent character, I do not see how the noble Lord can expect us to be able to tell him how long these men will be employed on the compounds. All I can say is that their employment will depend largely on the future development of the country. If the country is prosperous, as we believe it will be, and if the mining industry develops as it has done, there is every chance that these men will participate in the further development and secure continuous employment.

Then the noble Lord asked whether any further employment has been arranged for these men. In this country, with all the great resources and all the wealth at the disposal of the State, we yet see a great number of people who are unemployed, who cannot be guaranteed employment permanently; and how much more likely is that to obtain in the case of a country like the Transvaal, which has only lately got over a severe war, the finances of which have only lately been placed on a sound and proper footing, and in which the mining industry itself is hardly re-established. The questions which the noble Lord has put to me are simple in themselves, and, in a way, are almost insignificant, but I think underlying them is a desire to raise the question of the employment of whites in the mines in South Africa. The noble Lord who moved the Motion now before the House and noble Lords opposite have always held that the importation of Chinese labour into South Africa would probably curtail the employment of white men. They know now from the statistics that have been published that their contention was not altogether well founded. Accordingly they seem anxious to shift their ground. They admit, I understand, that white labour has increased in consequence of the augmentation of unskilled labour, but they say that it is only of a temporary character, and that these men are only employed in the building of the compounds and in keeping them in order.

I think the best proof in a matter of this sort is to refer to the figures, and I think the figures conclusively show that the direct result of the increase of unskilled labour has been enormously to increase the number of white men employed in the mines. In May last, before the arrival of the Chinese, there were, in round figures, 77,000 Kaffirs and 13,000 white men employed in the mines. Since then there has been an increase every month in the number of Kaffirs and white men employed. In January last there were 27,000 Chinese in the mines, very nearly 90,000 Kaffirs, or an increase of 13,000 since May last—your Lordships will notice that the introduction of Chinese has led to the supplementing, and not the superseding, of Kaffir labour—and 15,500 white men. I do not think the noble Lord opposite can maintain that all these 2,500 additional white men are employed in completing and maintaining the compounds in which the Chinese live. I think it is reasonable to assume that a large proportion of them are undoubtedly employed in industries in the mines. The noble Lord said that the Secretary of State had admitted in another place that the ratio of white men to coloured had decreased. I do not know where the noble Lord found that statement. My recollection is that the Secretary of State said that whereas before the war the ratio was 119 white men to 1,000 black, to-day it was 143 to 1,000.

Lord MONKSWELL: The Secretary of State said it was perfectly true that the proportion of white to coloured labour was now 143 to 1,000, but it had been as large as 200 to 1,000, and was gradually going down. He said the reason why there was such a large amount of white labour employed soon after the war was that there was then no importation of Chinese labour. Less white labour is employed now than then.

The Duke of MARLBOROUGH: I think the real point is that very often, in order to get a proper complement of men, a great number of white men were employed on a mine in starting it, as a sort of nucleus, and sufficient unskilled labour had to be added afterwards. When that condition obtained, undoubtedly the ratio of white men to coloured was higher than the normal ratio. I would revert for a moment to my statement that there are 2,500 more white men employed now than in May last. These men, it is estimated, earn at least £1 a day, and if you multiply that number by 365 you arrive at a total of over £900,000 being paid in wages to white men in excess of what was paid previous to the importation of Chinese. I think that must be a matter for congratulation as helping to promote the prosperity of the white population in South Africa. The noble Lord went on to discuss the question of rock-drilling and hand-drilling. As I understand, in machine-drilling one skilled man works two machine-drills and employs two coloured men on each drill—in other words, one skilled man employs four unskilled labourers. The noble Lord is under the impression that machine-drills are going to be superseded by hand-drills. I have always been under the impression that hand-drilling was more expensive than machine-drilling.

Lord MONKSWELL: Not with Chinese labour.

The Duke of MARLBOROUGH: I am afraid I am not competent to discuss the matter with my noble friend. Perhaps Lord Harris can throw some light on the subject. I should certainly have thought that a machine-drill, run by a skilled man, was more economical than a hand-drill run by unskilled labour. We have received no information of any sort which would support the belief of the noble Lord that in the matter of rock-drilling skilled labour is to be superseded by unskilled labour; there is not a vestige of evidence of an official kind, so far as I am aware, which would support his statement. I would remind the noble Lord that the Ordinance defines unskilled labour as labour usually performed by persons belonging to the aboriginal races or tribes in South Africa, and in the schedule there are forty or fifty employments which they must not undertake, and rock-drilling is especially included. It must be remembered, moreover, that there is a severe penalty—a penalty of £500—for any infringement of the rules of the Ordinance. There is a large and vigilant white population in South Africa who would be extremely irritated if by any process the mineowners managed to supersede white men by Kaffirs and Chinese, and there is ample provision in the Ordinance by which the white population can protect themselves. The noble Lord knows that a superintendent or inspector may at any time enter the premises of the mines, and, if there are any complaints, either by the unskilled labourers or the white men, it is his duty to report those complaints, which are then laid before the magistrate of the district. Therefore, if the noble Lord's contention is correct, there is every machinery under the terms of the Ordinance for the infliction of a penalty upon those who in any way violate its terms.

The noble Lord regretted that we did not express our opinions more definitely as to whether or not certain terms of the Ordinance had been broken. I have always understood that the powers of the Executive and of the legal tribunals in this country were totally distinct. When once the Executive have passed and sanctioned a law, it is the duty of the Judges and magistrates to interpret that law in the way they think right and proper; and if that is so in this country it is equally so in South Africa. If anybody breaks the terms of the Ordinance it is not for us in this country to express an opinion upon it. An expression of opinion by the noble Lord, or, indeed, by a member of His Majesty's Government, would not in any way influence the decision of the Judge or the magistrate on the spot. Therefore, I do not think the noble Lord can reasonably ask me to state whether I think that any terms of the Ordinance have in any way been infringed. That is a matter entirely for the magistrate in South Africa to decide. Let me say, in conclusion, that, so far as we are aware, none of the terms of the Ordinance have been infringed. We know that the number of whites has largely increased owing to the importation of unskilled labourers, and, so far as we are aware, there has been no attempt to oust the white man from his work and to put in his place Kaffirs or Chinese.

*LORD HARRIS: My Lords, when I sat in a more prominent place on the front Government Bench I was accustomed to have questions shot at me, and I was prepared to answer them, but now that I occupy a more modest seat on the back benches it is certainly embarrassing to have questions put to me from both front benches—questions not merely on highly technical matters connected with mining, but on purely hypothetical points. The noble Lord opposite asked me what chances workmen would have of future employment if they took part in an agitation for the conviction of their employers for having allowed coloured men to do work which they are forbidden to do under the Ordinance. I am afraid I cannot answer a conundrum of that kind. My impression is that the working men in South Africa are just as independent and just as capable of combination as the working men in England. I do not know of any difference. Possibly they may be even more independent in the freer atmosphere of a colony than in a country so hidebound as England. I can assure the noble Lord of this, that their trade union is very careful of their interests, and in practical working there would be no necessity whatever for a skilled workman to expose himself to any risks of the kind.

The introduction of Chinese is governed by law, and it is the business of the Government to see that the law is obeyed. They have the right to send inspectors into the mines to ascertain that the law is being complied with, and I imagine that an inspector would report a company who were allowing coloured men to do work forbidden by law. So far as I understand, the Chinese are not doing any work that the Kaffir did not do before in connection with rock-drilling. My impression is that there is not at this moment in the market any such thing as a hand-drill; that is to say, a drill that can be worked by one man. Possibly there is something coming forward which may be worked more economically; it has not yet been proved, but I believe it is under experiment now. At present the bulk of the work is done by the large drills, on which several coloured labourers and a white overseer work. I cannot help thinking that there has been some misunderstanding about the term "overseer." I should have thought that, as regards the work underground, "ganger" would have been the more correct term to use for the man who supervises the placing of the drill in the stope, the direction of the point, and things of that kind.

The overseers who are being imported with the Chinese are men who can speak Chinese and English, and it is absolutely necessary, not only to have men of that capacity, but to have men of extremely good character who are capable of making clear to the Chinese what is wanted of them, and of explaining away any difficulties that may present themselves as regards the conditions of life in the compounds, the conditions of work, and everything connected with this new undertaking of theirs. Speaking from personal experience, I can assure the noble Lord that the greatest care is being taken to select the very best men that are prepared to engage themselves for this work of overseers in the compounds. These overseers have to go underground as well. I can mention one thing which may, perhaps, reassure the noble Lord opposite as to the possibility of Chinamen being put to work that they are not entitled to do under the Ordinance. Quite recently I asked a colleague of mine who has returned from the Transvaal whether the Chinamen were allowed to do any gardening in the neighbourhood of the compounds, and my friend replied—

> "Oh dear, no. There is such an amount of suspicion as to Chinamen doing work which is not allowed under the Ordinance that they are not permitted to do any gardening for themselves."

Perhaps I may be allowed to say one word as to the drop in proportion. The drop, in proportion as the number of coloured labourers increases on the mines, is absolutely certain to increase to a certain degree. The noble Duke spoke of new mines. There are very few new mines starting. The bulk of the new stamps that have been dropped belong to old mines which were worked before the war, but to which possibly new stamps have been added since the war. As further manual labour was forthcoming an additional number of stamps could be dropped. But it is essential, whatever the number of labourers, that they should not drop below a certain proportion of white skilled labour. In many cases, where there were only a few stamps being dropped, the proportion of white to coloured labour was perhaps one to five, but that was largely in excess of what is necessary when the full number of stamps are dropped, and it is inevitable that the proportion will go from one to five to one to eight, nine, or ten, or perhaps even more, according to the peculiarities of the different mines.

I will give your Lordships a practical illustration of what I mean from one particular mine with which I am conversant—the Simmer and Jack Mine, which has the largest number of stamps of any mine on the Rand. To put up the compounds for the Chinese, which cost £40,000, seventy white working men were engaged. In May last the number of white working men employed was 400, while the number of coloured men was something over 2,000. In November, when the compounds had been finished, and any white men in excess of what the mine actually required to work it would have gone, the number of white working men was 575, an increase of nearly 50 per cent., while the number of coloured men, including Chinese, had increased to 5,000. So that, although the proportion of white working men had decreased—that is to say, there were more coloured labourers compared with white men—the number of white men employed had gone up by 50 per cent., and the increase in wages to white men on that mine alone was £3,000 a month.

If the noble Duke is going to ask Lord Milner to answer the conundrum of how long the men who have been employed on the compounds are going to be employed in the future, he might also ask him what, I think, is a more practical question—namely, how many white men employed in South Africa can attribute their employment to the introduction of Chinese? I think Lord Milner would reply that it is a very large number indeed. That is proved by the fact that at a meeting with regard to railways, Lord Milner pointed out that whereas in November last there had been no hope of increasing the length of the railways in South Africa, suddenly something had occurred to create confidence in South Africa, the money was forthcoming, and they were prepared to make a considerable addition to the mileage in that country. What was it that had given confidence? Why, the knowledge that the one industry in South Africa was going to be allowed to continue and make progress. I must apologise for having occupied the time of your Lordships at such length. I only ventured to rise because I was appealed to, and I conclude by assuring your Lordships that, so far as I know, it is, and has been proved to be, the object of the mineowners, those who manage the mines, to make this introduction of indentured Asiatic labour a thorough success so far as the livelihood of the men themselves is concerned, and, speaking from what I know, I can say that our object is to abide most strictly by the terms of the Ordinance.

*THE MARQUESS OF RIPON: My Lords, when the noble Duke opposite seemed to complain of the character of the questions asked by my noble friend behind me, I do not think that he was quite so just as we generally find him to those who sit on this side of the House, because it seems to me nothing could be more natural than that my noble friend Lord Monkswell should have asked the Questions on the Paper. Those persons, whether in or out of Parliament, who are such strong supporters of the employment of Chinese labour in South Africa in the conditions in which it is now there employed, have of late been very frequently led to say—I think rather a triumphant expression of the kind fell from the Prime Minister not very long ago—that so far from the employment of Chinese labourers having produced a falling-off in the employment of white men, since Chinese labour was introduced the number of white men employed has increased, and statistics have been laid before Parliament to bear that out.

Now, the first question asked by my noble friend was an extremely natural one. It was, what kind of employment is included in that Return? We all know that compounds have had to be built and arrangements made for the accommodation of the Chinese. The construction of these compounds and buildings would naturally give employment to a considerable number of white labourers, but that does not in the least degree prove that the permanent employment of white labour in the mines in South Africa has been increased by the introduction of Chinese. Of course, the building of these compounds is a temporary business. It may have given, and I daresay has given, a considerable amount of employment at the time, because they had to be put up very rapidly, but it does not in the smallest degree follow, because there has been an increase of white labour for a time in this temporary work, that therefore when that temporary work is finished it will be found that white labour has been permanently increased. Even taking the statistics as they stand and making no deduction for those who are temporarily employed, I take it that the increase of white labour, whatever it has been, has been nothing like in proportion to the increase of Chinese or Kaffir labour. When the noble Duke said it was quite impossible to say how long men might be kept on in their employment I think he misunderstood the object of my noble friend's question on that point. My noble friend did not want to know how long John Smith or James Jones would be kept in the service of any particular employer in South Africa. He wanted to know if the noble Duke could tell him how long the special and temporary work of the erection of these buildings was likely to take.

I was a little surprised to find how small was the information which appears to be in the possession of His Majesty's Government with respect to the details of this matter. Now, whatever may be thought of this question, it is one of importance. It is a question which has greatly interested, I may say excited, the feelings of many persons in this country, and I venture to say that it is a question on which the Secretary of State for the Colonies might, with great advantage, keep himself adequately informed, so that when questions are asked here or elsewhere it may be possible to reply to them without delay. The noble Duke took exception to what was said by my noble friend behind me in respect to the duty of the Executive in regard to any infringement of the Ordinance by the employment of Chinese labour in forbidden trades. The noble Duke seemed to think that my noble friend was asking that the Executive should in some way or other trench upon the duties of Judges or magistrates. I take it nothing was further from the intention of my noble friend. There is a law, and it may be easily part of the duty of the Executive to prosecute if they think that law is being infringed. There is in South Africa an officer whose business it is, I suppose, to see that the law is properly obeyed, and I do think it is the duty of the Executive Government in South Africa, and if they fail, of the Executive Government here, who are, South Africa being a Crown colony, entirely responsible for what goes on in that country—it is their duty carefully to see that the Ordinance which they themselves passed is carried out.

Lord MONKSWELL: My Lords, I have only a few words to say in reply, for the noble Marquess who has just sat down has been kind enough to take a great deal of that duty off my hands. I would observe, with regard to the somewhat optimistic utterances of the noble Duke as to the future of white labour, that what we contend is that although at present there may be, and is, a considerable amount of white labour employed on the Rand, still the tendency is for that labour to decrease after a certain time. We have heard with regard to other matters that it is the tendency we must look to. Well, in South Africa it is not so much to what is happening to-day, but to the tendency that we must look. We find the chairman of one of the biggest mines on the Rand stating that they are going to replace the machine-drill by the hand-drill. The noble Duke is not particularly well posted as to the difference between the two, but it has been asserted over and over again in the Press that the difference is that in working the machine-drill you must employ very skilled white labour, whilst unskilled labour can work the hand-drill. I think the noble Earl the Chairman of Committees (the Earl of Onslow) said in a debate last year that persons who work a machine-drill get £32 a month. Now, it is the intention of the mineowners to get rid of these men to whom they pay £32 a month, and to substitute what is technically unskilled yellow labour. It is perfectly clear under the Ordinance that Chinamen may work a hand-drill but not a machine-drill, and the mineowners say they will have the machine-drill done away with and the hand-drill substituted. I was very sorry to hear the statement made by Lord Harris that these wretched Chinamen are not even allowed to work in their own gardens. It seems to me that that is a terribly servile condition of labour.

Lord HARRIS: It is according to the Ordinance.

Lord MONKSWELL: What, that they may not work in their own gardens?

Lord HARRIS: They may not be gardeners.

Lord MONKSWELL: I do not understand that a man is necessarily a gardener because he works in his own garden. I hope the Secretary of State will take notice of what the noble Lord has said, and that the wretched Chinaman will have one servile condition the less imposed upon him. The question of the overseers is one which I think might very well engage the attention of the Secretary of State. These men, it seems, are highly skilled men—who speak two languages—Chinese and English. They are not English, but Chinese, and it does appear to me——

Lord HARRIS: The men I refer to are not Chinese. They may not be Englishmen, but they are certainly not Chinese.

Lord MONKSWELL: It seems to me that this is a case very much on the border line of the Ordinance, and I should have thought it desirable to take a test case on that matter. On the question of proportion, I understand that the proportion of white men to Kaffirs is one to seven or eight, but that the proportion of white men to Chinamen is about one to forty.

Lord HARRIS: I think the proportion will be found to be precisely the same, whether Kaffirs or Chinese.

Lord MONKSWELL: I am glad to get that information from the noble Lord, but it is contrary to what has appeared in the public Press. One objection taken to the employment of Chinese, who are so much better workmen than the Kaffirs, is that forty Chinamen can be looked after by one white man, whereas one white man cannot look after more than eight or ten Kaffirs. As the noble Duke has promised that a communication shall be forwarded to Lord Milner asking for the information for which I have moved, I am perfectly willing to accept that, and I withdraw my Motion.

Motion, by leave of the House, withdrawn.

House adjourned at twenty minutes before Six o'clock, till To-morrow, half-past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 27th February, 1905.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

SUBSTITUTED BILLS [LORDS] (STANDING ORDERS COMPLIED WITH).

Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in respect of the following Bill, introduced pursuant to the provisions of The Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, and which the Chairman of Ways and Means had directed to originate in the House of Lords, they have certified that the Standing Orders have been complied with, viz. :—Clyde Navigation (Reconstitution) Bill.

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER 62 COMPLIED WITH).

Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bills, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order 62 has been complied with, viz. :—Clay Cross Railway (Abandonment) Bill; Croydon Gas Bill; Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford Railway Bill; Sunderland and South Shields Water Bill.

Ordered, That the Bills be read a second time.

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER 63 COMPLIED WITH).

Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bills, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order 63 has been complied with, viz. :—Aylesbury Gas Bill; Dublin United Tramways Bill; Hitchin and District Gas Bill.

Ordered, That the Bills be read a second time.

PRIVATE BILLS (PETITION FOR ADDITIONAL PROVISION) (STANDING ORDERS NOT COMPLIED WITH).

Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the Petition for additional Provision in the following Bill, the Standing Orders have not been complied with, viz. :—Liverpool Corporation Bill.

Ordered, That the Report be referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders.

Aberdare Tramways Bill; Accrington Corporation Bill; Accrington District Gas and Water Board Bill; Acton Sewage Bill; Birmingham Corporation Bill; Bolton Corporation Bill; Bootle Corporation Bill; Colne Corporation Bill; Croydon Corporation Bill; Dublin Corporation (Superannuation) Bill; Halifax Corporation Bill; Ilfracombe Harbour and Improvement Bill; Liverpool Corporation Bill. Read a second time, and committed.

London Building Acts (Amendment) Bill; London County Council (General Powers) Bill; London County Council (Tramways) Bill. To be read a second time to-morrow.

London Gas Bill; Loughborough Corporation Bill; North Sussex Gas Bill; Sale of Bread (London) Bill; Skegness Water Bill; Stockport Corporation Bill; Swansea Corporation Bill. Read a second time, and committed.

HIGHLAND RAILWAY BILL.

"To extend the time for the completion of certain railways authorised by The Highland Railway (Additional Powers) Act, 1897; to enable the Highland Railway Company to provide and work steam and other vessels between Inverness and Fort Augustus; and to subscribe to the funds of Steamship Companies; and for other purposes," presented, and read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

CIVIL SERVICES AND REVENUE DEPARTMENTS ESTIMATES, 1905–6.

Copy presented, of Estimates for Civil Services and Revenue Departments for the year ending 31st March, 1906, together with a Copy of the Memorandum by the Financial Secretary to the Treasury relating thereto [by Command]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 64.]

PUBLIC REVENUE (INTERCEPTION).

Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 21st February; Mr. Gibson Bowles]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 58.]

NATIONAL DEBT.

Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 21st February; Mr. Gibson Bowles]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 59.]

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 21st February; Mr. Gibson Bowles]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 60.]

ARMY (ORDNANCE FACTORIES) (APPROPRIATION ACCOUNT).

Appropriation Account presented, of the sums granted by Parliament for the expense of the Ordnance Factories, the cost of the productions of which have been charged to the Army, Navy, and Indian and Colonial Governments, etc., and the Statement of the Surpluses and Deficits upon the Grants for the year ended 31st March, 1904, together with the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor-General thereon [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 61.]

RUSSIA (No. 3, 1905).

Copy presented, of Despatch from the British Agent forwarding the Report of the International Commission of Inquiry on the North Sea Incident [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

UNIVERSITY OF ABERDEEN.

Copy presented, of Annual Statistical Report by the University Court of the University of Aberdeen for 1903–4 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 62.]

UNIVERSITY OF ABERDEEN.

Copy presented, of Abstract of Accounts of the University of Aberdeen for the year ending 15th September, 1904 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table; and to be printed. [No. 63.]

PAPER LAID UPON THE TABLE BY THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

Bridlington Piers and Harbour. Copy of Abstract of the General Annual Account for the year ending 26th July, 1904 [by Act].

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (IRELAND) (INSPECTORS AND AUDITORS).

Return ordered, "up to the 31st day of December, 1904, showing the number of (1) Inspectors, temporary and permanent, and (2) Auditors, appointed by the Local Government Board for Ireland from the 31st day of March, 1899, to that date, setting forth, in addition, the date of each appointment and the previous calling of each appointee."—(Mr. J. P. Farrell.)

WINES IMPORTED.

Return ordered, "showing the quantity of Wines, at the various degrees of strength, which were imported into the United Kingdom in 1904 from Spain, Portugal, Madeira, France, Germany, Holland, Italy, Australasia, and other countries (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 115, of Session 1904)."—(Mr. Gibbs.)

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

———

Government of Ireland—Suggested Royal Commission.

Dr. THOMPSON (Monaghan, N.): To ask the First Lord of the Treasury if he will consider the advisability of recommending the appointment of a Royal Commission to consider and report on the existing system of the government of Ireland.

(Answered by Mr. A. J. Balfour.) I do not think anything would be gained by the appointment of a Royal Commission such as that which the hon. Member proposes.

System of Accounts of National Expenditure—Suggested Royal Commission.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): To ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he will consider the advisability of recommending the appointment of a small Royal Commission to consider the present system of the Accounts of National Expenditure, and the desirability of making changes therein.

(Answered by Mr. A. J. Balfour.) It seems to me on consideration that the best course would be for the Public Accounts Committee, who are appointed by Parliament to deal with public accounts, to suggest changes in our existing system. Any such recommendation would have the most respectful consideration of His Majesty's Government, and could probably be dealt with without any further consideration by a specially appointed Commission. It may be worth noting that the principal change in our system of keeping public accounts during the last twenty years was made on the initiative of the Public Accounts Committee.

Missions in Bahr-el-Ghazal.

Mr. JAMES O'KELLY (Roscommon, N.): To ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether his attention has been called to a recent appeal by Lord Cromer for the establishment of missions in the Bahr-el-Ghazal; and whether, seeing that this territory is leased to Belgium, His Majesty's Government has sanctioned Lord Cromer's intervention in the internal affairs of this territory.

(Answered by Earl Percy.) The hon. Member is under a misapprehension. The Bahr el Ghazal is a province of the Soudan.

Somaliland Field Force.

Mr. BUCHANAN (Perthshire, E.): To ask the Secretary of State for War what force is there at present in Somaliland; and whether he has any official information to the effect that the Mullah is again active near Obbia.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Arnold-Forster.) The troops quartered in the Protectorate are:—

	Companies.	Fighting Men.
33rd Punjaub Infantry	8	750
6th King's African Rifles	5	500
Total	13	1,250

The reply to the last paragraph is in the negative.

Shipping and Seamen's Act, 1903 (New Zealand).

Mr. CATHCART WASON (Orkney and Shetland): To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies if he can lay upon the Table of the House the reasons why the Royal Assent was withheld from the Shipping and Seamen's Act, 1903, New Zealand.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) The Act referred to by the hon. Member is an Act of great complexity, involving questions not only of detail but of constitutional principle. It has received the most careful consideration of the Departments of Government concerned, and this has necessarily involved considerable delay. I hope to be able very shortly to advise His Majesty to assent to the Act, and to lay Papers which will indicate the difficulties attendant on this matter.

German Treatment of British Shipping Trading with the Marshall Islands.

Mr. KEARLEY (Devonport): To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether the Government of the Australian Commonwealth have made a strong protest to the Home Government with regard to the unequal treatment by Germany of certain British shipping trading with the Marshall Islands now controlled by Germany; and, seeing that recently the ss. "Ysabal," trading between Sydney and the Islands, was charged a licence fee equal to £2,700 per annum, further increased on a subsequent voyage to £5,475 per annum, as against £100 per annum made to Germans or any nationality in the adjoining British groups, he will state whether such charges are an infringement of the most-favoured-nation clause; and whether any retaliatory action is contemplated.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) The subject referred to in the hon. Member's Question is now being discussed with the German Government.

Self-Government for the Transvaal.

MASTER OF ELIBANK (Edinburgh, Midlothian): To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether, in connection with the representative institutions which he proposes establishing in the Transvaal, he has considered the working of the Barbadoes Constitution, with its wholly elective lower assembly, in contrast with that of other Crown Colonies, where there are composite councils consisting of nominated and elected members; and whether he is able to make any statement as to the form of Crown Colony Government he has in contemplation.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) I have not failed to consider, among others, the form of Constitution which exists in Barbadoes. I am not able at present to make any statement as to the form of Government contemplated for the Transvaal.

Cost of Defences of Halifax and Esquimault—Repayment by Canada.

MR. BUCHANAN: To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether the defences of Halifax and Esquimault, and all expenditure connected therewith, are to be taken over on July 1st by the Dominion Government and British forces withdrawn; and whether any arrangement has been arrived at for the repayment by Canada of any portion of the money spent by us in these places on works of a permanent character.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) The Government of the Dominion of Canada last month offered to assume the responsibility of garrisoning Halifax and Esquimault with troops levied and paid under the authority of the Canadian Parliament. His Majesty's Government have gratefully accepted this patriotic offer, but no precise date has at present been fixed for this arrangement to come into operation. His Majesty's Government do not propose to ask the Government of Canada to repay any portion of the money spent by this country on permanent measures of defence at Halifax and Esquimault.

Decline of Native Population in Uganda.

MR. MACVEAGH (Down, S.): To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he is aware that the native population of Uganda has declined from 5,000,000 in 1878 to under 2,000,000; and whether he has any official information showing to what extent this loss of life has been the outcome of feuds.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) There are no statistics at the disposal of His Majesty's Government to prove to what extent the native population of Uganda has increased or decreased since 1878.

Auxiliary Motor Power for Fishing Boats—Result of Inquiry.

MR. CATHCART WASON: To ask the Lord-Advocate if he is now in a position to state the result of the inquiry (instituted by the Secretary for Scotland) on the application of auxiliary motor power to fishing boats.

(Answered by Mr. Scott Dickson.) The Secretary for Scotland expects shortly to receive the Report of the inquiry referred to by the hon. Member, which shall receive his prompt attention.

Rebuilding of Grimsay Sea Dykes.

MR. JOHN DEWAR (Inverness): To ask the Lord-Advocate, as representing the Secretary for Scotland, whether the Congested Districts Board have received a petition from crofters and others resident in the Island of Grimsay, North Uist, urging that a grant may be made in aid of the rebuilding of the Grimsay sea dykes; and if so, whether, seeing that these dykes are necessary as a protection to the crofters' stock during high tides and to secure the safety of children passing to and from school, the Board will give the petition their favourable consideration.

(Answered by Mr. Scott Dickson.) I am informed that a petition on the subject referred to by the hon. Member has been received by the Board, and that on September 9th, 1903, a reply was sent stating that the Board would consider an application supported by specific information as to the nature and cost of the work, and by a satisfactory guarantee for future maintenance. A further application has lately been received through the hon. Member, which, however, does not meet the foregoing requirements.

Accounts of the General Lighthouse Fund.

Mr. CHARLES McARTHUR (Liverpool, Exchange): To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the accounts for the General Lighthouse Fund for the year ending March 31st, 1904, will be laid upon the Table of the House; and whether any steps can be taken to expedite the publication of these accounts.

(Answered by Mr. Gerald Balfour.) These accounts were laid upon the Table of the House on the first day of the session, and were in the hands of Members on the 22nd instant.

Number of Boys Enrolled in the Royal Naval Reserve.

Sir CHARLES DILKE (Gloucestershire, Forest of Dean): To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he can state the number of boys who have now been enrolled under the reduced lights dues clause of the Merchant Shipping Mercantile Marine Fund Act of 1898, and what number are expected to have been enrolled by March 31st next, the date on which the section of that Act ceases to be in force; whether he can also state what steps are contemplated at the date at which the Act expires.

(Answered by Mr. Gerald Balfour.) Up to the 24th instant, 4,326 boys had been enrolled in the Royal Naval Reserve, under Section 6 of The Merchant Shipping (Mercantile Marine Fund) Act, 1898. If the average rate of enrolment is maintained about seventy-four additional enrolments will have taken place by March 31st next. As at present advised I do not propose to take any action on the expiration of the provisions of the section of the Act to which the right hon. Member refers.

Railway Companies and the Humane Cattle Car.

Mr. FIELD (Dublin, St. Patrick): To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he is aware that the patent humane cattle car, which was examined by the Board of Trade official and passed, was in use for some time, until the Railway Conference agreed to forbid its use; and, if so, whether he will cause an inquiry into the refusal of the railway companies to allow the use of this car.

(Answered by Mr. Gerald Balfour.) I must refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a similar Question on June 14th† last year. I am unable to add to the Answer then given.

The Donegal Railway System.

Mr. O'DOHERTY (Donegal, N.): To ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether, having regard to the fact that the Donegal Railway system has been acquired by the Great Northern Railway Company (Ireland) and the Midland Railway Company (England), and that these companies have offered to relieve the guaranteeing districts of the tax at present payable by them on the Glenties and Killybegs Railways, the Treasury will hand over the railways to the company, and forego any claim they may have in respect thereof.

(Answered by Mr. Victor Cavendish.) The Donegal Railway system has not yet been acquired by the two companies referred to, although they are promoting a Bill for that purpose. The charge on the county has been insignificant in comparison with the benefit derived from the railways, and I can hold out no prospect that the Treasury will forego its claims in respect of these lines, practically the whole cost of which was defrayed by Government.

---

† See (4) Debates, cxxxvi., 19.

Elementary Education — Church Attendance.

Mr. FREDERICK WILSON (Norfolk, Mid.): To ask the Secretary to the Board of Education whether, having regard to the answer given by him to a recent deputation, he proposes in future to permit local managers of elementary schools to send children to church, and to count such attendance at church as attendance at school.

(Answered by Sir William Anson.) I know of no answer given by me which could warrant such a conclusion. The Board have never regarded attendance of children at church as attendance at school, and do not so regard it unless the school attendance authority are prepared to do so under their by-laws.

Revenue from Solicitors' Certificate Duty.

Mr. WHITLEY THOMSON (Yorkshire, W.R. Skipton); To ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the total amount received last year by the Government from Solicitors' Certificate Duty.

(Answered by Mr. Austen Chamberlain.) The total amount of duty received during the financial year 1903–4 in respect of solicitors' and conveyancers' certificates was as follows:—England, £110,070 10s.; Scotland, £21,291; Ireland, £10,441 10s.; total £141,803.

Vernacular Education of Children on Indian Tea Plantations.

Sir MANCHERJEE BHOWNAGGREE (Bethnal Green, N.E.): To ask the Secretary of State for India whether he has yet received a report from the Government of India (as promised on March 19th, 1904) in regard to the provision of adequate facilities for the vernacular education of the children employed or resident upon plantations in Assam and other planting districts in India; and, if so, will he state the purport of that report.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Brodrick.) I received in September last an interim reply from the Government of India, which shows that the subject is receiving attention. The report generally confirms what I understood to be the case, and stated in my reply to my hon. friend on March 18th last,† that the classes employed to labour on tea gardens do not display much desire for education for their children in any part of India; but it is hoped that it may be found possible to offer some special encouragement to induce them to do so, and the matter will not be overlooked. I shall receive further reports in due course.

Irish Poor Law Commission.

Mr. O'DOHERTY: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Poor Law Commission has as yet completed its labours; and whether, considering that the question of amalgamation and the alteration of boundaries in certain of the unions in the North-West of Ireland, and particularly in the counties of Donegal and Londonderry, has given rise to uncertainty, he will request the Commissioners to issue an interim Report with reference to this question.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) I refer to my reply to the Question put to me on the 23rd instant ‡ by my hon. friend the Member for South Belfast. The Commissioners do not propose to issue an interim Report. They consider, and in my opinion very properly, that it would be open to objection to deal with the matter except as a whole.

Agricultural Instructors in County Donegal.

Mr. O'DOHERTY: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Department of Agriculture have reconsidered their position with reference to the Donegal County Agricultural Committee as to the refusal of the Department to sanction the appointment of residents of the county of

---

† See (4) Debates, cxxxii., 54.

‡ See page 1079.

Donegal under the agricultural and technical scheme for the county to positions therein; and whether, on account of portions of the county containing inhabitants who are Gaelic speakers, steps will be taken by the Department to cancel the rule in so far as others, not natives of the county of Donegal, would not understand the Gaelic dialect in that county and their services thereby would be useless.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) The rule made by the Department not to sanction in future the appointment of a person as instructor in any county of which he or she is a native, or in which he or she resides, affects all the agricultural schemes, and applies to every county in Ireland. The Department does not propose to modify this regulation in the case of Donegal. Experience has shown it to be necessary in the interests of the schemes and of the committees administering them. The regulation has worked well in other counties.

Closing of Police Station at Kildalkey, County Meath.

MR. SHEEHY (Meath, S.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether the police in the barrack at Kildalkey, county Meath, are to be dispersed, and the station closed; and whether he can state the number of prosecutions in the district, and say whether it compares favourably with other districts in the neighbourhood.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) It has been decided to disestablish this police station. The number of offences specially reported from the sub-district in the past three years was one, and the number of minor offences recorded in the same period was 161. There are four other police stations within a radius of six miles from Kildalkey.

Carrickfergus Land Arbitration Award.

COLONEL McCALMONT (Antrim, E.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland when the arbitrator will issue his award in regard to lands in the neighbourhood of Carrickfergus, Section E, acquired by the Belfast Water Commissioners, his final draft award having been duly considered in August last.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) Part I. of the final award was lodged by the arbitrator on 15th December, 1904. He states that Parts II. and III. are in the printers' hands, and that he expects to issue one portion early next week and the other in the ensuing week. The award in Section E will then be complete.

Appointment of Manager of Lislea (No. 1) National School.

MR. LONSDALE (Armagh, Mid.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether, in view of the fact that a resident clergyman is not available for appointment as manager of the Lislea (No. 1) National School (county Armagh), the National Education Commissioners will accede to the expressed wishes of the parents of the children attending the school, and appoint a resident layman to the office of manager.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) I am informed by the Commissioners that it is their practice in cases such as this to recognise the clerical successor of the former manager when a vacancy occurs. The school was recently visited by the Board's senior inspector, who reports that it is being conducted satisfactorily under the present temporary manager, the Rev. Mr. Simpson.

Grazing Lands at Mile Hill, Ballinrobe.

MR. JOHN O'DONNELL (Mayo, S.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that a shopkeeper, named Martin May, who is a shopkeeper in Ballinrobe, county Mayo, in 1900 took a grazing farm at Mile Hill, near that town, part of which he set for conacre last year; and, if so, whether the Estates Commissioners have power to give a grant of money to this man to purchase the farm in view of the fact that there are many congested townlands in the vicinity.

MR. JOHN O'DONNELL: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Congested Districts Board or the Estates Commissioners will consider the advisability of purchasing a grazing farm situate at Mile Hill, near Ballinrobe, county Mayo, now held by a shopkeeper named May, residing in Ballinrobe, with a view to creating some new holdings for persons in that district who have no land.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) So far as can be ascertained no application has been made either to the Commissioners or the Board for the purchase of the lands in question.

The Erne Estate.

MR. JOHN O'DONNELL: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that a grazier named Daly, who resides at Ballinrobe, and holds several thousand acres of grazing lands in Mayo and Meath counties, holds a grazing farm on the estate of Lord Erne at Loughmask, and that he has recently ploughed some of the land and got a fair rent fixed with a view to coming under the Land Act of 1903; and, if so, whether the Estates Commissioners will refuse to give a grant to this man for the purchase of the farm held by him on the Erne Estate, whenever negotiations between the landlord and tenants are carried through.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) No application for the sale of the estate of Lord Erne has been lodged with the Commissioners, who are not, therefore, in a position to make any statement on the matters alleged in the Question.

Irish Technical Education Grants.

MR. SHEEHY: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Department of Science and Art holds £58,629 belonging to Irish technical education; whether the grants payable for local science and art instruction is for proficiency in studies, as ascertained by examination, or for attendances at instruction, as given under regulations; whether these regulations can only be found in the Science and Art Directory, as modified by Circular 2, Form S 46; and, if so, will he state where copies of the Science and Art Directory can be obtained; has the Department of Agriculture in Ireland, which has the control of the grant for technical instruction in Ireland, a copy of the directory; or, if not, has the Department drafted its own regulations governing the matter.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) The reply to the first inquiry is in the negative. The grants payable for local science and art instruction are based upon attendance and upon efficiency, as determined by inspection, supplemented by examination in the advanced stages of the syllabuses. Students in the honours stages are paid for on the results of examinations alone. The regulations are those of the Science and Art Directory of the Board of Education, South Kensington, for 1901, as amended by Circular 2 and Form S 46 issued by the Department. Copies of the directory for 1901 are not now obtainable from the publishers, but an excerpt containing all information required by school managers is issued by the Department and may be obtained on application. The Department has copies of the directory in question.

Local Authorities Accounts—County Council of North Tipperary and Local Government Board.

MR. P. J. O'BRIEN (Tipperary, N.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he has seen the correspondence which passed between the County Council of North Tipperary and the Local Government Board with reference to The Public Bodies Accounts Order, 1904, and the resolutions of the council subsequently passed thereon; and whether, in consideration of the facts therein set forth, and the protest of the council against the expense and complications involved by this new Order, he will see his way to have the question of this Order reconsidered.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) Yes, Sir; I have seen the correspondence and resolutions referred to. The council appears to be under a misapprehension as to the changes made by the Order, and the Board has directed its attention to the fact that nearly all the forms objected to are practically the same as those which have been in operation for the past six years.

Extra Police Tax in North Tipperary.

MR. P. J. O'BRIEN: To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware of the resolution of the North Tipperary County Council, at their meeting on the 15th instant, in reference to the sum of £115 15s. 11d. amount of extra police tax, to the effect that the sum be struck out of the estimate submitted by the secretary, and that the levying of a rate to meet this amount be adjourned to give the council an opportunity of having the legality of said tax considered owing to the fact that the first demand for a sum of £728 18s. 9d. made on the council was afterwards found to be illegal; and, if so, will he say under what powers this demand is made; and, further, in face of the crimeless condition of North Tipperary, he will consider the necessity for any extra police there.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) I have seen the resolution. The claim made upon the county council in respect to the sum of £115 15s. 11d. was for the expenses of extra police drafted into certain districts of the county on ordinary detachment duty from other counties. Such charges have not been and will not be remitted. The reasons for the decision of the Government to withdraw charges amounting to £633 2s. 10d. have already been fully explained by me in this House. I refer to my replies to Questions addressed to me on this subject by my hon. friend the Member for Mid Armagh on the 24th † and 28th ‡ March and 18th § April, 1904. I may add that the county council having declined to make payment of the sum of £115 15s. 11d., the amount was deducted in March, 1904, from moneys payable to the council out of the Local Taxation Account, in pursuance of Section 80 (2) of The Local Government Act, 1898. There are no extra police at present in this county.

Purchase of Irish Estates—Accommodation of Labourers.

MR. CULLINAN (Tipperary, S.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Land Commission in the purchase of estates have in any cases put in operation Clause 96 of the Land Purchase Act of 1903 which enabled them to make provision for the accommodation of labourers on said estates; if so, whether he will give the number and names of the estates and the number of labourers for whom accommodation has been provided or recommended.

(Answered by Mr. Wyndham.) Representations have been made to the district councils concerned in the case of sixteen estates referred to in the appended Return:—

County.	Union or District.	Estate.	Number of Dwellings recommended.
Wexford -	Gorey - - -	W. C. Moore - - -	2
Tipperary -	Tipperary (No. 1) -	Major P. J. Waldron - -	1
Cork - -	Mallow - - -	Eliza Hardy and others -	1
Tyrone - -	Omagh - - -	King Houston - - -	1
Wexford -	Wexford - -	W. J. O'Neill - - -	2
Cork - -	Kanturk - -	Reverend J. Sullivan -	1
King's - -	Roscrea (No. 2) -	W. H. Jackson - - -	3
Down - -	Newry (No. 1) -	Captain H. V. Brooke -	1
Kildare - -	Edenderry (No. 2) -	George P. A. Colley - -	5
Cork - -	Cork - - -	H. Hitchmough - - -	2
Kildare - -	Athy (No. 1) - -	Duke of Leinster (Athy) -	2
Kildare - -	Naas (No. 1) - -	Duke of Leinster (Naas) -	2
Wexford -	Enniscorthy - -	George Wilson - - -	2
Londonderry -	Londonderry (No. 1)	Lord Macnaghten - -	2
Londonderry -	Limavady - -	Helen M. Cather - -	2
Wicklow -	Rathdrum - -	Earl of Carysfort - -	2
Tyrone - -	Strabane (No. 1) -	W. H. M. Sinclair - -	5
		Total	36

The representations are engaging the consideration of the local authorities.

---

† See (4) Debates, cxxxii., 610.

‡ See (4) Debates, cxxxii., 823.

§ See (4) Debates, cxxxiii., 364.

Purchase of South African Railways.

MR. BUCHANAN: To ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether the purchase of the South African Railways under the Loan Act has been completed; and, if not, what railways remain still unpurchased, and what is their estimated cost.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton.) Particulars of the services to be charged to Head II. of the Schedule to the Loan Act will be found on page 36 of Cd. 1552. Repayment to His Majesty's Government for rolling stock has been made, and the debt of the South African Railways to the Military Authorities has been settled. Payments in respect of the Orange River Colony Railway and Pretoria-Pietersburg Railway have been completed, with the possible exception of a sum of about £170,000 in the latter case, which is the subject of litigation in the Transvaal. The sum of £9,325,070 has been expended in the purchase of shares and debentures of the Netherlands South African Railway Company. A final estimate of expenditure is not yet possible, but I do not anticipate that the original estimate will be exceeded.

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

Discharges from Naval Establishments.

MR. KEARLEY (Devonport): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Admiralty what are the number of men, skilled and unskilled, discharged from the various naval establishments since November 1st to date, and the reason for throwing out of employment during the winter months so many.

THE SECRETARY TO THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. PRETYMAN, Suffolk, Woodbridge): The numbers of men discharged from the various Naval Establishments since November 1st to date are: Skilled, 759; unskilled, 536; total 1,295; 32 per cent. of these discharges were on reduction; 26 per cent. on account of age limit or physical unfitness; 16 per cent. at their own request; and the remainder on completion of the temporary duties for which they were specially entered, or for misconduct or inefficiency.

Flogging in the Navy.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Admiralty whether the punishments of birching and caning and other summary punishments inflicted on boys in the Royal Navy in 1903, the year for which term is the last Return, amounting to 9,553 punishments awarded summarily and seven punishments awarded after trial by Courts-martial, include the punishments of birching and caning and other summary punishments on the 4,293 boys and youths in the twelve naval training ships, including the 100 boys and youths temporarily embarked in other ships; and if the punishments inflicted on these boys and youths are not included in the Return what is the reason of the omission, and will any Return of these punishments be presented.

MR PRETYMAN: The punishments awarded to boys as shown in the Return for 1903 include the training service punishments. The number 4,293 refers to the boys and youths now borne, and not to those borne in 1903.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): Will not the Government consider the propriety of abolishing this disgraceful punishment?

[No Answer was returned.]

Self-Government for the Transvaal.

DR. MACNAMARA (Camberwell, N.): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he can now give the House an assurance that an opportunity will be afforded it of discussing the proposals for conferring local self-government upon the Transvaal and Orange River Colonies before those proposals become operative.

THE PRIME MINISTER AND FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): The House will most undoubtedly have an opportunity of discussing the question of the Constitution of the Transvaal before that Constitution becomes operative; but I do not think they ought to have an opportunity, and it is not in accordance with precedent that they should have an opportunity, of discussing the Letters

Patent until the Letters Patent are issued. The process is this. Letters Patent will be issued, and they will contain among other things the appointment of a Royal Commission to deal with questions of details—very important details, but still details—of the scheme in South Africa, and the scheme cannot become in the full sense operative, the Transvaal cannot enjoy the constitutional powers given to it, until an Order in Council is passed by which the recommendations of the Commission are assented to or varied, as the case may be. As soon as the Letters Patent are issued they will be laid on the Table of the House with Papers; and I shall take the first convenient opportunity—I canot say what the necessities of Supply may be, but subject to the necessities of Supply—I shall take the first convenient opportunity of putting the Colonial Secretary's Vote down as first Order on Wednesday.

SIR H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN (Stirling Burghs): Will the Letters Patent contain the general scheme of the new Government?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: Yes, the broad principles on which it is based.

DR. MACNAMARA: Will the House have an opportunity of determining whether procedure by Letters Patent is the best means of procedure?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: No, Sir, that rests with the Executive Government.

MR. BRYCE (Aberdeen, S.): Will the right hon. Gentleman tell us why he prefers the method of dealing by Letters Patent rather than the method of dealing by legislation, which has frequently been employed? There are many instances in which the House has had opportunities given to it of discussing the matter before it takes shape.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: The most recent precedents are those which the Government propose to follow in this instance. There are precedents, as the right hon. Gentleman truly observes, in a different sense, the most recent, I believe, being more than half a century old.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: There was the Australian Commonwealth Bill in 1901.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: That is a different matter. But, in any case, I think the procedure which we propose to adopt is strictly in accordance with precedent, and is the most convenient. I am sure that if the right hon. Gentleman will devote his able and ingenious mind to thinking why it is the most convenient the answer will readily occur to him.

MR. SYDNEY BUXTON (Tower Hamlets, Poplar): On behalf of the hon. Member for the Cleveland Division of Yorkshire, I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether, seeing that representative institutions in Canada, New South Wales, South Australia, Victoria, Western Australia, and Tasmania were established by the authority of Acts of Parliament of the years 1791, 1842, and 1850, he will, by adopting the same process in the establishment of representative institutions in the Transvaal, enable Parliament to exercise the same authority.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I have answered this Question.

DR. MACNAMARA: Will the right hon. Gentleman lay Papers showing cases in which these grants have been made by statutory enactment.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I do not think it worth while laying Papers, but if a Question is put down the right hon. Gentleman the Colonial Secretary will give the information asked for.

Bengal—Local Option.

MR. HERBERT ROBERTS (Denbighshire, W.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether the Bengal Excise Bill has been referred to the Government of India for instructions as to certain clauses dealing with the procedure to be adopted to ascertain the existence of local opinion in regard to the opening of liquor shops; whether he will state whether there is any conflict of opinion between the Government of India and the local government upon the question of principle involved in these clauses; and when he will be in a position to state the views of the Government of India upon the subject.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA (Mr. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford): The Answer to the first part of the Question is in the affirmative. So far as the principle is concerned that the law should fix, as far as possible, a definite procedure for ascertaining local opinion, there is, I believe, no conflict of opinion between the two Governments. I cannot conveniently make any statement as to the views of the Government of India until an amended Bill shall have been introduced into the Bengal Legislative Council. I have ascertained from the Viceroy that he has not yet received the reply of the local government to the letter of the Government of India on the subject of the procedure provisions of the Bill.

Uganda.

MR. CATHCART WASON (Orkney and Shetland): I beg to ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs if he can state approximately the number of natives in Uganda whose country has come under the domination of His Majesty the King of the Belgians, and also the extent of the country; and whether any steps have been taken, or are under consideration, for the protection of these people and of the English and Catholic missions.

THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Earl PERCY, Kensington, S.): No part of Uganda has come under the domination of the King of the Belgians.

North Sea Fisheries Outrage—Finding of the International Commission.

MR. JOHN ELLIS (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe): I beg to ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether the Government have received any information as to the finding of the International Commission which was appointed to investigate the responsibility for the deaths of the fishermen in the North Sea last autumn; and, in that case, will he inform the House of its nature and terms.

EARL PERCY: The findings of the Commission will be laid this afternoon.

Cost of Lighting Foreign Coasts.

MR. SEYMOUR ORMSBY-GORE (Lincolnshire, Gainsborough): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the cost of lighting any foreign coasts or harbours is defrayed by Great Britain; if so, what department or body incurs this expenditure; what is the total sum expended on foreign lighthouses by this country; and what are the various places where these lights are.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. GERALD BALFOUR, Leeds, Central): The lighthouse on Cape Spartel, Morocco, is the only one answering my hon. friend's description. That light is maintained by means of contributions from twelve Powers, of whom Great Britain is one (in accordance with a Convention entered into in 1885), the management being in the hands of an International Commission. The share of this country, which last year amounted to 1,500 fcs., is, in accordance with Section 2 (3) of the Merchant Shipping (Mercantile Marine Fund) Act, 1898, paid out of the General Lighthouse Fund, which is administered by the Board of Trade.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: Is the fund by which this lighting is maintained provided solely by British shipping?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: In part. There are also contributions from the Lighthouse Fund and other sources.

Committee on Physical Deterioration—Home Office Action.

SIR JOHN GORST (Cambridge University): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps His Majesty's Government are taking to carry out any of the recommendations of the Committee on Physical Deterioration which relate to matters within the jurisdiction of his Department.

* THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Mr. AKERS-DOUGLAS, Kent, St. Augustine's): I fear I cannot undertake to answer in detail as to those of the Committee's proposals in which my Department is concerned. Some of these proposals appear to be put forward as suggestions for further consideration rather than as definite recommendations, and I could not take steps to give effect to them without first collecting more information than has been obtained by the Committee. Perhaps I may be allowed to say, briefly, that the Committee's recommendations, several of which are engaging my attention, will not be lost sight of. The important subject of defective children, to which the Committee refer in recommendation No. 53, is now under the consideration of a Royal Commission.

SIR JOHN GORST: Can the right hon. Gentleman place a Return on the Table of the House showing what steps have been already taken?

* MR. AKERS-DOUGLAS: If the right hon. Gentleman will allow me, I shall be happy to confer with him as to what he asks.

DR. MACNAMARA: Is it still the view of the Home Office that it can do nothing with regard to the recommendation in favour of prohibiting cigarette smoking among small children?

* MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! That hardly arises out of the Question.

Local Government Board and Physical Deterioration.

SIR JOHN GORST: I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board what steps His Majesty's Government are taking to carry out any of the recommendations of the Committee on Physical Deterioration which relate to matters within the jurisdiction of the Local Government Board.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (Mr. WALTER LONG, Bristol, S.): The recommendations made by the Committee are very numerous, and so far as they relate to matters within the province of my Department, effect could not be given to many of them without legislation. A Committee, which I have appointed after consultation with my right hon. friend the Home Secretary, is inquiring into one important matter referred to by the Committee, viz., vagrancy, and I am giving consideration to the other subjects referred to in the Report so far as I am concerned with them.

SIR JOHN GORST: Is the right hon. Gentleman considering among many other things the question of making regulations as to the milk supply in towns?

MR. WALTER LONG: As my right hon. friend knows, that is an extremely difficult and involved question, and I do not think I could answer it "Yes" or "No." The whole matter is under consideration; and the application of rules would be extremely difficulty not applying to my own Department alone.

The Education Department and the Physical Deterioration Report

SIR JOHN GORST: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Board of Education what steps His Majesty's Government are taking to carry out any of the recommendations of the Committee on Physical Deterioration which relate to matters within the jurisdiction of the Board of Education.

THE PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY TO THE BOARD OF EDUCATION (Sir WILLIAM ANSON, Oxford University): The recommendations which would appear to fall within the existing administrative powers of the Board of Education are recommendations 17, 18, 20, 37. The Board have had under their consideration for some time the subjects of these recommendations, and have taken, and are taking, steps which they hope may be of some practical utility on the lines indicated in the Report. They are also taking steps, so far as legislation is not involved, to give some effect to recommendation 35.

Pay of Provincial Night-Messengers—The Bradford Report.

MR. JOHN CAMPBELL (Armagh, S.): I beg to ask the Postmaster-General whether he can state the result of his inquiry as regards the rate of pay of the provincial night-messengers; and whether these men will receive an increase of pay commensurate with the established rural postmen at all offices where their pay is at present computed according to the minimum payable to such established postmen.

THE POSTMASTER - GENERAL (LORD STANLEY, Lancashire, Westhoughton): I am considering the rate of pay of the adult telegraph messengers at provincial offices; and if I find that any change is necessary, I will announce it when I am able to state to the House my decision as regards other classes.

MR. NANNETTI (Dublin, College Green): May I ask the noble Lord when we may expect a statement with reference to the whole question?

LORD STANLEY: On the Estimates.

MR. NANNETTI: Shall we have the noble Lord's statement beforehand?

LORD STANLEY: I shall issue my Memorandum beforehand, but the debate will take place on the Estimates, which is the usual time for discussing an increase of wages.

MR. NANNETTI: In view of the feeling aroused all over the country with reference to the Bradford Report, will the noble Lord use his influence with the Prime Minister to get a day for the discussion?

LORD STANLEY: No, Sir.

Workhouse Accounts.

MR. BRIGHT (Shropshire, Oswestry): I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board if he proposes to issue an Order to carry out the recommendations of the Departmental Committee on Workhouse Accounts of 1903, with a view to the simplification of keeping these accounts.

MR. WALTER LONG: I have dealt with some of the matters referred to in the Report of the Committee, but with regard to the forms of account I am not at present in a position to issue an Order on the subject. I have recently received some observations from the Association of Poor Law Unions on the recommendations of the Committee, and some important suggestions with regard to the books and forms which should be prescribed. The representations of the Association are now under consideration.

Canadian Cattle Industry.

MR. CATHCART WASON: I beg to ask the hon. Member for North Huntingdonshire, as representing the Board of Agriculture, whether the expression of opinion coming from Canada in favour of the repeal of restrictions upon the importation of Canadian store cattle is to be taken as the opinion of the farmers, or if it is only the opinion of shareholders in large cattle ranches throughout America and of certain shipping interests.

MR. AILWYN FELLOWES (Huntingdonshire, Ramsey): The Canadian Government informs us that Canadian feeling and opinion are still in favour of the repeal of the existing statutory restrictions on the importation of live animals from the Dominion into Great Britain. The Board, of course, accept the assurance thus given, and they cannot associate themselves with the suggestion made in the latter part of the Question of the hon. Member.

Dogs Bill.

SIR EDWARD STRACHEY (Somersetshire, E.): I beg to ask the hon. Member for North Huntingdonshire, as representing the Board of Agriculture, whether they intend to introduce this session the Bill of last year to amend the law relating to the injury to live stock by dogs at any early date, with the object of it being passed into law.

MR. AILWYN FELLOWES: The answer is in the affirmative. I hope to bring it in at an early date.

SIR EDWARD STRACHEY: Do the Government intend to press it forward?

MR. AILWYN FELLOWES: Yes, Sir, that is the intention in bringing in the Bill early in the session.

SIR EDWARD STRACHEY: And pass it?

MR. AILWYN FELLOWES: I hope so.

Sanitation in the Island of Lewis.

MR. WEIR (Ross and Cromarty): I beg to ask the Lord-Advocate, in view of the insanitary condition of many parishes in the Island of Lewis, and the frequent closing of the public schools in consequence of epidemics of fever and other contagious diseases, will arrangements be made for the medical inspector, or one of the inspecting officers of the Local Government Board for Scotland to visit the island in order that a report as to the best mode of dealing with the insanitary conditions may be secured and considered.

*THE LORD-ADVOCATE (Mr. SCOTT DICKSON, Glasgow, Bridgton): The Local Government Board are prepared to entertain the suggestion made by the hon. Member, and will endeavour to arrange for a report to be prepared by one of their staff so soon as his other duties permit.

Railway Rates for Fish.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord-Advocate whether it has yet been found possible to secure a reduction in the through rates charged for the carriage of fish from the North of Scotland to the southern markets.

*MR. SCOTT DICKSON: The answer to the hon. Member's Question is in the negative. The Secretary for Scotland would be glad to see a reduction in the cost of the carriage of fish, but the North of Scotland does not labour under any peculiar disadvantage in this matter.

Renfrew School Teacher and Vaccination.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord-Advocate whether he is aware that the Scottish Education Department recently declined to allow the Renfrew Landward School Board to engage Laura Agnes Hood as a pupil teacher on the ground that she had not been successfully vaccinated; will he explain why this veto was imposed, especially having regard to the fact that the Code of Regulations issued by the Department does not indicate that successful vaccination is a necessary condition of appointment; and will he state why a pupil teacher who has had smallpox is not accepted as eligible for appointment unless successfully vaccinated.

*MR. SCOTT DICKSON: It is the fact that the Department declined to recognise the girl named in the Question as a pupil teacher on the ground that she had not been vaccinated. The rule on which this decision was based is a general one, imposed in the interests of the health of the children. As regards the last part of the Question, no case of the kind referred to has as yet called for the Department's decision.

Highland Crofting Counties – Medical Officers of Health.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord-Advocate, as representing the Secretary for Scotland, whether the Local Government Board have yet considered the expediency of increasing the number of medical officers of health for the Highland Crofting Counties and re-arranging the area under their respective control.

*MR. SCOTT DICKSON: The Local Government Board has long advocated the appointment of a separate medical officer for the Islands pertaining to the counties of Inverness and Ross, and have reason to believe that the proposal is favourably regarded by the county councils concerned. The views of the Local Government Board regarding the Poor Law Medical Relief in the Highlands and Islands at large are fully set forth in the Report of the Board's Departmental Committee issued a year ago, to which I would refer the hon. Member.

Western Highlands Fisheries.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord-Advocate if he will state the precise nature of any arrangements made by the Congested Districts Board for the conveyance of fish by steamer from the Western Highland fishing stations to Kyle, and the proposed rates.

*MR. SCOTT DICKSON: The Congested Districts Board have made arrangements with Messrs. Couper, of Helmsdale, by which they undertake to run a steamer from Ullapool and intervening ports to Kyle three times a week for the conveyance of lobsters and fish at the rate of 6d. a cwt., on a guarantee from the Board of a minimum cargo per month of 280 tons.

Lochbroom Fishing Industry—Suggested Motor-Car Service.

Mr. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord-Advocate, in view of recent improvements in weight carrying motor-cars, will he consider the expediency of placing a motor-car on the road between Ullapool and Garve for the purpose of assisting the fishing industry in the Lochbroom district, as authorised under Section 4, Sub-section (e), of the Congested Districts (Scotland) Act, 1897.

*Mr. SCOTT DICKSON: The Secretary for Scotland has received no application in the direction suggested by the hon. Member. He will perceive by my Answer to the previous Question that the Congested Districts Board have already taken steps experimentally to facilitate transit by sea from Ullapool to the railway terminus.

Longford—Charge for Extra Police.

Mr. J. P. FARRELL (Longford, N.): I beg to ask Mr. Attorney-General for Ireland if he will state the grounds upon which it was decided to stop the sum of £5 odd out of the agricultural grant to county Longford in respect of charges for extra police in Longford in October, 1902; whether he is aware that no requisition for extra police had been made on this occasion; and, if so, will he say why, although such requisition had not been made, the extra police were drafted in.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL for IRELAND (Mr. Atkinson, Londonderry, N.): The county council declined to make payment of this sum, which was due to the Crown under the authority of the Constabulary Acts. The amount was accordingly deducted from moneys payable to the county council out of the Local Taxation Account, in pursuance of Section 80, Sub-section 2, of the Local Government Act, 1898. The extra force was requisitioned by the county inspector in the ordinary manner and was approved by Government.

Mr. J. P. FARRELL: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that the district inspector denies requisitioning the police, as they were not required.

Mr. ATKINSON: The contrary is, I believe, the fact. He says he did.

Drumlish Cattle Rescue Case.

Mr. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask Mr. Attorney-General for Ireland whether his attention has been called to the case of alleged rescue of cattle in the police district of Drumlish, which is to come before the assizes at Longford on March 3rd; and whether, before ordering a prosecution by the Crown in this case, he will call for a report as to the circumstances under which the seizure took place, and inquire as to whether or not the bailiff produced any warrant or authority to seize which led the persons accused to think their cattle were being stolen.

Mr. ATKINSON: The depositions in these cases, in my opinion, disclose a prima facie case against the accused. I have no power or right to decide upon the validity of any defence they may desire to set up. I have, therefore, directed the prosecution to be proceeded with. If the rights of the accused have been invaded, of course they are entitled to redress against the parties liable. The seizures were made by the Sub-Sheriff in person.

Mr. J. P. FARRELL: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that the Sub-Sheriff was not on the ground at all?

Mr. ATKINSON: I am aware of exactly the contrary.

Mr. J. P. FARRELL: Then I may inform the right hon. Gentleman that he is totally misinformed.

Larkhill School, County Sligo.

Mr. O'DOWD (Sligo, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland what provision is made for the education of Catholic children in the district of Larkhill, situate near Collooney, county Sligo; whether he is aware that the patron and teacher of the local national school there are Protestants, although 75 per cent. of the children attending are Catholics; and, if so, will he say whether it is the wish of the Commissioners of National Education that where the majority of the children attending a particular school are of one religious denomination the manager of that school should be of the same denomination; and, if so, whether inquiries will be made with the view of having the grievances complained of in this case redressed.

THE CHIEF SECRETARY FOR IRELAND (Mr. WYNDHAM, Dover): The school at Larkhill is under Protestant management and the teacher is a Protestant. Thirty-four pupils were on the rolls on December 31st last, of whom twenty-one were Protestants and thirteen Catholics. There are two other schools about two miles distant, both under Catholic management.

Dombsy Estate, Athenry.

MR. DUFFY (Galway, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that negotiations have been commenced for the purchase of the Dombsy Estate, near Athenry, and are concluded; and, if so, whether, seeing that mostly all the holdings on the property are uneconomic, will he advise the Estates Commissioners to refuse to sanction the sale until such time as the untenanted lands of the neighbourhood are made available for the enlargement of the small holdings.

MR. WYNDHAM: This property has not yet been brought before the Commissioners. In any case they will discharge their duties in accordance with the provisions of the law, and I cannot undertake to advise them as suggested in the Question.

Gloves Grazing Farm.

MR. DUFFY: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Congested Districts Board recently purchased a large grazing farm at Gloves, near Athenry; and, if so, whether, seeing that the attention of the Congested Districts Board has been repeatedly drawn to the condition of a number of poor tenants who reside on the bog at Gloves, and that a memorial had been forwarded by them to the Congested Districts Board requesting that the untenanted lands recently purchased should be divided amongst them, it is the intention of the Board to dispose of these lands amongst the poor farmers living in the district.

MR. WYNDHAM: I am informed that the lands at Gloves occupied by the tenants in question have not been purchased by the Board, and that these lands are not in a congested district. The Board intend to provide for the tenants on the lands which they purchased and to utilise the remainder for purposes of migration from a congested district. Congestion outside scheduled districts can be dealt with by the Estates Commissioners.

Evicted Tenants in County Galway.

MR. ROCHE (Galway, E.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he will state the number of applications received by the Estates Commissioners from the evicted tenants on the estate of Mrs. Lewis, Ballinagar, county Galway, and how many have been reinstated either in their old homes or new ones under the Land Act of 1903.

MR. WYNDHAM: Twenty-two, none of whom have been reinstated. Their applications are at present with the inspectors and will be considered in the event of untenanted land in the district becoming available.

Clanricarde Estate Evicted Tenants.

MR. ROCHE: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he can state the number of applications from evicted tenants on the Clanricarde Estate, the number that have been reinstated under the Land Act of 1903, how many to their old homes, and also how many have been provided with new ones on the estate.

MR. WYNDHAM: 122, of whom two have been reinstated in new holdings on an adjoining estate. The Commissioners are unable to say whether any of the remainder have been restored to their former or new holdings on the Clanricarde Estate, which has not been brought before them in any way.

Sligo Local Authorities Accounts.

MR. O'DOWD: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether, before the issue of the new Public Bodies Order, 1904, and the Union Accounts Order, 1904, the county council and other public bodies in Sligo were consulted: and, if so, whether he will give the names of the bodies so consulted and the views expressed by them in regard to these Orders.

Mr. WYNDHAM: The County Council and Sligo Urban District Council were consulted. The secretary to the county council suggested that an additional form should be embodied in the Order. The Local Government Board was unable to agree to the suggestion, but considers it may be issued, separately, for voluntary adoption by the councils, and this will be done. The urban council expressed no opinion on the Order prior to its issue. The Union Accounts Order made no alterations in the existing system and was not communicated to boards of guardians.

Mr. J. P. FARRELL: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that in most of these cases the reply of the Official Receiver represents the official view and not the county council at all?

Mr. WYNDHAM: I am not aware of that.

Mr. J. P. FARRELL: Well, it is so.

Sir Antony MacDonnell.

Mr. CHARLES DOUGLAS (Lanarkshire, N.W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether His Majesty's Government invited or received from Sir Antony MacDonnell any explanation or defence of his action before characterising it as indefensible.

Mr. WYNDHAM: Yes, Sir, the Answer is in the affirmative; and the representations made by Sir Antony MacDonnell, before the Cabinet arrived at any decision, led us to decide that, while his conduct was not open to any imputation of disloyalty, it was impossible for the Government to defend assistance given to the formulation of views to which we are opposed.

Mr. JOHN REDMOND (Waterford): Were these representations from Sir Antony MacDonnell in writing?

Mr. WYNDHAM: No, Si .

Mr. JOHN REDMOND: Have they been reduced to writing since?

Mr. WYNDHAM: A good many communications have passed between Sir Antony MacDonnell and myself, and all his representations have been laid by me before the Cabinet.

Mr. JOHN REDMOND: I understand in writing. Then I have to ask whether the right hon. Gentleman will produce these documents.

Mr. WYNDHAM: No, Sir.

Higher Education in Ireland.

Mr. T. L. CORBETT (Down, N.): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether it is the intention of the Government to introduce any legislation to give effect to the proposal for dealing with higher education in Ireland contained in the correspondence between the Chief Secretary for Ireland and Sir Antony MacDonnell.

Mr. A. J BALFOUR: In answer to the hon. Gentleman I have to say that the Government certainly do not propose to introduce any legislation on this subject. I have frequently explained to the House, and among others to my hon. friend, that this is not a subject on which the Government are agreed.

Mr. T. L. CORBETT: Was the Chief Secretary authorised by the Cabinet to use the words in the correspondence with Sir Antony MacDonnell "I make" and "you accept?"

*Mr. SPEAKER: Order, order! The hon. Member must give notice of that Question.

Mr. AUSTIN TAYLOR (Liverpool, E. Toxteth): If it is not the intention of His Majesty's Government to introduce legislation on this question, what is the particular function in connection with higher education in Ireland which Sir Antony MacDonnell is to perform?

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: The hon. Gentleman must have given imperfect attention to the many statements and speeches I have made on the subject.

Four days ago I explained to the House that in my judgment neither this Government nor any succeeding Government could make this a Government question. If it is to be dealt with it must be dealt with by other means.

The Irish Devolution Scheme.

MR. CHARLES CRAIG (Antrim, S.): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury if he can inform the House whether the Lord-Lieutenant in his conversations with Sir Antony MacDonnell expressed approval or disapproval of the devolution scheme as proposed by Sir Antony MacDonnell.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: With regard to the proposal to invest a statutory body in Ireland with power to deal with Bills other than Private Bills, I understand the Lord-Lieutenant has expressed an unhesitating disapproval.

MR. LONSDALE (Armagh, Mid.): Did Sir Antony MacDonnell inform his superior officer, the Chief Secretary, that Lord Dudley had expressed disapproval of the devolution scheme?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I am not aware of it.

MR. LONSDALE: Was it not his duty to do so?

[No Answer was returned.]

Mountmellick Bog.

*MR. DELANY (Queen's County, Ossory): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the extensive bog comprising 1,489 acres, owned by Mrs. Adair, and situate near Mountmellick, Queen's County, is offered for sale by private tender; and, in view of the fact that this bog is the sole source upon which the inhabitants of Mountmellick, Rosenallis, and surrounding districts have to rely for fuel, and as the owner has already sold the other portion of the estate to the tenants, under the Land Purchase Acts some ten years ago, he will state whether the Estates Commissioners are prepared to take steps to purchase this bog and use it for the accommodation of the localities named.

MR. WYNDHAM: There are no proceedings pending before the Commissioners with respect to this bog. I see no necessity for suggesting to them any special course in regard to it. I think they are quite competent to deal with these matters?

*MR. DELANY: But will not the right hon. Gentleman communicate with them?

MR. WYNDHAM: If the hon. Member thinks I ought to draw their attention to the fact that this bargain is a favourable one I will do so.

Siskin Evicted Tenant.

MR. REDDY (King's County, Birr): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Estates Commissioners have received an application from an evicted tenant named Mr. Patrick O'Brien, of Siskin, Cadamstown, King's County; and, if so, if any, and what, steps have been taken in connection with the application by the Commissioners; and whether any steps can be taken for dealing with his case in connection with the sale of the adjoining estate of Captain Caulfield Ffrench, on which there is a large amount of untenanted land and large grazing farms.

MR. WYNDHAM: An application for reinstatement has been received from this evicted tenant, whose former holding is stated to be in the occupation of a new tenant. No proceedings for the sale of the estate of Captain Ffrench have yet been instituted before the Estates Commissioners.

Seizures for Rent in King's County.

MR. REDDY: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he is aware that the police assisted in several seizures for rent recently on the property of Lord Ashbrook and other landlords in the King's County; and, if so, will he say what necessity existed for the expenditure of public money in connection with proceedings that were carried out for the purpose of forcing tenants into purchasing their holdings at prices they considered too high.

Mr. WYNDHAM: The police rendered no such assistance. They attended on the requisition of the sheriff, as they were by law bound to do, to protect his bailiff in the execution of Writs of the Superior Court. No expense to the public was incurred.

Admiral Singleton's Estate.

Mr. SHEEHY (Meath, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Estates Commissioners have sanctioned the sale to the tenants of Admiral Singleton's property; whether he is aware that an evicted tenant, Owen Kirk, has lodged with the Commissioners a claim to be reinstated, by purchase, on the farm in Admiral Singleton's estate from which he was evicted; and that the Commissioners have notified Mr. Kirk that the farm from which he was evicted does not appear to form portion of the estate; and, if so, will he state what are the grounds on which the Commissioners founded that statement: and what steps, if any, have the Commissioners taken to have Mr. Kirk reinstated.

Mr. WYNDHAM: The Commisioners have not yet sanctioned advances to the tenants on this estate. The question whether Kirk's former holding is comprised in the estate, about which there appeared to be some doubt, will be investigated by the inspector.

Evicted Tenants in County Armagh.

Mr. JOHN CAMPBELL: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the tenants evicted from the Sir J. Strong, H. B. Armstrong, and Hassart Estates, county Armagh, have lodged applications for reinstatement with the Estates Commissioners; and whether, in view of the fact that these lands are at present in the hands of the landlords, he will see that they are purchased by the Estates Commissioners for the purpose of resettling the evicted tenants thereon.

Mr. WYNDHAM: Application for reinstatement has been received from one evicted tenant only, whose holding is on the Armstrong estate. No application has yet been made to the Commissioners for the sale of either of the estates mentioned.

Report on Knitting and Hosiery in Limerick School.

Mr. JOYCE (Limerick): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he will explain why the name of Miss E. Anderson does not appear in the Return presented by order of this House, dated August 13th, 1903, showing the names of and certain information concerning the officials employed by the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction in Ireland, as an inspector of the Department; and will he now supply in her case the information that Return might have given, namely, her previous employment and her qualifications, if any, to act as inspector of hosiery and knitting; is he aware that a recent report of that inspector on the work of a knitting and hosiery class at Limerick has been contradicted as to the quality of the work by five business men in that city, three of them buyers for large firms, and all of them purchasers of the goods made in the class in question; and will he say whether the Department rely on that inspector's reports as to the condition and progress of the knitting and hosiery industry in Ireland.

Mr. WYNDHAM: The Return in question was a Return of permanent officials. Miss Anderson is not a permanent officer and her name was not, therefore, included in the Return. She was appointed Inspectress in August, 1900. Her previous employment was that of a principal Art Mistress of the Crawford School of Art, Cork. She holds the Art Master's Certificate of the English Board of Education, also many medals, and has had considerable experience in teaching design for lace and needlework. The Department is satisfied as to the fairness of her report to which reference is made in the Question.

Mr. JOYCE: As the principal firms in Limerick are buying from this school they know how the work is done.

Mr. WYNDHAM: I have no further information.

Mr. JOYCE: Then I will give the right hon. Gentleman some.

Kinvarra Harbour.

MR. DUFFY: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he will explain the cause of delay in commencing the repairs to Kinvarra Harbour; whether he is aware that the County Council of Galway agreed to vote £800 towards the expenses of this work on condition that a grant of £1,100 under the Marine Works Act be made by the Treasury, the balance required for the extension of the pier to be provided as follows: £200 by the Congested Districts Board, £200 by the County Council of Galway, £1,100 by the Department of Agriculture; and, if so, whether, with a view to relieving the distress prevailing on the west coast of Ireland and in the district of Kinvarra by providing employment for the poor working population and to carrying out a useful public work, he will at once direct that the Board of Works will take the necessary steps to initiate these works.

MR. WYNDHAM: Plans of the proposed works were communicated to the county council by the Board of Works on December 22nd, with a request for an early reply. The council has not yet signified its approval of the plans.

Land Purchase Advances.

MR. HAYDEN (Roscommon, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he can state the amount advanced under the Land Purchase Act of 1903 in each of the four provinces of Ireland up to December 31st, 1904, distinguishing between the amount for tenanted and untenanted land respectively; and whether he can state the average number of years purchase for non-judicial first-term and second-term rents.

MR. WYNDHAM: This information cannot conveniently be given in the form of a reply to a Question. A Return will be laid on the Table in the course of a few days which will contain full information respecting the operations of the Commissioners to the date mentioned.

Killadysert Union Accounts.

MR. SHEEHY: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the Local Government Auditor has surcharged three members of the Killadysert Union £6 18s. 2d., being for medical and surgical appliances; and that the guardians surcharged appealed to the Local Government Board; and, if so, will he say whether the surcharge has been sustained by the Local Government Board; and what are the grounds for the surcharge.

MR. WYNDHAM: The facts are correctly stated. The grounds for the surcharge, which was upheld by the Local Government Board, were that the amount surcharged represented the cost of medical and surgical appliances supplied over and above the reasonable wants of the medical officer, and that the payment was excessive and exorbitant.

Arterial Drainage, Ireland.

MR. HAYDEN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether any intimation has been given on behalf of the Government that it is intended to provide money for the drainage of lands adjoining the River Bann; and, if so, whether the Government intend at the same time to provide money for the drainage of lands adjoining the Rivers Barrow, Suck, Owenmore, and Shannon.

MR. WYNDHAM: The proposals of the Government with respect to the provision of funds for the drainage of the Bann have been publicly announced. I have no further statement to make in the matter at present. The reply to the second inquiry is in the negative.

Appointment to Office of Chief Secretary for Ireland.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: To ask the First Lord of the Treasury by whom is the appointment to the office of Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland made; is it held under Letters Patent or otherwise; and what is the nature of its tenure.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: The appointment is made by the Crown by Letters Patent.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Is it not practically made by the Lord- ie tenant by Letters Patent?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I quite admit I have made no independent research, but I am informed that the matter is as I have stated.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Is not the appointment made by the Lord-Lieutenant as representing the Crown?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I should imagine it is made by the Crown and not by the Lord-Lieutenant.

Painting Work at Viceregal Lodge, Dublin.

*MR. NANNETTI: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether he is aware that labouring men have been employed at painting work at the Viceregal Lodge, Dublin, under the Board of Works; that remonstrances have been directed on behalf of the regular painters, employers and employed, claiming that the work done by these labouring men belongs to the painting trade; and, if so, whether, seeing that the Commissioners of Public Works in Ireland define painting work contary to expert judgment, and in view of the replies received from the Department concerned, he will represent to the Board of Works the desirability of securing competent workmen to perform tradesmen's work in this trade in accordance with the terms of the Fair Wages Resolution.

THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY (Mr. VICTOR CAVENDISH, Derbyshire, W.): After careful investigation I have satisfied myself that the painting work at the Viceregal Lodge, to which the hon. Member refers, is of the roughest description, not requiring or properly assignable to skilled workmen. Any work involving skilled labour is always reserved for duly qualified men.

*MR. NANNETTI: Seeing that the workmen claim this to be the work of regular painters, will the right hon. Gentleman take the expert opinion of the Master Painters on the subject?

MR. VICTOR CAVENDISH asked for notice of the Question.

Piltown Postal Arrangements.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN (Kilkenny): I beg to ask the Postmaster-General whether he is aware that frequent complaints have been made of delays, at times of five days, in delivering the Kilkenny Moderator newspaper at Piltown and district, which is distant only twenty-one miles from Kilkenny, where the paper is published and posted; can he explain why these delays occur; and will he see that the Moderator is delivered in the ordinary course of post in future.

LORD STANLEY: The inquiries as regards the delay in the delivery of the Kilkenny Moderator at Piltown are not yet complete, but I hope to be in a position to communicate the result to the hon. Member shortly.

Aghnacliffe Telegraphic Arrangements.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Postmaster-General whether he proposes to end the proposed telegraph service to Dring at that station or to continue same to Aghnacliffe Post Office, a short distance further, where there is a creamery, schools, chapels, and several business premises in need of telegraphic facilities.

LORD STANLEY: There are proposals for extending the telegraph to Dring under guarantee, and also to Cloonagh, which is in the same neighbourhood; and I should be prepared to make an extension, under guarantee, to Aghnacliffe. But I am bound to say that there is nothing like sufficient telegraph business in the neighbourhood to support all three offices, and that the calls upon the guarantors would therefore be heavy. Perhaps in the circumstances the hon. Member may be able to use his influence to induce the three places to combine in an application for one telegraph office, or at most two, to serve the whole neighbourhood.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: If a number of private individuals combine to give the guarantee will that suffice?

LORD STANLEY: Certainly, Sir, it can be done under a guarantee.

Irish-Speaking Postmasters.

MR. HAYDEN: I beg to ask the Postmaster-General, having regard to the fact that knowledge of the Welsh language is considered an essential qualification for postal appointments in Welsh-speaking districts in Wales, if he will state why a similar practice in respect to the Irish language is not followed in Irish-speaking districts in Ireland; and whether, seeing that it is the practice in Welsh-speaking districts in Wales to display all postal notices in both Welsh and English languages, he will explain why a similar practice is not followed in Ireland.

Lord STANLEY: The practice followed in certain districts of Wales is not followed in Ireland because the circumstances are not similar. But I can promise if any candidate with the advantage of a knowledge of the Irish language applies for a vacant postmastership I shall be glad to favourably consider his case.

Deportation of Paupers to Ireland.

Mr. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board if he will explain why paupers continue to be deported to Ireland from English cities and unions, contrary to the legislation passed by this House to stop same; and whether, in these cases, proper inquiries are made so as to ensure that no fraud is committed by such persons in order to secure a cheap passage to Ireland.

Mr. WALTER LONG: I presume that the legislation to which the hon. Member refers is the Poor Removal Act, 1900. I have not received complaints of the deportation of persons to Ireland in contravention of that Act, but if any such complaints are brought to my notice I will make inquiry with regard to them.

Turkish Import Duties.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury, have His Majesty's Government received any request from the Turkish Government to agree to an increase of the Turkish import duties from 8 to 11 per cent. ad valorem; and, if so, what reply has been made thereto; and, in view of the fact that His Majesty's Government hold that, before applying any increase of the Turkish Customs to other purposes than the Turkish debt, it would be necessary previously to modify the terms of Article VIII. of this decree of December 8th, 1881, ceding to the service of the Turkish debt any surplus arising from a modification of the Customs tariff, and also to obtain the consent of the Council of the Ottoman Public Debt, representing the bondholders, can he inform the House whether any, and if so, what steps are proposed to be taken to obtain the consent of that Council before applying any surplus arising from an increase in the Turkish tariff either to reforms in Macedonia or to any other purpose than the service of the Turkish debt.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: The Answer to the first Question is in the affirmative. No reply has yet been returned to the request. The decree of December 8th, 1881, has, in pursuance of an arrangement with the Turkish Government and the bondholders, been modified by the supplementary decree of September 1st, 1903. Article 3 of this later decree confirms the assignment to the creditors of any surplus which may arise in the Customs receipts from an increase in the Customs duties, either in consequence of a revision of the treaties of commerce or otherwise, and Article 8 of the same decree provides that, if the receipts of the Ottoman Public Debt exceed £12,157,375, 75 per cent. of the surplus shall be repaid to the Turkish Government and the remaining 25 per cent. shall be applied to redemption of the debt. I have no reason to suppose that any alteration of this arrangement is in contemplation.

Government Manufactories near London.

Sir HOWARD VINCENT (Sheffield, Central): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury if the attention of His Majesty's Government has been drawn to the tendency to concentrate the manufacture of warlike and other materials in and around London; and whether the Council of Defence will consider the desirability of doing something towards the decentralisation of Government manufacture, in view of the continually increasing difficulty of housing accommodation at reasonable rental and the consequential enhanced difficulty and cost of labour.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: I do not think the Council of Defence is the proper body to deal with the important subject referred to. The Government have for some time been considering it, and are framing a Committee who they hope will deal in a useful manner with the problems raised.

Blocking Motions—Transvaal Constitution.

Mr. SWIFT MACNEILL: I beg to ask the hon. Member for West Perthshire whether he has asked the Government to give him facilities for the discussion of a Motion, which has been placed on the Notice Paper in his name, calling attention to the proposed establishment of a new form of government in the Transvaal and Orange River Colonies, and to the action of His Majesty's Government and of the Colonial Executives in connection therewith; and, if he has asked for these facilities, what reply has been made to his request; and whether, in the interests of free discussion in the House of Commons, he will remove this notice from the Notice Paper.

Mr. JOHN STROYAN (Perthshire, W.): I thank the hon. Member for having sent me private notice of his Question. The Answer to Question No. 1 is in the negative. The answer to Question No. 2 is therefore obvious. The answer to Question No. 3 is that the time has not arrived for a decision.

Mr. SWIFT MACNEILL: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether his attention has been directed to a notice of Motion on the Notice Paper, standing in the name of the hon. Member for West Perthshire, on the subject of the proposed Constitutions of the Transvaal and Orange River Colonies, and, if so, will he give a day for its discussion; and, if not, whether he will request him to remove that Notice from the Paper.

On the same subject the following Question appeared—

Dr. MACNAMARA: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether his attention has been called to the Notice of Motion, standing in the name of the hon. Member for West Perthshire, to call attention to the proposed establishment of a new form of government in the Transvaal and Orange River Colonies, and to the action of His Majesty's Government and of the Colonial Executives in connection therewith; and to move a Resolution; and whether he will undertake to give a day for the discussion of this Motion before the proposals for conferring local self-government upon the Transvaal and Orange River Colonies become operative.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: I cannot make the request, nor is it necessary that I should do so. As early as Supply will permit I propose to put down the Vote of the Secretary for the Colonies.

Mr. JOHN ELLIS: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he proposes to take any steps to extricate the House from the position in which it has found itself during the last session or two of being prevented discussing a matter of general interest and urgent importance by the system which has grown up and developed of what are termed blocking Notices.

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: I have explained the views of the Government more than once on this subject. I am sorry to say I have not fulfilled an undertaking which I made at the end of last session that I would put down on the Paper a proposed Amendment to the Standing Orders embodying the views which I have expressed to the House. My view is that it is impossible to deal with the question of blocking Notices, as they are called, without considering many other questions, including the use made of powers to adjourn the House. But I feel that it is a hardship on such occasions as the adjournment for the holidays that a blocking Notice should prevent the discussion of any question which the House desires to deal with. I shall hasten to put down an Amendment to the Standing Orders carrying out that view.

Mr. JOHN ELLIS: May I ask the right hon. Gentleman if he will be good enough to frame his Motion in such a way that we can discuss the whole matter raised in my Question?

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: No, Sir, I think that would defeat the very end I have in view. Part of my object is to give hon. Gentlemen, if they desire it, an opportunity, on the adjournment for the Easter or Whitsuntide recess, of discussing questions which they might otherwise be debarred from touching. If that is accepted sub silentio they will have those opportunities; but if I provoke discussion by putting down such a Resolution as the hon. Gentleman desires, it is evident that we should not have an opportunity to discuss that until August, and in August we might have other things more pressing.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES: Do I understand that the right hon. Gentleman will not deal in his Motion with the abuse complained of in regard to important Motions for adjournment?

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: I do not say these questions are not of importance. On the contrary, they are of great importance, but evidently they will take up a great deal of the time of the House. They are most difficult and delicate matters. All I should aspire to would be the relatively humble function of trying to frame an Amendment of our Standing Orders which should be uncontroversial in its character.

Sir H. CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN: In the meantime will the Government allow the House to remain in the same condition, tied and bound by this regulation, as it was last year? Will they do nothing to relieve the House from the scandal of being prevented by the action of a single Member, with or without the complicity of the Government, from having any discussion upon urgent questions?

Sir GEORGE BARTLEY (Islington, N.): Was it not so under the last Government?

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: No doubt the right hon. Gentleman's sense of the wrongs under which he suffers has become more acute since he sat on this bench. I do propose to do something to mitigate the evils which the right hon. Gentleman complains of, because I propose to put on the Paper a limited Amendment, the purport of which I have already described. If the right hon. Gentleman will let me get that through without discussion he will have done something practical towards realising his idea.

Mr. JOHN ELLIS: When will the Motion be put down?

Mr. A. J. BALFOUR: This week, certainly.

Mr. SWIFT MACNEILL: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that at the end of last session he did his best to limit discussion on the adjournment to half a day?

*Mr. SPEAKER: Order, order! That is debating the matter.

Mr. SWIFT MACNEILL asked Mr. Speaker whether the practice precluding the raising of discussion on a Motion for Adjournment on any matter on which a notice of Motion had been given was founded, not on any Resolution of the House of Commons or on any Standing Order, but on the rulings of successive Speakers.

*Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. Member has read me the result of his studies, and he asks me whether I agree or disagree with him. I am not called upon to answer Questions of that sort.

Mr. SWIFT MACNEILL replied that he would bring the question up as a matter of privilege, and, therefore, moved that the notice of Motion placed on the Order Book by the hon. Member for West Perthshire, with reference to the proposed Constitution of the Transvaal and Orange River Colonies constituted a breach of the privileges of the House, inasmuch as it was set down with a view to avoiding discussion of the question, and was an abuse and perversion of a rule of Parliamentary practice established not for the obstruction of discussion, but for giving it facilities, and that the said Notice be removed from the Order Book.

*MR. SPEAKER: The hon. Member has had an opportunity of reading his Motion, which is probably what he wanted. There is no question of privilege at all.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Will you hear me one minute?

*MR. SPEAKER: The Resolution raises no question of privilege, and as it does not do so, the hon. Member is not in order in moving it.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: The hon. Member said he put the notice down because this was not the time for discussing it.

MR. STROYAN: I said nothing of the kind.

Preferential Trading.

MR. PIKE PEASE (Darlington): On behalf of the hon. Member for the Tunbridge Division of Kent, I beg to ask the Junior Member for Oldham whether he can state the terms of the Resolution on Preferential Trading with the Colonies of which he has given notice for Wednesday, March 8th.

MR. WINSTON CHURCHILL (Oldham): I hope to put the exact wording of the Resolution on the Order Paper before the end of the week. For the information and convenience of the hon. Member I may say that it is my present intention to move in the following terms: "That, in the opinion of this House, the permanent unity of the British Empire will not be secured by a system of preferential duties involving taxation of food." The hon. Member may be assured that these terms will not be altered unless circumstances should arise which would appear to render alteration desirable.

It being now five minutes to three o'clock, twelve starred Questions addressed to the Secretaries of State for War and the Colonies were not put.

Magisterial Jurisdiction in Ireland.

CAPTAIN DONELAN (Cork, E.) said he had given private notice of a Question of an urgent character relating to a matter of public importance, and although the time set apart under the Rules of the House for addressing Questions to Ministers had expired he claimed the right under the Standing Orders to put it.

*MR. SPEAKER: If the hon. Member will read his Question I will decide.

CAPTAIN DONELAN said he wished to ask the Chief Secretary whether his attention had been called to the proceedings at the Riverstown Petty Sessions on Friday last; was he aware that Mr. Wright, the Crown Solicitor, advised the police not to act on any warrant issued by the majority of the Bench, whether the Crown Solicitor had any authority to give such advice, and by whose instructions District-Inspector Wade refused to execute the warrant. He urged that this Question came under the Standing Order.

*MR. SPEAKER: I am not in a position to judge very accurately as to the importance of the Question and whether any harm can be done by waiting, so I will allow it to be put.

MR. ATKINSON: As I am more conversant with the facts I will reply.

CAPTAIN DONELAN: My Question is addressed to the Chief Secretary.

MR. ATKINSON: Yes, but the prosecution is under my charge and I am more conversant with the facts, therefore I propose to reply. A number of men were brought up before this Bench of Magistrates on an application that they should be returned for trial for riot. The magistrates from time to time adjourned the case, and eventually application had to be made to the King's Bench for a mandamus to compel them to proceed to adjudicate and to either return the accused for trial or to acquit them. The mandamus was granted, and on the same day the magistrates assembled in obedience to the mandamus addressed to them, and, instead of obeying it, three of them took upon themselves to exercise jurisdiction over the men and to convict them of an offence with which they were not charged, an usurpation of authority which was absolutely illegal, an act done without any warrant or jurisdiction, and without absolutely any defence; in fact, these magistrates not only exercised a jurisdiction which they had not, but one of which they were expressly deprived by statute. The police, under the direction of the authorities, refused to execute the warrants, which were both illegal and improper, and which, had they been executed, would have subjected both the magistrates and the police to an action for false imprisonment.

CAPTAIN DONELAN: May I be permitted to point out most respectfully that the Attorney-General has not answered one of the Questions I put? I ask whether he was aware that Mr. Wright, the Crown Solicitor, advised the police not to act on any warrant issued by the majority of the Bench; had he authority to do so, and by whose instructions did Inspector Wade refuse to execute the warrant?

MR. ATKINSON: I think I have answered all the Questions. Mr. Wright represented me in the conduct of the prosecution, and communicated with me as to what had been done. He properly stated on the spot that the warrants about to be issued were altogether illegal. The Chief Secretary was communicated with through me, and I advised him that it was absolutely proper that the police, under the circumstances, should refuse to execute warrants which were entirely illegal.

NEW BILLS.

METROPOLITAN POLICE PROVISIONAL ORDER BILL.

"To confirm a Provisional Order made by one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State under The Metropolitan Police Act, 1886, relating to lands in the parishes of Erith and Barking," presented by Mr. Cochrane; supported by Mr. Secretary Akers-Douglas; read the first time; and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, and to be printed. [Bill 59.]

CONGESTED DISTRICTS (SCOTLAND) ACT (1897) AMENDMENT BILL.

"To amend the provisions of the Congested Districts (Scotland) Act, 1897, as to the application of the fund constituted by the Act; and for other purposes," presented by Mr. Ainsworth; supported by Mr. John Dewar, Mr. Cathcart Wason, Mr. Weir, and Mr. Harmsworth; to be read a second time upon Monday next, and to be printed. [Bill 60.]

CROFTERS' HOLDINGS (SCOTLAND) ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.

"To amend the Acts relating to Crofter Holdings in Scotland," presented by Mr. Ainsworth; supported by Mr. John Dewar, Mr. Cathcart Wason, Mr. Weir, and Mr. Harmsworth; to be read a second time upon Tuesday, 7th March, and to be printed. [Bill 61.]

SCHOOL BOARD ELECTORATE (SCOTLAND) BILL.

"To admit to the School Board Electorate of Scotland persons entitled to vote for the county council election," presented by Mr. Weir; supported by Mr. Leveson-Gower, Mr. Ainsworth, Mr. Cathcart Wason, Mr. John Dewar, Sir Arthur Bignold, Mr. Harmsworth, and Mr. Caldwell; to be read a second time upon Thursday next, and to be printed. [Bill 62.]

CROFTERS' HOLDINGS (SCOTLAND) ACT (1886) AMENDMENT BILL.

"To amend the Crofters' Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1886," presented by Mr. Weir; supported by Mr. John Dewar, Mr. Leveson-Gower, Mr. Cathcart Wason, Sir Arthur Bignold, Mr. Harmsworth, Mr. Ainsworth, and Mr. Caldwell; to be read a second time upon Wednesday next, and to be printed. [Bill 63.]

OSBORNE ESTATE ACT (1902) AMENDMENT BILL.

"To amend the Osborne Estate Act, 1902, with respect to the purposes to which Osborne House may be devoted," presented by Mr. Victor Cavendish; supported by Lord Balcarres; to be read a second time upon Monday next, and to be printed. [Bill 64.]

SMALL HOLDERS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

"To amend the Law relating to the tenure of Small Holdings in Scotland," presented by Mr. Black; supported by Dr. Farquharson, Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Crombie, Mr. Weir, Mr. John Dewar, Mr. Eugene Wason, and Mr. Ainsworth; to be read a second time upon Wednesday, 22nd March, and to be printed. [Bill 65.]

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Main Question [14th February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Question again proposed.

Mr. STEVENSON (Suffolk, Eye) said he rose for the purpose of moving the Amendment to the Address standing in his name on the Paper, and, as within the last few days there had been some modification in its terms, he would read out the actual wording, which was as follows—

> "But humbly represent to Your Majesty that, in view of the prevalent insecurity of life and property in many provinces of the Ottoman Empire, the inadequacy of the measures hitherto adopted, and the incontrovertible obligations incurred by this country and the other signatories of the Treaty of Berlin, the time has arrived when further steps should be taken for the purpose of placing the execution of reforms in those provinces in the hands of a governor or governors, or other officers, responsible to the Powers."

The place and space devoted to the subject of the Near East in the King's Speech bore testimony, he said, to its importance at the present time, and he did not think enough had yet been said, either in debate in that House or in another place, with regard to the actual steps which were being taken by Great Britain and the other Signatory Powers respecting the condition of affairs in that part of the world. It must be borne in mind, in dealing with these disturbed provinces of the Ottoman Empire, that they were referring to what was purely and specifically a foreign country, but one in regard to which they and other Powers were bound by most solemn treaty obligations. He would refer to two parts of the Ottoman Empire, the European part and the Asiatic part. In the European part he had more especially to deal with the vilayets which were grouped under Macedonia, while as to Asiatic Turkey he would draw their attention to certain provinces in which the records showed that a deplorable condition of things still continued to exist. They had, during the last year, had a certain amount of information given to them in the shape of Blue-books and White-books with regard to the condition of affairs in European Turkey. But that information only brought them down to August last year, and they knew very little as to what had occurred since that time. He did not think that the official publications which they had received threw very much light on the progress which had been achieved, and he might be allowed, perhaps, briefly to recall to the House the successive stages by which the present condition of affairs had been brought about.

It would be remembered that a certain scheme of reforms was put forward in the year 1902 by Austro-Hungary and Russia, with the concurrence of certain other Powers, but without any particular sanction attached. In the year 1903, a conference took place between the Emperor-King of Austro-Hungary and the Emperor of Russia, and in consequence of that conference more drastic proposals were brought forward, including the introduction of a mixed gendarmerie The greater part of the official publications of last year was concerned with the manner in which attempts were made to carry that recommendation into force, and it was remarkable how at every stage the proposals put forward by the Powers were baulked and blocked by the diplomacy of the Porte and by the action of the Sultan. One of the first and most important steps was the appointment of the officers who were to constitute the gendarmerie. The Porte refused to allow more than twenty-five foreign officers in all to serve, and imposed restrictions regarding their work which practically confined it to the reorganisation of that body, and made a very considerable difference in the way in which the duties of the gendarmerie were to be carried out. It was obvious that their presence in the country without power could be of little service, and various diplomatic representations were consequently made in the course of the year for the purpose of securing that the number of foreign officers should be increased, and their powers augmented. It was very difficult to ascertain what the result had been. They were told at a period subsequent to the publication of the last White-book that an increase had been permitted by the Turkish Government in the number of foreign officers from twenty-five to forty-eight. But then that increase was accompanied by a condition that the officers should merely be employed for the purpose of reorganisation, and should not have the power of commanding. What, he repeated, could be the value of their presence under such circumstances? He had a question to put to the Under-Secretary. In the Austro-Hungarian Memorandum of August it was mentioned that thirty-eight foreign officers were to command at that time, whereas in other despatches twenty-five was the number given. At that time only five British officers were employed in a particular district, and the proportion of British officers was not what it ought to have been. He would be glad to know whether any increase had been made in the number since, and also whether the negotiations which had taken place gave any reasonable hope that the powers of the foreign officers would be augmented simultaneously with the increase in their number. They found that the officers met at Salonika and decided to apportion the district among themselves. The British officers, apparently at the request of the other Powers, were selected for the district of Drama, which was the quietest of all and where their presence was least needed. It was absolutely incomprehensible why these arrangements were made, and it appeared to him it was a question of putting round men into square holes. Could the Under-Secretary explain the reason for this apportionment?

Again, they found that on March 19th, the Powers made a distinct complaint that General de Giorgis and the officers connected with him had inadequate powers, but the Porte insisted on all effective command being retained in Turkish hands, and the negotiations culminated in nothing except a small increase in the number of officers. Matters were no doubt facilitated, for in the month of April an arrangement was arrived at between Turkey and Bulgaria—without the knowledge of the Powers, though they were advised of it immediately afterwards—which had a reassuring and quieting effect. But, again, they came across the same monotonous record of outrage and misgovernment, the same monotonous record of complaint by one nationality against another. The scheme was one under which protection was to be given against the raids of the Albanians. What, however, was the exact scope of that arrangement? Again, in Turkey Paper No. 1, 1904, page 11, it was explained that it was the intention of the Powers to apply these reforms not only to three particular vilayets comprised in Macedonia, but also to others. He could, however, not trace the exact authority for that statement. But undoubtedly complaints had come that very important districts in the Monastir territory by Thessaly had been left out of the gendarmerie arrangement. It was further complained that the vilayet of Adrianople also had received no benefit from it whatever. It would be remembered that at the close of last session Lord Lansdowne mentioned that vilayet as one to which the reforms should apply, and they had other authorities in support of it, notably that of the Grand Vizier. In point of principle no objection was made to the application of the scheme of reform to the vilayet of Adrianople, and surely there could be no objection to the establishment of the reorganised gendarmerie there, for it would undoubtedly have the effect of securing greater quietness and peace. The greater part of the official publications were filled with unfortunate records of murderous outrages committed by one portion of the population against another. It was not necessary for him to go into them in detail. It was sufficient to say that they pointed to the incapacity and ineptitude of the Turkish Government to deal with the condition of affairs, and they showed that Hilmi Pasha, the Turkish Inspector-General, appeared to be trying to take advantage of the unfortunate differences prevailing among the Christian populations in order to make a settlement more difficult. He should think that in no part of the world, probably, were there such great differences of opinion between the various nationalities as in Macedonia. In one part the Greek element preponderated and in another the Bulgarian element, while the central part was the meeting and fighting ground of all the nationalities. Those described as Turks in Macedonia were not Ottoman Turks, but were of Greek or Albanian origin. They had proof that the Bulgarians themselves had been subjected at the hands of Turkish officials and of Turkish troops—sometimes Regular and sometimes Irregular—to most severe sufferings, and further south the Greeks who constituted the professional and trading classes had suffered from both the Turkish and the Bulgarian side. It was not always correct to attribute to the Bulgarians the sufferings undergone by the Greeks, for in some cases Turks had gone about disguised as Bulgarian revolutionists.

Great Britain was bound by certain bonds of obligation to the people there, whatever their nationality or creed, and it was not for us to abandon that right, which was conferred by treaty, nor to abdicate it in favour of two only out of the six signatory Powers. What was desired was that there should be a restoration of peace and security in that country, that lives and property should be safe, whether from the Turks or other people, and it was their duty to take a more resolute attitude in order to bring about a better condition of affairs. Lord Lansdowne had from the first refused to commit himself absolutely to the scheme. He only accepted it conditionally, for if they turned to Turkey No. 2, 1903, page 1, they found that he made use of the following words—

> "His Majesty's Government desire in particular to have it understood that their provisional acceptance of the scheme will not, in the event of its disappointing the expectations of its framers and proving inadequate as a remedy, be regarded by His Majesty's Government as precluding them from putting forward or supporting, either during the tenure of office of the Inspector-General or at any future time, alternative proposals with the same object."

At a later stage, on September 29th, Lord Lansdowne wrote in the following terms to Sir F. Plunkett, our Ambassador—

> "In our view no scheme is likely to produce satisfactory results which depends for its execution upon a Mussulman Governor entirely subservient to the Turkish Government and completely independent of foreign control. We suggest for consideration two alternatives: (a) Appointment of a Christian Governor unconnected with the Balkan Peninsula or with the Powers signatory of the Treaty of Berlin, or (b) Retention of a Mussulman Governor assisted by European Assessors."

It might be said that the second clause was the one in force. But the scheme had to be judged by its results, and any impartial person was compelled to come to the conclusion that the present scheme had proved abortive, and that resort should be had to the alternative suggested by Lord Lansdowne. The great difficulty was that although an official not directly responsible to the Sultan might be appointed, and although the Grand Vizier at the Porte might give assurances to the European Powers that such and such a mode of administration should be carried out, there might come from the Palace secret injunctions setting aside the orders from the Porte, with the result that the governor would in reality be amenable to all those Palace influences which had worked so much harm in the past. It was therefore essential that the governor should not be an Ottoman subject, and that he should be responsible to the Powers themselves, although there would be no objection to the nominal sovereignty of the Sultan being recognised, provided such recognition did not enable the Sultan to interfere with the effective administration of the law. The British Government ought to take the initiative in bringing Lord Lansdowne's alternative again before the Powers. It was not known whether a proposal had been actually made, but Lord Lansdowne had hinted in another place that the British Government were prepared with an alternative proposal. Soon afterwards it was stated that Austria-Hungary and Russia had a proposal of their own to make, which from the short summaries in the Press appeared to deal merely with the question of finance. The matter was now further complicated by the fact that the Turkish Government had put forward a proposal also dealing with finance. In these circumstances he desired to ask whether the proposal of the Turkish Government was identical with that of Austria-Hungary and Russia, and whether the latter was an alternative to the proposal of the British Government. If the British Government were not making any proposal of their own, it was surely time they did so. Finance was doubtless a very important element, but, after all, it was one that had to be thought of after the establishment of effective and definite European control. The first essentials were to secure adequate control over the gendarmerie, adequate powers to the gendarmerie, and adequate judicial control. He hoped the Under-Secretary of State would be able to indicate the nature of the proposal, if any, now being made by the British Government.

It was not desirable on either public or moral grounds that the settlement of this question should be left exclusively to the two Eastern Empires. While recognising the fitness of Austria-Hungary owing to her experience in Bosnia and Herzegovina, people interested in Macedonia would be more reassured if they knew that Austria-Hungary had not merely the passive, but the active co-operation of the Western Powers. They desired to see Great Britain, Italy, and France, taking a more active part in the pacification of Macedonia, both because of their interest in the question and for the sake of the suffering and persecuted population. Lord Lansdowne's alternative proposal commended itself not merely as a corollary, but as a necessary preliminary to any effective introduction of European supervision. On this point there was little difference of opinion in principle among either the Powers or the population chiefly affected. The Greek Government had stated that they had no objection to the appointment of several governors, chosen according to the nationalities in the various districts. There was no important difference in principle between the appointment of one governor and the appointment of several governors; in fact, with several governors there would be greater power of supervision in the localities to which they were appointed. Various precedents —Samos, Crete, Thessaly, and others— might be invoked in favor of such a course. There were districts bordering on Greece and Bulgaria which also required attention, and especially the vilayet of Adrianople, in regard to which there should be no difficulty in introducing further schemes of gendarmerie, seeing that the Sultan and Grand Vizier had pronounced themselves in favour of such scheme.

The knowledge of the House concerning Asiatic Turkey had been brought down to the middle of August last. In the early part of 1904 there had arisen in some of the highland districts of Armenia a very unfortunate condition of affairs, all the more ominous because in the same locality as the disturbances of 1894. The series of massacres extending over 1894–5–6 originated on a comparatively small scale in Sassun, and there was a serious apprehension lest the disturbances there last year should spread to other districts. Fortunately, matters were now somewhat quieter, but the misgovernment and oppression were continuing, and unless they were removed would afford an excuse for further disorders, and then, the fanaticism of the Turks being once aroused, there would be no limit to the ensuing cruelties. He earnestly hoped that the Foreign Office would keep a watchful eye on that part of Armenia, and, not resting content with the reports they received, valuable though they were, would make every possible effort to introduce the system of mixed gendarmerie, which had been introduced in embryo in Macedonia. It might be said that the disturbances originated in the action of certain revolutionists. No doubt revolutionists were at work, but their number was very small and their action insignificant in comparison with the unrest induced by the actual condition of affairs in the districts. Captain Tyrrel had written that the root of the evil was the misgovernment, and Sir Nicholas O'Conor, in an interview with the Vizier, expressed the view that there would be no great improvement in the condition of affairs as long as the present radical vice of gross misgovernment continued to render the life of every Armenian unendurable. Not only did Sir Nicholas O'Conor use those words, but he also approached the Sultan himself, and this was greatly to the credit of our Ambassador. On June 25th, 1904, Sir Nicholas O'Conor said that the Sultan had given the most positive orders to prevent outrages and massacres. But this would be useless unless it was followed up by endeavouring to enforce some scheme of reforms, and securing the application of those reforms by means of some authority which was able to carry them into effect. The introduction of the mixed gendarmerie had not had the effect which was anticipated, but that was no reason why something of a similar character should not be attempted in Armenia, where the problem was simpler, and where there was not such a divergence of race and creed as in Macedonia. It was difficult to see why something effective could not be done to introduce a more peaceful state of things in that part of the Turkish Empire. He hoped the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs would give them some assurance that effective steps were being initiated by this country with a view to the introduction of practical reforms in Macedonia under the guidance of some governor or governors independent of the Sultan and responsible to the Powers. He trusted that a watchful eye would be kept on Armenian occurrences, and an early opportunity be taken of endeavouring to improve the existing state of things by introducing the mixed gendarmerie under some officer directly responsible to the Powers.

SIR JOHN KENNAWAY (Devonshire, Honiton) said that after the exhaustive explanation given by his hon. friend opposite, who had made this subject so peculiarly his own, he did not feel that it would be necessary for him to go into the details of the negotiations and proposals which had been going on in reference to Macedonia. He wished, however, to claim on behalf of hon. Members on the Ministerial side an equal interest with hon. Members opposite to secure reforms; and an equal determination to see that our statesmen recognised the great obligations of England and the other Powers in this matter, and the strong sense of the international danger that was caused by these disturbances. They were not there, however, to censure the Government, but to support and encourage them in the course they had adopted. He gave full credit for the desire which was expressed by his noble friend last year that the Government were anxious to obtain a real and permanent amelioration of the European provinces of Turkey, and that it would be their constant endeavour to bring about this state of things. No doubt his noble friend at that time thought this object would be best attained by placing these reforms in the hands of Austria and Russia, as they were what were called the interested Powers. But how were they interested? Simply in keeping things as they were, and taking care that their own special material interests were preserved and not endangered. But could they say that those two countries were really interested in the welfare of those populations which they were discussing? They were told in the King's Speech that there had been some amelioration of the disturbed districts, but he noticed in The Times of February 11th an article in which the reform scheme was described as a dead letter, and pointing out the danger of an uprising before long unless some further steps were taken. He was glad that up to the present that apprehension had not proved to be well founded, but how long the danger would be averted under the present state of things he did not know. From the reports which had recently been published it would appear that life and property were less secure in those provinces than they were before the troubles of 1900. If those reports were true, it was clear that the time had come to carry out what Lord Lansdowne had declared to be necessary, namely, to secure the application of reforms of a more thorough-going character than any which had hitherto been attempted.

It had been said that the British Government had pressed for a reform which would have the desired effect, namely, the appointment of a Governor responsible to the Powers, but they had not yet received any official corroboration of the statement. Then there was the Austro-Russian scheme, which was largely of a financial character, but which had not been approved generally by the Powers. Then there was the proposal of the Porte in regard to the Customs duty, and perhaps that was the most hopeful sign of the times. If the Porte was really anxious in this direction, it would be more ready to listen to the demand of the Powers to obtain that security. It was encouraging to hear from the Secretary for Foreign Affairs that there was practically unanimity amongst the Powers as to the necessity of adopting thorough-going reforms. From what they had heard up to the present this did not appear to amount to much more than a pious opinion which, when translated into practice, was found to be impossible. The Powers had their own interests to promote, and, much as they desired these reforms to be brought about, unless they took advantage of the present opportunity they would find the task very difficult. They were satisfied that Lord Lansdowne had this matter most thoroughly at heart, and they were very thankful for what he had done in regard to foreign affairs generally. He thought the interests of this country were quite safe in his hands, and they wished to assure him that he would have from the people of England hearty appreciation and support in going forward with his policy. He earnestly hoped that they might look forward to satisfactory changes in that region.

Amendment proposed—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'but humbly represent to Your Majesty that, in view of the prevalent insecurity of life and property in many provinces of the Ottoman Empire, the inadequacy of the measures hitherto adopted, and the incontrovertible obligations incurred by this country and the other signatories of the Treaty of Berlin, the time has arrived when further steps should be taken for the purpose of placing the execution of reforms in those provinces in the hands of a governor or governors, or other officers, responsible to the Powers.' "—(Mr. Stevenson.)

Question proposed, "That those words be there added."

LORD EDMUND FITZMAURICE (Wiltshire, Cricklade) said he desired to cordially re-echo the statement of the previous speaker that they were not there that afternoon to find fault with or to criticise the Government so much as to encourage them to go on in the course which, on the whole, the Papers presented to the House last year and more recently, pointed to, namely, that so far as the action of the Powers of Europe made it possible, they were desirous of advancing in the direction of bringing pressure to bear on the Government of the Sultan to introduce better administration throughout his dominions, but more particularly in those provinces to which his hon. friend the Member for Eye had alluded in his able and interesting speech. Undoubtedly it did not require to be a member of His Majesty's Government to realise in their fullest extent the extreme difficulties of this question. Those who now sat on the Opposition side of the House had in former years to deal with it. They had been told quite truly that they had tried their hand at it, and the fact that after an interval of twenty-five years they were again discussing much the same facts and adducing much the same evidence was in itself a proof that they were not successful in carrying out a remedy. Just as hon. Members on the Opposition side were anxious to concede that they recognised the difficulties of His Majesty's Government, so he felt equally convinced that the members of the Government would feel that it was not owing to any laches on the part of those who had to deal with the question twenty-five years ago that the position with regard to this question was still unsatisfactory. At the same time those who under all circumstances had adhered to the good cause which was taken up a great number of years ago could not help occasionally feeling some disappointment.

How had that feeling arisen? In the first place they must acknowledge that the skill and perseverance of the Turkish Government in resisting every project of reform had most undoubtedly filled even some of those who had been most prominent in former days with a certain feeling of disappointment, at times amounting almost to despair. In addition to that there was another, and he was inclined to think less justifiable, reason for the want of public interest in this question now as compared with what it was twenty-five years ago, just before the Turkish War. A most unfortunate and, he thought, a most unjustifiable feeling occasionally made itself felt, even in the public Press, that after all there was not much choice in these regions between the Turkish and the Christian populations. It was asked by those who fully admitted the bad administration of the Turkish Government whether, after all, the Christians would do any better. ["Hear, hear!"] He heard a "Hear, hear" from an hon. Member on the other side of the House. There was a very simple answer to that question. He was convinced that nobody who knew what the regions which were now independent States in the Balkan Peninsula were when they were under the direct government of the Porte could possibly hesitate for a moment to say that the improvement in those countries was not only remarkable but phenomenal. He asked any hon. Member who thought that the Government was throwing away, as it were, diplomatic powder and shot in attempting to reform Macedonia, to read what a distinguished French traveller who had recently been travelling in those regions had published in an article recently. He had given a picture of the country as it was when under the direct government of the Porte fifty years ago and as it was now. That article gave the very strongest and most convincing evidence that the first step to secure good government in those regions was to diminish the power of the Porte to interfere in the direct administration. He had himself at an interval of about ten years visited Bulgaria. He saw it in 1871 when, before the last war, it was under the direct government of the Porte. It had been under the administration for several years of Midhat Pasha, who undoubtedly suffered for his virtues, because there was not the smallest doubt that he was foully done to death in a dungeon in Asia as a punishment for the independent line he had taken. He revisited the country in 1880, from which time they might date the practical independence of Bulgaria. The country, from having been a quasi-Oriental country, had become a rising and flourishing little State. It had done that in the face of intrigues and opposition such as might have broken the heart of any European statesman, and might have been enough to have made those men—who were called without previous experience, many of them from being village schoolmasters and the holders of such humble posts to be administrators of the country—throw up the sponge. That had not been so at all, and the country, directly it was saved from the incubus of Turkish government, had taken its place in the ranks of practically independent European nations. Those who sneered at the idea of our Government exerting itself to secure reforms in Macedonia were not able to substantiate the justice of their position because the facts were against them. There was no reason whatever to suppose that in the vilayets enumerated by his hon. friend, which for want of a better name he called Macedonia, there were men less able, less patriotic, and less competent than those who had come forward and taken their places in the administration which was introduced in Eastern Roumania after the war.

As to the atrocities, he thought the speech of the noble Lord a year ago dwelt rather too much on the horrors that were going on in Macedonia. He said with perfect truth that these atrocities, which they all agreed were terrible, were carried on by all parties, and that they to a certain extent put the advocates of reform out of Court. Did not the occurrence of the atrocities indicate that there was a subtle cause behind them? Were they to suppose that the atrocities caused bad government? Was it not far more reasonable to say that bad government caused the atrocities? The fact that the Government of the Sultan, even acting with a high hand, was unable to put down the atrocities was in itself an argument which put the Sultan out of Court. A country might either be governed by representative institutions, which implied trust in the people, or by a strong despotism which put down disorder no matter by whom committed. The Sultan did not give representative institutions, nor did he put down disorder with a strong hand. Therefore, we were in a state of things where it might fairly be said that the only limitation to the rights of His Majesty's Government to proceed against the Sultan as being a defaulter in the matter of good government was the condition of Europe. And here, at once, he wished to say, what he was sure everyone on both sides of the House recognised, that however bad the government of the Sultan, it was no use for His Majesty's Government to plunge headlong into action—to attempt to act alone unless they were perfectly sure that they were acting as the mandatories of the Powers of Europe. There was one occasion in 1881 when the Government of the time decided to take exceedingly strong action against the Porte. That was at the time when the question of the Montenegrin and Greek frontiers and those questions of reform in Macedonia had all come to a head. His Majesty's Government decided, under certain circumstances, to send a British Fleet to a Turkish port and take possession of the port and the Customs. As soon as the Porte heard of this intended pressure the Sultan climbed down. That was why the Macedonian and Greek frontiers were settled without a breach of the peace. Thus, although His Majesty's Government were prepared to act alone, they were in a position to send a British Fleet to Smyrna because they had the support of the European Concert. He was not for one moment suggesting that the Government ought to take any strong steps at all unless they were sure that those steps would be taken as the mandatories of Europe. Whether that could be, depended upon facts which they, on that side of the House, could not know, and on which they therefore could not express an opinion. Whether the Government could secure in any strong step the support, goodwill, and consent of such Powers as France, Italy, Germany, Austria, and Russia, which latter were at present in the background, depended upon what could only be known within the Foreign Office, and as to which he was not pressing his noble friend to make any premature statement to the House. But whenever that moment came—and come sooner or later it would—there was at least this consolation, that whenever strong action had been taken in the past the result had been good, and where failure had followed it had invariably been where the greatest anxiety had been shown to spare the feelings of the Sultan.

Reforms in European Turkey, or attempted reforms, fell into two classes—first, those which Europe had at different times imposed on the Sultan; and second, those which they had accompanied by some declaration like that in the famous Treaty of Paris which ended the Crimean War, that although those reforms were imposed upon the Sultan by United Europe they had no intention of interfering with the sovereign rights of the Sultan over the inhabitants of his own dominions. The invariable result of such declarations had been to reduce to an absolute nullity the execution of the reforms which the Sultan had accepted. There was the famous Article in the Treaty of Berlin under which a European Commission was to assemble. He had the honour to be the English member of that Commission, and he wrote from Vienna a despatch to Lord Granville, more or less as a protection to himself and his colleagues, in which he showed that the essentially weak point in the Commission was that under Article 23 of the Treaty of Berlin the Commission was only called in to advise. It had no power to order or dictate, much less to enforce. They were also, by the terms of the 23rd Article of the Treaty of Berlin, especially when read with the history of the whole of that Treaty, debarred from even proposing the one thing which they were all agreed was the thing most worth proposing, viz., that there should be in the appointment of the Governor of these provinces not only that element of permanence of tenure, without which these appointments would be absolutely at the mercy of the Palace clique, but that there should be some element of supervision by the Powers of Europe, either through the Ambassadors or by some special means of control, in order to carry out the reforms which the Sultan had promised to make. Therefore, all the Commission were able to do was to draw up a scheme, which he was glad to think, though for the time it proved abortive, remained to this day, a scheme which was accepted by the people of those regions, and remained their title deed to the right which they ought to possess to better government, to reforms, and to good administration. Article 23 might have slumbered and slept, but he would remind the House that it existed, and that until it was superseded by some better and stronger provision—and he was the first to wish that that might be so—it should be taken for all that it was worth. He thought that no one of them ought to let that Article go or to underrate the importance of its provisions, still more when he urged that supervision by the Powers was of the very essence of the matter. He was glad to be able to feel that he had behind him the weight of the greatest authority who ever spoke to an English audience or to European diplomacy—he meant the late Lord Stratford de Redcliffe. There was a delusion which he was glad to have the opportunity, in justice to the memory of that illustrious man, to be able to strike a blow at. It had become apparently an idea that Lord Stratford de Redcliffe was a thick-and-thin defender of the Turkish Empire and of the abuses which exist there. Nothing could be more unjust to the memory of Lord Stratford de Redcliffe. Living, as that nobleman did for the greater part of his career, in the early part of last century in Constantinople, he believed—and why not?—that it was possible to reform the Turkish Empire. Lord Stratford de Redcliffe was judging from the facts as known to him and according to the lights of that time. But although Lord Stratford de Redcliffe did all he could to save the Turkish Empire from ruin, he never ceased to urge on Lord Clarendon, Lord Palmerston, and Lord Russell, and on the Goverments of Europe, to whom he spoke with such authority—the necessity for those ordinary reforms in the Turkish Empire which he was ceaselessly advocating. But he urged that it would be useless to promulgate all these reforms and embody them in the most elaborate provisions in the organic statutes of the Turkish realm unless the Powers undertook to set up some supervisory authority in order to see that the Sultan carried out the reforms. In Dean Stanley's Life of Lord Stratford de Redcliffe it was stated that when Lord Stratford de Redcliffe was leaving Constantinople, under great discouragement, he embodied in a letter to Lord Clarendon a protest against the Treaty of 1856 for not having provided, as he wanted it to do, an adequate means of forcing the Sultan to carry out the reform of European Turkey which he had undertaken to do. This was what Lord Stratford de Redcliffe said in that letter of March 19th, 1856—and it was as true to-day as when he wrote it; indeed, it was truer—

> "It is believed that the Porte will never of its own accord carry the provisions of the firman seriously into effect. Might not this hazard be avoided by a separate agreement among the Christian parties to the negotiation, regulating the work and occasions of interference, so that any such eventual act on their part should be concerted previously in common, and strictly limited to the necessities of the case."

He believed it had been largely owing to the lack of European pressure and to a change in the policy of the French Emperor, who wanted an early termination of the Crimean War, that that great idea of Lord Stratford de Redcliffe was not carried into effect. Well, they had seen his prophecy fulfilled, and the practical failure of Article 23 of the Treaty of Berlin. On the other hand, they had seen that in those provinces which had been entirely taken away from Turkey, or left only under the nominal suzerainty of the Sultan, exactly the opposite—prosperity, tranquility, progress, and reform. Then they had seen Crete emerging from confusion, and although still under the nominal suzerainty of the Sultan, gradually improving. Eastern Roumelia was also rapidly arriving at a considerable pitch of prosperity. Why, therefore, should there be any doubt that if these same principles were applied to Macedonia tranquility would be restored also in that country, and law and order maintained. Then, in time, a Constitution would come and popular principles could be embodied in it.

He admitted that the difficulties in Macedonia, to which his hon. friend alluded, were very great. He himself had to face those difficulties in 1880. They had not grown less since. His hon. friend the Member for Exeter rendered him most valuable assistance at the time he was in office. One of the difficulties was the position of Salonika. It was necessarily the centre and capital of the country. Around it there was a large population of that peculiar class of Turk which originally migrated into Europe. He believed they were the first Turks who invaded Europe. But more remote from the town was the great mass of the Macedonian population, and among them the most terrible jealousies existed. That pointed to the necessity of a governor with a strong hand, and with an adequate force which should be able to prevent those people from cutting one another's throats. The efforts of Europe were being thwarted as regarded every scheme of reform or improvement. The Sultan would consent to any number of proposed Constitutions. He would accept any scheme, and propose to carry it out next day; but the position would remain exactly where it was before. At present they were told that the Sultan was willing to agree to gendarmerie and financial control. He rather trembled the other day when he read some of the statements about financial control; because he was afraid that the Sultan might borrow a trick from debates in that House and propose co-ordination. Then they would be told that this policy would be pursued in the neighbouring countries. That would be a very characteristic scheme on the part of the Sultan. The sort of man required to keep this class of people in order was a strong administrator—Sir Antony MacDonnell, for instance, of whom they had recently heard so much. If Sir Antony MacDonnell were sent to Macedonia, the Irish and the Macedonian questions would be settled at one stroke. An agreement had been arrived at in October of the year before last, but it was only at the end of May that a general of gendarmerie arrived at Salonika; and he was immediately met with all the trouble, difficulty, and delay that the Sultan could invent. He was not inclined to think that the general had said the last word on the government of Macedonia. Macedonia would have to be detached from the practical government of Constantinople; and eventually would probably be united to some of the other neighbouring States, or become a small principality of its own. He could assure his noble friend that he quite realised the difficulty of the position of the Government. The very fact that at this moment Russia was passing through a great crisis, and that Austro-Hungary was passing through a greater constitutional crisis than usual, were not reasons which facilitated the position of the Government, as it might appear almost an unfriendly act that at such a moment British diplomacy should appear to desire to take advantage of the difficulties of those countries. On the other hand, the weakness of some of those Powers imposed greater responsibility on the British Government than otherwise would be the case. He could assure the Government that there was no desire on that side to minimise the difficulties under which they suffered. The Motion, if adopted, would not cause the resignation of the Government; and he only desired to show that they were all united in endeavouring to force good government, administration, and reform on the Sultan of Turkey.

MR. BOND (Nottingham, E.) said he would ask the House to bear with him while he recounted some of the reasons which produced in Macedonia that inflammable condition at present existing. The reasons were not far to seek. It was a deplorable fact that Macedonia was under the sway of the Turk, and that her population was mixed—the majority being Christian. When those two circumstances came together the Christians invariably found themselves degraded, humiliated, overtaxed, and oppressed. There were besides that, unhappy animosities, racial and religious, which found expression between the different constituent elements of Macedonia, and there were also the ambitions of Macedonia's neighbours with regard to the part they were to play in the consummation, which must sooner or later be arrived at, when Macedonia would either become an independent State or be absorbed by one, or parcelled out among several, of the States by which she was surrounded. Under these conditions one did not wonder that the State of Macedonia was so unhappy. Where was redress to be looked for? The Greeks on one side, the Bulgarians on the other, the Servians, and the Roumanians were all pushing their claims of aggrandisement in the different districts of Macedonia. Of the great Powers, two at least might be counted absolutely disinterested—ourselves and France. Italy was also a disinterested Power, though she might have some aspirations towards Albania. Albania was, however, out of the question at present, because she was not affected by the consideration before the House. There remained two Powers directly interested—Austria and Russia. Austria was interested because the house of her next-door neighbour was on fire, and Russia was interested as the patron of greater Bulgaria. That country had never ceased to secure advantages and push them in the region where a large body of the people belonged to the Greek Church. It would be thought that Germany had no distinct interest in the settlement of the question, but there were not wanting those who suggested that among the dreams of the German Chancellory was one that the port of Salonika might some day become of considerable use to Germany and her ambitions in the East. The only Powers claiming to be absolutely disinterested were England, France, and Italy, and he could not help thinking there might be a disposition on the part of these Powers to co-operate closely for the purpose of producing a better state of things than now prevailed. They all recognised that Lord Lansdowne was bound to walk warily in this maze of conflict, this medley of conflicting ambitions, interests, and jealousies between races, religious sects, and nationalities. He did not complain if the wheels of his Lordship's chariot moved slowly. He wanted to assure Lord Lansdowne that among those who took an interest in this matter there was great sympathy with the efforts that were being made, and that he might rely upon it that in the course he was taking he had the encouragement which came from knowledge. He only rose for the purpose of stating that from the Government side of the House a real interest was taken in the question, and that they were disposed to lend all the aid they could to the projects and plans of the Government.

*MR. HUGH LAW (Donegal, W.) said that the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs stated in the House of Lords that he deplored as much as Lord Spencer the condition of things that prevailed in many parts of Macedonia, and that he was as deeply convinced as Lord Spencer could be that the condition of things would not be improved unless they could secure the application of reforms of a much more thorough-going character than any which had yet been attempted. Therefore, the condition of affairs in Macedonia was not satisfactory to Lord Lansdowne. He would not ask the House to follow him into the details of the whittling away of the Mürzsteg scheme. It was stated in the Russian Note of August 3rd that thirty-eight officers were travelling through the country, watching events with expert eyes and exercising influence and control. But the rest of the Blue-book gave the lie direct to that statement, because in all the reports from Consuls and from visitors to the country facts were recorded which were in absolute contradiction to the roseate picture which was painted of life in Macedonia under the Austro-Russian régime. He was also informed that even the Turkish beys in the country districts, who had no means of making their views heard officially, would welcome with open arms any real European control, because they were weary of the long continued uncertainty and unrest and because they believed that that control could only be just and effective if it were disinterested. Unfortunately a new factor had been introduced during the last few weeks, as the Porte had once again commenced quartering small bodies of troops in the villages of Macedonia. The Turkish Government could not be blamed for taking whatever military steps seemed necessary against external invasion or internal revolt, but one could not help asking what had always been the result of such quartering of troops. It was not contended that the Turks were irredeemable scoundrels, they were doubtless very much like everybody else, but the history of other countries showed that small bodies of troops could not be quartered in villages, among a subject population for whom they were taught to feel supreme contempt, without many untoward events. The same kind of thing in Ireland a hundred years ago produced the same kind of outrages as were now occurring in Macedonia. No Englishmen would now wish to justify the methods of dragooning practised in Wexford in 1798, but by their inaction they were making themselves responsible for their recurrence in Macedonia to-day, where, according to The Times correspondent, the same old troubles were again cropping up. The telegrams in The Times revealed a condition of affairs which reflected small credit upon the dealings of the great Powers with Macedonia. Nobody dreamt of denying the difficulties of the problem, but it was the province of statesmen to deal with difficult and complicated questions. If, as there was reason to fear, there was much inflammable material in Macedonia which at any moment might be set in a blaze, the conflagration would not be put out by sermons on the duty of Christian charity, and the wickedness of different sects in carrying on internecine war.

With regard to the Austro-Russian scheme, would the noble Lord say whether the vilayet of Adrianople was included, whether any provision was made for the appointment of European judicial inspectors as recommended by Colonel Fairholme, and whether the scheme was identical with, or went beyond, the proposals of a financial character connected with the Ottoman Bank, which had not so far been very favourably received. A long continuance of tranquility could not be counted on in these countries; at any moment an accident might precipitate troubles during which the application of any real reform would be impossible. It was becoming fashionable to sneer at the idea that Great Britain had any real responsibility for the administration of the dominions of the Porte, but he submitted that every village burnt in the troubles of 1903 would have been saved had the Treaty of San Stefano remained in force. The ruined hearths and charred roof-trees in Macedonia, the hundreds of homeless wanderers, the women who had been driven mad by their treatment at the hands of Turkish soldiers — all these miseries lay at the door of Great Britain. It was utterly impossible to shake off the responsibility for what had happened; the only course consonant with the national honour was to face that responsibility and frankly discharge it.

*Mr. MOON (St. Pancras, N.), after deprecating the introduction of any Party element into the debate, said he desired to refer to the insecurity of life and property which normally existed under the Turkish system of government and was aggravated in consequence of the internecine strifes of Christians. He would support his contention by one or two references to the Blue-book. In June, in the French section, there was an attack made by a Bulgarian band who horribly mutilated an Orthodox Notable and burned his house in which his children and wife were sleeping. This was confirmed by Colonel Verand, head of the French gendarmerie. After quoting instances of other atrocities the hon. Member said that in pamphlets circulated probably to other hon. Members as well as to himself it was shown that between 1897 and February, 1903, the outrages committed by Bulgarian bands on Greeks in Macedonia numbered 202 murders and twenty-seven attempted murders. The crimes against Macedonian Greeks instigated by the Bulgarian Committees from February, 1903, to November, 1904, showed that no fewer than 290 outrages, resulting in 259 deaths, had occurred in that brief period. He wished to mention that the documents from which he quoted these figures were anonymous, but he thought it was just as well to bring them before the House so that hon. Members might have a chance of denying them. The pamphlet went on to state that—

> "The particulars in each case have been verified, and no outrage is included which has not been directly and unquestionably traced to Bulgarian insurrectionists."

That was the state of affairs showing how a new form of insecurity of life and property was added to that already due to the oppression of the Turks. He wished to cite the authority of the able and impartial correspondent of The Times at Sofia, who said in a telegram dated January 6th—

> "It is true that in the Austrian section Albanian ferocity shows no diminution, and assassination is rife, while Servian and Bulgarian bands pursue their internecine warfare unconscious of the amenities exchanged between King Peter and Prince Ferdinand. But the state of the affairs in the Uskub section finds a parallel throughout all Macedonia, except in the Drama district, where different conditions prevail."

Whether this state of things was due to a misconstruction of the Mürzsteg programme it was impossible to decide, but he might cite "Odysseus" for the view that the inhabitants of that part of Europe had been constantly engaged in internecine contests and murders of every kind. Clause 3 of that programme contained the following provision—

> "As soon as some pacification of the country is seen to have been effected, to demand of the Ottoman Government a modification of the territorial boundaries of the administrative units, with a view to a more regular grouping of the different nationalities."

There was some ground for believing that these rival sects were seeking to establish themselves over as wide an area as possible with a view to future eventualities.

And now as to the inadequacy of the reforms alleged in the Amendment. They had indeed such crumbs of comfort as were mentioned by the Secretary of State in his speech in another place on the occasion of the opening of Parliament. Further, when he was in Macedonia in the autumn it appeared to him that the experiment which had been introduced into some thirty villages of permitting them to collect their own tithe was one which promised exceedingly well. He wished to take this opportunity of asking the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs if he could throw any light upon this point. No mention was made of it in the Speech from the Throne, and therefore he felt a little apprehensive as to the final success of the experiment. As to the gendarmerie the satisfactory working of that system was clearly shown in the last Blue-book by Colonel Fairholme, who stated that there was no doubt that the presence of British officers had produced good results. There had been many complaints of delay in the practical application of this useful system in other "secteurs" of Macedonia, though there had been nothing but praise in regard to the conduct of Colonel Fairholme and the other British officers in the Drama sphere. The careful consideration which General de Giorgis was devoting to the question of the gendarmerie would be acknowledged by those who had seen the statement dated May 11th, which was printed in the last Blue-book. They would recognise his admirable idea in getting rid in the gendarmerie of men of worthless character and physique, and putting in their place men who were better qualified for the service. It was his aim also to get rid of illiterate officers, of whom there were a great number. Two schools had been established—one for officers, and one for the gendarmerie. He (the hon. Member) had visited the school for the privates, and he was able to state that those in attendance had made wonderful progress, not only in book learning so that they could make reports to their superior officers but in smartness of appearances. He thought the true view with regard to the gendarmerie, however successful it might be, was indicated in the speech of Lord Lansdowne in another place on the opening day of the session. The noble Lord said—

> "But, after all, the reorganisation of the gendarmerie is a measure which is ancillary to other reforms rather than itself a reform of an administrative character."

Many of the reforms might be very good in themselves, but unless there was a strong Executive at their back satisfactory results could not be expected. That was why he thought the position conferred on Hilmi Pasha was almost impossible for a Turkish subject satisfactorily to occupy. No one would quarrel with the powers conferred on him during the period of his office, but what was to happen to a man like Hilmi Pasha, however able and conscientious, at the close of his term of office. He was a Turkish official who wanted to continue his career after the expiration of his term, and if he took a line which tended to put his fellow-religionists in an inferior position and which prevented the Christians from ruining each other by internecine quarrels, could he be sure that his action would commend itself to the Sultan? The alternative suggested by Lord Lansdowne that a Turkish official should be appointed Inspector-General with two European Assessors was a priori unlikely to succeed, and had in fact broken down. The Turkish system had really never produced a satisfactory governing class. He would quote in favour of his contention what was said by the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs in February last year—

> "It has always been the opinion of the Government that what is required in the Turkish provinces is not political change so much as thorough administrative re-organisation. Turkey does not possess the class of men who have the requisite expert knowledge and experience to carry out such a task as that, and for her to come to Europe for trained assistance involves no more derogation of her sovereign rights than is already involved in the admission of European management in the case of the Ottoman Bank and the control of the Ottoman Debt, or in the re-organisation by Europeans of the Turkish Army."

In supporting the Amendment in so far as it asked for a European governor not responsible to the Porte, he did not think they should be taking a step which would necessarily and immediately be prejudicial to the Sultan. That governor should not be a member of one of the Balkan States, nor should he be a member of one of the great Powers. No doubt the Turks themselves felt the unsatisfactory conditions under which they lived. English travellers in Turkey constantly heard how desirous many of them were to have an English protectorate. He agreed with the noble Lord the Member for the Cricklade Division of Wiltshire that one of the great Indian officials would be an ideal governor for that part of the world, but he would be content to place the work in the hands of men from the smaller European States like Switzerland, Holland and Belgium, which, he thought, might produce a sufficient number of men able, not only to keep the Turks from oppressing the Christians, but the Christians from mutilating and killing each other in the way they had been doing.

*THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Earl PERCY, Kensington, S.) said the debate had been interesting by reason of the very intimate acquaintance many of the speakers had with the problems and actual conditions of the country under discussion. Technically speaking, they were discussing a vote of censure on the Government, but he had not caught any note of censure or even of criticism. Most of the speeches seemed rather a judicious mixture of congratulation and condolence. Apart from that technical aspect of the matter, and the somewhat ambiguous wording, particularly of the last paragraph of the Amendment, he had no desire to take exception to its general character. The hon. Member for the Eye Division of Suffolk expressed a legitimate curiosity as to any recent developments in the Near East. A Blue-book was published last autumn which brought up the narrative of events to a very recent period, and he did not think it was possible for him to add very much to the information therein contained. There were two respects only in which things might be said to have moved. One was in regard to the repatriation of the refugees. As early as last November, the great majority of the refugees, 20,000 out of 25,000, had been already repatriated, and as this country had no Consul in the Adrianople vilayet our Military Attaché at Constantinople was deputed to go to the frontier and watch the proceedings. Those who had studied the report of the Consul would admit that the local officials were animated by good intentions, and that the Turkish Government had spent a certain amount of money in the rebuilding of houses. There did not seem to have been any general occupation, in their absence, of the villages and homes of the refugees by the Mohammedan population. The Turkish Government objected to the repatriation of the full number of refugees, he understood, mainly on the ground that no lists had been furnished to them with the names of the applicants, and they had reason to believe that some of them were not concerned in the recent disturbances and did not, therefore, come within the category of the persons who were intended to profit by the amnesty, but emigrated from Macedonia at least five years ago. His Majesty's Government supported the representations made by the Bulgarian Government, although, of course, they expressed their recognition of the right of the Turkish Government to take all reasonable precautions for the good behaviour of those who might be repatriated. He was glad to say that the objections of the Turkish Government had now been withdrawn in consequence of the Bulgarian Government having furnished the lists for which they asked. The Government had decided that the time had come for re-establishing the Consulate at Adrianople, which was temporarily closed by Lord Rosebery at the time when the Consulate at Konia was first established.

The only other new fact he need refer to was that the Turkish Government had at last consented to the increase in the number of European gendarmerie officers asked for by the Powers. The Turkish Government objected to it in the first instance partly on the ground that they did not think any increase in the number of European officers in the country was at that moment necessary, and partly because of the additional cost it would entail on the Turkish Exchequer. Neither of these pleas could be entertained by the Powers. They understood that the £250,000 which had been allotted to the expenses of the organisation of the gendarmerie by the Turkish Government last year were intended, and were in fact amply sufficient, to cover all the expenses incidental to the organisation of the force. As to the question of necessity: the Powers could not admit the competence of anyone to judge whether the number of officers was adequate or not except General Georgis and the Adjoints who acted under him. The consent of the Turkish Government to the addition of twenty-three officers brought up the total number of officers to forty-eight, or within twelve of the figure originally contemplated by the framers of the Mürzsteg programme.

He came to the Amendment itself. He conceived that it was an invitation to the Government to say whether they were satisfied with the progress which had already been made, or whether, on the contrary, they were prepared to condemn the scheme as a failure, and put forward propositions of their own. Well, the Government were not prepared to take either of these two courses. The Government were certainly not satisfied with the progress hitherto made. It had neither been so rapid nor so far-reaching as they had hoped. The only substantial progress hitherto made had been in connection with the gendarmerie scheme. The larger problems of administrative, judicial, and financial reform had as yet hardly been touched. It was true that a beginning had been made with the reformed system of collecting the tithes, which did away with one of the gravest abuses of the old system under which tithes were farmed out to the highest bidder. The Government believed that, on the whole, the experiment, which had been tried in a few villages, had been a complete success, and its further extension had been, he thought, only impeded by the technical difficulty that many of the tithes of the vilayet were already mortgaged to the Council of the Ottoman Debt, and any change in the system of collection might interfere with the value of the security. The more important question of financial administration, the control of the annual budgets, the supervision of expenditure, and the insistence on the payment of regular salaries to officials and troops had for the present remained practically in abeyance. But he did not think that it was fair to say that they had been overlooked. They had, on the contrary, formed the subject of careful and minute investigation by the Civil Agents, and the Austrian and Russian Governments had already drawn up and submitted to the Porte a scheme of financial reform about which it would be premature for him to express an opinion now, because that scheme still awaited examination by the Powers, and the advice and criticism of His Majesty's Government had been welcomed by the two Governments which put the scheme forward. He thought that it would be evident to anyone acquainted with the internal condition of Turkey that no scheme would be satisfactory which aimed merely at re-organising the existing financial administration, and did not take into account the heavy burden of military expenditure which now depleted the resources otherwise available for administrative reform. On the other hand, it was equally obvious that the present internal condition of Macedonia, and the considerable military preparations made by the neighbouring Powers would not render the task of persuading the Turkish Government that the army now maintained in Macedonia was excessive, an easy one. The Government were not satisfied with the progress which had been made, but that was a very different thing from saying that the scheme was a failure, and separating ourselves from the other Powers in their attempt to put it into complete execution. The Mürzsteg scheme of reforms had been only one year in operation. It took at least three years to reorganise the gendarmerie in Crete, and hon. Members opposite, who were so fond of describing Turkish administration as an Augean stable of corruption, should be the last persons to complain if the process of cleansing was not completed in a single day.

He also wished to enter a caveat against the idea that the Mürzsteg scheme should be considered a failure because it did not do something which it was not intended to do. Some hon. Members thought that no improvement was possible unless the provinces were severed from Turkish rule. That was not the view of the authors of the Mürzsteg programme. The object of the Mürzsteg programme was to maintain the status quo and to give the Turkish Administration that amount of European assistance and control necessary if the reforms promised by the Sultan beforehand were to be of any real and permanent value. It was true that the Turkish Government had not welcomed the assistance and advice of the European Powers. He did not know that any one ever expected that they would. The task of changing long-established and familiar traditions was never an easy one, even with Western nations. It was certainly no easier in the case of Oriental nations when the change was pressed upon them by foreign advice or dictation; and, little as he desired to excuse the attitude of the Turkish Government, he thought that people in this country sometimes ascribed to sheer malevolence on the part of an Oriental Government what was due, in fact, to an obstinate and no doubt very irritating conservatism. Although the Turks had, undoubtedly, obstructed the progress of the reform scheme, that obstruction must be admitted to have been mainly passive in its character. In spite of the grave depletion of the revenue, they had spent a considerable amount of money in rebuilding the houses in the destitute villages. They had brought back 25,000 men who had been in active revolt against their Government in a province not so far removed from the capital itself. They had accepted the whole machinery and personnel in connection with the civil administration and gendarmerie which was pressed upon them as necessary by the European Powers; and since they had accepted these officers it could not be said that they had actively interfered with the performance of their duties. He did not admit that the reform scheme was a failure; and he observed that the mover of the Amendment had not brought forward any argument to show that it was a failure except the strange argument that the Armenians were eager to obtain the benefits of that scheme for themselves. There was a tendency to ascribe the responsibility for the tardy execution of the reform scheme not merely to the Turks themselves, but to the two Powers, Austria and Russia, who had accepted the chief responsibility for carrying out this programme, and the Civil Agents of those Powers had been selected as the special objects of animadversion. He did not think it was fair, having pledged ourselves to support the work which Austria and Russia had taken in hand—the two Powers who were themselves bearing the burden and heat of the day—to criticise the work of their agents without taking into consideration the difficulties which they had had to encounter and the character of their mandate. What, after all, was the definition of their duties laid down in the Mürzsteg programme? They were to bring any case of outrage to the notice of Hilmi Pasha and to communicate to him the recommendations of the Ambassadors. Nobody would say they had not fulfilled that part of their task at any rate. What was the report of our Consul on the subject?

> "The programme set before themselves by the Civil Agents on their arrival at Monastir, was firstly to ascertain the material needs of the population with a view to the repatriation of the refugees and reconstruction of the villages destroyed in last year's events; secondly, to effect an improvement in the method of collecting the tithes; and thirdly, and most important of all, to reorganise the financial system as an indispensable preliminary to reform in any other direction. The execution of the first part of the above programme has entailed upon the Civil Agents the necessity of visiting and personally inspecting some fifty ruined villages, in districts lying as far apart as Malissia in the vicinity of Dibra to the north and Castoria to the south of the vilayet; and as many of these journeys, owing to the impossibility of the roads, presented more than ordinary difficulty, it can hardly be laid to the charge of the former that this part of their task was carried out in a perfunctory manner. Moreover, the direct nature of the contract entered into with the population by the Civil Agents is further shown by the fact that no less than 1,000 petitions were received by the latter from the villagers, all of which met with due attention, while 500 were given practical effect to. Most of the disputes between the peasants and the beys were satisfactorily arranged by the Civil Agents, with the aid of Hilmi Pashi, without the necessity of recourse to the tribunals, and this, I may remark, was regarded as a particularly encouraging symptom for the future pacification of the country."

It could not be said that they had placed too narrow an interpretation on the responsibilities which were assigned to them under the Mürzsteg programme, seeing that they had interpreted those responsibilities as justifying them in drawing up a scheme for the financial reorganisation of their districts. Hon. Members seemed to be surprised because the Civil Agents had not thrown on the table a cut-and-dried scheme of reform long ago. He thought that in the history both of the Balkan Peninsula and of Armenia there had been too much of paper reform schemes. They knew exactly what they led to, and he was not inclined to blame the Civil Agents because they had thought it desirable first of all to try and acquaint themselves by personal travel and investigation with the circumstances of the country and the needs of the people, and had left the framing of academic solutions to armchair politicians at home.

In the case of the gendarmerie he thought, at all events, they might claim that they had obtained a very conspicuous measure of success. In reply to the question of the hon. Member for the Eye Division we had appointed another officer to the Drama district, but as regards the latitude of the powers which belonged to the officers there had been no change, nor did he think that any was required. Colonel Fairholme reported long ago that he had not had any complaint to make of obstruction on the part of the Turkish authorities in his district, nor did he complain in any way of the powers conceded to him by the Turkish Government. On the contrary, he said that his authority was as great as if he had been in actual command, and that in point of fact his utility was greater, because his attention was not necessarily monopolised with small and trifling details. He had also since reported that the local authorities had offered no objection to British officers attending trials or carrying out a periodical inspection of the local prisons. Coming to the training of the gendarmerie in the reorganisation schools at Salonika and elsewhere, everybody was agreed in praising the appearance and discipline of the recruits recently turned out; and if he was told that the results of the reorganisation, though satisfactory in the British sphere, had been far less so in the areas assigned to the other Powers, he would ask the House to remember certain facts which supplied at all events a partial explanation. Apart from the lack of funds, which of course affected equally all the provinces of Macedonia, the area assigned to Great Britain was far smaller than those assigned to the other Powers, and, therefore, naturally the means at our disposal were more commensurate with the work we had to do. The only remedy for this was an increase of officers, and he ought to mention that in addition to the officers representing the Powers there were a certain number of other European officers, Belgians, Norwegians, and Swedes, who had been employed by the Turkish Government in various parts of the country, which were not included in the purview of the Mürzsteg scheme. There was another reason which explained the want of success in the other spheres, and that was that those spheres contained what the British sphere did not, a very large element of the disaffected Bulgarian population. He did not think it possible for anybody who approached this question with an impartial mind to come to any other conclusion than that the main responsibility for the slow progress of the reform scheme had been, and was at this moment, the action of the revolutionary committees. It was they who necessitated the upkeep of this vast army in Macedonia, which was draining away funds which they should like to see applied to administrative reforms, and it was they also who were delaying the pacification of the country, which the Mürzsteg scheme declared to be the necessary preliminary to the introduction of administrative and judicial reform. The noble Lord had charged him with having said that because the Christian peoples committed atrocities, that absolved the Turkish Government from the charge of maladministration.

Lord EDMUND FITZMAURICE said he did not put it quite so strongly as that. He thought the noble Lord had dwelt with undue emphasis on the fact that there were faults on both sides, and that there was more to be said in favour of the Turkish Government than was admitted.

*EARL PERCY did not really think the question of atrocities committed by the Christian population had anything to do with the responsibility of the Turkish Government. The Turkish Government, of course, was responsible for the government of their country, and so long as there was not good government so long was the Turkish Government to blame. But he did not think that it was true to say that the atrocities committed by the Christian population were caused by the misgovernment of the Turks. It was a remarkable fact that while there were a great number of Christian races in Turkey, both European and Asiatic, the number of disaffected Christian races was comparatively small. He denied the right of the revolutionary committees to be regarded in this country as the representatives and advocates of the Christian population in Turkey. What was the state of affairs in Armenia? Stories were told last year of atrocities committed by the Kurds, and the usual charges were made, without the slightest investigation, against the Turkish Government. Two of our Consuls were instructed to enquire into the truth of these charges. They reported that there was a definite policy on the part of the revolutionary committees to provoke massacres by the Turks in order to arouse the attention of Europe, and that with regard to the villages which had been burned there was good reason to believe that they had been burned by the villagers themselves. They said that the charge of massacre could not be substantiated, that there was no evidence of participation by the Kurds, and that the orders of the authorities were undoubtedly against it. One of the Consuls, Captain Tyrrell, made a personal investigation on the spot. His Majesty's Government had been pressing the Turkish Government to afford relief in money to the distressed villages.

"There is no doubt," said Captain Tyrrell, "that the villagers were told by the revolutionary committees in the summer to accept nothing from the Turkish Government, and not to admit that anything had been done for them, to deceive the Consuls, and, in short, to make the worst of everything."

The result was that one village refused the money. In another village the villagers complained to him that they could not eat the wheat which had been given to them; that they did not think wheat was fit for human sustenance, and they wanted millet. Then when he suggested to the Turkish authorities that millet should be given to them, as it was cheaper than wheat, the people made a great outcry and demanded wheat. In another of these villages the people begged Captain Tyrrell to give them money instead of grain or any other form of relief, as they could buy food from the neighbouring Kurdish villages much cheaper. Finally, Captain Tyrrell reported that he found among the people a tendency to regard it as a duty on the part of foreign Governments to provide for them. The same state of things existed in Macedonia, where there had been a succession of sickening outrages perpetrated by the bands, not on the Turks only, but on one another and on the population which refused to join the agitation. And these were the people who were referred to in speeches on the platforms of this country as deserving creatures, whose faults were the result of Turkish rule and whose only aspiration was to be relieved from Turkish misgovernment and corruption. Ever since the European Powers had taken the reform scheme in hand the Christians had been occupied in cutting each other's throats, and their one idea seemed to be to prove to Europe that however much they disliked the Turks they disliked each other infinitely more. There was no Christian race in Macedonia who, if they were offered relief from Turkish government in exchange for that, say, of Austria or Russia, would not reject the proposal with scorn. He did not adduce these facts in order to absolve the Turkish Government from their responsibility. Undoubtedly a great responsibility rested upon the Government of Turkey for the condition of their country. But he did say that it was not fair to the Turkish Government to ascribe the conduct of those quarrelling Christian races within their territory to their misgovernment.

It was necessary for the House to realise what was the aim of these revolutionary committees. The great bulk of the Christian people of Turkey did not sympathise with those whose object was to force the unhappy peasants into insurrection in the belief that Europe might be relied upon to come to their assistance. The only way to defeat this policy of the revolutionary committees was to show quite clearly that we did not intend to have our hands forced by such measures; that the Powers were determined to continue to act in concert, and to carry out the scheme of reform to which they had pledged themselves in their own time and in their own way. But it was difficult to convey that impression so long as speeches were made in this country—the only speeches quoted in the journals of the Near East—which denounced the reform scheme from its inception as a sham, which made groundless insinuations of jealousies between the Powers, and put forward proposals, such as that for a Christian governor, which, good or bad, were not at the moment within the bounds of practical politics.

Hon. Members opposite were entitled to hold that the proper solution of the Macedonian question was to be found in the appointment of a Christian governor. But he doubted whether it would be very easy to find a gentleman unconnected with the Balkan States willing to undertake the government of these quarrelling races, or to persuade Sir Antony MacDonnell to accept the position, as had been suggested by the noble Lord the Member for the Cricklade Division. But, even if the appointment of a Christian governor were practicable, that solution had never been adopted in any case remotely analogous to that of Macedonia without necessitating beforehand military occupation by a European Power. In any case no one was entitled to say that the appointment of a Christian governor was the ideal solution, or the only solution in the minds of His Majesty's Government. They had never said anything of the kind. What His Majesty's Government had done, before the Mürzsteg scheme was proposed, was to point out that it was idle to insist on the mere acceptance of paper reforms without providing some machinery of control, and Lord Lansdowne suggested it might be found in the appointment either of a Christian governor or of agents of the two mandatory Powers. It was the second alternative that had been accepted by Austria and Russia; but His Majesty's Government had never expressed a preference for one solution more than the other.

In conclusion, he would only add that whatever our views might be as to what was the proper remedy to be applied to Turkish misgovernment, it was most important that we should concentrate our efforts on remedies that were practicable. This was not a Party question. But what would happen if speakers in this country—whether inside or outside the House—were to give the impression to the people out there that if there were an insurrection to-morrow, supposing another Party to be in power, they would be prepared to give their countenance and support to the movement? Either they would have to embark this country on a crusade in which she had no interest of her own to serve, or else they would have to leave to their fate people whom, by their speeches, they had encouraged to desperate courses. It was for that reason that he thought it vital that we should disillusionise the leaders of the revolutionary movement abroad of the idea that any Government in this country, no matter from what side it was drawn, would lend them any encouragement or support if they precipitated matters and deliberately and intentionally made impossible the execution of the reform scheme which the European Powers had undertaken to carry out. At all events, as far as His Majesty's Government was concerned, he did not think it could be too clearly understood that we had never pledged ourselves to embark on an isolated policy in a matter in which this country had no primary interest—and surely we had enough on our hands already—and a matter, moreover, in which we acknowledged no special responsibility. ["Oh!"] That we had responsibilities and obligations with regard to the government of the peoples of the Balkan States we did not deny; but they were obligations and responsibilities incurred by all the signatories of the Treaty of Berlin, they did not devolve upon us any more urgently than on any of the other signatories, they were obligations to collective and not to isolated action, and anybody who pressed us to take isolated action appealed to us, not on the grounds of that treaty, but on something else. What was the something else? It might be said that it was on the ground of simple humanity. He did not know, if considerations of humanity stood alone, that there was any particular reason why we should interfere with the internal government of Turkey in Europe any more than in that of Persia, Afghanistan, or any other of the Governments of the East, whose integrity or independence we had thought it right to assert and maintain because it suited the interest of this country to do so, and because we believed it conduced to the maintenance of the peace of the world. We did not accept any special responsibility apart from the other Powers, in this matter; and, although we were willing and anxious to do all that we could in the way of giving our consistent support to the efforts of Austria and Russia, Powers which in virtue of their proximity, racial connection, and knowledge of the circumstances, were better fitted to advise on details of administration there than we were, and although we were ready to suggest amendments and improvements in their scheme of reforms where we thought it was capable of amendment or improvement, we were certainly not willing to insist on an ideal policy, which we had no means of pressing to a successful conclusion, and which might involve us in liabilities the extent and magnitude of which we could not foresee.

MR. BRYCE (Aberdeen, S.) expressed his regret at the tone of the speech of the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, which, he said, surprised him the more when he contrasted it with the entirely different tone in which these questions were discussed in another place by the noble Lord's official superior. From the very beginning of this melancholy question, both in his speeches in the Upper House and in his despatches, Lord Lansdowne had expressed a cordial and hearty sympathy with the sufferings of the Christian population, severely censured the conduct of the Turkish Government, and stated his earnest desire that the whole power and influence of this country should be exerted in the endeavour to bring the Turkish Government to a sense of its duty, to spur the other Powers into doing their duty, and to secure a better condition of affairs for these unhappy people. There had been nothing of that kind in the speech just delivered. He had never listened to the noble Lord with more disappointment, and he could not understand how, with the knowledge he possessed, both from his official position, and from the journeys he had made in many provinces of Turkey, the noble Lord could use the language he had just used about the Turkish Government.

EARL PERCY said he was not aware that he had used a single word in extenuation of the Turkish Government.

MR. BRYCE said he would endeavour to explain the impression the speech had made upon him. The noble Lord began by stating some facts which they were very glad to hear. The first was that an improvement had been effected in the vilayet of Adrianople by repatriation. The noble Lord's account did not tally with the accounts he had received, according to which not one half of the people had been repatriated, but possibly the noble Lord was more correctly informed. He had also stated that he was not satisfied with the progress of the Mürzsteg programme. As far as he (the speaker) could gather, the progress of the Mürzsteg programme had been little or nothing; the powers were not sufficient to enable much to be done. The noble Lord also said he was not entirely satisfied with the gendarmerie, though he endeavoured to give certain explanations, and seemed disposed to say that the condition of things was better in consequence of the gendarmerie. But what he (the speaker) had heard, was that the condition of things was not better. The test of the success of the scheme was to be found in the condition of the country. Was the country any quieter? Were life and property any safer? Were the raids made by the different populations one upon another repressed by the Turkish Government? Was there any prospect of content? Was there reason to believe that the revolutionary party were expecting something better? Were they hoping with some confidence for an improvement in the condition of affairs? The noble Lord had not ventured to suggest that any one of these things had happened; in fact, he could not deny that all those questions must be answered in the negative. The noble Lord would not deny that all the schools were closed, that the churches were practically closed, that the Turkish soldiery were quartered upon the people, that they were eating up everything the people possessed, and that the people were flying to the mountains because they might as well live there as endeavour to inhabit the ruined villages. The noble Lord did not deny that that was so.

EARL PERCY: I did not deny it, because I have not the facts before me. But I have no reason to think it is true.

MR. BRYCE said it had been stated by previous speakers in the debate, but the noble Lord did not say anything to show that the condition of things was better than hon. Members had made it out to be. The reason the revolutionary bands continued was that they had no ground to expect that things were going to be any better. He would not venture to say when the new outbreak would come; it might be in the spring, or in the autumn, or a year hence; but every impartial account received from Macedonia indicated that the revolutionary movement was stayed only by want of money. As soon as they got more money and more rifles, and as soon as the Bulgarian Government was supposed to be more ready for the action it was believed it contemplated, a renewal of the rising and of all the terrors which existed in that country a few years ago might be looked for.

AN HON. MEMBER asked whence the revolutionary bands were getting their money.

MR. BRYCE said he did not know, but he believed they were getting it very slowly, and that was the reason they were not rising. The noble Lord also stated that the Mürzsteg programme ought not to be blamed, because it was never intended to effect a complete reform.

EARL PERCY: No, I did not.

MR. BRYCE said the words of the noble Lord were that it was intended to protract the status quo. But the status quo was the very thing of which complaint was made, for what did the status quo mean? The noble Lord said that the Turks did not welcome these reforms. Conservatism might be good or bad, and the noble Lord might think they were showing an obstinate conservatism in their adherence to certain fiscal principles, but the value of conservatism depended upon what they were going to conserve. Conservatism of the Turk took the form of brigandage, extortion and massacre, and this was why they believed there would be no permanent improvement while they tried those petty or insignificant remedies of putting in a Civil Agent here and gendarmerie there without any real authority to deal with the evils existing. These gendarmerie were merely confined to drilling and instructing recruits. They had no power to arrest a single criminal or to receive complaints or organise expeditions to seize bands of brigands.

EARL PERCY: They may receive petitions relating to gendarmerie.

MR. BRYCE: But they do not take any action upon petitions relating to breaches of the law and violence of justice.

EARL PERCY: Yes, relating to gendarmerie.

MR. BRYCE: But what use is it to have gendarmerie officers if they are not able to redress the very grievances which drive people to insurrection.

EARL PERCY: We have received no complaints as to the limitation of the powers of any gendarmerie.

MR. BRYCE said he was told that the gendarmerie officers had no power to receive petitions with regard to the grievances from which the people were suffering; and he believed there was foundation for that statement. Proceeding, the hon. Member declared that it was perfectly clear that the British area of gendarmerie was a small and quiet area, where there was no considerable difficulty. He asked why this was so, whether it was not possible for the British officers to do more useful work, suggesting that, if there was to be an increase, officers might be sent to the vilayet of Adrianople, where they would have ample scope for endeavouring to restore order and secure proper administration. The noble Lord dwelt very much upon the outrages perpetrated by the Christians. That was no doubt a lamentable fact, but he did not mention that the Turks took no steps to stop it. They had allowed raids of Bulgarians upon Greeks and Greeks upon Bulgarians, and had actually fomented and encouraged these attacks of two Christian races upon one another, because they acted upon the maxim, "Divide your enemy."

The noble Lord referred to Armenia. He (Mr. Bryce) did not deny that disturbances there had resulted from the action of revolutionary bands and that the action was taken in the hope of drawing the attention of European Powers, but he was not aware that anyone in England had ever given the slightest encouragement to the revolutionists. He, personally, had never lost an opportunity of pointing out that they were committing a great offence and doing themselves a bad service, bringing nothing but suffering and misery to their people. But these revolutionary movements sprang from the intolerable sufferings these people had to endure. Challenged by the noble Lord, the hon. Member said he did venture to say that the case of Armenia was worse, because there they had been baulked of certain reforms promised by the Treaty of Berlin. An Article in the Treaty held out the hope of reform and gave reason to believe that the Powers would secure some improvement. It was because of that that they thought the revolutionary movement would have the effect of attracting the attention of the Powers, and it was for that reason that they had embarked upon this movement. The noble Lord had cast some scorn on the idea of appointing a European governor. He spoke as if it was an impossible suggestion. He was surprised that the noble Lord should hold the language he did with reference to the appointment of a European Governor, because it was a proposal which emanated from his own chief, the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. It was not the passing idea of some whimsical humanitarian or crank on either side of the House. It was the suggestion of Lord Lansdowne, and made because he knew that no other solution would be sufficient. It was clear to any one who read Lord Lansdowne's despatch of September 29th, 1903, that the Secretary of State's preference was for the scheme of a European Governor. He confessed he wished that Lord Lansdowne had confined himself to that scheme; but the Secretary of State could never have contemplated that his other alternative would have been so much weakened and whittled away as it was by the Mürzsteg programme, which had turned out to be entirely ineffective, because it had given very little power to the Assessors, and very little power to the gendarmerie. The noble Lord had asked whether they were in favour of the gendarmerie system being applied to Armenia. He himself would rather have it applied to Armenia than nothing. Hon. Members on the other side of the House were not in favour of it. [AN HON. MEMBER: Yes, certainly.] He understood that the noble Lord had poured some little contempt on the proposal that the gendarmerie scheme should be applied to Armenia. If it was impossible, as he presumed it was from the language of the noble Lord and from the language held by His Majesty's Government, to have a European Governor for the Armenian provinces because Russia would not help them, then a gendarmerie, even with limited powers, would be better than nothing. He had always pleaded for more Consuls. Let them have some people inside Armenia who could see what was going on and who could do something, however little it might be, to remove the evils the people were suffering from.

He confessed he left this subject that day with a great sense of disappointment and regret. They were always ready to allow for a certain amount of official optimism, and, of course, they did not expect the noble Lord to indulge in such strong condemnation of the Turkish Government as private Members did. But he would ask any one in that House whether the Turkish Government, when they read the speech of the noble Lord, would not see in it a palliation of their sins, would not find in it an encouragement for their obstinacy, and would not recongnise a very marked difference between the language which he had held and the language of menace which they were accustomed to hear from the Secretary of State? He deeply regretted that the noble Lord should go so far to nullify the effect of Lord Lansdowne's despatches as he did in the language which he held in that House. They were quite aware of the great political difficulties with which the question was surrounded. They had never pressed the Government for any positive declaration of the course they would take in eventualities which were not yet disclosed. They had pressed them not to allow what appeared to be the almost exclusive action of Russia and Austria, because they considered that England, France, and Italy were no less entitled to deal with this matter. They regretted that the two Powers which had shown so little earnestness and zeal in the matter should have been allowed to have it practically at their own disposal. But they knew how many difficulties there were and how easy it was to make a mistake it was hard to retrieve. They knew that the difficulties we now suffered from were the results of the fatal mistake which Britain made at the time of the Crimean War, and repeated, with less excuse, when she substituted the Treaty of Berlin for the Treaty of San Stefano. They did not agree that there was no special responsibility on the British Government. They thought there was a very heavy responsibility upon those who put back Macedonia under the dominion of the Turks; and they earnestly hoped that, in spite of what the noble Lord had said, the sentiments which Lord Lansdowne had repeatedly declared would continue to animate him, that he would endeavour to carry at any rate the other two great Western Powers who were perfectly disinterested along with him in representing to all the Powers the necessity for far more vigorous and strenuous action than any yet taken, that he would not acquiesce in the Mürzsteg programme, that he would see that the question was urgent and that the delay of a few months might mean a recrudescence of massacre in these provinces, and that he would do all he possibly could to exert all the influence this country was entitled to exert in order to secure that there should be some settlement of these provinces not dependent on the good will of the Sultan, but under the control of European Powers.

THE PRIME MINISTER AND FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): I have listened very carefully to the speech of the right hon. Gentleman, who has criticised my noble friend, and criticised him very unjustly, as I think; but I am at a loss even now to discover in what substantial and important respect the policy which the right hon. Gentleman advocates differs from the policy which His Majesty's Government are pursuing. The right hon. Gentleman thinks many mistakes have been made in the past. He thinks that the Crimean War was a mistake, and he thinks that the Treaty of Berlin was a mistake.

MR. BRYCE: I did not say it was a mistake. I said it was a mistake to put Macedonia back under the rule of the Turks.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I gathered from the right hon. Gentleman's brief historical survey that he appeared to think that the proper reforming authority in the Balkan Peninsula was the Russian Empire. I cannot agree with that proposition. I have always dissented from it, and I dissent from it now,

MR. BRYCE: I never made it.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I am quite unable to agree with the right hon. Gentleman's view of the action of the British Government of the time of the Crimean War, and of the action of the Conservative Government in 1878. Then I ask myself, What is it that the right hon. Gentleman desires the Government to do which they are not doing?

MR. BRYCE: I am not complaining of Lord Lansdowne. Nobody has complained of Lord Lansdowne. I said I hoped Lord Lansdowne would persevere in the policy he has frequently outlined, and that the more energy is desirable because the circumstances have become intolerable.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I admit I got up under a misapprehension. I understood that the right hon. Gentleman was supporting an Amendment directed against the policy of His Majesty's Government; but I find he is ardently supporting His Majesty's Government. Therefore I presume that the right hon. Gentleman agrees wholly with the policy of Lord Lansdowne.

MR. BRYCE: I did not say I agreed wholly with it. The right hon. Gentleman has not heard the whole of this debate, and does not understand that the debate has not been directed at all against Lord Lansdowne's policy. We do not agree with it on all points, but we think on the whole it is a policy which we can heartily support.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: I am glad of that. The right hon. Gentleman simply has a quarrel with my noble friend near me, who, he thinks, does not represent Lord Lansdowne. He is quite mistaken in that particular. My noble friend never for one instant suggested that the policy of a Christian governor in Macedonia would be a bad policy. On the contrary, he considers that it would be a very excellent policy. What he did suggest was that it was a policy very difficult to carry out. Anybody who knows anything of the question, and especially the right hon. Gentleman, who has made a continuous and ardent study of it, knows that the difficulties of carrying out the reforms you would like to carry out are enormous. They are enormous for three separate reasons. There is first the difficulty of dealing with the Turks, with their well-known unwillingness to do what I think it is their plain duty and manifest advantage to do. Then there is the difficulty of dealing with the Christian populations, who, even before the Turks came to Europe at all, back to the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries were torn by mutual divisions, stained by mutual crimes, and whose division was responsible for the Turk ever being in Europe at all, and has been responsible for his staying ever since. The third difficulty, I will not say is greater, but it is almost as great. It is the difficulty of working through so cumbrous a machine as the European Concert. Nobody doubts that the European Concert is a cumbrous machine, that it is excessively difficult to get the Great Powers to work earnestly and harmoniously for any common end, and that when some of them have divergent interests, or conceive that they have divergent interests, the task becomes almost impossible. Are we, then, to sever ourselves from the European Concert? Are we, because we think a particular reform might be better, that if we were left to ourselves we might devise some scheme more appropriate to the situation and more thoroughgoing—are we, therefore, to separate ourselves from the European Concert? Is that what any responsible statesman on either side of the House or on that side of the House would suggest? I am sure my right hon. friend would not suggest it. He may criticise the imperfections of the machinery of the European Concert as if we were responsible for it; but when directly questioned I am confident that he, like every other rational man, would admit that, cumbrous as it is, unsatisfactory as are its results, slow as is its working, everything would be worse, the results would be poorer, incomparable misfortunes might overwhelm the Eastern world, and might involve even the Western Powers, supposing we were to separate ourselves from the European Concert and take separate action in these provinces. Is it conceivable that against the will of Russia, and against the will of Austria, when the other Powers at the best are luke warm, we could either morally or materially carry on any great scheme of reform? The thing is not possible as far as I am concerned—I would never consent to such action on the part of this country. I heard a laugh when my noble friend said we had sufficient responsibilities on our shoulders without taking that new responsibility. It is no laughing matter. The burdens which this country has already to bear are sufficiently great; and this Government, at all events, is not going to add to them by an insane policy of philanthropic adventure in the Near East. And I venture to say their successors, when they come nearer the fence and contemplate the perils that lie on the other side of it, will swerve aside with a greater rapidity than perhaps at this moment they are aware of. Therefore let it not go forth to any part of the world that, because we think that in certain particulars the schemes of the Powers are imperfect, we are going to separate ourselves from them and advance our own scheme by the strength of our own right hand. That would be no service to the Christian populations; it would be the greatest disservice we could do to the cause of European peace and all that is bound up with the cause of European peace. Therefore I venture to think that speeches like that which the right hon. Gentleman has delivered, though they be, as I have just learned, in the interests of the Government, if they raise any hopes in any part of the world that a change of Administration would produce a change of policy in relation to these unfortunate populations—speeches like that, though not intended to be mischievous, will be mischievous indeed. I do not think I need pursue that theme. The particular ground and policy on which we base our action are not shaken, and cannot be shaken, by any mere detailed accounts of the harrowing horrors which undoubtedly take place both in Eastern Europe and in Armenia; you cannot base a policy upon considerations like these taken alone. If your policy is to endure, and if it is to be fruitful of good, you must consider not merely what it is you would desire to do, but what means you have of doing it, and how those means can be adjusted to the desired end. The right hon. Gentleman tried in vain to make the House believe there is any difference of opinion between my noble friend on this bench and my noble friend the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. They have dealt with the same subject in the same spirit and in the same manner, and they have recommended an identical policy. That policy is so solidly based on ascertained facts that no Party mutations in this country will directly change the course that we have determined to pursue.

Question put, and negatived.

Main Question again proposed.

*MR. KEARLEY (Devonport) said it was now practically three years since the Government had committed this country to the Sugar Convention, and sufficient time had elapsed to enable the House to appreciate the advantages or otherwise arising from the step the Government then took. In the Amendment he had placed upon the Paper he had expressed in no uncertain terms the evil consequences that had arisen from the agreement to which His Majesty's Government had been accessory. In putting their case before the House three years ago the Government had said they were not actuated in taking this step by cosmopolitan benevolence, but by their concern for British interests and the national welfare generally; that if British interests were not involved they would not have lifted a hand to assist continental sugar-growing and bounty-giving countries in relieving themselves from a burden which they had already found intolerable. The Government declared too, that in fact the abolition of bounties would be such a notable advance in the direction of free trade that British trade would benefit through channels the course of which it was not possible to trace out exactly beforehand. The House heard once more of the hard case of the British refiners and the West Indian planters and it was said that only through the abolition of the bounties could those industries survive. It was, perhaps, a little unfortunate for the Government that Messrs. Tate about this time turned their business into a limited company, and issued a prospectus in which they boasted of an unbroken record of increasing prosperity for forty-five years during which they "had competed successfully with both British and Foreign sugar, notwithstanding the advantage possessed by the latter in the bounties given," a statement luminously illustrated by the fact that in that year, when sugar fell lower than ever before—in 1891, supposed to be a deadly year for sugar refiners—they realised a handsome profit of £200,000. There was some inconsistency in the declaration made by the Government of having British interests at heart, because in the same breath they declared that even if the interests of the consumers and users of sugar suffered, they would still be justified in continuing to work for the object they had in view, but that their fears were groundless; that in the long run neither the sugar consumers or other sugar interests would suffer by abolition, but that they would be protected from the danger of a still greater rise in prices which was likely to fall upon them if the abolition of the sugar bounties did not take place.

The Government had said the abolition of the bounties would bring to an end all violent fluctuations; that the violent fluctuations in the previous twenty years were quite unnatural; that they had been caused by the bounties, which encouraged over-production, and that unless bounties were abolished sugar would be much higher in the future. With the bounties gone everything was to fall into a well-ordered groove, sugar-making and selling were to become humdrum vocations, that to the cost price of production, which the Government knew all about and had worked out with nice precision, was to be added a mere working profit, and that that was to constitute the normal and natural price of sugar in the future. The House was assured that in the next ten years the average price of sugar would not exceed 10s. a cwt., and the probability was that it would be considerably less. That was the case of the Government. In contrast to that the Opposition contended that, however great the evil of bounties might be, especially to those countries which gave them, we ought to consider the question in its entirety as to how it affected British interests, that we objected to the smaller interests of special industries being promoted at the expense of the whole community. It was urged that if the Government pursued this policy the consumers would have to submit to a tax of some millions sterling a year in order to put money into the pockets of the West Indian planters and a few sugar refiners in the United Kingdom. That to deliberately raise the price of a commodity in order to benefit a particular interest was rank protection. We also said that the Convention would destroy the independence of our commerce, which up to that point had enjoyed open ports, unrestricted markets, and the privileges of buying in the cheapest and selling in the dearest—and that in joining this Convention we should not only be injuring our commerce but should be handing over the control and direction of a great trade to a foreign syndicate in which our voice would only count as one to ten. That had been one of the most serious developments of this Convention. Every step the Convention had taken had been in the direction of shutting out sugar from all parts of the world from this country, and it was becoming abundantly clear that the object of the Convention was to make sugar at home dearer, and that was the object of the Government also, so as to benefit that select coterie of planters and refiners who had manipulated in their own interests the successful agitation.

In addition to making sugar dearer to the consumer, the Convention had brought about a great advance in the price of a raw material, and strangely enough, whilst doing all this injury to the sugar-using industries and consumers at home, it had actually relieved the foreigners and given them cheap sugar. Whereas the Continental consumer had had the price of his sugar reduced by 50 per cent., we, in this country, had had the price of ours increased by 100 per cent. Finally, the Opposition said that this was at best but a bad transaction; that it taxed us to the extent of some millions in order to give relief to the West Indies, especially as there was evidence to shew that cane sugar could be grown at £6 a ton and sold at a profit at very little over that price. Those were the two sides of the argument put forward at the time this Convention was under discussion, and every argument of the Opposition had come true. Hon. and right hon. Gentlemen opposite now contended that the rise in the price of sugar had been brought about by the drought which had occurred on the Continent this last year. That argument had been used by every hon. and right hon. Gentleman opposite, and with the exception of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade very little, if any, attempt had been made to prove it. That hon. Gentleman made a speech to his constituents in Glasgow, argued his case very fairly and made several good points which it was only fair should be answered if it were possible to answer them. The first point the hon. Gentleman made was, if the Convention was responsible for the rise in the price of sugar, the rise would naturally take place the moment it became certain that the Convention would come into operation, and then by a series of carefully manipulated figures dealing with the average price of sugar three years before and after the Convention, he demonstrated to his own satisfaction that nothing of the kind had happened, but that sugar had been actually cheaper by 1s. per cwt. since the Convention.

And, it being half-past Seven of the clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

EVENING SITTING.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Main Question [14th February], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Question again proposed.

*MR. KEARLEY (continuing his speech) said he would now trace the record of prices from the signing of the Convention in March, 1902, as he preferred to deal with facts rather than the ingenious figures of the hon. Member, which showed that the hon. Gentleman had only a very superficial knowledge of the subject upon which he argued. Had his knowledge been more profound the hon. Gentleman would have been aware that prior to the Budget of 1902 there broke out in this country and upon the Continent a huge gamble in sugar in the anticipation of there being an increase in the duty. Everybody who had any interest in sugar participated in the speculation and filled themselves up with duty-paid sugar. When the Budget was introduced, and it became known that there was no addition to the duty the market became stagnant, and some of the speculators had to make forced realisations of their stock. That was the reason for the fall in sugar at that time and so overloaded was the market that in July prices sagged away until they reached under 6s., the lowest ever recorded. He (Mr. Kearley) would prove that statement. The total imports of sugar that year—1902—were 1,578,000 tons, and more than half, viz., 785,000 was shipped to this country in the four months preceding the Budget, and nobody could deny that that was the cause of the fall in the market. But later in the year these large stocks of duty-paid sugar had gone into consumption, and in October sugar had risen 40 per cent. above the price it was when the Convention was signed. Another point made by the hon. Gentleman was that when the Convention actually came into force—in September, 1903—prices did not rise, but fell; therefore, he argued, how could it be said that the later rise was due to the Convention? The reason sugar did not rise immediately after the Convention came into force was that when the Continental countries realised that the bounties were to be swept away they intimated to the sugar refiners that all sugar declared for shipment, whether shipped or not, would have the benefit of the bounty, with the result that every ton of sugar was declared and huge stocks accumulated, in all the Continental ports awaiting shipment. These overshadowed this market and had a depressing influence. The average weekly stocks in Hamburg alone were some hundreds of thousands of tons in excess of any other corresponding period. But by April of last year those stocks had been shipped and consumed, and then for the first time the full effect of the Convention was felt. The market began to rise in April, and in the following May sugar was 60 per cent. higher than it was at the lowest point, soon after the Convention was signed. There as no mention or even a whisper at that time of the shortness of the crop, the seed was hardly in the ground and had certainly not begun to germinate, yet we had this rise. In all those commodities where there was a great market, the question of what stock there was on hand had a tremendous effect upon the course or tendency of prices. Yet this advance took place when there was a visible supply of 2,500,000 tons. Three years previously, when there was the same amount of visible supplies, and when there was no Convention, the price of sugar fell to the lowest point on record, but in May with the Convention sugar rose 60 per cent. and the visible supplies were as large as ever before. That was a matter which he would have to ask the Government to explain. He should like to know whether the drought which had not then occurred was responsible for this increase in the price. It was only in August that rumours of shortage began to be circulated, and it was not until October that it was actually known that there was a serious deficit of 1,100,000 tons in the crop. He did not argue that such a huge deficit would not have any effect on prices; so serious a deficit at any time would have made itself felt, but the point was would the effect have been anything so serious had we maintained our commercial independence, free to buy from whence we chose and with our Ports open to all? We had sacrificed that, and instead of being able to take our sugar from whence we chose, we had to take it from a syndicate of countries by whom we were ruled in this matter, and in the discussions with whom our voice counted only as one in ten.

The deficit in the beet sugar crop was 1,100,000 tons, but at the same time there was an increase in cane of 400,000 tons, so that the actual deficit in the sugar crop was only about 700,000 tons. This would occasion a rise of 1s. or 2s. at any time, but the Convention was solely responsible for two things which immensely aggravated the situation, In the first place, since the Convention had been signed the consumption of sugar on the Continent had increased by 840,000 tons. Had it not been for the Convention that sugar would have been available for us, but owing to its policy the Convention had given the continental peoples cheap sugar, with the result that they had eaten 840,000 tons of practically our sugar. In the second place, we had shut out by the Convention 1,000,000 tons of sugar from Russia. Russia had always been the second largest beet sugar producer on the Continent, so that there would have to be added to the actual deficit the effect of practically 2,000,000 tons being no longer available or visible for our market. These were made up of the 840,000 tons consumed by the Continental peoples, the Russian crop, and the Argentine crop of 130,000 tons; and if the Convention had had its way it would soon shut out every other crop, because it was only at the eleventh hour that Lord Lansdowne had entered his protest against the supply of a further seventeen other countries being ruled out among which were the Brazil crop of 190,000 tons, the Hayti crop of 45,000, the Philippine crop of 120,000, so that the House would see the point to which we were approaching if we allowed the Convention to have its way. Under these circumstances, it was clear and beyond question that the normal condition of things would not in itself have warranted the market going up in the way it had done. The Continental speculators had had an eye upon the situation all the time; they saw that there was a favourable opportunity, and they initiated a highly profitable boom in sugar at our expense and the whole of that speculation which enhanced the price suddenly, and if they liked, unduly, must be attributed to the Sugar Convention. The shortage of beet would have caused a rise of some kind, no doubt a shilling or two shillings a cwt., but sugar had risen 150 per cent., and all this fictitious rise was the handiwork of the Convention of Brussels.

He had endeavoured up to this point to set forth the effect of the Convention on beet sugar, and he would now turn to see what had been the effect on cane sugar, because it was really in the interests of cane sugar that this Convention had been entered into. The House remembered the tale of the terribly sad conditions in the West Indies. The Government had stated that the sugar of Germany and Austria was gradually driving that of all other competitors out of Europe. That was not the fact, because they had only to refer to the increased crop of France in order to see that it was not correct, but that was the case of the Government; but there was the other great point that the effect of the low price of beet sugar, which was sold below the cost of production in Europe, was having such an effect on the cultivation of cane that they were beginning to leave off producing it. The case of the Government was that the Convention would extend the area of production. They now claimed that so far as cane sugar was concerned, thanks to the Convention, the crop was 400,000 tons greater. Not one single ton of that increase was to be attributed to the action of the Convention. It had taken place in countries over which the Convention had no influence, in countries which were essential, under American influence, where their sugar was mainly consumed. The argument of the Government all through had been that the Convention would benefit the West Indies. How much had the West Indies contributed to the increased cane production? Not a single pound. As a matter of fact, since the Convention had come into force the production of the West Indies had declined and was continuing to decline. Those countries which produced the increased cane crops had America for a market. The Philippine production had increased by 40,000 tons, Louisiana by 124,000 tons, Puerto Rico by 25,000 tons, and Cuba by 160,000 tons. Not one of these was a country for which the Government legislated. The Government legislated for the West Indies, and in these alone of all the cane-producing countries of the world was there a decline. Java was another country which had increased its production, and had already discovered a way by which they could produce cane sugar at £6 a ton and sell it at a profit at very little over that amount, while the West Indies had never been able to produce it at less than £8 a ton. Java had steadily increased her sugar production, which had gone up in the last ten years by over 500,000 tons.

In 1904 the West Indies were estimated to produce 221,000 tons, whereas in 1903 they produced 249,000 tons; in 1902, 239,000 tons; and in 1901, 258,000 tons; so that there was a continuous decrease. The returns from Java showed that cane sugar could be produced to pay a handsome profit at a low price, provided proper appliances were used. The cause of the decline in the West Indies was economical. The estates had been divided and sub-divided to such an extent that it was impossible to carry on a large system of manufacture unless the methods were altogether changed. Sugar production in Java had been brought to a fine art, and the figures of the increase were so important and had such a bearing on this question that he would quote them to the House. In 1894 the total Java crop was 530,000 tons, and every year there had been an increase until for the present year it was estimated to produce 1,086,000 tons. That was an instance of a country where, working with the best methods, they were able to increase their crop and make a handsome profit, although at a far lower price than the West Indies had ever been asked to accept. The prevailing idea at the time of the Convention, and one fostered by the arguments of the Government, was that the production of cane sugar the world over was dwindling, the alleged reason being that beet production was carried on at such a price, owing to the bounty system, that it really did not pay to persevere with cane. But what were the real facts? The production of cane sugar the world over during the last twenty years had more than doubled, and in the last five years it had increased by over 1,000,000 tons, while in the last five years the production of beet had decreased by 1,000,000 tons.

Then as to the effect of the Convention on the sugar-using industries, which throughout the controversy had been treated by the Government as of little account, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade had stated that he had no sympathy with them, because they were crying out before they were hurt.

THE PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY TO THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. BONAR LAW, Glasgow, Blackfriars): I said I had no sympathy with their agitation; I never said I had no sympathy with the busnesses.

*MR. KEARLEY said that that was too nice a distinction to appreciate. What was the agitation for but to save their industries ?

MR. BONAR LAW : They were agitating for protection.

*MR. KEARLEY said he had forgotten for the moment that according to the Prime Minister this Convention contained the pure gospel of free trade, and that they on that side of the House did not know what free trade was. What would be the use of the industries crying out after they were hurt ? But the hon. Gentleman went on to say that he did not believe they ever would be hurt. Did he believe that now, seeing that the trades employed 12,000 fewer men than before the Convention, and that at the busiest time of the year, during the Christmas season, when the sugar-using industries were most actively employed, 50,000 men were working short time ?

MR. BONAR LAW asked whether the same circumstance never occurred during the bounty period.

*MR. KEARLEY said he should say distinctly not, as the increase in these sugar-using industries had arisen in consequence of sugar being cheap and of there being no interference with our getting supplies from all parts of the world. Until recently these trades employed 120,000 men, and had an invested capital of £12,000,000, whereas in their most flourishing days the refineries, for whom the interests of the British consumers as a whole had been sacrificed, employed only 5,000 men, while the number now employed was only 3,000. The reason for the decline and fall of the old refineries, who made bad sugar by indifferent methods, was not the bounty system or Continental competition at all; it was the competition of up-to-date sugar refiners like Tate and Lyle, who were now putting on the market twice the amount of sugar the refineries produced thirty years ago, and were able to do it with 2,000 fewer men. The effect of the Convention on the sugar-using industries had been disastrous. Whereas formerly they were supreme not only in neutral but also in protected markets, they were now being excluded because the sugar-producing countries were manufacturing confectionery themselves. Holland and Germany were running up jam factories, and even Austria was sending confectionery to this country. It was entirely due to the Convention, which deprived the British manufacturer of the boon of cheap sugar and conferred it on the foreigner, that the Continental manufacturers were now beginning to invade our own market in all directions.

He desired to refer to the misleading figures given by the President of the Board of Trade as to the importations of Russian sugar into this country. The right hon. Gentleman declared that in 1901 the total amount exported from Russia was 126,000 tons, of which only 700 tons came to the United Kingdom, and that in 1902 only 1,000 tons came to this country.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (MR. GERALD BALFOUR, Leeds, Central): I said they were the figures given by the Russian Government, and so they were.

*MR. KEARLEY was sure the right hon. Gentleman did not wish to convey that he had wilfully misled the House, but he was in this dilemma: either he had made statements by which he wished to mislead the House—which of course was not the fact—or he had put forward statements the accuracy of which he had not taken pains to investigate. Did the right hon. Gentleman wish to own up ?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR : When I come to speak in my turn I shall be quite prepared to give my explanation of the circumstance. Meanwhile I am quite propared to admit that there was a certain amount of sugar coming from Germany of which I was not aware.

*MR. KEARLEY said that that was only part of the case. What he was now arguing was that the Convention was obtained under false pretences, that the House was misled by not being put in possession of all the facts, and that if the attempt were made afresh the Convention would not get even a Second Reading. From inquiries which he had made he found that the total amount of Russian sugar, refined and raw, sold by five brokers of Mincing Lane, was in 1902, 36,050 tons, and in 1901, 21,500 tons, and that one firm alone, Messrs Meyer Fr. Sohn, sold no less than 11,000 tons in 1901, and 16,000 tons in 1902. He had also ascertained from the British Vice-Consul at Danzig that the exports of Russian sugar from that port to the United Kingdom were 7,483 tons in 1901, and 9,748 tons in 1902.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN (Birmingham, W.) asked whether those quantities were included in the 21,500 and the 36,050 tons previously mentioned.

*MR. KEARLEY was not certain, but probably they were. But in any case there were 21,500 tons and 36,050 tons of Russian sugar known to be sold on the London market by these five brokers alone, as against the 700 tons and the 1,000 tons stated by the President of the Board of Trade.

He would only say, in conclusion, that this policy was believed to be a first instalment of the greater protection revival of which the country had heard so much, and about which it had formed such a decided view. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham was proclaimed by his friends to be its author, and he was entitled to the full credit for the results of his handiwork. Those results had been disastrous to the British consumer and manufacturer. The Convention had conferred cheap sugar on our Continental rivals and dear sugar on the home consumer; it had halved the price to the consumer abroad, and doubled the price to the consumer at home. The right hon. Gentleman in his speech on the Second Reading of the Convention Bill said—

> "I wish I could address an audience of working men. I would appeal to their pockets and their interest, and say, 'What have you done? You have destroyed a trade which might have given employment to goodness knows how many people, and you have allowed trades one after another to be thrown away, or handed over to our competitors.'"

Why had not the right hon. Gentleman gratified his wish and addressed a meeting of working men on the Sugar Convention? Was it because he was afraid that they might ask: "What have you done?" He begged to move.

*SIR J. DICKSON-POYNDER (Wiltshire, Chippenham), in seconding, said he wished to deal with the broader aspect of the Convention in its relation to our present free-trade system. After nearly a century the bounty system had been found by the Continental nations to be intolerable. It was based on the same false principle that lay at the root of every protectionist measure. The bounty system was protection in its most concentrated and direct form. The artificial stimulus given to beet cultivation had resulted in such over-production that it had had to be exported at one-fourth of its actual cost, with the result that we in this country had not only had sugar for domestic purposes at one-half the price prevailing in other countries, but had become the greatest sugar-manufacturing nation in the world, and had actually been able to re-export sugar to the very countries from which we originally received the raw material. That was the condition of affairs when the Government precipitated the abolition of bounties by joining the Sugar Convention. He did not believe the foreign countries would ever have come to a simultaneous decision if Great Britain had not joined the Convention. What would be the effect? To treble the price of sugar in the United Kingdom, while the price in foreign countries had been reduced by one-half. This result had been clearly pointed out by the mover of this Amendment. In other words, the inhabitants of the United Kingdom had been compelled to bear the cost of abolishing bounties, instead of the inhabitants of the bounty-paying countries bearing the cost themselves. Therefore the whole loss and hardship of the reversal of the bounty system had been borne by this country, which was the one country that was in no way responsible for the system. Supposing it had been proposed that a fund should be formed for compensating growers of beet and manufacturers of beet sugar in order that by degrees they should reduce their bounties, and supposing it had been suggested that the British Government should subscribe a certain sum to that fund, he ventured to say that such a proposal would have been scouted as too preposterous for consideration. If a proposal of that kind had been seriously made by a Minister in the House of Commons it would have been defeated upon a division by an overwhelming majority. And yet it was absolutely certain, in the light of recent events, that this would have been a far more practical and economical operation than that which the Government actually compelled the House to adopt in the Sugar Convention.

What had happened? For the first time in fifty years there was a falling-off in the consumption of sugar in the United Kingdom and the Board of Trade Returns showed a falling off of 3 per cent. That was an alarming sign. It not only meant a considerable reduction in the consumption of sugar but a reduction amongst all the sugar-using industries. They were told that this was due to shortage in the crop on the Continent of Europe, and that this was the reason for the rise of price in England. He ventured to say that that could not be seriously contended. If it were true that there was a shortage on the Continent, it was a remarkable fact that sugar in France and Germany was half to-day what it was, and that the consumption of those countries had doubled. It was not natural causes that had brought this catastrophe, but the violent interference with trade by the Government, who had no idea of the forces they were dealing with, and the result they were going to bring about. What had been the result in broad figures? He did not pretend to uphold the bounty system, for it was obvious that that system must have come to an end sooner or later; but it was no business of ours to hasten its abolition; and had we abstained, it would probably have taken twenty or thirty years for foreign countries to escape that incubus which they had themselves created. That would have given time for our sugar manufacturers to adapt themselves to the gradual diminution of supply of beet sugar, and it would also have given time for the sugar-cane growing countries to meet the demand created by the cessation of the beet sugar manufacture. But the Government decided suddenly to effect a change which but for them must have been very gradual, and which they were now compelled to admit inflicts grave hardship on the consumer, and serious and increasing loss on many thriving sugar industries.

What was the motive put forward at the time by the then Colonial Secretary? It was the generally acknowledged desire of the Secretary for the Colonies to benefit the sugar planters of the West Indies. In short it came to this, that it was a colossal measure of retaliation for the purpose of obtaining an infinitesimal amount of preference. He challenged the Government to show any benefit which had been afforded to the West Indies or any other portion of the Empire proportionate to the sacrifice which the United Kingdom had been compelled to undergo. Those responsible for the project had ignored the economic necessity attending the transfer of a gigantic trade from one source of supply to another. Sugar was the fourth greatest of our imports of food. How could the West Indies under the most favourable circumstances expect to provide anything approaching the quantity of sugar required for the British consumers and the manufacturers of this country? Where was the capital to come from? It could only come from England; and the money market was not favourable to invest millions in the West Indies on so precarious an undertaking. How did they know that there was the necessary enterprise in the West Indies? The most energetic colonists there had already turned to other pursuits, such as coffee, cocoa, spices, and it was hardly to be expected that they would retrace their steps to the precarious pursuit of sugar growing. But assuming they were desirous, where was the labour to come from? Were they to have another Chinese Ordinance for the West Indies? He thought the Government had better get off with the old love before they came on with the new. It was really a matter of the cold calculation of supply and demand, because neither the West Indies nor all the cane-sugar producing parts of the Empire could supply us with half the sugar we required within a reasonable time. Natal was confronted with labour difficulties, and Mauritius already produced to its full capacity. In Queensland the labour law made it a negligible quantity as a sugar-exporting country. Was not this an object-lesson of retaliation and preference in full working, and showing how results differed from anticipations?

The Government supported the abolition of bounties on the pretence that it was a great measure of free trade, but why they should go out of their way to reform foreign countries in the direction of free trade, whilst they advocated precisely the same measures for industries in this country he could not understand. The Prime Minister the other day was good enough to tell them during the fiscal debate, with a wave of the hand, that none of them understood, what free trade meant. Some of them had been trying to study the fiscal question during the last two years, and although they knew more about economics than they did before, many of them were just as much in the dark as regarded certain aspects of this question as they were at the commencement. He supposed that the most proper interpretation of free trade would be a trade free from Government interference, in which the trader would make his own bargain in a market which suited him best, and in which he bought his goods at the cheapest price. If that was a fair interpretation of free trade then the Sugar Convention was not a particularly successful method of enforcing that doctrine, for it shut the trader out of the cheapest market, and forced him to pay £8,500,000 more than he would have had to pay if left to himself. This £8,500,000 in the past had been the penalty which foreign countries had paid for their system of protection attended as it was with the certain consequences of cartels, trusts, and combinations. The Convention relieved the delinquent countries of this penalty, and now dumped that burden on the unfortunate British consumer. That was an expensive form of education for this country, and it was a disastrous method of arriving at free trade. Free trade, like charity, should begin at home. The best way to teach foreign countries to leave the bad paths of protection and direct them into the paths of free trade was to tell them to come over to England and see our great sugar industries which were prospering through their folly and ignorance. No, Sir, foreign countries must work out their own redemption, and that was the only way in which they could be expected to adopt the system which for many generations this country had enjoyed the benefit of.

There was only one consoling feature in this unfortunte business, and it was that it was the most convincing example which could possibly be furnished of the injurious results of the Government policy of retaliation and the Birmingham policy of colonial preference. Nothing could have happened more opportunely to assist in the destruction of both of these mischievous proposals. His position in this Parliament was necessarily one of detachment, and he could and intended to vote on questions according to their merits. What a pity more hon. Members were unable to take the same course. Were other Members equally independent, this Convention would receive the large measure of condemnation it deserved, and many who now would vote silently in its favour would vote, like he intended to, for the Amendment.

Amendment proposed.

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But we humbly represent to Your Majesty that Your Majesty's Government in committing the country to the policy of the Brussels Sugar Convention have inflicted heavy losses upon trade, diminished employment of labour, enormously increased the cost of a necessary food to consumers, without any compensatory advantage; and we humbly submit to Your Majesty that these evil results call for an immediate remedy; and that the Convention should be denounced at the earliest possible moment.'"—(Mr. Kearley.)

Question proposed, "That those words be there added.

Sir WALTER PALMER (Salisbury) said that upon this occasion he again could not agree with the Amendment which had been brought forward and supported so very lucidly by the hon. Member for Devonport. The hon. Member had stated in most explicit terms the nature of his grievance, and he hoped to show, in a very few minutes, that the Convention, whatever the views of the hon. Member might be with regard to particular trades, was not the whole question, and that he had omitted that part which might have been included, and which had been the real grievance. He was afraid that the mover of the Amendment was not altogether in favour of free trade if they accepted the older definition, namely, that free trade meant "an interchange of commodities at their natural prices." What was the alternative if they reverted to the state of things before the Convention? They would, of course, be having sugar under the system of bounties, and that was, he presumed, what the hon. Member wished. The Amendment denounced the Convention as having been the cause of heavy losses in trade, and as having increased the cost of the food of the people. The hon. Member had argued that the cost of sugar had been rendered higher in consequence of the Sugar Convention. He confessed that he could not follow the arguments of the hon. Member in that respect, and he was afraid that he had failed to convince him that the Sugar Convention had, in any way, tended to make the price of sugar higher than it was before. [OPPOSITION Laughter.] Hon. Members opposite laughed, but he wished to put before them this consideration. Did the line of prices since September, 1903, justify this suspicion? The hon. Member was continually talking about the price of sugar having been 6s. per cwt., but was it fair to take one particular fall in price, the result of a very heavy crop in that particular year? They all knew very well that the price in September, 1903, was about 8s. 5d. per cwt., and it fell in the following February to 7s. 10½d., whilst in April of last year it was 8s. 7d., or about the same as it was at the time the Convention came into operation.

*MR. KEARLEY: What was it in May?

*SIR WALTER PALMER said they all knew that April was about the time when people began to form their estimate of the growing crops. The hon. Member had given them a great many figures with regard to stocks on the Continent, but he wished to ask him one question upon this point. If the estimate of the crop on the Continent had been normal at that particular time would there have been any rise in the price of 8s. 7d.? The hon. Member had said nothing as to what the price would have been had the crops remained normal. Had crops remained normal, and the price had not been raised, it would have been impossible to argue that the Sugar Convention had in any way increased the price of sugar.

He would take another consideration which the hon. Member had dwelt upon, namely, had the disturbing effect of last year's deficiency caused as great a loss to the country as would have been the case without the Convention? Last year's deficiency, as the hon. Member had told them, sent up the price in December to nearly 6s., and 7s. in the middle of January, or in other words, we paid £2,250,000 more for the sugar bought in this country.

*MR. KEARLEY: The price of sugar to the consumer has risen to just double what it was before the Convention. It was 1½d. per lb. before the Convention and it is now 3d. per lb. That represented a sum of over £8,000,000.

*SIR WALTER PALMER: I prefer to take the figures given in the Blue-book.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: You are quite right.

*SIR WALTER PALMER said that if they paid only £2,250,000 more for sugar, what became of the statement made by the Leader of the Opposition that the Sugar Convention had cost this country over £8,000,000 a year? If the Leader of the Opposition spoke upon this question he would like him to show how he made out that this country had been charged £8,000,000 a year by the Convention.

There was another consideration he wished to point out. Was the rise in price last year less or more than during similar years when bounties and cartels existed? According to the estimate of the hon. Member for Devonport the deficiency last year was 750,000 tons of sugar. That was a fact generally known, but the hon. Member did not state that the deficiency in the production of beet sugar was the worst which had been known for the last forty years, and it was this that had caused the rise in price of 6s. and 7s. per cwt. Let them now compare this variation in price with the variations of other years. In the year 1888–9 sugar rose from 13s. 2d. to 27s., which was more than double the rise which took place last year. That rise, he need scarcely point out, was due to the deficiencies in the crops, mostly in the West Indies, which also affected the United States supply, and led to a great deal of speculation and a very great rise in prices. He would take another rise in price which occurred in 1892–3, for in that year the price rose from 12s. 9d. to 18s. 9d. The variation in that crop was vastly less than was the case last year. If the crop last year was the worst they had experienced for forty years, if it was worse than in 1892–3, why had the price not now gone up very much more than it had done? The reason why the price had gone up only 6s. was because the systems of cartels and bounties abroad had been abolished. Take the year 1893–4 when the price fell from 18s. 9d. to 8s. 3d., or a fall of 10s. 6d. per cwt. That was entirely due to over-production in the previous year. He wished to ask the hon. Member if he thought these extraordinary fluctuations were good for trade; at any rate those interested in the trade did not think so. The average price for last year worked out at about 12s. 3d. per cwt. for refined sugar, and that was an increase of 1s. 4¼d. on the previous year. But even then the average price paid in 1904 was less than in any year before 1901. In fact previous to the years of the sugar duty, sugar had always cost more than it had since without the sugar duty.

He thought the hon. Member for Devonport had very much failed in his argument respecting the sugar industries of this country. The dead-weight upon those industries had been the sugar tax, and he would give the House figures to prove this. The Treasury Returns showed that the yield from the sugar tax for 1901–2 was £6,399,000; in 1902–3 it was £4,478,000; and in 1903–4 the amount was £5,725,000. He would next take the Board of Trade figures. In 1901 the importation of sugar was just over 33,000,000 cwts.; in 1902 it was 31,451,000 cwts.; in 1903, 31,134,000; and last year it was 32,294,000 cwts. What he was contending was that there had been a falling-off in the importation of sugar owing to the sugar tax. He would next take the quantity of sugar consumed per head of the population. In the year 1901 the percentage per head of the population was 88·9 lbs.; in 1902, 83·9 lbs.; 1903, 82·2 lbs.; and for last year he had not been able to get the figures. There was one fact which he particularly wished the hon. Member for Devonport to notice, and it was that the duty imposed upon sugar had raised the price nearly to what it was ten years ago. The average price for the five years 1890–1894 was 16s. 9d.; for the seven years 1895–1901, 12s. 6d.; and for the four years 1901–1904, 11s.5d., but, adding the amount of the sugar duty, this became 15s. 7d. Therefore the cost of sugar to the buyer had come back to what it was nearly ten years ago. He entirely disagreed with the expression of opinion made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the deputation which recently waited upon him. The right hon. Gentleman said that the tax on sugar was only sensible because of particular circumstances which had occurred last year. He entirely disagreed with that statement, for the sugar tax had raised the average price of sugar during the time it had been imposed more than 3s. beyond the average which had existed during the previous seven years. The mover of the Amendment, in stating that the Convention had inflicted heavy loss on trade, had diminished employment, and so on, was entirely beyond the mark. The hon. Member had failed to show that the Convention had really affected the price of sugar, and he omitted altogether to keep in view the fact that the rise had really been caused by the sugar tax. In support of this he ventured to quote the statement made by Messrs. Icke and Sharp, Limited, who said—

> "As regards our own firm, we have been unable, since the tax of 1900, to pay any dividend to the ordinary shareholders, and is it to be wondered at, considering that the tax has been the means of reducing our turnover by over £50,000 a year?"

It was a little extraordinary that the hon. Member should come forward, as he had done again and again, asking for the abolition of the Convention on these grounds. Of course it was useless to refer him to the well-known opinions of the authorities on his own side—Mr. Gladstone and Lord Farrer. The right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition, speaking in 1899, said that bounties were only another form of protective duty. The late Sir William Harcourt had also expressed a similar view, and the Trades Union Congress had twice done so. The depressed state of the various trades using sugar had not been due to the Convention, but he believed, nevertheless, that the working of the Convention and the abolition of the cartels had prevented the excessive rise in price which had happened on previous occasions, and had probably saved the country a very large amount of money. That, at all events, was his opinion. He believed that the abolition of bounties would in a short time be recognised as an enormous benefit to this country and the Colonies. Might he give one parallel? This year in the United States there was an enormous deficiency in the wheat crop, and he believed England had received very little wheat from the United States. But we had received enormous supplies from India and other places, and the consequence was that the price of wheat had been very little interfered with. The hon. Member opposite deprecated the encouragement of the cane industries, though this year, owing to a deficiency in the beet harvest, prices were sent up comparatively high because of that deficiency, and because we were not yet able to get our supplies from the cane producers. The hon. Member referred to the large increase in production which had taken place in different parts of the world. He himself had been to Java, though not to the West Indies. Java, he believed, was cultivated entirely by Chinese coolies. It had been mentioned that in Cuba there had been an increase of 1,000,000 tons within a certain time. There had been in Cuba an increased production from 485,000 tons in 1882 to 1,250,000 tons at the present time, owing to the encouragement given by the United States. He believed that the situation alluded to in the Amendment was due not to the Convention but to the deficiency in the crop together with the sugar tax, which was not before them that night. The depressed state of the trade of this country was also a matter which should be taken into consideration. He looked forward to better times when the finances of the country would be regulated in another way. He hoped the House would not be led astray by the statements which had been made by the mover of the Amendment.

MR. EDMUND ROBERTSON (Dundee) said he was glad to be able to follow the hon. Gentleman who had just sat down, because he represented a constituency which was largely interested in sugar industries. In Dundee there was a large number of people whose wages were small, and many of these were women who were self-supporting. In the immediate neighbourhood of the city there was a great fruit-growing industry which served the sugar-using industry. His constituency, therefore, was hit three times over by the Convention. The poor, who were the consumers, were hit, the confectioners who manufactured the sugar into confectionery, were hit, and the fruit growers in the neighbouring districts were also hit. The head of the greatest confectionery business in Dundee informed him that the price of sugar had risen 100 per cent. The authority of Sir A. Jones, however, was good enough for him, because he stated that—

> "It is to Mr. Chamberlain we owe it that sugar has risen from £6 to £16 per ton."

That statement, he admitted, did not appear in the revised report; if it had been suppressed by the author he was only following the distinguished example of another who had spoken on fiscal matters. In connection with the effects of this sugar policy in general, he regarded the case of the working people as by far the most serious, and he agreed with the hon. Gentleman who had just sat down that they could scarcely consider the Sugar Convention alone in this debate. The sugar policy of the Government was divided into two branches—the part which imposed a tax and the part which dealt with the sugar bounty question in the Convention. He condemned them both, and regarded them both as diseases acting concurrently. He agreed with the hon. Member for Salisbury in condemning the sugar tax. They could not separate the two branches of the Government's sugar policy, because if the effect of the Convention was to impose a burden on the people, however small, it was an aggravation of the burden caused by the sugar tax. He read the other day in a Board of Trade Blue-book that the average wage of an Irish agricultural labourer was something between 10s. 6d. and 11s. a week. If the sugar tax and the Sugar Convention had the effect of increasing the price of sugar in the least degree, then he said, no matter how low the degree, that a wage of 10s. 6d. was one that could bear no diminutions, and to take from a man who was earning that wage the smallest scintilla of a farthing was not a change that could be defended.

The hon. Member for Salisbury condemned the sugar tax and praised the Convention. He found that was very common with protectionists. One hon. Member had candidly given the reason. The reason was simply this, the whole of the proceeds of the sugar tax, hardly as it bore on the poor, went into the Exchequer, and not a farthing went into private pockets. In the case of the burden laid on the people by the Convention not a farthing of it went to the Exchequer, but the whole of it went into private pockets. Part of it went to the agricultural interest, because it was the West Indian equivalent of the English agricultural dole, part of it went to a small branch of the sugar trade in this country, and the rest, and by far the greater proportion, went to the consumer in foreign countries. There was a very useful institution connected with the Press which, he was told, supplied leading articles free gratis and for nothing to country newspapers. One of these denounced the tax and praised the Convention. The writer of the article asked what good the tax did, seeing that it all went to the British Exchequer. That was the real reason why gentlemen of the fiscal persuasion, like the hon. Member for Salisbury, made the discrimination which they did. He himself condemned bounties as much as any one. But here was a bounty paid by a foreign Government for the export of raw material which was not produced in this country at all, and that kind of protection he was prepared to take lying down. He should lie on his back, open his mouth, and ask for more. But what he desired particularly to draw attention to was the case of sugar products. He recollected the astonishment and dismay which spread over the House when it was stated, on behalf of the Government, during the discussion of the Bill of 1903, that bounty-fed sugar was to be excluded but bounty-fed sugar worked into products was to be admitted. It was pointed out that if that were allowed British confectioners would be exposed to unfair competition from foreign manufacturers, who would be able to procure bounty-fed sugar. The Prime Minister then said that the Government did not believe that there would be any chocolates or similar products made from bounty-fed sugar imported into this country, but if that did occur it would be the duty of the Government to stop it by legislation. In other words, they would increase the burden on the poor. Did the Government still hold to their belief that these products did not and would not come in?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: Hear, hear!

MR. EDMUND ROBERTSON said they did and would come in. He himself believed that imports of that sort had increased and were increasing, but it was now clear that the Government took an opposite view; and he presumed, therefore, that the legislation projected, under certain circumstances, by the Prime Minister two years ago would not be brought in to stop this particular import. He took it there was no intention to do so this session at any rate?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: Hear, hear!

MR. EDMUND ROBERTSON said he would now refer to sugar products coming from countries which were not parties to the Convention. They were told that British confectioners would have the benefit of the limitation of the surtax proposed in the Convention. What had been the history of this question? Here it was in a report by Sir Henry Bergne—

> "A vote was then taken on the question, 'Whether the contracting States had the right to levy on sugared products a surtax higher than that fixed by Article III. of the Convention.' The result was: eight votes in the affirmative; one vote in the negative (Great Britain); two abstentions (France and Italy). The further question was then raised whether contracting States were bound to penalise sugared products containing bountied sugar; and after a debate in which various views were expressed, it was decided to postpone any settlement of the question until sufficient time had elapsed to enable the Commission to perceive whether the existing laws of the various contracting States in regard to this matter gave rise to difficulties in practice."

That was the result so far of failing to have a recognition of the principle that the limitation of the surtax fixed by Article III. of the Convention was to apply to sugared products as well as to sugar. At another sitting of the Convention Sir Henry Bergne drew attention to the decision of the Commission that the limitation of the surtax stipulated by Article III. of the Convention was not applicable to sugared products and submitted the following question—

"The question arises whether by Article I Contracting States have power to levy a surtax on sugared products sufficiently high to give rise to a bounty.

"Article I of the Convention is as follows:—

"'The High Contracting Parties engage to suppress, from the date of the coming into force of the present Convention, the direct and indirect bounties by which the production or exportation of sugar may profit, and not to establish bounties of such a kind during the whole continuance of the said Convention. For the application of this provision, sugar-sweetened products, such as preserves, chocolates, biscuits, condensed milk, and all other analogous products containing, in a notable proportion, artificially incorporated sugar, are assimilated to sugar.

"'The preceding paragraph applies to all advantages derived directly or indirectly, by the several categories of producers, from State fiscal legislation, and in particular to . . .

"'(f.) Advantages derived from any surtax in excess of the rate fixed by Article III.'

"Sir H. Bergne is convinced that the Commission will decide this question in a negative sense.

"It is necessary to settle this question definitely before it is possible usefully to approach the question of the application of the penal clause to sugared products, and the British delegate has been instructed by his Government to ask that the matter be put to the vote."

"Great hesitation was manifested in giving a direct reply to this question without further explanation, and as none of the delegates were prepared at the moment to make any statement, the discussion. . . ."

What was the end of it all? In the last White Paper which had been published they found that Sir Henry Bergne offered a compromise, and that the following declaration was agreed upon by nine votes to two—

"Should one of the Contracting Parties believe itself to be able to prove the existence of an appreciable bounty on sugared products, arising from an excessive surtax, it shall have the right to submit this proof to the Commission which, if the facts are found to be correct shall give its opinion as to the measures to be taken to put a stop to bounties of the kind in question."

The Commission was to express a pious opinion!

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: Not necessarily.

MR. EDMUND ROBERTSON said it would have no executive power.

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: It is assumed.

MR. EDMUND ROBERTSON said this was not one of the things that were obligatory on the Commission, and any executive action in the matter would be ultra vires. Here was how Sir Henry Bergne reported this very important fact that all those countries would be barred out by this foreign tribunal sitting in Brussels—

"Rates of countervailing duties were fixed as being applicable to the following States: Bolivia, etc;"

and he added:—

"No appreciable amount of sugar from any of these countries appeared to be now imported into the United Kingdom."

How much sugar did these countries produce? He believed it to be very much more than people imagined; it must be something very considerable. Sir Henry Bergne merely reported, however, that these countervailing duties had been fixed for these countries. That was on October 26th. What happened? Six weeks after, on December 2nd, the Foreign Office suddenly woke up, and a telegraphic despatch was sent by Lord Lansdowne to Sir Constantine Phipps to this effect:—

"You should hand in to-day without fail to the Belgium Government a Note appealing under Article VII. of the Sugar Convention against the decision arrived at by the Commission at the recent sittings as regards all the countries named except Brazil."

To appeal against the exclusion of these seventeen States! Sir Henry Bergne reported the fact of their exclusion, and seemed to justify it, but the House was entitled to know whether he voted for or against their exclusion; to know what our delegate did when this important matter was under discussion. If he voted against their exclusion, why did he not say so; if he voted for it, why did he not tell his Government? Surely unless this was a mere farce——

Mr. LOUGH (Islington, W.): Oh! it is a farce.

Mr. EDMUND ROBERTSON: But it was a tragedy as well. Unless this was a mere farce they in that House were at least entitled to know what our delegate did when this important question was under discussion. If Sir H. Bergne voted for the exclusion of these countries, as he was entitled to assume he did from the slight reference to it in his own report which suggested, as an excuse for it, that very little sugar came here from those countries, what position was this great country in whose Foreign Minister appealed against the decision of his own subordinate officer? The Secretary of State called it an appeal, but it was not an appeal at all. It was something in the nature of a re-hearing, and a re-hearing before the same judges. And what was the reason given for this appeal? The report was still more mysterious in regard to that. Here was what Lord Lansdowne said in another dispatch—

"The appeal lodged by His Majesty's Government only covers the case of countries in which they are in a position to offer positive evidence that no export bounty does in fact exist."

Had the Government evidence? Of course they had. Did Sir H. Bergne have it when the question was before the Commission? Did he lay it before the Commission? If he had it, and did not lay it before the Commission, then he did not do his duty. All these were mysteries that wanted clearing up. Now he thought this thing, this Convention, had once been called a "working model of Protection" He pitied the industries, and he pitied the dignity and honour of this country, if proceedings like this, which had become applicable to one great trade, should be extended to all other trades

Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN: It is quite true, Sir, as one of the preceding speakers has said, that I take a very great interest in this matter. But I cannot admit the soft impeachment of the hon. Member for Plymouth that I was the author of the Convention which he has so strenuously condemned. That honour, as I think it, must be given to my right hon. friend the President of the Board of Trade and to my right hon. friend the then Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Member for Bristol, both of whom were really, in the first place, responsible for the measure. But that I concurred in the measure and that I am glad to accept any responsibility in connection with it is absolutely true; and I am perfectly ready to defend the measure against all comers even in an assembly of working men, if I could find an assembly interested in the subject. [Opposition ironical cries of "Hear, hear"] It will be evident to hon. Gentleman opposite that even in a public meeting you cannot deal with all subjects at the same time; and when I attend a public meeting with a special object, I am generally inclined to confine myself as far as possible to the object for which I have undertaken to speak. I think, therefore, the reproach of the hon. Member for Devonport that I did not reply to the interruption of a single gentleman in a meeting consisting of 6,000 people, and did not divert myself from the object of the meeting to a long discussion on a perfectly separate subject, is, on reflection, I think he will feel, quite unnecessary. I can hardly believe that he would be quite so discursive as he suggests that I should have been.

Mr. KEARLEY: That was not my point. I referred to a fervid passage in a speech delivered in this House more than two years ago, in which the right hon. Gentleman said he would like to address an audience of working men on the sugar question. I wanted to know why the right hon. Gentleman has never gratified that desire.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: I repeat the statement that when anything of importance turns upon this question, and if I am invited by working men, nothing would give me greater pleasure than to address them. Meanwhile I have matters to deal with that seem to me to be of greater importance.

I am anxious to deal to-night with the general aspects of this question. Before I do so I will touch upon one or two observations of the speakers who have preceded me that would not otherwise have come into my general argument. I need not dwell long on the speech of the hon. Member for Dundee, to which we have just listened, although I admit it has for me a particular and special interest, because, although during the whole time that we have been colleagues in the House of Commons I have never found a single subject upon which I did not profoundly disagree with him, and I have never observed in him a train of sentiment with which I have the slightest sympathy, to-night in one observation which he made I really felt inclined partially to agree with him. The hon. Gentleman said that he could not separate the question of the sugar tax from the question of the Convention. But with great determination and courage he proclaimed that he was opposed to both. He is one of those hon. Gentlemen whose rôle it is to be "agin the Government." Consequently, I am not at all surprised that on this occasion he was against two things which the Government have done. But where I felt a certain inclination to join him was in his statement that he did not approve of the sugar tax. I admit I do not approve of the sugar tax. I regard it at the present time as a necessary means of raising revenue. But if the hon. Gentleman will suggest any satisfactory alternative to the sugar tax—I am almost afraid to say it, but I think I might find myself in the same lobby with him. He will remember that I have proposed an alternative scheme. He will, no doubt, recollect that I have felt that a tax like the sugar tax, which comes, every penny of it, out of the pockets of the working men, might be advantageously abolished in favour of a tax which, in my opinion, comes in part out of the pocket of the foreigner. As to the rest of the speech of the hon. Member, it appeared to me to deal with the details of a discussion which took place before the Convention was agreed to.

MR. EDMUND ROBERTSON: I did not say a word about the discussion before the Convention was agreed to; I was referring to the discussion by the Commission.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: I beg the hon. Gentleman's pardon. He quoted Sir Henry Bergne and other members of the Commission. However, I do not think that any one will feel that the technical point which he raised regarding the discussion of the Commission was very important, or bore any particular relevancy to the discussion in which we are engaged. [OPPOSITION cries of "Oh."] Hon. Gentlemen opposite, who were very attentive during the speech of the hon. Gentleman, were more fortunate than myself if they really understood its bearing upon this discussion.

Now Sir, I come to the speech of the hon. Gentleman the Member for Devonport, and I will deal with it in my general argument. There was one point at which, I admit, I did not quite understand what he said. The hon. Member said that by the Convention we had deprived our own market of cheap sugar and had presented it to Austria.

*MR. KEARLEY: I never made any such statement. I do not know what the right hon. Gentleman is referring to. I cannot make those words fit in with any of my statements.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: I took down the hon. Member's words. He said that we were depriving our market of cheap sugar and presenting it to Austria —[MR. KEARLEY dissented]—and then followed the statement that the hon. Member had somewhere or other met an Austrian confectioner.

MR. KEARLEY: If I made such a statement it was by a slip of the tongue. I had no intention of making any such statement. I did say that, as a result of the Convention, we had deprived the users of sugar in this country of an advantage and had conferred an enormous benefit on the users of sugar on the Continent by making the article cheap there.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN : That is exactly what I said, except that I used the word Austria and the hon. Member applies his statement to the whole of the Continent. And it certainly does so apply if it applies at all. But I deny the statement. I say that at the present time sugar is as cheap in this country as in any country on the Continent. [OPPOSITION cries of "Oh."] There is not a single country in which sugar is before and since the Convention cheaper now than in England.

*MR. KEARLEY : What is the relative position before and since the Convention ?

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN : I will come to that a little later, but bear this in mind : what the hon. Gentleman is claiming is that we should have an unnatural price of sugar. And he calls himself a free-trader ! Then the hon. Member for the Chippenham Division of Wiltshire, from his great knowledge of colonial affairs, declared that this Convention had given no advantage whatever to the West Indies. [Cries of "No" and "Yes."] I assert that he said so. Let the hon. Member deny it if he can. I quote from the hon. Gentleman's words, that this Convention had given to the West Indies no benefit. Now, what I have to say to that is that the hon. Gentleman is entirely and utterly mistaken. I was not going to deal with the West Indies. The question to-night is whether this country has been injured. But as it is charged that the Convention has done no good to the West Indies, I venture to tell the hon. Gentleman that there is not a single person connected with the West Indies who will agree with his statement—whether he be a Tory, a Liberal Unionist, a Radical, or an independent person, as the hon. Gentleman calls himself—something like Mahomet's coffin, between heaven and the other place. None of these people connected with the West Indies will justify the statement the hon. Member has made ; and if he wants an illustration I will refer him to the Radical candidate for Buteshire, Mr. Lamont, who is, I believe, connected with the West Indies, and who told his constituents—[AN HON. MEMBER on the OPPOSITION Benches : Hear, hear ! They will be]—in a speech only the other day that no greater boon had ever been conferred on the West Indies than this Convention.

*SIR J. DICKSON-POYNDER : I never argued that the existing cane producers had not profited. I tried to point out that there had been no increase or extension of cane production in the West Indies as the result of the Convention.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN : From that statement also I am obliged to dissent. But it must be remembered that after such a great change as the abolition of the sugar bounties represents you must wait a little time to see a natural effect.

Well, now, what is it that we are discussing to-night ? We are discussing a phenomenon which is a perfectly common phenomenon—namely, a very great and sudden rise in an article of general consumption. It is a thing which is continually happening in every trade which depends in any way upon a production which itself is subject to variations of climate. Now to most the rise in the price of sugar would appear to be a matter very much to be regretted, but at the same time not to be at all a subject for Parliamentary discussion. It is happening every day. It is happening in all sorts of trades. Why, just think for a moment of our own experience. Last year, was it not, a tremendous rise in the price of cotton took place—a matter of infinitely more importance than the rise in the price of sugar, a matter paralysing the whole of the vast trade of the biggest industry we have, except the industry of agriculture. Was there any kind of Party, what you may call political, discussion during the whole course of the dearth of cotton? It was due to the same cause as the rise in the price of sugar. It was due to the diminution of the crop in America, and to the natural consequences of such a diminution, the attempts of monopolists to control the crop. Well, I do not take that alone. I heard some fear of something of the kind now—I am not really informed on the subject—but again and again a failure in the crop of potatoes in Ireland has been infinitely more serious. That has not touched merely the question of a slight rise in price of a necessary of life; it has been the question of the existence of a people. But there, again, has anybody ever charged, has even the most bitter opponent charged the Government with having, by artificial means, caused a catastrophe which was due to the act of God? Those are big things, but there has recently been, from the same cause as that affecting the price of sugar, a drought—there has been an enormous increase of 400 per cent. in the price of onions. I wonder whether anyone who knows anything about English or Irish affairs is going to speak with contempt of a thing which is really a matter of serious importance to a vast number of poor people. There again, does any one say—[An HON. MEMBER: "Pickles"; and cries of "Order."] Well, Sir, that may be offensive, but it has nothing to do with the argument. There again, I ask, has any one read a debate in this House on an increase in the price of onions? I will take another thing in which the rise is less; I will take the rise in the price of corn. It is well known to every one that in the last year the price of wheat has risen by 5s. a quarter. Why, good heavens! we are told that the skies will fall if a duty of 2s. is put on it, and here by purely natural causes there is a rise of 5s., and no one lifts a hand or speaks a word in reference to it. I say in all these cases—and I might quote many others—the matter is treated as regrettable, no doubt, but as due to causes which are beyond human control. But now, from causes which I shall show to be the same, there is a rise in the price of sugar, and the Opposition no longer attribute it to these ordinary and natural causes, but to the indescribable malignity of the men who sit there, "the worst Government that the world has ever known," and they say it is due entirely to their infamous, nefarious action. [An HON. MEMBER on the MINISTERIAL Benches: Stupid.] "Who fills the butchers' shops with big blue flies?"—The Government. Now, Sir, really it is all very well, but I do not believe in the long run that that is good political strategy. This attack upon the Government is supported, or attempted to be supported, by the grossest mis-statements and exaggerations. I will not say hon. Gentlemen, but their supporters, have in defence of this ridiculous proposition gone almost as far in the way of reckless mis-statement as they have done in the case of Chinese labour. Now, Sir, I have always a great belief in the common sense of my countrymen. I believe in it, and I show it. I think sometimes hon. Gentlemen opposite may believe in it, but they do not show it. But I am certain that in the long run this grotesque exaggeration does harm to the cause which employs it.

We are told, for instance, by no less a person than the Leader of the Opposition that this thing is going to cost the country £8,000,000 a year. It is ridiculous. The difference in the cost of sugar between 1903 and 1904 was, as stated by the hon. Member for Salisbury, who knows something about this matter, a little over £2,000,000. Then comes the hon. Member for Devonport. He cannot deny that that is the cost, but he says that when you come to the consumer it is £8,000,000. I really am unable to accept his statement, but if it be correct what are we to say of the middlemen? This increase in price amounting to something like £2,000,000 was almost entirely confined to the last months of the year. Up to the last months of 1904 there was practically no rise at all, and yet this Convention which has had this fatal effect had been in operation twelve months. The fact that it was coming into operation was known before, and really therefore the trade had had a period for preparation much longer than twelve months. The Convention brought practically no rise. ["Oh!"] Out of the rise of which I have spoken—out of the £2,000,000, more or less, I do not know the exact amount, and I suppose nobody can give it—£1,900,000 belongs to the later months of the year. And mark this—that rise was coincident with the reports which were coming in from the Continent that there would be a short crop; and it increased just as it became certain that these reports, which were only rumours in the first instance, were being confirmed day by day, and that the results would be even worse than had been in the first instance anticipated. That is significant. That suggests—and I am going to prove it—that the rise in the price of sugar is due to the natural cause of the loss of production owing to the drought, and had nothing whatever to do with the Convention.

Then let us go to another point. We are told that this rise—for the moment I leave out of sight to what it is due—has ruined great trades in the country—jam and confectionery—and thrown out of employment numbers of people. It is very difficult to follow the argument. I take jam. Here is a curious fact. At the end of 1904 the wholesale price of jam was lower than it was before the Convention. ["No."] I do not attempt to explain it. That seems to me to be inconsistent with the argument that the Convention has ruined the jam trade. If, after the Convention, and even after the rise, jam manufacturers are able to sell their jam at a lower price than they did long before the Convention came into operation, for the life of me I do not see how the Convention is answerable for the ruin of the jam trade. Now take sugar. No doubt the experience of different firms is different, but this is undoubted, that well-managed firms have during recent years made gigantic profits. On the other side of the House it is a constant part of their argument, brought in on every occasion, that we ought to disregard any representations which come to us from South Africa, from the people who are really assuring the prosperity of South Africa because the dividends are so large there. But the dividends of the confectionery manufacturers here, have gone up 37½ per cent. I have not heard of anything like that on the Rand. I do not grudge them their profits, and I think that the explanation of them lies in the condition of the trade itself. You never find profits of that kind permanent. You find them in a trade in which there is fluctuation, and in fact a fluctuating trade could not go on unless it had very good times to make amends for the very bad times. If you carry the illustration out, you will find that in the coal trade, when there is a boom in the industry, the colliery owners are all making large profits, and then there comes a series of years in which they find it difficult to make both ends meet and keep the mines open. If that is the case, why should not the sugar people have made preparation? They know that their trade has been—it is not now—has been, ever since it existed as a trade, subject to great and violent fluctuation. Why did not they make preparation out of the good years for the bad years which were certain to come? Why are they ruined the moment a bad year comes? If the coal owners behaved that way there would not be a coal-mine open at the present time in England. Let us see what these confectioners could have done. Only last May—only a few months ago—they could have bought sugar at 9s. 6d. a cwt., or 88 per cent. less than now. That is something more than a moderate price, for it is a price at which it is hardly possible that sugar can be produced in any country without a loss. They could have bought sugar then at 9s. 6d. per cwt., and that price is 11d. lower than in 1900, 6d. lower than in 1899, and in 1899 you had not even heard of the Sugar Convention. They could actually have bought a few months ago lower than the price at the time when the bounties were in full force, and when sugar was considered to be at a starvation price. They did not do it. It is not for me to criticise the action of private firms; but I think, at all events, the point wants explanation before we accept as true the statement that the jam trade and the confectionery trade have been absolutely ruined because they have had one or two months of excessively high prices.

Another point I want to emphasise is this. The conditions are not new. To hear the hon. Member for Devonport one would suppose there had never been fluctuations in the sugar trade before, but nothing is more contrary to the fact. The sugar trade has been one continuous series of fluctuations of price; but it must be borne in mind that the disturbance has always been temporary, as it will be now. Trade has gone on and prospered because people engaged in the trade have, in times when high prices were threatening, taken care to buy something in advance. We shall all admit that a trade with fluctuations of this kind is rather to be pitied. I think all of us in trade would rather have a business which gave security for a moderate return, than a business which at one time gave us a very large profit and at another time involved us in a very considerable loss. Therefore, our object should be, if we want to benefit the sugar, jam, and confectionery trade, to reduce the amount and the number of these fluctuations and to secure more regularity. Surely that is a desirable thing to do. The fluctuation we are considering now is not an exceptional circumstance. This particular fluctuation is no more due than any of the previous fluctuations were to the Convention. The fluctuations in the sugar trade in the past have been due to the bounties, and by removing them we have removed the great cause of fluctuation, and we may hope in the future the sugar trade will be more regular. It is too early to expect that by a stroke of the pen or the movement of a wand you can immediately make this great change; but we shall do it if we have patience, and we believe it will have this effect before very long. The old traders in sugar, as well as in everything else, did not desire these fluctuations. They wished to avoid them, and they did not approve of the bounties. The modern confectioners, the clients of the hon. Member for Devonport——

MR. KEARLEY: Not my clients, but your constituents!

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN:—seem to have changed. I think they do desire bounties. Now let us see what that means. This is an entire reversion of any argument we have ever had in this House. Here are people who want bounties and who are free-traders. Why do they want bounties? There is only one reason, and that is because bounties have in the past from time to time given them sugar at a lower price than it could possibly be made at anywhere. Two years ago sugar was at 6s. and something—I forget exactly—per cwt. Does any hon. Member believe, does the hon. Member for Devonport believe, that sugar under the most favourable circumstances in any country could possibly be made at that price? It is absolutely impossible. Every cwt. sold at that price is sold at a direct loss to the producer. That is an unnatural price. It is an artificial and temporary price; but they want it because when sugar is at this unnatural price they make large profits. I want to remind you of this—if this great trade depends on unnatural prices and on the gigantic and unnatural profits which are made at times when sugar is sold, as under the bounty system, below cost price, then according to the doctrine of free trade it has no right to exist. According to every doctrine of free trade no trade under these conditions has a right to exist. I have spoken of fluctuations. In 1887 there was one of them. What did sugar come to then when there was no Convention? It went up from 11s. to 28s. 3d., a rise, therefore, of 17s. 3d. in a single year. The confectioners approached the Government and said that the trade was paralysed, which was perfectly true. One of the greatest of them complained of this violent fluctuation, pointed out its consequences, and asked for a remedy. What was the remedy the confectioners asked for? They asked that the bounties should be abolished. They said that that was the only true remedy—that until you got rid of the bounties you would never have regularity in the trade. It is quite true, absolutely true. It has been proved by the Convention, and yet the Convention, as I have said, has not had time to show what it can do; but already, although it has only been in existence twelve months, and it takes time to bring new machinery into operation, 400,000 tons of cane sugar was added last year to the world's production. Even that made an enormous difference. Some people seem to me to be in the most absolute ignorance of business principles. I will lay down a business principle. Let us see how many will deny it. I say that in these questions of alternation of prices the amount of difference in the production is altogether disproportionate to the amount of rise and fall which is caused by that difference. If there are buyers for 1,000 tons and there are 1,100 tons to sell the goods will be cheap, although there is only 100 tons surplus; and if there are buyers for 1,000 tons and only a product of 900 to sell goods will be much dearer. The 400,000 tons of cane sugar has prevented the rise in price, great as it is, from being infinitely greater. What is wanted in order to change the state of things which we all deplore is a greater area of production. What is wanted also is a greater variety in the sources of production. The tendency of the bounties was to make the world's supply dependent on the beet—to give the beet a monopoly, and the beet was all subject to the same conditions. If there was any unfavourable climatic condition it affected the whole crop; and the monopolists had the matter almost in their own hands. But the tendency, since the abolition, is to increase the supply of cane, for you have two supplies under different conditions, and you are not liable to the same fluctuations.

I fear I am getting to the end of my time, and I revert to the argument of the hon. Member—that the Convention is responsible for the increase of price because we have prohibited sugar from Russia and the Argentine. Now, I do not like prohibition. I prefer retaliation. You owe prohibition to my right hon. friend the Member for Bristol, who would be admitted by everybody to be a true free-trader, and you owe it to free-trade influence; and as I was indebted to the initiative of my right hon. friend for a reform which I believed was a very great advantage, I respected his view, although I do not agree with prohibition. When the time comes for reconsidering the Convention, if the hon. Member objects to prohibition I shall be with him in a strenuous endeavour to substitute retaliation. That by the way. The influence of the Russian and Argentine import is infinitesimal. I was surprised that the hon. Gentleman attacked my right hon. friend the President of the Board of Trade on an absolutely trumpery difference, and made a point which, to people not acquainted with the figures, might seem a good one, because of imperfect information—not surprising, in the circumstances of the case, and in view of the difficulty of obtaining true statistics of which we have had large experience. I do not profess any infallibility, and I do not grant any infallibility to you, but having had occasion lately to deal with statistics much more than at any previous period of my life, I have found—indeed, I have stated in public in reference to the Board of Trade Returns—how extremely difficult it is in the complicated circumstances of trade to obtain reliable statistics. My right hon. friend admits the error the hon. Gentleman referred to. The error is absolutely insignificant in comparison with the whole amount in question. Let us see what it is. During the last five years the imports into Great Britain of Russian sugar have been 3,000 tons a year, and from Argentina 25,000 tons, 28,000 tons altogether. Now, what does the hon. Gentleman say with his extra information? He said that in 1901 the importation from Russia was 21,000 tons, and I say the average has been 3,000.

*MR. KEARLEY said he mentioned the result of his inquiries from five brokers.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: Oh, I am not going to deal with imaginary figures. In 1902 the amount was 36,000, and I take the two 57,000, as compared with what I suppose is the average, 6,000. Now, what is the consumption of Great Britain ? 1,600,000 tons. What, then, does it matter whether the total is 36,000 or 3,000 a year, either of the amounts are absolutely insignificant in the total consumption ? It is really unworthy of the hon. Member to introduce a little petty correction of that kind. In the same way with Argentina. It cannot be a large amount. The Russians know what they export, and the amount is 160,000 tons to all countries, and Argentina exports 30,000 tons. In these circumstances it is ridiculous to suppose that there has been any considerable increase in price owing to the stopping of these imports. The real fact is, it makes not the slightest difference, for what they would have sent to us has been sent to the Mediterranean, setting free German sugar for importation into this country.

But I must conclude. Not a word would have been said about this matter if the Opposition had not thought they could make political capital out of it. They thought they could mix it up with the fiscal controversy. But it is absolutely irrelevant to that controversy —it has no more to do with it than the Goodwin Sands have to do with Tenterden Steeple. If anything, the Convention is an obstacle to my policy, as it prevents me from giving a preference—I speak as if I had the power—the Convention prevents the giving of any preference in regard to sugar; and I hope that may be altered when the Convention is revised, for I think it would be a wise thing to give a moderate preference to our Colonies to stimulate the production of cane sugar. Why, the Convention is a free-trade institution; it aims at what Cobden desired to secure, that commodities should find markets at their natural prices. Applied to sugar it means that we do not want sugar made artificially cheap; we want it at its natural price. Bounties have been declared to be protection by every free trader until within the last year or two. They were so described by Mr. Gladstone, by Sir William Harcourt, by Lord Farrer, by Lord Avebury—who is the last of these great free-traders living. They have described the system as the worst form of protection. The hon. Member for Chippenham said the right course for us would be to allow bounties to gradually extinguish themselves and not to hasten the process, but what an opinion for a free-trader. No man who called himself a free-trader in the past ever ventured to make a suggestion of that kind. For forty years every Liberal Government has denounced bounties and declared an earnest desire to remove them. During the same period Chambers of Commerce have again and again voted unanimously for a penal clause to remove bounties, and trade unions have done the same thing. I may call attention to the fact that my hon. friend the Member for Morpeth (Mr. Burt) introduced a deputation on the subject, declaring opposition to bounties because, he said, the deputation were free-traders. Because we have succeeded where Liberal Governments have failed these free-traders —new free-traders—turn round on their policy and denounce ours.

And, it being Midnight, the debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed to-morrow.

Adjourned at one minute after Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Tuesday, 28th February, 1905.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

The Lord Chancellor acquainted the House, That the Clerk of the Parliaments had laid upon the Table the Certificates from the Examiners that the further Standing Orders applicable to the following Bills have been complied with:—Metropolitan and Great Central Railway Companies [H.L.]; Southend and Colchester Light Railways [H.L.]; County of London Electric Supply Company [H.L.]; Dearne Valley Railway [H.L.].

The same were ordered to lie on the Table.

BARRYMORE ESTATE.

Petition of the right hon. Arthur Hugh Baron Barrymore, praying leave to introduce a Bill "To enable the Baron Barrymore to restore certain forfeited leases in the town of Tipperary, and for other purposes"; together with a copy of the proposed Bill annexed thereto; read, and referred to the Examiners.

Clyde Navigation (Reconstitution) Bill [H.L.]. Presented, and read 1^a.

Cardiff Railway Bill [H.L.]. Read 2^a; and committed. The Committee to be proposed by the Committee of Selection.

Hastings Harbour District Railway (Abandonment) Bill. Read 2^a; and committed.

Rhymney Railway Bill [H.L.]; Commercial Union Assurance Bill [H.L.]; Clyde Navigation Bill [H.L.]. Read 2^a, and committed. The Committees to be proposed by the Committee of Selection.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSION.

Fifty-seventh Report from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England; with an Appendix. Presented (by Command), and ordered to lie on the Table.

PIERS AND HARBOURS (PROVISIONAL ORDERS).

Report by the Board of Trade of their proceedings under the General Pier and Harbour Act, 1861, and the General Pier and Harbour Act, 1861, Amendment Act. Laid before the House (pursuant to Act), and ordered to lie on the Table.

NAVAL WORKS (PORTSMOUTH BARRACKS SITE) BILL [H.L.].

Report from His Majesty's Attorney-General received, and ordered to lie on the Table.

STREET BETTING BILL [H.L.].

[Second Reading.]

Order of the Day for the Second Reading read.

Lord DAVEY: My Lords, this is identically the same Bill as was passed through your Lordships' House last session, after having been extensively amended at the suggestion of the Government. It is unnecessary, therefore, for me to trouble you with a speech on this occasion. I will merely briefly remind your Lordships that the object of the Bill is to render betting in streets and public places a statutory offence, instead of its being left, as at present, to be dealt with by municipal by-laws. It also increases the penalties which may be imposed on persons found betting in the streets, and for a third offence enables the magistrates to imprison an offender. Since the Bill was before your Lordships I have had a great many communications from magistrates and other people in different parts of the country urging that the Bill should be proceeded with as a very necessary measure. I will not trouble your Lordships by reading all the communications I have received, because it would be a little monotonous, but I will quote some statistics which have been sent to me from Stockton-on-Tees. In that town on one day eighteen so-called commission agents were brought before the magistrates for bookmaking, and of that number one had been convicted thirty times, one twenty-three times, one twenty times, one seventeen times, one sixteen times, two fifteen times, two fourteen times, and so on. One would scarcely believe that such a record could be furnished in one Police Court, and the writer of the extract I have in my hand concludes by stating that—

An Asterisk (*) at the commencement of a Speech indicates revision by the Member.

> "The convicted person pays the fine with a smile on his face, as much as to say to the presiding magistrate, 'It is all right, old man, so long as I know you cannot increase the penalty or send me to prison.'"

My Lords, that is exactly what is proposed to be done by this Bill. I cannot pretend that the Bill can be passed through the House of Commons without the assistance of the Government, and as it is substantially the Bill of the Government, all their Amendments having been embodied in it, I hope I may claim some assistance from the Government in passing it through the other House.

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª."—(Lord Davey.)

On Question, Bill read 2ª, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Thursday next.

CONGESTED DISTRICTS (SCOTLAND) BILL [H.L.].

[SECOND READING.]

Order of the Day for the Second Reading read.

*THE SECRETARY FOR SCOTLAND (The Marquess of LINLITHGOW): My Lords, the Bill which I now ask you to read a second time seeks to enlarge the powers of the Congested Districts Board for Scotland. Section 4 of the original Act of 1897 confers upon the Board certain powers of expenditure of money placed at their disposal, but eight years experience has proved that those powers are insufficient. So long ago as the year 1899 my noble friend Lord Balfour of Burleigh introduced and passed through your Lordships' House a somewhat similar Bill to the one which I now present to you. It went to the House of Commons but did not obtain a Second Reading there. In the year 1893, and again in 1894, a similar measure was introduced into the House of Commons, but did not reach its Second Reading. The provisions of this Bill are briefly these; to enable the Board to make provision for the practical instruction of youths and girls in agriculture, trades, and other industries within the congested districts. Boys are to be taught seamenship, carpentering, tailoring, and other trades, and girls cooking, laundry work, and housework, so that they may be turned out into the world useful citizens, not forgetting, of course, that this practical instruction should only be supplementary in all cases to the ordinary school course. The second provision is to permit grants in aid of public health objects to be given to hospitals, and in respect of medical attendance and nursing in districts where the full statutory public health rate has already been levied or where the burden of general rating is oppressive and local resources are exhausted. In the third place it provides that advances are to be made for the improvement of existing and the erection of new dwellings. The Board are confident that if these powers are granted they will greatly accelerate the improvement which is already showing itself amongst the people in the congested districts. I ought to mention that the Board are by this measure restricted to devoting a maximum of one-fifth of the whole of their funds to the new objects under the Bill. I trust that your Lordships will pass the Bill and that before the end of the session it will become law, for it is a very necessary piece of legislation.

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª."—(The Marquess of Linlithgow.)

On Question, Bill read 2ª, and committed to a Committee of the whole House on Monday next.

RESERVE FORCES BILL [H.L.].

House in Committee (according to order).

[The Earl of ONSLOW in the Chair.]

Bill reported without Amendment.

THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (The Earl of DONOUGHMORE): My Lords, this Bill is in the same form in which it passed your Lordships' House last year, and, as I have said, it embodies the Amendments suggested by the noble Lord opposite (Lord Monkswell). I would therefore ask your Lordships to negative the Standing Committee.

Moved, "That the Standing Committee be negatived."—(The Earl of Donoughmore).

LORD MONKSWELL: I offer no objection to the Motion.

On Question, Standing Committee negatived; and Bill to be read 3ª on Thursday next.

House adjourned at twenty minutes before Five o'clock, to Thursday next half-past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, 28th February, 1905.

The House met at Two of the Clock.

PRIVATE BILL BUSINESS.

PRIVATE BILLS (STANDING ORDER 63 COMPLIED WITH).

Mr. SPEAKER laid upon the Table Report from one of the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills, That, in the case of the following Bills, referred on the First Reading thereof, Standing Order 63 has been complied with, viz.:—Great Berkhampstead Gas Bill; Norwich Union Life Insurance Society Bill; South Oxfordshire Water and Gas Bill.

Ordered, That the Bills be read a second time.

Metropolitan Pneumatic Despatch Bill; Morley Corporation Bill (by Order); Rhondda Urban District Council Bill (by Order), Otley Gas and Improvement Bill (by Order). Read a second time, and committed.

STANDING ORDERS.

Resolutions reported from the Select Committee:—

1. "That, in the case of the Heckmondwike Improvement, Petition for Bill, the Standing Orders ought to be dispensed with. That the parties be permitted to proceed with their Bill, provided that Clauses 10 and 11, and so much of the Preamble as relates thereto, be struck out of the Bill. That the Committee on the Bill do report how far such Order has been complied with."

2. "That, in the case of the Wigan Corporation, Petition for Bill, the Standing Orders ought to be dispensed with. That the parties be permitted to proceed with their Bill, provided that the powers to construct Tramway No. 2 be struck out of the Bill, unless the consent of the Aspull Urban District Council be proved before the Committee on the Bill. That the Committee on the Bill do report how far such Order has been complied with."

3. "That, in the case of the Coventry Electric Tramways, Petition for Bill, the parties have stated their intention not to proceed with their Bill."

First Two Resolutions agreed to.

Report to lie upon the Table.

PETITIONS.

DEORIKAR, KESHO RAO BALVANT.

Petition of Kesho Rao Balvant Deorikar, for redress of grievances; to lie upon the Table.

ILLEGITIMATE BIRTHS IN WORKHOUSES.

Petition from Bradfield, for legislation; to lie upon the Table.

RETURNS, REPORTS, ETC.

BRITISH MUSEUM.

Petition of the Trustees of the British Museum (King's Recommendation signified), for grant in aid; to lie upon the Table.

ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSION.

Copy presented, of Fifty-seventh Report from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England, with an Appendix [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

PRISONS (SCOTLAND).

Copy presented, of Rule made by the Secretary for Scotland as to the appointment of Visiting Committees to the Prisons at Barlinnie, Perth, and Peterhead [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 67.]

AGRICULTURAL AND TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION SCHEMES (IRELAND).

Return presented, relative thereto [ordered 27th June, 1904: Mr. Sullivan]; to lie upon the Table.

PIERS AND HARBOURS (PROVISIONAL ORDERS).

Copy presented, of Report by the Board of Trade of their Proceedings under the General Pier and Harbour Act, 1861, and the General Pier and Harbour Act (1861) Amendment Act, Session 1905 [by Act]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 68.]

TREATY SERIES (No. 5, 1905).

Copy presented, of Convention between the United Kingdom and France respecting Newfoundland and West and Central Africa. Signed at London, 8th April, 1904. Ratifications exchanged at London, 8th December, 1904 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

TREATY SERIES (No. 6, 1905).

Copy presented, of Declaration between the United Kingdom and France respecting Egypt and Morocco. Signed at London, 8th April, 1904 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

TREATY SERIES (No. 7, 1905).

Copy presented, of Declaration between the United Kingdom and France concerning Siam, Madagascar, and the New Hebrides. Signed at London, 8th April, 1904 [by Command]; to lie upon the Table.

CIVIL SERVICES (SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1904–5).

Estimate presented, of the Further Amount required in the year ending 31st March, 1905, for the Irish Land Commission [by Command]; to lie upon the Table, and to be printed. [No. 69.]

DEER FORESTS (HIGHLAND CROFTING COUNTIES).

Return ordered, "giving the name of each Deer Forest in the six Highland Crofting Counties, the amount of its assessment, its acreage for the years 1883, 1898, and 1904, and showing the increase or decrease in the acreage between the years 1898 and 1904, in the following form:—

County.	Name of Deer Forest.	Assessment.	Acreage, 1883.	Acreage, 1898.	Acreage, 1904.	Between 1898 and 1904—		Remarks.
						Increase.	Decrease.

—(Mr. Weir.)

REVENUE (COLLECTION OF TAXES).

Return ordered, "showing for each of the three Kingdoms (1) the amount charged for Income-Tax, Land Tax, and Inhabited House Duty for the financial years 1903, 1904, 1905; and (2) the amounts and percentage of same collected in each country by the 31st day of January and the 28th day of February respectively in each of the said years." —(Mr. McCrae.)

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CIRCULATED WITH THE VOTES.

Report of the Royal Commission on London Traffic.

MR. SCHWANN (Manchester, N.): To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Report of the Committee which has deliberated upon the Street Traffic of London will be laid upon the Table.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Akers-Douglas.) I am informed by the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the means of locomotion and transport in London that they are now considering their Report, but cannot state exactly when it will be presented.

Sale of Surplus Discharged Soldiers' Clothing.

SIR EDWARD STRACHEY (Somersetshire, E.): To ask the Secretary of State for War whether the 17,000 new suits sold or advertised for sale by Messrs. Spencer, Turner, and Boldero at 7s. 11d. each were made by Messrs. Buckley and Sons, Hollington and Co., S. Hamond and Co., and others, for the War Office at 11s. 9d. a suit; and if he will say at what price these suits were sold by the War Office to Messrs. Spencer, Turner, and Boldero, or to the persons from whose hands they passed to Messrs. Spencer, Turner, and Boldero.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Arnold-Forster.) A considerable number of suits of discharged soldiers' clothing which were found surplus to requirements at the close of the South African War were sold by tender; but the firm mentioned in the Question did not tender for the goods. It is not known whether these are the suits in question, nor, if so, how these were obtained.

Case of Private T. Coughlan, Royal Dublin Fusiliers.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN (Kilkenny): To ask the Secretary of State for War what was the charge upon which T. Coughlan, of the Royal Irish Fusiliers, was sentenced to death on June 28th, 1901, and the grounds upon which his sentence was commuted to penal servitude for life, and his release ordered after he served two and a-half years in prison.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Arnold-Forster.) The case of Private T. Coughlan, Royal Dublin Fusiliers, is as follows:—This man killed a comrade by shooting him with a rifle. He was tried on a charge of murder and convicted, but the Court recommended him to mercy "on the grounds that at the time he committed the offence he was beyond the power of self-control, owing to the liquor he had taken without any food, and exhaustion caused by galloping horses about in the heat of the day, he being a man apparently physically and morally weak." The confirming officer thereupon commuted the sentence of death to one of penal servitude for life. The Judge Advocate-General in South Africa considered that "it was a case in which a verdict of manslaughter might properly have been found. There appears to have been an absence of motive." The medical officer who examined Private Coughlan prior to the trial, while certifying him fit for trial, expressed some doubt as to his mental condition. In all the circumstances the Commander-in-Chief considered, when reviewing the case in August, 1903, "that this man might be released on the 21st December, when he will have been in prison two and a-half years." The release was ordered accordingly.

Changes Necessitated by Adoption of New Guns.

COLONEL NOLAN (Galway, N.): To ask the Secretary of State for War, why does the adoption of a new field gun necessitate the expense of new wagons; also, why does the change to a quick-firer necessitate a change in harness; and what is the difference between the new pattern and the old pattern harness.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Arnold-Forster.) The introduction of fixed ammunition for the new field gun necessitates a different arrangement in the wagons for carrying it. The new wagons are made of bullet-proof steel to enable them to be placed near the guns in action and to facilitate rapid supply. As regards harness the change has been already adopted for present equipments, and no further change is necessitated by the new gun. The new harness has breast collar instead of the neck collar used with the old pattern and is lighter. Parts of the old harness are retained in the new.

Brigading of Highland Light Infantry.

MR. MALCOLM (Suffolk, Stowmarket): To ask the Secretary of State for War why the Highland Light Infantry has been detached from the other Highland regiments and is to be brigaded with Lowland regiments at the Hamilton depôt; why, if one Highland regiment had to be thus detached, the second senior regiment was chosen; and whether the distinction of wearing the trews, granted to the Highland Light Infantry for their valour in the Peninsular War, militates against their being brigaded with the other kilted regiments.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Arnold-Forster.) The organisation effected by the Special Army Order of January 6th has apparently been misinterpreted. The Highland Light Infantry has not been detached from the other Highland regiments, or brigaded with Lowland regiments. The 26/71 regimental district remains as hitherto with a double depôt at Hamilton. The Army Order does not brigade, but merely groups under one officer existing regimental districts which are conveniently situated.

Abandonment by the Admiralty of Mine Fields and Quick-Firing Batteries.

SIR CHARLES DILKE (Gloucestershire, Forest of Dean): To ask the Secretary to the Admiralty whether, having regard to the announcements of the representatives of the War Office on the Military Works Bills of 1897 and 1899 that the War Office had been obliged to propose the greater part of an expenditure of several millions, afterwards agreed to in those Acts, under urgent pressure from the Navy, the present Board of Admiralty propose to institute a change of policy leading to the abandonment of mine fields and quick-firing batteries; and, if so, when a statement will be made upon the subject.

(Answered by Mr. Pretyman.) It is not proposed, so far as the Admiralty are aware, to abandon quick-firing batteries, nor is it proposed to abandon electric lights in cases where the latter are essential to the efficiency of the gun defence. The question of mine defence is under consideration.

Cost of Sending Seamen from the United Kingdom to their Homes Abroad.

MR. LAWRENCE (Liverpool, Abercromby): To ask the President of the Local Government Board what Department of His Majesty's Government, and under what Act, brought to Liverpool negro sailors who deserted from their ship in the Azores; and whether he has suggested or will suggest to such Department that it should reimburse the expenditure of the Liverpool Select Vestry incurred in sending them to their homes.

(Answered by Mr. Gerald Balfour.) These distressed seamen from the West Indies were relieved at Fayal and Lisbon, and were sent to this country by the Consul at Lisbon under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act administered by the Board of Trade. There were no opportunities of sending the men to the West Indies either from Fayal or from Lisbon, and there are no funds at the disposal of the Board of Trade to which the cost of sending seamen from the United Kingdom to their homes abroad can be charged.

Channel Fleet—Suggested Visit to Portree.

MR. JOHN DEWAR (Inverness): To ask the Secretary to the Admiralty whether arrangements will be made for the Channel Fleet to visit Portree, Isle of Skye, this summer, so that recruiting for the Royal Navy in the Western Highlands may be encouraged.

(Answered by Mr. Pretyman.) The suggestion to visit Portree will be kept in view in the event of the Channel Fleet proceeding on a cruise in Scottish waters during the year.

Wei-hai-Wei—Expenditure.

MR. BRIGHT (Shropshire, Oswestry): To ask the Secretary to the Admiralty what has been the expenditure to date on the naval station at Wei-hai-Wei; and what further expenditure is at present contemplated upon that station.

(Answered by Mr. Pretyman.) The expenditure to date, in round figures, is £93,000. During the ensuing year 1905–6 it is estimated that a sum of £7,560 will be required, which is mainly for dredging operations.

Audit of Irish Public Accounts—Transfer to Dublin.

MR. FIELD (Dublin, St. Patrick): To ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether favourable consideration has been given to the question of the transfer of the audit of the Irish Public Accounts from London to Dublin; and, if so, when it is proposed to effect the change.

(Answered by Mr. Victor Cavendish.) No change has taken place in the position of this matter since the replies to the Questions of the hon. Member for Limerick, East, on June 29th,[†] 1903. It is doubtful whether any saving could be made by transfer of the audit to Dublin; but if any should arise it would not compensate for the inconvenience of the absence of direct supervision of work and of personal conference with the officers engaged on it.

Irish Post Office Accounts—Transfer to Dublin.

MR. FIELD: To ask the Postmaster-General whether favourable consideration has been given to the question of the transfer of that part of the Post Office Savings Bank dealing with Irish accounts from London to Dublin; and, if so, when it is proposed to effect the change.

(Answered by Lord Stanley.) As the hon. Member was informed in reply to a Question on June 30th,[‡] 1903, it is more convenient and economical to keep the Savings Bank accounts at one central institution; and greater facilities are afforded in this way for making or withdrawing deposits at any office in the United Kingdom than would be possible if the Irish accounts were dealt with in Dublin. It is not, therefore, proposed to make any change in the present system.

MR. FIELD: To ask the Postmaster-General whether, in view of the fact that the Irish postal orders paid in Great Britain, and vice versa, form a very small percentage of the whole, he will arrange, in the interests of economy, to have all the clerical work in connection with Irish postal orders done in Dublin.

(Answered by Lord Stanley.) The present system, under which all postal orders form a continuous series and are audited in London, is at once the most economical and the most convenient, and I see no reason to make any change.

Printing of Irish Post Office Documents on Irish Paper in Dublin.

MR. FIELD: To ask the Postmaster-General whether, in view of the fact that a stores branch already exists in Dublin, and that labour is as cheap, if not cheaper, and more required in Ireland than in England, he will arrange that all Post Office documents shall be printed on Irish-manufactured paper in Dublin.

(Answered by Lord Stanley.) As I informed the hon. Member on February 4th.[§] 1904, printing work arising out of postal business in Ireland is already done in that country so far as is consistent with economy and efficiency. As regards the paper used for such printing, I am informed by the Stationery Office that it is their practice to invite Irish firms to tender with others for supplies of paper required for the public service. Such firms have, of course, an advantage in tendering for paper for delivery in Dublin; and it is open to them to tender for the supplies needed for use in all parts of the United Kingdom. In response to a recent invitation for tenders for sixty different sorts of paper for the public service forty-five tenders were received, but only one was from an Irish firm.

Delay in Belfast to Londonderry Telephone Extension.

MR. O'DOHERTY (Donegal, N.): To ask the Postmaster-General if he will state the cause of the delay in the extension of the trunk telephone system from Belfast to Londonderry; has any progress as yet been made with the extension; and, if so, when may the citizens of Londonderry expect to be placed in communication with the trunk system throughout the kingdom.

(Answered by Lord Stanley.) A considerable amount of work is involved in the extension of the telephone trunk system to Londonderry, but substantial progress has been made, and I hope to have the work completed about the end of April. I am informed by the National Telephone Company that they have recently concluded an agreement with the Corporation of Londonderry which will enable the company to convert their exchange system in Londonderry into a double wire system suitable for use with the trunk lines, and that the company hope to complete the work of reconstruction in about three months.

[†] See (4) Debates, cxxiv., 797.

[‡] See (4) Debates, cxxiv., 926.

[§] See (4) Debates, cxxix., 357.

Reduction of Trunk Telephone Charge.

Mr. SLOAN (Belfast, S.): To ask the Postmaster-General if he will consider the advisability of reducing the present charge over the trunk telephone lines through the United Kingdom so that the commercial community of Great Britain may in this respect have similar advantages as received by Continental nations.

(Answered by Lord Stanley.) The average payment for a conversation over the telephone trunk system of the United Kingdom is less than 6d., and having regard to the cost of the trunk lines and to the difficult conditions to which the construction of those lines is subject in this country, I am not prepared to recommend any reduction in the present scale of charges. New trunk lines are filled with traffic almost as soon as they are opened, and it is difficult to keep pace with the demand for increased facilities even at the present rates. The charges in other European countries are subject to conditions which do not obtain here. For instance, in most countries in order to obtain prompt communication the public have to pay three times the ordinary rate; and in one important country, at least, the capital for construction is provided without interest by local authorities or by commercial bodies and not by the administration which conducts the service. I may, perhaps, mention that in the United States the charges for the same distances are much higher than in this country.

Post Office—Promotion of Second-Class Engineers.

Mr. SCHWANN: To ask the Postmaster-General whether he is aware that certain officers of the engineering department sat for an examination and passed for the positions of second-class engineers in April, 1904; whether these officers have received promotion, seeing that other persons examined on November 8th, for the same positions, have received appointments; whether he is aware that the men examined in April, 1904, have been in the Department for many years and have rendered good service to the Department, whilst the men promoted as a result of the November examination are juniors who have had to be taught their duties since their entry into the engineering department; and, if so, will he redress any well-founded grievance which he may find to exist.

(Answered by Lord Stanley.) The officers to whom the hon. Member refers underwent a Departmental examination to test their eligibility for promotion within the service. This examination, unlike the examination of the Civil Service Commission, is conducted without reference to the number of vacancies in existence. After the officers have passed, they are promoted from time to time as suitable vacancies occur. The persons who are described by the hon. Member as "juniors" were outside the service, and passed a competitive examination before the Civil Service Commissioners for specific vacancies which had been reserved for open competition. I am not aware of any grievance created by these circumstances. Any of the officers in question who are duly qualified will be promoted as vacancies among the appointments reserved for persons in the service become available.

Post Office Wages Committee—Alleged Failure to Comply with Terms of Reference.

Mr. SHACKLETON (Lancashire, Clitheroe): To ask the Postmaster-General if there has been any correspondence between the Post Office and Sir Edward Bradford's Committee dealing with the question of the alleged failure ot the Committee to comply with the terms of reference; and, if so, will he lay it upon the Table.

(Answered by Lord Stanley.) There has been no official correspondence with Sir Edward Bradford's Committee on the subject mentioned by the hon. Member. I have had some private correspondence with Sir Edward Bradford on the subject, but I do not propose to lay this upon the Table.

Inspection of Meat.

MR. FIELD: To ask the President of the Local Government Board whether he is aware that a master butcher in Ealing recently purchased a number of pigs in the Central Meat Market, Smithfield, London, E.C., which he was informed were Norfolk pigs, slaughtered at Islington Market where they would undergo examination in the ordinary course, and having purchased these pigs at top market price they were delivered at Ealing, where the inspector condemned two heads as being affected with tuberculosis, as a result a summons is now pending with a view to secure a criminal conviction; and whether he will make inquiries in this case in order to ensure uniformity of inspection, and thereby safeguard a trader from criminal proceedings in respect of meat purchased bonâ fide, passed by one inspector and subsequently confiscated by the inspector in another district.

(Answered by Mr. Walter Long.) I have made inquiry with respect to this matter. I understand that the pigs were not cut up at the Islington Market or at the Central Meat Market, and the medical officer of health for the City points out that it was quite possible that disease which would not show itself in the carcase would become apparent after cutting up. I am informed that proceedings in the case are now pending before the justices, and hence I cannot take any further action with regard to it. But I may state that one of the medical inspectors of the Department is engaged in inquiring into the methods of meat inspection in London with a view of reporting to me on the subject. I may add that the Ealing Town Council have issued a circular to the butchers in the borough, in which they state that the sanitary inspector may, at the request of a butcher, visit his premises and inspect any meat which has been delivered to him, as to the condition of which he may be doubtful, and that, in the event of any of it being found to be diseased, the inspector will take steps to have it destroyed in manner prescribed by law. The town council point out that in such a case the risk of exposing for sale meat unfit for human consumption would be minimised.

Arsenical Poisoning—Adoption of the Recommendations of the Royal Commission.

SIR CUTHBERT QUILTER (Suffolk, Sudbury): To ask the President of the Local Government Board whether he is now able to announce the course it is proposed to adopt with a view to giving effect to the large and important recommendations of the Royal Commission on Arsenical Poisoning, more especially with regard to the appointment of a special expert officer to inquire into and advise upon all questions affecting the purity of manufactured, preserved, or prepared foods, whether of home or foreign origin.

(Answered by Mr. Walter Long.) I have given consideration to this subject, and I am making arrangements with regard to the matter referred to in the latter part of the Question which I hope will take effect at the commencement of the ensuing financial year.

Agricultural Rating Bill—Date of Introduction.

SIR WALTER THORBURN (Peebles and Selkirk): To ask the President of the Local Government Board if he can say at which period of the session the Government will introduce a Bill to renew the Agricultural Rating Act.

(Answered by Mr. Walter Long.) I hope to introduce the Bill at an early date.

Death Certificates for Members of Trade Unions and Friendly Societies—Assimilation of Charges.

COLONEL SADLER (Middlesbrough): To ask the President of the Local Government Board whether, in view of the fact that the charge made for certificates of death for members of trade unions is 2s. 7d. each, while the charge made for a member of a friendly society is 1s., he will consider the advisability of making the charge uniformly 1s. in both cases.

(Answered by Mr. Walter Long.) I will take note of this suggestion, but legislation would be necessary in order to give effect to it.

Case of Mr. John Godden.

SIR ERNEST FLOWER (Bradford, W.): To ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs if he can explain the reasons which caused the Foreign Office, after their protest and demand in 1887, to accept as decisive in the case of Mr. John Godden, a British subject, the opinion of Mr. De Brauw, a Dutch lawyer moving in Government circles, although the Law Officers of the Crown had in 1887 declared that they differed from Mr. De Brauw.

(Answered by Earl Percy.) On further consideration of the facts submitted to them the Law Officers saw reason to alter the opinion they had originally expressed.

Sugar Imports.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): To ask the President of the Board of Trade can he say what were the total imports in cwts. of sugar into the United Kingdom during the year 1904, and what were the imports in that year respectively from Russia, Argentine Republic, Denmark, Chile, Peru, the British West India Islands, British Guiana, and Cuba respectively.

(Answered by Mr. Gerald Balfour.) The total imports of sugar into the United Kingdom in 1904 amounted to 32,289,443 cwts. The following shows the quantities imported from the countries mentioned in the Question, and also the quantities actually consigned to the United Kingdom from those countries:—

Countries.	Quantities imported from the countries named.	Quantities consigned from the countries named.
	Cwts.	Cwts.
Russia	—	—
Argentine Republic	—	—
Denmark	—	—
Chile	24,409	—
Peru	1,017,537	1,051,830
British West India Islands	705,248	685,006
British Guiana	340,742	282,819
Cuba	—	349

Price of Sugar in Great Britain, Argentina, and the Continent.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: To ask the President of the Board of Trade can he state the present price of similar kinds of sugar in Germany, Austria-Hungary, Belgium, France, Holland, Russia, Denmark, the Argentine Republic, and Great Britain respectively.

(Answered by Mr. Gerald Balfour.) If the hon. Member will move for a Return, specifying the date and the kinds of sugar for which he desires the prices to be stated, and whether wholesale or retail, inclusive or exclusive of duty, I will see what can be done to supply the information.

World's Production of Beet and Cane Sugar.

MR. PARTINGTON (Derbyshire, High Peak): To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he can give the World's production of beet and cane sugars in weight and values for the last ten years, and the amount from each producing country.

(Answered by Mr. Gerald Balfour.) Complete official information as to the quantities of beet and cane sugars produced is not available, and there is no information as to values.

Attendance at Church as School Attendance.

MR. FREDERICK WILSON (Norfolk, Mid.): To ask the Secretary to the Board of Education whether, in cases where a school attendance authority makes by-laws counting the attendance of children at church as attendance at school, the Board of Education will recognise the practice.

(Answered by Sir William Anson.) If a school attendance authority, by by-law or otherwise, signify their readiness to regard attendance of children at church as attendance at school, during the time allowed for religious instruction, either generally or on certain days, the Board would not withhold approval from time-tables on which entries of such attendance appeared.

Bishop's Stortford College—Dismissal of Mr. Kitchener.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.): To ask the Secretary to the Board of Education whether his attention has been directed to the dismissal of Mr. Kitchener, assistant master in The College, Bishop's Stortford, formerly known as the Nonconformist Grammar School, on the ground of his having become a Catholic; and that, in the letter of dismissal, it is stated by the headmaster that the school was founded with very definite religious aims, that parents have been asked to send their sons there because those are the aims, and that the presence of a Catholic master was inconsistent with those aims; and, if so, whether seeing that The College, Bishop's Stortford, is aided by a contribution from the Hertfordshire County Council, he will state whether he proposes to take any, and, if any, what action in the matter.

(Answered by Sir William Anson.) The College is not aided by the Board, and, as at present advised, I do not consider that this is a matter in which the Board can properly intervene.

Coal Exports—Revenue and Exemptions from Coal Tax.

SIR WALTER PLUMMER (Newcastle-on-Tyne): To ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will state the amount of coal tax at each shipping port in the United Kingdom in the year ending December 31st, 1904, and the total quantity exported in that year from each of such ports of coal on which tax was remitted on the ground that its value did not exceed 6s. per ton.

(Answered by Mr. Austen Chamberlain.) The following table gives the information for which the hon. Member asks:—

Port.	Net Amount of Coal Tax.	Total Quantity of Exported Coal on which the Tax was remitted on the ground that its value was not exceeding 6s. per ton.
	£	Tons.
London - - - - - - -	4,977	—
Liverpool - - - - - - -	12,820	42,437
Blyth (including Amble) - - - -	111,840	886,849
Boston - - - - - - -	4,833	—
Bristol - - - - - - -	684	—
Cardiff - - - - - - -	617,703	2,173,281
Chester - - - - - - -	13	—
Dartmouth - - - - - -	5	—
Fleetwood - - - - - - -	10	105
Gloucester - - - - - - -	4	—
Carried Forward	752,889	3,102,672

Port.	Net Amount of Coal Tax.	Total Quantity of Exported Coal on which the Tax was remitted on the ground that its value was not exceeding 6s. per ton.
	£	Tons.
Brought forward - - -	752,889	3,102,672
Goole - - - - - - -	27,230	151,325
Grimsby - - - - - - -	44,757	22,187
Hartlepool - - - - - - -	27,153	5,046
Hull - - - - - - - -	74,686	140,047
Ipswich - - - - - - -	73	—
Llanelly - - - - - - -	9,488	65,607
Lynn - - - - - - - -	4,005	616
Manchester - - - - - -	3,773	14,103
Maryport - - - - - - -	86	—
Middlesbrough - - - - - -	2,907	72
Milford - - - - - - -	11	—
Newport (Mon.) - - - - - -	146,703	254,559
Plymouth - - - - - - -	104	—
Portsmouth - - - - - -	21	—
Port Talbot - - - - - -	34,783	71,827
Preston - - - - - - -	79	—
Runcorn - - - - - - -	171	—
Southampton - - - - - -	8	—
Stockton - - - - - - -	32	—
Sunderland - - - - - -	114,253	130,173
Swansea - - - - - - -	66,319	430,922
Tyne Ports - - - - - -	400,042	681,755
Weymouth - - - - - -	—	—
Wisbeach - - - - - - -	9	—
Workington - - - - - -	4	—
Aberdeen - - - - - - -	3	—
Alloa - - - - - - - -	10,208	—
Arbroath - - - - - - -	5	—
Ardrossan - - - - - - -	2,052	970
Ayr - - - - - - - -	134	—
Bo'ness - - - - - - -	24,155	45,209
Dundee - - - - - - -	99	—
Glasgow - - - - - - -	69,454	66,819
Grangemouth - - - - - -	54,211	113,212
Granton - - - - - - -	3,970	7,240
Greenock - - - - - - -	1,218	183
Irvine - - - - - - -	51	—
Kirkcaldy - - - - - - -	96,358	224,578
Kirkwall - - - - - - -	5	—
Leith - - - - - - -	26,000	69,100
Lerwick - - - - - - -	1	—
Methil - - - - - - -	42,824	99,602
Montrose - - - - - - -	1	—
Peterhead - - - - - - -	1	—
Troon - - - - - - -	2,595	2,929
Limerick - - - - - - -	1	—
Total - - -	2,042,932	5,700,753

Closing of Cooper's Hill College—Instruction for Indian Forest Service.

SIR JOHN GORST (Cambridge University): To ask the Secretary of State for India whether, in view of the closing of Cooper's Hill College, it has been determined to give a temporary monopoly of the instruction of forest students to the University of Oxford; if so, whether this scheme is a strictly temporary expedient for one year only, and whether in a permanent scheme the graduates of all Universities in the United Kingdom will enjoy equal opportunities for entering the Indian Forest Service; and whether he will lay the correspondence on this subject and the regulations for entrance and instruction of Indian forest students upon the Table of the House.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Brodrick.) The details of the scheme are still under consideration, and I will ask my right hon. friend to repeat his Question shortly.

Indian Army Reorganisation—Lord Kitchener's Proposals.

MR. BUCHANAN (Perthshire, E.): To ask the Secretary of State for India whether Lord Kitchener's proposals for Army reorganisation in India have been adopted by the Government of India; what is their estimated cost: and will Papers on the subject be laid before the House.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Brodrick.) Lord Kitchener's proposals for Army reorganisation in India have been accepted in general principle, but details are not yet thoroughly worked out; it is therefore impossible to give their estimated cost, and at present Papers on the subject cannot be laid before the House. I have agreed to the Government of India making a provision for special military expenditure in the Budget of 1905–6.

Dredging of Galway Docks.

MR. CHARLES DEVLIN (Galway): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, when were representations first made to the Board of Works with respect to the docks at Galway filling up with sand and rendering access to steamers almost impossible; whether, seeing that complaints have been forwarded by the Limerick Steamship Company that their steamers cannot now enter at times, and in view of the fact that a dredger was promised two years ago, he will say when one will be available for the Galway Docks.

(Answered by Mr. Victor Cavendish.) Representations were first made to the Board of Works in July, 1900, and the Board then offered to hire to the Harbour Commissioners a grabber steam crane and grab. The Commissioners declined the offer. The Board are unaware that any promise was given to lend a dredger, but an application for the hire of the dredger recently acquired was received from the Harbour Commissioners on the 22nd instant, and is now under consideration. Owing to previous applications, however, the dredger will not be available for work at Galway for some time to come.

Swine Fever—Dr. Gibbon's Herd—Compensation for Losses.

MR. FFRENCH (Wexford, S.): To ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been called to correspondence published between Dr. E. A. Gibbon, of Sleedagh, county Wexford, and Mr. T. P. Gill, secretary to the Agricultural Department of Ireland, on the subject of an order given by the latter for the destruction of Dr. Gibbon's herd of pigs because his boar had been with a sow belonging to Mr. Stafford, Baldwinstown Castle, which was subsequently slaughtered for swine fever, and no disease found; whether he is aware that, in consequence of Dr. Gibbon's refusal to slaughter his herd, the Department quarantined his entire stock for three months, thereby putting on him a loss in respect of extra feeding of animals that were fit to sell; whether he is aware that, although the disease was suspected in Stafford's herd on December 16th, the suspected animals were not slaughtered till January 18th, a period of over a month, during which no quarantine was in force in his case; whether he is also aware that Stafford's labourers' pigs as well as his own were slaughtered, and no disease found; and, if so, will he direct an inquiry into these cases, with a view to give Dr. Gibbon compensation for his losses.

(Answered by Mr. Atkinson for Mr. Wyndham.) The facts are substantially as stated in the Question. Owing to the absence of regulations by the local authorities controlling the movement of swine generally in each county in Ireland, the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries of Great Britain recently passed an Order interfering with the free admission of swine from Ireland into Great Britain, and the Irish Department would not feel justified in relaxing any precautions which its professional officers advise as necessary to guard against possible extensions of the disease in any district where it may occur. The case has been dealt with in accordance with established practice. It is proposed to have a final inspection on or about March 9th of the swine belonging to Dr. Gibbon. The restriction period of three months deemed necessary will then have expired, and if the swine are certified by the veterinary inspector to be free from disease the restrictions will be removed. Loss stated to arise from the operation of restrictions is one of the ordinary risks attending the keeping of swine, and is not a matter in respect of which the Department can entertain a claim for compensation.

Yeomanry Ammunition Allowances.

SIR JOHN KENNAWAY (Devonshire, Honiton): To ask the Secretary of State for War whether, in calculating the allowance of free ammunition to county Volunteer associations for their annual meetings, the Yeomanry within the county shall be reckoned as if they formed a part of the Volunteer force; and if he would issue a Memorandum to this effect.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Arnold-Forster.) The question referred to by my hon. friend is under consideration, and it is not possible at present to give a decisive reply.

Somaliland Field Force.

MR. BUCHANAN: To ask the Secretary of State for War what is the military force at present in Somaliland, and whether he has any information to the effect that the Mullah is again active in the neighbourhood of Obbia.

(Answered by Mr. Secretary Arnold-Forster.) The troops quartered in the Protectorate are:—

	Companies.	Fighting men.
33rd Punjaub Infantry	8	750
6th King's African Rifles	5	500
Total	13	1,250

The reply to the last paragraph is in the negative.

QUESTIONS IN THE HOUSE.

Skye and Barra—Royal Naval Reserve Batteries.

MR. JOHN DEWAR (Inverness): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Admiralty if he will state the cause of the delay in proceeding with the erection of Royal Naval Reserve batteries in the Islands of Skye and Barra; and will he say when the work will be commenced.

THE SECRETARY TO THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. PRETYMAN, Suffolk, Woodbridge): As will be explained in the First Lord's Memorandum to be circulated with the Navy Estimates, the full numbers of the Royal Naval Reserve have been completed, whilst the growth of the Royal Fleet Reserve seems to make it possible that the further increase in the Royal Naval Reserve at one time contemplated will not now be required. Under these circumstances it is necessary for the Board of Admiralty to review afresh the whole distribution of Royal Naval Reserve batteries, and the particular batteries referred to in the hon. Member's Question will be fully considered with others.

Flogging on H.M.S. "Berwick."

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Admiralty whether he is aware that in August last a boy named Thomas Jones was tried by Court-martial on board the cruiser "Berwick," and convicted of the stealing of two Post Office orders and of desertion, and was sentenced to dismissal from the service, and to receive twenty-four lashes of the birch; and that this flogging, notwithstanding the dismissal of the prisoner from the Navy, was actually inflicted; and, if so, what explanation can be given by the naval authorities, having regard to the defence and justification of the flogging of boys in the Royal Navy, in the interests of the service, and for the good of the boys themselves.

MR. PRETYMAN: The facts are as stated in the first part of the hon. Member's Question. No explanation seems necessary, as the punishment was in accordance with the principles quoted by the hon. Member.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Is not the hon. Gentleman well aware that punishment of that kind cannot be inflicted by a civil Court, yet it was inflicted when this boy had been dismissed the Navy.

MR. PRETYMAN made no reply.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: I must press for an Answer. I am entitled to one.

MR. PRETYMAN: The hon. Member made a statement, but did not put a Question.

Bloemfontein Fire.

MR. WHITLEY (Halifax): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War what is the estimated loss incurred by the fire in the military stores at Bloemfontein in the last week of January, and is the loss covered by insurance?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. ARNOLD-FORSTER, Belfast, W.): The approximate loss sustained by the fire mentioned in the Question is £26,000, and the loss is not covered by any insurance. As the hon. Member is aware, in these matters the Government takes its own risks.

Colonel Morgan.

MR. CHARLES HOBHOUSE (Bristol, E.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War whether Colonel Morgan has denied that he had anything to do with the alleged improper sale of warlike stores in South Africa; and, if so, whether any responsibility attaches to Colonel Hipwell, or any other person in the department of the Director of Supplies in connection with such sale.

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: I cannot undertake to reply to any Questions connected with this matter until the case has been decided in the Courts.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: Has the War Office placed any obligation on this gentleman to prosecute the action?

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: The actions are being prosecuted. The War Office is satisfied of that.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: And what steps are being taken by the War Office to prevent the evidence against this man being destroyed?

[No Answer was returned.]

Altcar Rifle Range.

COLONEL PILKINGTON (Lancashire, Newton): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War whether his attention has been drawn to the closing of the rifle range at Altcar by order of the General Officer Commanding the North-Western District, which will seriously inconvenience all the Volunteer corps in the Liverpool district, the majority of whom have no other range, and cannot, therefore, perform the stipulated course of musketry for the current year unless the range is re-opened at once; and, if so, whether he will state what prospect there is of the range being available this summer, if any; or, if it is to be closed this year, whether it is likely to become so permanently.

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: The General Officer Commanding reports that the interruption of the use of the range, which is a private one, has been caused by the inability of the landlord to come to terms with the landlord of the property behind the targets; that the War Department has intervened to promote the continued use of the range; but that firing has been temporarily suspended pending the conclusion of arrangements for safety. He anticipates, however, that the range will be reopened at an early date.

Volunteer Capitation Grant.

MR. FULLER (Wiltshire, Westbury): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for War whether he will, in considering the abolition of the per capita grant for the Volunteers, at the same time consider the advisability of extending the proposed arrangement to the Imperial Yeomanry.

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER: There is no intention of altering the present system under which the Yeomanry and Volunteers are mainly financed by means of grants-in-aid in the form of capitation allowances.

Transvaal War Loan.

*MR. McCRAE (Edinburgh, E.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies if he can state whether the revenues of the Transvaal and Orange River Colony are large enough to meet the necessary annual contribution for the redemption of a first instalment of £10,000,000 of the proposed Transvaal loan.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. LYTTELTON, Warwick and Leamington): The figures which I gave in my reply to the hon. Member for East Perthshire on Monday last† of the estimated revenue and expenditure for June, 1904–June, 1905, and the results for the half-year ended December 31st, 1904, do not show a sufficient margin at present.

*MR. McCRAE: Has the right hon. Gentleman taken the Chancellor of the Exchequer into his confidence?

MR. LYTTELTON: Yes, Sir

MR. WHITLEY: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies if he has addressed any communication to the Transvaal Government urging the desirability of an early payment of the first instalment of the promised war contribution.

MR. LYTTELTON: I have already stated, in reply to a similar Question on the 22nd instant,‡ that I am not prepared to make any statement on this subject.

SIR ALBERT ROLLIT (Islington, S.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies what, if any, were the conditions attaching to the South African War Contribution Loan of £30,000,000; were there any restrictions as to the period of issue; what was the exact nature of the guarantee, and who were the guarantors; and when is it proposed to issue the loan.

MR. LYTTELTON: The offer to the late Colonial Secretary and the arrangement on behalf of the guaranteeing firms will be found at page 21 of Cd. 1552 and page 2 of Cd. 1895. As to the conditions, restrictions, nature of guarantee and names of guarantors, I would refer my hon. friend to Cd. 1895 and to the speech of my right hon. friend the Member for West Birmingham on May 6th,§ 1903. As to when it is proposed to issue the loan I am as yet unable to make any statement

*MR. McCRAE: Will the surviving guarantors be liable for the whole of the £10,000,000 if some of the guarantors die, or are unable to meet their obligations?

MR. LYTTELTON: I must ask for notice of that Question.

MR. WHITLEY asked whether, in his speech of May 6th, 1903, the right hon. Member for West Birmingham did not say that the £35,000,000 which we had already advanced was conditional on and went along with the £30,000,000 which the Transvaal now showed no intention of paying.

MR. LYTTELTON: The speech of my right hon. friend contained several conditions under which this war contribution was promised, and they appear in that speech. The suggestion the hon. Member has made is not a full or otherwise than a misleading account of the whole speech.

MR. WHITLEY: Does the right hon. Gentleman deny that these words were used—"conditional on"——

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! The hon. Member cannot on this Question discuss what took place in a previous debate.

---

† See page 591.

‡ See page 891.

§ See (4) Debates, cxxi., 1522.

MR. WHITLEY: But in his Answer the right hon. Gentleman refers to that speech.

*MR. SPEAKER: That is true, but it does not entitle the hon. Member to cross-examine a Minister as to its contents.

DR. MACNAMARA (Camberwell, N.): Will the Colonial Secretary recommend the Chancellor of the Exchequer to grant a similar indulgence to the income-tax payers at home.

[No Answer was returned.]

Transvaal Mining Profits.

MR. WHITLEY: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies if he can state what were the declared profits of the Transvaal gold mines for the year ending December 31st, 1904; and what amount the Transvaal Treasury received on account of the profit tax for the same period.

MR. LYTTELTON: The information desired for the calendar year 1904 has not reached me.

MR. ROSE (Cambridgeshire, Newmarket): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies if he can state approximately the revenue derived by the Government of the Transvaal for the year ending December, 1904, from taxes imposed on gold mines and from taxes and its share of profits in respect of the Premier Diamond Mine, respectively.

MR. LYTTELTON: The desired information for the calendar year 1904 has not reached me. The receipts from the profit tax on gold mines during the financial year July, 1903, to June, 1904, amounted to £343,014. No revenue has yet been derived from the Premier Diamond Mine. The Government is not entitled under the Ordinance to receive any share of the net produce of a mine for precious stones until the whole amount of capital with certain interest has been set off.

Lascar Seamen's Conviction at Sydney.

SIR MANCHERJEE BHOWNAGGREE (Bethnal Green, N.E.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies if he is aware that, on the 22nd instant, ten Lascar seamen, forming part of the crew of the Orient Company's steamer "Ortona," were taken before a magistrate at Sydney, just as the vessel was on the point of leaving the port, on a charge of smuggling walking-canes valued at about sixpence each, which it was shown in evidence a Customs officer had induced them to sell him; that the magistrate, while obliged technically to convict them, imposed the minimum fine and denounced the charge as trivial; that the Orient Company, regarding the action as a malicious attempt on the part of the local authorities to compel it to desist from employing Lascar seamen on its vessels, paid the fine subject to appeal; and, if so, whether he will state what steps, if any, he intends taking in the matter.

MR. LYTTELTON: I have no information as to the incident referred to by the hon. Member, but I will ask the Governor-General of Australia for a report on the subject.

SIR MANCHERJEE BHOWNAGGREE: Will the right hon. Gentleman cable for information?

MR. LYTTELTON: Yes.

Lord Milner.

MR. JOHN ELLIS (Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether the Government have now decided to bring Lord Milner's tenure of office, as High Commissioner in South Africa, to a close; and, in that case, what date is it proposed to terminate it.

MR. LYTTELTON: Neither now nor at any time have His Majesty's Government decided or wished to bring Lord Milner's tenure of office in South Africa to a close.

Education in Ceylon.

MR. WEIR (Ross and Cromarty): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies if he will ascertain from the Governor of Ceylon whether it is practicable to adopt the suggestion of Mr. Howard, the present Director of Public Instruction, and establish central schools to serve more than one estate; and will he state the approximate cost of establishing schools under the grant-in-aid system on or near estates throughout the planting districts.

MR. WEIR: I beg also to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he will consider the expediency of recommending the Governor of Ceylon to appoint inspectors with a knowledge of Tamil to visit and report periodically on all existing schools on Ceylon estates, including the so-called line schools which received no Government grant.

MR. LYTTELTON: The Governor has informed me that there is no intention of abandoning the proposal to group estates for school purposes where that is found to be a convenient course. He has appointed a Commission to deal with the whole subject of coolie education, and I have requested that their report may be submitted to me without undue delay. I have no doubt that the question of appointing inspectors with a knowledge of Tamil will be considered by the Commission.

Lord Curzon.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether Lord Curzon of Kedleston, who, on his departure from India, had, in accordance with statutory provisions, ipso facto vacated the position of Governor-General of India, was, for several months during his residence in this country and previous to his reappointment to the Governor-Generalship of India, practically discharging from this country the functions appertaining to the office of Viceroy, and directing and dictating the policy of the Indian Government in its controversy with the Imperial Government with reference to the Tibetan Expedition as to the terms of the treaty with Tibet; whether confidential communications between the India Office and the Acting Viceroy of India were open to the perusal of Lord Curzon when in this country; and whether there is any and, if so, what precedent for the active interference in the government and policy of India of a person holding no official position, and irresponsible to Parliament, and exempt from its criticism.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA (Mr. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford): It is not the case that Lord Curzon, while he was in this country, practically discharged the functions appertaining to the office of Viceroy. During that time His Majesty's Government were in frequent consultation with him on matters relating to India, including Tibet, and many confidential documents were shown to him; but as long as he held no official position he took no official part in the government of India. His Majesty's Government were glad to avail themselves of the experience which Lord Curzon had recently gained during the six years of his Viceroyalty, and it was obviously desirable that, as Viceroy-designate, he should be kept fully informed on current questions.

MR. SWIFT MACNEILL: When did Lord Curzon become Viceroy-designate? Before he did so, were not confidential communications between the Acting Viceroy and the Cabinet submitted to him?

MR. BRODRICK: Lord Curzon became Viceroy-designate on the notification of his reappointment. I do not remember the precise date. His Majesty's Government are always glad to avail themselves of the experience of retired Viceroys, and the Viceroy-designate is kept fully apprised of all that is going on before he goes to India.

Cost of British Garrison in Egypt.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, in view of the fact that the charges made on the Government of Egypt for the maintenance of British troops have recently been increased from £E84,825 to £E97,000 (£100,000), will he state whether the British force has been in any way increased, and its present composition.

THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Earl PERCY, Kensington, S.): The Answer to the first paragraph is in the negative. The contribution from the Egyptian Exchequer has been fixed by agreement between the two Governments on the basis of the amount by which the cost of the garrison in Egypt exceeds the cost of its maintenance at home. Its present strength is as follows:—1 Battery Royal Field Artillery, 1 Battery Mountain Artillery, 1 Company Royal Engineers, 3 Battalions Infantry.

Finance.

*MR. McCRAE: I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer what provision is being made to meet the balance of last year's deficit amounting to £1,500,000, for which no estimate was made in the Estimates of Expenditure for the present financial year.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN, Worcestershire, E.): The hon. Member's Question cannot be answered until the accounts of this year are made up.

London Unemployed.

DR. MACNAMARA: I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board whether he is now in a position to propose any steps whereby sufficient funds may be placed at the disposal of the Central London Unemployed Committee in order to enable that Committee to tide over the present period of distress.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (Mr. WALTER LONG, Bristol, S.): I am in communication with the Central Committee on this subject, and am awaiting some further information from them.

Heavy Motor-Car Regulations.

MR. GARDNER (Berkshire, Wokingham): I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board whether he has received from municipal or county councils, district councils, or other bodies or persons interested, objections to the heavy motor-car regulations; and, if so, from how many; and, in case of such objections having been received, what action does he propose to take.

MR. WALTER LONG: Since the regulations were issued, I have received from the Board of Trade certain suggestions for an alteration of the Order which have been submitted on behalf of some of the railway companies, and I am in communication with the Board of Trade on the subject. Besides this, the only objections that have reached me, since the issue of the regulations, have been from one county council, two metropolitan borough councils, two rural district councils, an association of jobmasters, and one private individual. These objections, so far as they have been stated, do not appear to me to be of a nature that I can entertain.

MR. CATHCART WASON (Orkney and Shetland): Will the House have an opportunity of discussing these Orders?

MR. WALTER LONG: I appointed a Committee, of which the right hon. Member for Somersetshire was Chairman, to deal with this question. They took evidence from the local authorities, and on their recommendation I issued the regulations.

GENERAL LAURIE (Pembroke and Haverfordwest): I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board whether he has been requested by any municipal or other local authorities to receive deputations in reference to the regulations to be issued in regard to heavy motor-cars; if so, will he state whether he has consented to receive such deputations, and the date on which they will be received; and whether he will defer the bringing into force of the proposed regulations until he has ascertained the objections of the local authorities.

MR. WALTER LONG: The Paddington Borough Council have recently asked me to receive a deputation on the subject of the regulations from various metropolitan borough councils. I have replied that in the first instance I shall be glad to receive the representations of the councils in writing. The regulations come into force to-morrow, and I cannot undertake to postpone their operation. A draft of them was circulated to the associations representing various classes of local authorities, and their observations were carefully considered before the regulations were issued.

GENERAL LAURIE: Am I to understand that the regulations were circulated among the local authorities.

MR. WALTER LONG: I did not say that. What I said was that the draft was sent to the associations representing the local authorities. As my hon. and gallant friend knows, municipalities have recognised associations to represent them, and it is our practice to send, not to the hundreds of authorities throughout the country, but to the representative body.

GENERAL LAURIE: Am I to understand that deputations from the local authorities will still be received, and that their recommendations will be considered.

MR. WALTER LONG: My hon. friend is not to understand that. After I have received the representations of the councils in writing, I shall, if I think it worth their while and mine, be glad to receive a deputation, but I make no promise.

Australian Mail Service.

SIR MANCHERJEE BHOWNAGGREE: I beg to ask the Postmaster-General what is the amount of the subsidy paid by Australia for the carriage of mails under the new contract; whether it has resulted in a curtailment of the postal service carried on previously, and, if so, for what reasons; and if the service is now carried on upon a reduced scale, is he prepared, in view of the prejudicial effect it must have on the volume of correspondence between Great Britian and Australia, both for commercial purposes and for the object of promoting the unity of the Empire, to take any, and, if any, what action in the matter.

THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL (Lord STANLEY, Lancashire, Westhoughton): The Australian Commonwealth makes no contribution to the subsidy payable to the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company under the new contract which recently came into operation, providing, inter alia, for one of the two fortnightly mail services to and from Australia of which the other was formerly carried by the Orient Steam Navigation Company. Up to the end of last month the Australian Government contributed its quota towards each of the two subsidies. But the Commonwealth Legislature decided not to support, under any fresh contract, any undertaking which admitted of the employment of coloured labour on board the packets; and the Imperial Government has therefore provided its share of the Australian mail service in the shape of one fortnightly service to be paid for out of Imperial funds, leaving the Commonwealth Government to arrange for another alternating service, making its own terms with the contractors. His Majesty's Government has done all that can rightly be demanded of it, and I do not think that any further representations would be of assistance to the colonial authorities at present, especially as I have no reason to suppose that they have abandoned the endeavour to obtain a fortnightly service. In the weeks in which no British Mail Packet starts for Australia, mails will be sent from this country by such other advantageous opportunities as offer, and due notice of them will be given to the public.

MR. CATHCART WASON: Was it part of the bargain that the Australian Commonwealth should pay the whole cost of one fortnightly service and that we should pay for the other?

LORD STANLEY: We were to contribute one-half of the cost, and we did so by sending a mail every fortnight.

MR. CATHCART WASON: Is there no burden on them?

LORD STANLEY: No.

Court of Criminal Appeal.

MR. SLOAN (Belfast, S.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, as the results of inquiry in the case of Adolf Beck, he can state if it is intended to establish a Criminal Court of Appeal; and, if so, when.

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Mr. AKERS-DOUGLAS, Kent, St. Augustine's): A Bill has been introduced, in another place, to amend the law relating to the Court for the consideration of Crown Cases Reserved, which already exists as a Court of Appeal on questions of law in criminal cases. This Bill will carry out the recommendations of the Master of the Rolls Committee as to legislation.

Mr. SWIFT MACNEILL: Why was not this Bill introduced in this House? Why was it brought in in another place the Members of which are triable in a different way and not subject to this grievance?

[No Answer was returned.]

Employment of Children By-Laws.

Dr. MACNAMARA: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he can state for how many and which towns the Home Office has given sanction to by-laws under the Employment of Children (1903) Act; and for how many and which towns proposed by-laws are now awaiting Home Office sanction.

*Mr. AKERS-DOUGLAS: By-laws under the Act have been confirmed, and are now in force for the county of Gloucester, and for the following cities and boroughs:—Birmingham, Blackburn, Bootle, Brighton, Carlisle, Doncaster, Dudley, Hornsey, Hull, Liverpool, Middlesbrough, Plymouth, St. Helens, Swindon, Walsall, Warrington, Worcester. Draft by-laws have been submitted by fifty other local authorities. In sixteen cases the by-laws have been provisionally approved, and are awaiting confirmation in accordance with the procedure prescribed by Section 4 of the Act. In nearly all of the remaining cases I am awaiting the replies of local authorities to my inquiries and suggestions.

Boys in the Mercantile Navy.

Mr. CHARLES McARTHUR (Liverpool, Exchange): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will state the number of boys carried and the amount allowed out of the light dues for their carriage under the boy sailor scheme of the Merchant Shipping (Mercantile Marine Fund) Act, 1898, for each year during which that scheme has been in force; and whether, having regard to the national importance which attaches to the training of boys for the mercantile marine and as a reserve for the Royal Navy, he can state the intentions of the Government in pursuance of that object when the present arrangement expires.

Mr. CHARLES McARTHUR: I beg also to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will say what amount was allowed off the light dues in respect of boy sailors for the year which ended March 31st, 1904, and whether this amount has been deducted from £497,240 1s. 5d. shown in the last lighthouse accounts for dues collected; and, if so, whether, in view of the fact that the Lighthouse Fund will be increased by this sum after March 31st when the boy-sailor scheme expires, he would reconsider his decision with regard to making a reduction in the light dues.

The PRESIDENT of the BOARD of TRADE (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds, Central): Perhaps the hon. Member will allow me to answer his two Questions together. I regret that I am unable to state the number of boys actually carried each year under the boy-sailor scheme, as that information can only be ascertained by examining the record of each boy year by year. I shall, however, be happy to furnish my hon. friend with a statement showing the number of boys enrolled in the Royal Naval Reserve, and the allowances paid in respect of them. The total number of boys enrolled up to the 24th instant is 4,326, and the allowances paid up to the end of 1903–4, the last year for which the figures are available, amount to £13,653 16s. 2d., the amount paid during 1903–4 being £4,533 10s. 3d. Those allowances are, in accordance with the provisions of the Act, paid out of moneys provided by Parliament, and are not a charge upon the General Lighthouse Fund, so that no increase in that fund will result from the cessation of the allowances. The Board of Trade, in conjunction with the Admiralty, have considered the question of making some other arrangements upon the expiration, on the 31st proximo, of Section 6 of the Act under which the existing scheme was inaugurated; but, as at present advised, I do not propose to take any further steps in the matter.

MR. CHARLES McARTHUR: Is it not provided by Parliament that the abatement shall come out of the light dues?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: No, Sir.

MR. CHARLES McARTHUR: May I ask whether any provision has been made to meet the case of the boys already enrolled, and who have entered upon certain obligations? Are they now to lose their employment?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I must ask for notice of that Question.

Underfed Children.

DR. MACNAMARA: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Board of Education whether any local education authorities have either petitioned or forwarded resolutions to the Board of Education in favour of such an extension of their powers as would enable them, out of the funds at their disposal, to provide food for underfed children on the lines suggested in the unaminous recommendation of the Physical Deterioration (1904) Committee; and whether, if any, he will state the names of such authorities.

THE PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY TO THE BOARD OF EDUCATION (Sir WILLIAM ANSON, Oxford University): The Board has received resolutions on the lines referred to in the Question from the following three local education authorities; in May, 1904, from Reading County Borough, in December last from Sheffield County Borough, and in January last from Tottenham Urban District.

DR. MACNAMARA: Will the Board of Education inform the local authorities that it is not proposed to take any action at present on the lines suggested in their memorial?

SIR WILLIAM ANSON: It has not been suggested to the local authorities that any such action will be taken.

Water Supply for Ross-shire Public Schools.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord-Advocate whether he is aware that the medical officer of health for Ross and Cromarty in his last report directs special attention to the necessity for a suitable supply of pure water for the public schools; and, seeing that out of fifty-three schools on the mainland of Ross-shire only thirteen have water laid on to the premises, will he consider the expediency of taking such steps as may be necessary to secure a suitable supply for the remaining forty schools.

* THE LORD-ADVOCATE (Mr. SCOTT DICKSON, Glasgow, Bridgton): The Local Government Board have this question fully in view, and have been in communication with the school boards through the local authorities concerned. The results are so far satisfactory and the matter will be further pressed.

Norwegian Trawlers in Dornoch Forth.

MR. WEIR: I beg to ask the Lord-Advocate whether he is aware that trawlers registered in Norway, but fishing from Grimsby with English fishing masters and crews, have recently been detected fishing within the territorial water of the Dornoch Forth, and will he state whether the fact of the captains of these vessels being Norwegian, though resident all the year round in Grimsby, places them on a different footing to purely British trawlers, and exempts them from prosecution for fishing within territorial waters, unless they are within the three-mile limit.

* MR. SCOTT DICKSON: I have had information to the effect stated in the first part of the hon. Member's Question, subject to the qualification that in certain cases the trawlers were fishing outside the three-mile limit. The legal point raised in the latter part of the hon. Member's Question is at present pending in the Scottish Courts, and I must, therefore, refrain from expressing any opinion upon it.

CAPTAIN ELLICE (St. Andrews Burghs): Will the right hon. Gentleman lay on the Table the correspondence last year between His Majesty's Government and the representative of Christiania?

*MR. SCOTT DICKSON: I must ask for notice of that.

Longford Magistracy.

MR. J. P. FARRELL (Longford, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he will state the number of appointments to the magisterial bench made in county Longford during the year 1904, and say how many of such appointments were conferred on Catholics.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. ATKINSON, Londonderry, N., for Mr. WYNDHAM): Two, both of whom are believed to be Protestants.

Expenditure on Police Removals in County Longford.

MR. J. P. FARRELL: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he will state the cost put upon the rates of the county Longford for the past five years for charges incurred in the removal of policemen from one police station to another; what necessity there was for such removals on the ground either of disciplinary or other regulations; and will a direction be given that in future such removals will only be made for misconduct and at the expense of the police themselves.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. WYNDHAM): The Question appears to be based on a misconception. No expense to the rates has been incurred by the removal of policemen under the circumstances mentioned.

Irish National School Teachers' Pension Fund.

MR. SLOAN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland if he will explain why pension stock in connection with pension fund of national school teachers has been sold at a great loss, while the yearly income has exceeded the expenditure; and why, seeing that the Act of 1879 establishing the pension fund specially provided for quinquennial revision, and that the first revision occurred in 1885, when the fund was reported as flourishing and benefits to teachers increased, the next revision of which any authentic account was given did not occur until 1897–8, when the fund was reported as £1,200,000 to the bad.

THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY (Mr. VICTOR CAVENDISH, Derbyshire, W.): Pension stock is occasionally sold in order to enable payments to be made at a time when the receipts of the fund fall short of the amount necessary for such payments. No considerable loss has been incurred on such sales, and it is probable that the alternative of keeping large balances uninvested, with consequent loss of interest, would prove more expensive. The point raised by the hon. Member will, however, not be lost sight of. Quinquennial valuations of the fund were duly made for 1890 and 1895. The hon. Member will find a reference to them in paragraph 1 of the Report of the Committee of 1897, which was laid before Parliament in that year (Parliamentary Paper C. 8471 of 1897).

MR. SLOAN: Why has the national school teachers' benefit been reduced while this fund has been growing at the rate of £40,000 a year.

MR. VICTOR CAVENDISH: I must ask for notice of that.

Dundrum Asylum Shoemaker.

MR. MOONEY (Dublin County, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he will state for what offence Shoemaker Attendant James M'Keough, of His Majesty's asylum, Dundrum, was called on to resign on July 11th, 1903, and why he was not allowed an opportunity of defending himself; and if, having regard to his state of health, he will grant him an inquiry to clear his character and obtain redress.

MR. ATKINSON (for Mr. WYNDHAM): Three inquiries on oath were held by the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums into the conduct of this attendant, at each of which he was afforded every opportunity of defending himself. As a result of the third inquiry he was called upon to resign on the grounds of insubordinate conduct and failure to satisfactorily discharge his duties. He refused to resign and was dismissed. It is not proposed to direct a further inquiry in the matter as suggested.

Mr. MOONEY: Is it not the fact that this man, after ten and a-half years service, was dismissed on a secret report, and that he demanded a public inquiry which has not yet been held?

Mr. ATKINSON: I do not know whether the inquiry was public or private. It was held according to the rules of the Lunacy Department.

Mr. HAYDEN (Roscommon, S): What was the act of insubordination?

[No Answer was returned.]

Mr. CROOKS (Woolwich): Was the man dismissed because he was physically unfit.

Mr. ATKINSON: No, for insubordination and improper discharge of his duties.

Kerry County Council Audit.

Mr. THOMAS O'DONNELL (Kerry, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the county council of Kerry complained of the report and conduct of the auditor, Mr. Cyril R. Browne, in his recent audit of their accounts; that the auditor passed or approved of the assessment of the purchase price of the Limerick and Kerry Railway money received by the council, and subsequently made a private report to the Valuation Office with reference thereto, and that the county council has been refused a copy of the report; and, if so, whether it will now be furnished; whether the auditor's object was to bring under the notice of the Valuation Office the fact that this money was credited to the ordinary and not to the separate charges estimate for railway guarantees so that the Valuation Office might deduct these receipts from the assessment by the council for railway and harbour charges, and thus reduce the council's claim for refund under Section 58 (4) of the Local Government Act, 1898; and whether, seeing that the result so far has been to deprive this county of a sum of £480 already deducted from the Government grants, he will say what action, if any, he will take in the matter.

Mr. ATKINSON (for Mr. WYNDHAM): The county council made a complaint of the character stated. When the first transactions concerning the Great Southern and Western Railway Company were before the auditor he found that a portion of the purchase price paid by the company was properly applied in relief of the separate rates in respect of railway and harbour charges. Subsequently, however, he found that the council had changed its procedure and had applied a further portion of this money, not in relief of the separate rates mentioned, but of the ordinary district rate leviable off the guaranteeing areas. This would have resulted in the council obtaining a larger sum from the local taxation account than that to which the council was legally entitled. The rate in consequence was wrongfully assessed. The auditor made no report to the Commissioner of Valuation, but he did bring the facts under the notice of the Local Government Board and a copy of his report to the latter Department was forwarded by the Board to the Commissioner of Valuation.

Captain Caldbeck's Estate, Queen's County.

Mr. DELANY (Queen's County, Ossory): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that the estate of Captain Caldbeck, Ballacolla, Queen's County, at present before the Estates Commissioners for sale, contains out of a total of 470 acres 241 acres of untenanted land, and that the landlord and his agent have parcelled out the untenanted land amongst business men occupying independent positions, large farmers, and the bailiff of the estate; and, if so, in view of the fact that there are a number of small holdings on this and adjoining estates requiring enlargement, he will state whether the Estates Commissioners are prepared to sanction this sale.

Mr. ATKINSON (for Mr. WYNDHAM): This estate has been referred to the inspector, whose report has not yet been made. The Commissioners are not, at present, in a position to make any statement on the matters alleged in the Question.

Mr. DELANY: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether an inspection of the Caldbeck Estate, Ballacolla, Queen's county, has yet been made; and, if so, will he furnish a copy of the report of the inspector.

Mr. ATKINSON (for Mr. Wyndham): The inspector has not yet made his report on this estate. The reply to the second inquiry is in the negative. The inspectors' reports are confidential documents, made for the information of the Commissioners, and cannot be produced or laid on the Table of the House.

New Irish Local Government Orders.

Mr. CULLINAN (Tipperary, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he has received resolutions from the General Council of County Councils and the majority of county, district, and urban councils protesting against the enforcement of the new local government Orders; and whether, in face of the opposition to their adoption, he will consider the advisability of conferring with representatives of those elective bodies with a view to so modifying those Orders as to make them acceptable.

Mr. ATKINSON (for Mr. Wyndham): The resolution of the General Council did not protest against the new Orders being put in force. It merely took exception to the old Orders being rescinded without consultation with the bodies immediately concerned. But it has already been pointed out that this was not the case.

Mr. CULLINAN: Have not the urban and district councils throughout Ireland generally objected to this new Order? Are the Government going to enforce it in face of that?

Mr. ATKINSON: I have no further information on the subject.

Mr. CULLINAN: The right hon. Gentleman will hear a great deal more about it.

Mr. FLAVIN (Kerry, N.): Who is the Local Government inspector who drafted the Orders?

[No Answer was returned.]

Clause 6 of The Local Government (Ireland) Amendment Act, 1902.

Mr. CULLINAN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland whether he has received resolutions from the General Council of County Councils, county, and district councils asking for the repeal of Clause 6 of The Local Government (Ireland) Amendment Act, 1902; and whether, in view of this demand, he will take steps to have the clause repealed.

Mr. ATKINSON (for Mr. Wyndham): Such resolutions have been received. The necessity for this section of the Act was explained by my right hon. friend in the Committee Stage of the measure on December 12th,† 1902. The Government are not prepared, for the reasons then stated, to agree to the repeal of the section.

Mr. CULLINAN: Was not this important alteration made in an autumn session called for the special purpose of proceeding with the Education Bill and behind the backs of the Irish Members? Will the Government reconsider the matter?

Mr. ATKINSON: According to my recollection the Irish Members fully discussed this matter on the Committee stage of the Bill.

Drainage of the Riffey.

Mr. J. P. FARRELL I beg to ask the Financial Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Board of Works, whether any steps have yet been taken by that Department to form a drainage board for the district of Cam and Clonwhelan, through which the River Riffey flows, in which in consequence of flooding in 1903 two men lost their lives, and which is a source of loss to the farmers of this district.

Mr. VICTOR CAVENDISH: The Board of Works have no power to take any steps in the direction of forming a drainage district except upon the receipt of a petition from persons interested, who must submit the necessary maps and plans. No petition has been received in the case of the localities referred to.

---

† See (4) Debates, cxvi., 1038.

Sir Antony MacDonnell.

MR. WHITLEY: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury if he will lay upon the Table the letter, following a telegram, in which he signified to the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant his approval of the proposed appointment of Sir Antony MacDonnell.

THE PRIME MINISTER AND FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): As the hon. Gentleman very well knows, I should not think of laying any communication between myself and a colleague.

Marine Insurance (Codification) Bill.

MR. CHARLES MCARTHUR: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether, having regard to the expressions of opinion which have been addressed to him by shipping, mercantile, and insurance bodies in favour of the Marine Insurance (Codification) Bill, he will reintroduce and endeavour to pass this measure through its various stages at an early period of the session.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: Yes, Sir, I understand that the Lord Chancellor hopes to pass in another place this practically uncontroversial Bill. It may possibly be advisable to bring it in first in this House, but I will take the course which will give it the best chance of passing into law, and I really think that there ought to be no serious obstacle in the way.

Aliens in Ireland.

MR. SLOAN: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether the Royal Commission of 1903 on Alien Immigration took evidence with regard to the influx of aliens into Ireland; and, if not, will he, in view of legislation this session, take some means of obtaining evidence concerning Ireland before the introduction of the Aliens Bill.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: In answer to my hon. friend, I have to say that no special investigations were made by this Commission into the subject of alien immigration into Ireland, and I understand that no evidence was given before the Home Office which would indicate that there are evils connected with alien immigration in that part of the United Kingdom. But any evidence which my hon. friend has to give to the Home Office on that subject will be gratefully received.

MR. SLOAN: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that an offer to give evidence was made to the Commission, and they refused to accept it.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR: Well, I was not aware of that, and my hon. friend is aware that I have no control over a Commission. What evidence they shall take or not take rests in their own discretion.

MR. DELANY: Is it not a fact that the only undesirable aliens we have in Ireland are the men who are sent over from this country to govern Ireland against the will of the people of the country?

[No Answer was returned.]

NEW MEMBER SWORN.

John Sutherland Harmood-Banner, esquire, for the Parliamentary Borough of Liverpool (Everton Division).

SELECTION (UNOPPOSED BILL COMMITTEES) (PANEL).

Mr. WODEHOUSE reported from the Committee of Selection; That they had selected the following eight Members to be the Panel to serve on Unopposed Bill Committees under Standing Order No. 109:—Mr. Brynmor Jones, Mr. Carvill, Mr. H. D. Greene, Mr. Paulton, Mr. Parker Smith, Mr. Worsley-Taylor, Mr. Crombie, and Mr. Bousfield.

Report to lie upon the Table.

SELECTION (STANDING COMMITTEES) (CHAIRMEN'S PANEL).

Mr. WODEHOUSE reported from the Committee of Selection; That they had selected the following six Members to be the Chairmen's Panel and to serve as Chairmen of the two Standing Committees to be appointed under Standing Order No. 49:—Mr. John Ellis, Sir Thomas Esmonde, Sir James Fergusson, Lord Edmund Fitzmaurice, Mr. Laurence Hardy, and Mr. Stuart-Wortley.

Report to lie upon the Table.

SELECTION (PRIVATE LEGISLATION PROCEDURE (SCOTLAND) ACT, 1899) (COMMISSIONERS).

Mr. WODEHOUSE reported from the Committee of Selection; That, in pursuance of the provisions of The Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1899, they had selected the following fifteen Members to form the Parliamentary Panel of Members of this House to act as Commissioners:—Mr. Charles Hobhouse, Mr. Brynmor Jones, Mr. A. K. Loyd, Mr. McCrae, Mr. William Maxwell, Mr. Pym, Mr. Parker Smith, Sir Walter Thorburn, Sir John Tuke, Mr. Levy, Mr. James Reid, Mr. Eugene Wason, Mr. John Wilson (Falkirk), Mr. Wylie, and Mr. Charles Douglas.

Report to lie upon the Table.

MESSAGE FROM THE LORDS.

That they have passed a Bill, intituled, "An Act to amend the Law relating to the falsification of Seamen's and Soldiers' Certificates of Service or Discharge, and to false statements made, used, or given in connection with Entry or Enlistment into His Majesty's Naval, Military, or Marine Forces." [Seamen's and Soldiers' False Characters Bill [Lords.]]

NEW BILLS.

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.

"To amend the Merchant Shipping Acts, 1894 to 1900," presented by Mr. Louis Sinclair; supported by Sir Frederick Carne Rasch; to be read a second time upon Monday next, and to be printed. [Bill 67.]

MINISTER OF COMMERCE AND INDUSTRY BILL.

"To establish a Bureau for a Minister of Commerce and Industry," presented by Mr. Louis Sinclair; to be read a second time upon Monday next, and to be printed. [Bill 68.]

TRAWLERS' CERTIFICATES SUSPENSION BILL.

"To enable Courts to suspend the Certificates of Trawlers convicted of illegal trawling," presented by Mr. Weir; supported by Mr. Ainsworth, Mr. Leveson-Gower, Mr. John Dewar, Mr. Harmsworth, Sir Arthur Bignold, Mr. Cathcart Wason, and Mr. Black; to be read a second time upon Wednesday, March 8th, and to be printed. [Bill 69.]

CLOSING OF LICENSED PREMISES (CHRISTMAS DAY) (IRELAND) BILL.

"To amend the Law as to the hours of closing of Licensed Premises on Christmas Day in Ireland," presented by Mr. Nannetti; supported by Mr. Harrington, Mr. Mooney, Mr. Field, Mr. Charles Devlin, Mr. Sloan, Mr. O'Shaughnessy, Mr. Joyce, Mr. Crean, Mr. Waldron, Mr. O'Mara, and Mr. John Gordon; to be read a second time upon Monday, March 20th, and to be printed. [Bill 70.]

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [February 27th] to Main Question [February 14th], "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth:—

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Which Amendment was—

"At the end of the Question, to add the words, 'But we humbly represent to Your Majesty that Your Majesty's Government in committing the country to the policy of the Brussels Sugar Convention have inflicted heavy losses upon trade, diminished employment of labour, enormously increased the cost of a necessary food to consumers, without any compensatory advantage; and we humbly submit to Your Majesty that these evil results call for an immediate remedy; and that the Convention should be denounced at the earliest possible moment.'"—(Mr. Kearley.)

Question again proposed, "That those words be there added."

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE (Carnarvon Boroughs) said he did not think it would be a matter of surprise to anyone that the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham deemed it to be his duty to come and defend the Sugar Convention Act. It was the first great object-lesson of his policy—the new policy which he was trying to inculcate in this country. But there was one very significant fact, which was the most significant of all, and that was his attempt to disclaim the honour of initiating the Sugar Convention. A few years ago it was regarded as the inauguration of a new policy which was to revive our drooping industries. It was simply the first step to convince the country of the necessity for adapting it to other industries. Two years after the Convention, however, the right hon. Gentleman came down to the House, and at the beginning of his speech made it perfectly clear that he had absolutely nothing to do with the paternity of it. He offered the laurel wreath to the President of the Board of Trade, but apparently that right hon. Gentleman was not particularly delighted when the suggestion was made. On the contrary, he appeared to feel that the responsibility for the Act rested with the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. It was he who was responsible for this monstrosity, and it was he who ought to have the scarlet letter on his breast. The speech of the right hon. Gentleman was in some respects very characteristic of his later methods. First, there was the scorn for statistics. He poured contempt on them, and especially on official statistics. They were not reliable. The statistics which the right hon. Gentleman believed in were bounty-fed statistics, and that was rather inconsistent with his position in regard to sugar. The Board of Trade statistics were crude, and it was necessary to set up a sort of statistical-refining industry. That the right hon. Gentleman had done in the name of the Tariff Reform League. Before presenting them to the country it was necessary to purify the statistics of the grossness of free-trade heresy which they naturally possessed when culled from the free-trade field of industry and commerce by Board of Trade officials. Again, the right hon. Gentlemen omitted from his facts every element which was relevant. He carried that so far as to omit a relevant part of his poetical quotation on the previous evening—after he quoted from "Rejected Addresses." He evidently regarded that as a congenial study at the present moment, and he quoted the line, "Who fills the butchers' shop with large blue flies?" but he omitted the most important part of that quotation, the line which preceded it, namely, "Who makes the quartern loaf and Luddites rise?" As he treated his poetry, so he treated his facts. Let them take, for instance, the manner in which he treated the facts concerning the price of sugar. That went to the root of the whole matter. He said, "Why, the price of sugar on the Continent is not higher than it is here." What he omitted, however, was the very important fact that, since the Sugar Convention had been adopted, the price of sugar had gone down one-half on the Continent, whilst it had been almost doubled in this country. One would have thought that that was a very important element of the fact. The right hon. Gentleman spoke about going to the country to talk to a working-class audience, but if it were his idea to present his case to a working-class audience in that fashion, he could quite understand why most of the members of the working-class audience arrived at the hall in motor-cars. The right hon. Gentleman said, "I am quite willing to present this thing to the country. I have a great belief in the common sense of the people." That belief was not shared in evidently by hon. and right hon. Gentlemen opposite, otherwise why were they postponing the appeal to the people?

Let them take some more facts. Let them look at the arguments at issue when that Act was before the House. He would put them broadly. Hon. Members sitting on his own side of the House said that the result of the Sugar Convention Act would be to increase the price of sugar, while the Prime Minister denied that, and so also, he believed, did the President of the Board of Trade and the Secretary to the Board of Trade as well.

THE PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY TO THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. BONAR LAW, Glasgow, Blackfriars): No.

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE said he noticed that the hon. Gentleman repudiated it. He doubted whether the repudiation would have been so emphatic had the question been put to him when the Bill was passing through that House two years ago. At any rate, the Prime Minister denied that the effect of the Act would be to increase the price of sugar, and the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham also said so. He said, indeed, that the price of sugar would go down in this country. The second point at issue was that, while the Government and their supporters said that another result of the Sugar Convention would be to give increased employment, the Opposition, on the other hand, declared that it would decrease it. Now they had had two years experience of the working of the Act, and what did they find? As a matter of fact, could it be denied that as a result of the operation of the Sugar Convention Act employment had decreased in the sugar industries, and that something like 15,000 persons had been thrown altogether out of employment, while about 50,000 or practically 50 per cent. of the total of those engaged in the industries were out on half-time for some weeks at any rate? So far from the price of sugar going down it had increased by something like 100 per cent., and thus it would be seen that events had justified up to the hilt all the predictions made by hon. Members on his side of the House. What did that mean? That a prima facie case was established by the facts against the Sugar Convention Act. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham had endeavoured to explain away those facts, and, indeed, there was no one more competent at explaining or ignoring them than he was. The right hon. Gentleman said his explanation of the increase in the price was the drought, and that was the explanation which was current on the other side of the House generally. He, of course, did not deny that drought under certain circumstances—Convention or no Convention—was an element in raising the price, but all artificial restrictions upon trade aggravated the natural evils. He would take an illustration given by the right hon. Gentleman on the previous night. The right hon. Gentleman then took the case of corn. Corn last year went up 5s. per quarter, and the right hon. Gentleman said that was due to the short crop in the United States of America. Yes, but supposing there had been a Convention excluding Russian and Argentine corn from this country; supposing that, in addition to the American drought, they had had the Birmingham blight, the increase in price would not have been 5s.; it would have been nearer 50s. The same thing applied to other cases. Let them take the onion market. There was a shortage of onions, and this was really the reductio ad absurdum. No doubt there was an increase in the price of onions. But suppose there had been a Convention excluding Spanish onions from this country, surely prices would have gone up much higher than they had done. The same applied to cotton. There was a shortage in that crop which affected prices, but if we had excluded Egyptian cotton, would not that exclusion, in addition to the shortage in the American crop, have produced absolutely prohibitive prices which might have ruined the cotton industry?

There was another circumstance which the right hon. Gentleman overlooked. The Convention had cheapened sugar on the Continent, and had thereby increased the consumption of sugar there. That was a not unimportant element when they were dealing with the great free-trade controversy. Cheapening an article meant increased consumption. The cheapening in the price of sugar had, he believed, increased the consumption by 800,000 tons on the Continent. In France it had practically doubled consumption, and prices had gone down from the very day that the Convention came into operation by nearly one-and-a-half. He did not think anyone could challenge the proposition that the Convention had decreased the price of sugar on the Continent, and that that depression of price had had the effect of increasing the consumption. Then he came to the second element. The price here had undoubtedly been affected. He knew it was stated that the difference amounted to only about £2,500,000, but that was a very considerable sum. It was £2,500,000 practically contributed by foreigners to a British industry; we had been, in fact, making the foreigners pay that amount. Let hon. Members look at the statistics for the present year. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham said the increase in the cost was very largely due to the middleman. Of course that was one of the evils of increasing the cost of an article by artificial means; it meant increasing the profits all along the line. But the increase was not solely due to the middleman. Let them look at the statistics for the last month. According to the Board of Trade Returns, we imported into this country the same amount of sugar as in 1903 and 1904, but the difference in price represented a sum of £800,000 in one month. As he found that the quantity imported in January was practically the average for the whole year, it meant that if we kept sugar up to its present price—and it might, indeed, go up still higher—this country would actually lose something like £9,000,000 in the course of a year. Was not that a very important factor?

It was not merely the increased consumption of foreign countries; it was the exclusion from our markets of the sugar from Russia and Argentina and some other countries. It was stated by a great authority on this subject that the amount of sugar that came from Russia—not merely directly from Russia but through German ports before the Convention—was 100,000 tons per year. The amount from the Argentine was something like 40,000 or 50,000 tons per year. What did the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham say? He said hon. Members forgot one elementary business principle, namely, that if we fell short by a small quantity in our supply, the increase of price was quite out of proportion to the shortage in supply. But the same thing applied to a small surplus. Supposing they wanted 1,000 tons and there were only 900 tons available the increase of the price might be double though the deficiency might be only one-tenth. There never was a greater free-trade argument, and why on earth so clever a controversialist should have introduced it into the argument in favour of the Sugar Convention completely baffled him. In the very year in which there was a shortage in the crop they excluded 150,000 tons of sugar which they had been in the habit of getting from the Argentine and from Russia, and the result had been to increase the price enormously; it had, in fact, almost doubled it here while it had depressed prices abroad. That was what the Convention had done, and in doing so it had doubled the price of raw material for us, while it had halved the price of raw material for our competitors—that was to say, we were four times worse off in competing with foreign countries than we were before the Convention.

And what had been the effect on employment? The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham said that in 1889 certain confectioners came to the Board of Trade and said "The price of sugar has gone up, and we ask you to abolish bounties if you can." The right hon. Gentleman was the last man who ought to taunt anybody with opinions he held fifteen or twenty years ago. He believed the right hon. Gentleman had changed every opinion he had held, except possibly his opinion of the Prime Minister. Having had fifteen years more experience of bounties, these confectioners had come to the conclusion that they were a benefit to their industry. He had in his hand a letter given to him by an hon. friend from a firm who, he thought, circulated toffee the other day to Members of the House of Commons. They said—

> "We employ one quarter less hands at present than previously, and both our factories are running short time. Last year our turnover dropped £30,000."

The letter went on—

> "We are maintaining an export trade by selling without profit; that is to say, we are dumping."

The same tale of reduced profits and reduced employment for workmen was told in regard to other trades dependent on sugar, such as jam factories and mineral water factories.

*SIR GEORGE BARTLEY (Islington, N.): What is the price of sugar delivered next autumn?

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE said he was told by his hon. friend the Member for Islington that it was double what it was when the Convention came into force. He hoped that increase would satisfy the hon. Member, who would have done better not to ask the question. The Government had not abolished bounties; they had only secured a transfer of bounties which had benefited us by enabling us to get sugar cheaper than any country in the world. The surtax on sugar products had been practically turned into bounties to other countries. The sugar industries had been handed over to a Commission representing our great rivals—a Commission just as impartial as the Tariff Reform Commission—and we had armed that Commission with a power to destroy those industries. There never was such folly. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham said the Opposition had characterised the Government's action in this matter as nefarious. That was not the word. It was "egregious." We had entered into a conspiracy with our trade rivals to rob our own warehouses. That was an offence for which no jury would convict a Minister. They would more probably cause him to be detained during His Majesty's pleasure. It was not folly: it was stupidity—not perhaps wanton—but the Government were blind in entering into it. They had given way to pressure from the right hon. Gentleman. He was then in the heyday of his power. He had won two elections for them; they were looking forward to winning another. They thought he brought them luck. He was, in the words of George Eliot, their crooked sixpence. He made the mistake of insisting on being taken out of the Government profits and being put on the counter on his own intrinsic value, and, of course, he lost by it. The right hon. Gentleman said truly the Convention had stopped fluctuations. That was perfectly true. Price used to go up and down; there was now no fluctuation, there was a constant rise. Of four elements effecting price, crops, demand abroad, freights, and bounty, the last was the only one that was certain, and losing that, the right hon. Gentleman contended, would stop fluctuations.

In suggesting that bounties on beet were destroying the sugar-cane industry, the right hon. Gentleman had not the slightest regard to facts. Cane sugar had doubled in the last twenty years, and in the last five had increased by 1,000,000 tons without regard to the Convention. It had not increased in the West Indies generally. It had increased in Java, where it was produced by Chinese labour. The right hon. Gentleman's partiality for Chinese labour, he thought, had led him into this blunder. What on earth had this to do with the fiscal question? asked the right hon. Gentleman. It had everything to do with it. It was a warning to the people of this country not to attempt interference with trade by artificial means of this character. He denied that the free-traders were supporting bounties. The bounties were not theirs. The right hon. Gentleman's policy was to tax the foreigner; but the free-trader, instead of taxing the foreigner, allowed him by these bounties to tax himself for our benefit. This Sugar Convention had exposed the miracles of a false prophet, and if the Prime Minister in partnership was to divide the profits he should share the loss. The hon. Member for Salisbury, on the previous night, said that nobody liked taxes. He feared the hon. Member was not an orthodox member of the Tariff Reform League, for the very essence of the policy of that league was that our industry should be manured with taxation, and that taxation was the real road to prosperity. The Secretary to the Board of Trade had asked, in his eloquent speech on the Second Reading of the Convention Bill, what consolation it was to the men thrown out of employment in Greenock to say that the jam industries of Dundee were prospering. Might he ask him now what consolation it was for the 15,000 men and women thrown out of employment in these sugar industries to know that a few hundreds had been added to those employed in the refining industries of Greenock and elsewhere? Every prophecy from the advocates of the Convention had failed. The Secretary to the Board of Trade, in his speech on the Convention, taunted the Leader of the Opposition and said—

> "Our industries are submerged by the waves of foreign competition, and in the interval, when there is a receding wave, he is found clinging shivering to the rock of free-trade principles."

Had the waves subsided? Had competition gone down? There had been no receding of the waves; they were increasing; and the hon. Gentleman had helped in the blasting of the rock.

MR. LAWRENCE (Liverpool, Abercromby) said that the main argument of hon. Members opposite appeared to be that the prophecies made when the Sugar Convention was before the House had been falsified. The statement that there had been a rise in the price of sugar in consequence of the Sugar Convention was incorrect. The price of sugar at the time of the Convention was below the cost of production, and it was to remedy that state of things that the Convention was called into existence. What they said, and what he, knowing something of the matter, would reaffirm, was that ten years after the passing of the Convention the average price of sugar, taking one year with another, would not exceed the average price before the Convention [AN HON. MEMBER: How do you know?] He did not pretend to say he was an absolute prophet, but he maintained that the Convention was certain to call into existence a greater area of land fit for the cultivation of sugar, and the greater the area the more certain would be the produce. To follow up this argument, the more the produce the better it would be for the consumer and the worse it would be for the "rings." Some hon. Members had departed from the strict wording of the Amendment, and had thought fit to tax the West Indian planter with various misdemeanours in respect of cultivation, impecuniosity, and lack of labour. There never was a more unjust analogy stated to the House than the hon. Member for Devonport's attempt to compare the planters of Java with the planters of the West Indies. It was perfectly well known that in Java sugar was grown under a system of serfdom, and was the product of forced labour. As to the American plantations in the Phillipines, Cuba, or Honolulu, did the hon. Member for Devonport know that the planters had a great advantage in entering the American market? Had he ever tried to import a ton of sugar into New York? Did he not know that the protective duty against the British planter was 40 per cent., while these American rivals were thriving under the genial influences of a wholly different fiscal system?

The hon. Member for Carnarvon had laid stress upon the fact that Russian sugar had been excluded from our markets. He thought fit to compare the exclusion of Russian and Argentine corn from these markets with the exclusion of sugar. But whereas corn from Russia and the Argentine bulked largely in the whole import, the sugar from those two countries was quite infinitesimal. The hon. Member for Carnarvon lamented the exclusion of Russian sugar, but last year the drought prevailed in Russia as much as on the Continent, and the crop was short by 250,000 tons. Therefore, whatever figure imports of Russian sugar might have bulked at in 1903, the chances were that under a drought the quantity would not have bulked so large in 1904. Whereas the import of sugar into this country was commonly 6,500,000 tons, out of that big total no less than 5,448,000 tons had hitherto been beet sugar. Last year there was an extensive drought practically spreading over the whole of central Europe from where our beet supplies were drawn. Hon. Members opposite appeared to think that that was a satisfactory condition of things for the British consumer, but as a matter of fact we were practically putting all our eggs into one basket; quite independent of any injustice that might be done to our fellow-subjects beyond the seas.

The hon. Member for Chippenham, he supposed, was so partially informed of anything beyond his own county that he thought the term "planter" meant merely a British farmer, and he taxed the planter with doing little to take advantage of the new arrangements under the Brussels Convention. But while in England a man might take a big farm, and in a fortnight stock and equip it with the best of implements, a planter on a sugar estate, in whatever part of the world he lived, had either got to create a big manufactory himself or else to combine with his neighbours in providing a central manufactory. It was not right for hon. Members opposite to criticise the planter beyond the seas who had laboured under the disadvantages to which he had alluded, and ask how it was, after thirty years of annual depression, that the planter had not been able within eighteen months of the passing of the Convention either to find money himself or to borrow it from his bankers to erect the necessary plant which alone could make his industry a success. The process would take a great many years, but already many of the estates were beginning to feel the advantage of an assured and stable market. [MINISTERIAL cheers.] If it was an assured fact that an industry was going to yield an adequate return money would never be found wanting. Now the bounties were abolished there would be certainty of a return for anybody who chose to lend money for sugar planting, and he had no doubt that money would be forthcoming at no distant date.

The only accuracy that could be claimed for the Amendment was that, owing to the abolition of the Excise duty on the Continent, naturally there had been an increased consuming power on the part of the masses. Therefore there was probably a serious miscalculation in the figures by which they alleged that there was an increased production amounting to 54 per cent. on the Continent. There was another statement made which although accurate in words amounted to a suggestio falsi. It was said that the price of sugar had doubled since the Convention came into operation. It was perfectly true that since September 1st, 1903, the price of sugar had doubled, but that was a very disingenuous argument. If they referred to the figures they saw that in January, 1903, the price of beet was only 8s. 4¾d., and that that compared with the five previous years was less than in three of them; in the following February the price had dropped to 7s. 8¼d.; in March it had gone up to 8s. 2¼d., an enhancement which was owing to rumours that there had been reduced sowing. There were some authorities who thought there might have been a shortage of sowing of 3 per cent., but there was now a full belief that practically there was no shortage of sowing worth talking of. In the following March it was only 8s. 2¼d., which was even then below the cost of production. In May the price rose to 9s. 6d., and then there came an estimate that there really would be some shortage of crop. But even in May the sugar users, if they thought there was any risk, had the opportunity of buying for October at 9s. 6¾d., and that was a fact which absolutely traversed the statement that the action of the Convention was the cause of enhancing the value. Sugar users were quite sharp enough people to fix the value as far as they could forsee it, and if they had feared any risk as the result of the Convention they could have bought, and no doubt some did buy, in May over against October, at ¾d. more than in May. In the following June they still could have bought at 9s. 1¼d., so that even then the risks of the Sugar Convention had diminished according to the estimation of the market. It was only at the end of June that the price rose from 9s. 1½d. to 9s. 4½d. Then obviously there came above the horizon a very appreciable chance of a shortage, and at that time the price went up to the figures they had since had. They could follow the action of the sugar market as on a barometer, and they could trace the causes of the rises. He had no doubt that, owing to the enhancement of prices, if they allowed a few months to go by prices would come down as fast as they went up and even faster. There was no reason to think that the sugar industry would suffer more than any other industry which was liable to suffer from special fluctuations which might occur owing to inevitable circumstances such as had occurred on this occasion. The authors of the Sugar Convention, when they talked of fewer fluctuations, never thought that the arrangement they were making would interfere with the dispensations of Providence. What they said was that this was a fiscal arrangement which would modify the fluctuations that arose from fiscal causes. They never pretended that it would be able to produce two tons of sugar where none was produced before, or make any difference in the output of sugar irrespective of the acts of Providence. Hon. Members opposite were in the ridiculous position of endeavouring to bolster up an industry which, whatever its value—and no doubt it was very great, and he wished it God speed on sound and proper lines—claimed that it should have its raw material at less than cost price, that the foreign consumer never should eat more than he had done in the past, and practically that it should be the sole industry in the world free from outside competition. He wished hon. Members opposite every joy in maintaining propositions which were absolutely absurd and indefensible.

MR. McKENNA (Monmouthshire, N.) said that so far as he understood the hon. Gentleman who had just sat down he appeared to think that the Convention had had no influence whatever in sending up the price of sugar.

MR. LAWRENCE: Except in the way I say.

MR. McKENNA said they would all admit that the drought had been an important factor in settling the price, but he understood the hon. Gentleman to say that even had there been no Convention, provided the drought had been what it had been, the price would have been the same.

MR. LAWRENCE: I said that the only accurate, or partially accurate, statement made in support of the Amendment was as to the increasing of the consumption of sugar on the Continent.

MR. McKENNA said he would take that from the hon. Member. This was a question of plain figures, and anyone was capable of following the increased consumption on the Continent. It amounted to 800,000 tons.

MR. LAWRENCE: I do not admit that.

MR. McKENNA said this was given as a fact on official authority. The decrease in the crop last year which was given again on the authority of the hon. Member's own friends, amounted in comparison with the previous good years to 750,000 tons, so that the hon. Member admitted that was a factor in sending up the price. But the 800,000 tons exceeded by 50,000 tons the whole diminution in the crop due to the drought. If the hon. Member seriously did admit the truth of the contention that foreign consumption had been a considerable factor in sending up the price he must admit that that factor had been more important than the drought itself. It was certainly this increased consumption of 800,000 tons, added to the diminished production of 750,000 tons, which had had the appalling effect of sending up the price to £16 per ton. Of course, outside the House nobody had suggested that the Convention had not had, or would not have, the effect of sending up the price of sugar. In a refiner's trade circular of a distant date he found the following—

> "If the Convention is to do the good for which it was promoted there must be a general readjustment of values, in process of which the tendency will be against the British consumer who has been paying too little, and in favour of those newly-liberated centres of consumption where the people have been paying too much for their sugar."

That was the trade view at the time of the passing of the Convention. In the same circular the notion that the price would not rise was dismissed as all too ridiculous, and the increase in the European demand was given as the cause of the rise in price. There was another authority whose opinion he thought the Government would accept. He referred to Sir Nevile Lubbock. Speaking on September 8th, 1904, at a meeting of the New Colonial Company, he said—

> "If prices keep up, and there was every reason to expect they would, he thought he could promise them a very different state of things next year."

Sir Nevile was not speculating on another drought, but on the effect of the Convention in increasing the consumption of sugar on the Continent. The hon. Member did not think anyone would seriously contend that the Convention had had no effect in sending up prices. Were they to understand that in spite of that having been the admitted result of the Convention, and in spite of the prophecies of the Government at the time of the passing of the Bill having been shown to be wrong, the Government, if their hands were free now, would once again make such a Convention as this? Did the President of the Board of Trade so far stand by his policy? Would the right hon. Gentleman signify that he was so satisfied with the Convention that he would again introduce a Bill to ratify the Convention?

The PRESIDENT of the BOARD of TRADE (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds, Central): Quite ready.

Mr. McKENNA said there was no hope. The Government was incorrigible. Every prophecy they made and on which they founded the Bill had been falsified, and yet they assured the House that if they had the chance they would again enter into the Convention, would pass a Convention Bill, and would tie the hands of the House, and all in order to secure freer trade. What was the free trade they had secured under the Convention? As an illustration he would suppose that two ships came into the port of London, one laden with cheap Russian sugar, bounty-fed, and the other laden with confectionery made out of cheap Russian sugar. Under our new system of free trade the cheap raw material was not allowed to come into our port. The cheap sugar was shut out, but the cheap manufactured sugared goods made from Russian sugar were allowed to come in. Was that free trade worth fighting for? The other parties to the Convention to whom we had surrendered ourselves in the proportion of one to ten were all producers of sugar, and they were all anxious to secure a share, if not the whole, of the great trade we had built up in sugared goods. They had succeeded, and they would succeed still more because they were allowed to impose duties upon the import of sugar products into their countries while we were shutting out cheap raw material. Our manufacturers not having the advantage of free trade in getting cheap raw material were nevertheless handicapped in competition with manufactured goods made from cheap raw material. If we were to interfere with our present system of free trade it should be to allow all products to come into this country free. He did not wish to discriminate between raw material and manufactured goods, prohibiting cheap raw materials and allowing cheap manufactured goods to come in.

What was the effect, measured by the well-known system of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Birmingham, of this shutting out of sugar? We were paying now at the rate of £10,000,000 a year more for our sugar than was paid before the Convention came into force. The hon. Member for Salisbury referred to the fact that the imports of sugar in 1904 cost us £2,800,000 more than they cost in 1903. Those figures were perfectly correct, they were to be seen in the Trade and Navigation Accounts. But those same Trade and Navigation Accounts showed equally that at this moment we were paying at the rate of close on £1,000,000 a month more for sugar than in the corresponding period in the previous year. What did that mean if the present prices lasted over the whole year? Upon the calculation of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Birmingham £10,000,000 a year would mean employment for 120,000 men at 30s. a week, or a living wage and subsistence for 625,000 people. In the language of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Birmingham we had now got 625,000 people thrown upon the streets because the price of sugar had been raised by £10,000,000 a year. But the argument applied here was a far more real argument than as it was usually applied by the late Colonial Secretary, and for this reason. The increase in the price of sugar to us was a dead loss. Before the Convention, when the price was low, a man with 25s. a week gave one week's work in the year in order to pay for sugar for himself and family. He had now to give two weeks work to get exactly the same result, and consequently we had got to pay to people out of the country for what we formerly got free from abroad. We were therefore the losers of the proceeds of a whole week's work of each mechanic on account of the Convention. We were paying higher prices for our goods, spent more money in taxation, and had so many people out of employment.

Figures had been quoted, but they could not be too often repeated because this matter was a real object-lesson in fiscal policy. He knew that the late Colonial Secretary disowned the authorship of the Convention. He remembered long ago when the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Birmingham referred to Majuba he spoke of it as one of Mr. Gladstone's messes. He had no doubt that ten years hence the Sugar Convention would be described as one of Mr. Balfour's messes. But just as the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Birmingham was responsible for Majuba, so was he responsible for the Sugar Convention, and he must take the blame for Majuba and the Convention for what it was worth in either case. That Convention in the injury it had inflicted on the people engaged in the manufacture of sugar-products, had probably done more harm than any other single Act of Parliament in the recollection of any Member of the House. The figures given in the Census Returns were very clear. We had engaged in sugar refining in the whole country 3,100 persons. 41,000 were engaged in the actual industries which used sugar as a raw material. That statement did not include bakers and confectioners. It was not too much to say that 60,000 persons were engaged in other branches of trade in which sugar was a raw material. So that at least 100,000 persons were engaged in industries which used sugar as a raw material. Therefore, for the benefit of 3,000 men engaged in sugar refining—the right hon. Gentleman could only fix his mind on one industry at a time—there were 15,000 persons driven out of employment and 50,000 put on short time. If these statements were correct—and they could be verified by anyone from the official Returns—he asked, was it a wise policy for us to enter this Convention. Had we in fact secured the principles of free trade on the Continent, having regard to the refusal of the parties to the Convention to reduce the surtax, and having regard to the fact that sugar products made from bounty-fed sugar were being admitted into the Conventional countries? Admitting that the drought on the Continent had had—as it must have had—a serious effect in sending up the price of sugar, could it be doubted for a moment that the Convention had greatly aggravated the effects of the drought. He therefore asked hon. Gentlemen opposite whether they would be willing to support the Government in the policy of renewing the Convention, and if not, he asked them to vote for this Amendment.

*Sir WALTER THORBURN (Peebles and Selkirk) said he had been connected with this industry for a great number of years. He had listened to the speeches delivered that day and had read some of those made on the previous night, but so far as he could see the only argument adduced by hon. Gentlemen opposite was an argument in favour of the principle of bounties. They were told that the bounties were of great benefit to this country. He asked hon. Gentlemen opposite if foreign countries gave these bounties purely from philanthropy?

Mr. EMMOTT (Oldham): Why did they want to take them off?

*Sir WALTER THORBURN said he maintained that these foreign countries did not give these bounties on philanthropic grounds. They had one object, and one alone; and that was to kill the sugar-refining industry in this country, and also to knock off the competition of cane sugar, and after that to get the market pretty much to themselves. The hon. Gentleman who had just sat down referred to the comparatively small number of people engaged in the refining industry. If it had happened that a much larger number had been so employed hon. Gentlemen opposite would not have been such advocates of the bounty system. They had been told by the hon. Member for Carnarvon Boroughs about the exclusion of Russian and Argentine sugar; but he might inform that hon. Gentleman that the bulk of Russian sugar formerly exported to Great Britain was now going to Egypt, which latter country was now sending cane sugar to this country. The Egyptians preferred to import beet, which cost less, and export cane sugar to England, which brought a higher price. Russia had now a market for all her surplus sugar products in Egypt and the Balkan States, Persia and other Eastern markets. Java had been referred to; but he would point out that we had a colony which could produce the finest cane sugar in the world, and but for the insane objection to the employment of tropical labour it would do so, viz., in North Queensland. Although white labour could not be employed in North Queensland in sugar cultivation, the objection to tropical labour was so great that only a small quantity of cane sugar was produced there now; that was consumed in Australia itself, and the great bulk of the land was practically left derelict from cultivation.

He hailed with the greatest satisfaction the Amendment brought forward from the opposite bench. He thought it was remarkable evidence of the sincerity of those gentlemen on the question of free trade. For months past they had denounced the Government from every platform in the country for their policy which was to make free trade freer. But in this Amendment they asked the Government to revert to one of the worst forms of protection ever devised by the wit of man. During the last session there were various occasions on which hon. Gentlemen opposite raised the question of Chinese labour, which they thought they might use in the country with some advantage to themselves. Chinese labour had become rather stale now, and when a debate upon it took place not one of the right hon. Gentlemen on the Front Opposition Bench got up in his place to take part in it. He did not know whether they would follow the same course in regard to sugar. Now, they were told by this Amendment that heavy losses had been inflicted on some classes of trade. He submitted that the present price of sugar was not so great as it had been in past times, and although confectioners may have had to submit to reduced profits as compared with the period when bounties were in existence, he denied that actual losses had been incurred. He happened to see the reports of two confectionery companies; and one of them paid 12 per cent. and the other 10 per cent. What, then, of the statements of hon. Gentlemen opposite? The reduction in labour had also been grossly exaggerated; but even if it were not, there was a shortage in employment in almost every other industry as well. Why should the confectionery trade be exempt?

The question, however, was whether the Convention was responsible for the present price of sugar. He was convinced it was not the result of the Convention, but of an act of God, Who had sent a drought over Central Europe unprecedented since the middle of the eighteenth century. There was a rock in the Elbe which had not been seen since that period, but it was visible last year. That showed that there was an enormous drought, the result of which was that the beet crop showed a shortage of 1,200,000 tons. There had been a very considerable increase in the price of wool, which was also produced by a great drought in Australia, during which millions and millions of sheep perished; wool became scarcer; and according to the laws of supply and demand the price increased until it was now nearly double what it was before the drought. He would, however, tell the House what the Convention had done. It had stimulated the growth of cane sugar in the West Indies and elsewhere, with the result that 400,000 tons more of cane sugar were imported into this country than last year. Were it not for that the price of sugar would be £4 or £5 a ton greater than it was. Before the abolition of the bounties the cane growers had no inducement to improve their land and better their machinery. Now that was all changed. According to Mr. Lamont, the Radical candidate for Bute, whose testimony hon. Gentlemen opposite would accept, immediately the Convention was signed a wave of prosperity passed over the West Indies. He was told that such was the scientific skill that was being applied to the cultivation of cane sugar that eventually it would be grown at a less price than beet sugar could be produced. He was convinced that in a very few years sugar would be cheaper in this country than it had ever been before. The Convention would put the sugar industries of the world on an equitable basis. Neither the grower nor the refiner asked for anything but fair competition and to be put on a level basis with the foreign producer; and they were not afraid to fight the world either in connection with the sugar industry or any other industry. The confectioners were not content because they were not given protection. Under the bounty system undoubtedly many large fortunes had been amassed, but if these gentlemen now said that they could not exist without protection, then they must go under. Their policy was a very short-sighted one, for had the bounties not been abolished, it was only a matter of time when refining would cease to exist in this country and the competition between cane and beet sugar would have been killed. Then they would have realised what the price of sugar would have risen to He himself had been connected with the refining industry, and he had known the price of sugar to be far higher than it was at present. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham pointed out that the present price was clearly temporary. At present it was possible to buy in that market sugar for delivery in October at £4 a ton below the existing quotations. He was afraid that a great many of the arguments of hon. Gentlemen opposite were used for the purpose of influencing votes in the country. He could not however, understand hon. Gentlemen opposite who professed to be free-traders supporting protection of the worst kind. They were throwing consistency to the winds. If they could only secure a temporary advantage for their Party consistency might go by the board. He was sure that all the monstrous statements of hon. Gentlemen opposite would not, however, delude the country in the long run.

MR. BRYCE (Aberdeen, S.) commented upon the position which the hon. Member occupied as a champion of free trade. It was a novel position for him and one to which he hoped the hon. Member would adhere.

SIR WALTER THORBURN: I have been nothing else all my life.

MR. BRYCE hoped, then, that when the proposals of the right hon. Member for West Birmingham came before the House they would meet with the hon. Member's strenuous opposition.

SIR WALTER THORBURN: Yes; I have never supported the position of the right hon. Member for West Birmingham.

MR. BRYCE said that if they had succeeded in eliciting the opinions of one Member on that side on this point the debate would not have been in vain. There was just one remark which fell from the hon. Member which he would at once refer to lest he overlooked it later. The hon. Member said the whole object of the bounties was to kill the sugar refiners of this country, and that when that end had been attained the bounties would disappear; but did not the hon. Member know enough of protectionist countries to know that the great mainspring of protection was their own direct interests, and that if they thought they could get any benefit from their Governments, either by way of bounty or duty, they asked for it?

SIR WALTER THORBURN said that what he said was that these bounties not only killed the sugar refiners, but, if persevered in, killed the cane producers as well, because it was impossible for them to compete with bounty-fed sugar.

MR. BRYCE said that the hon. Member at the latter end of his speech showed that it was perfectly obvious that the cane-sugar industry could not be killed, that cane sugar was bound to come into competition with beet.

SIR WALTER THORBURN: Not against bounties.

MR. BRYCE: Yes. [AN HON. MEMBER: Impossible.] The hon. Member would have an opportunity of proving that it was impossible later, but he (Mr. Bryce) would give some reasons why he thought it was possible. The hon. Member had spoken of a rock in the Elbe and had said that when it was exposed to view Germany wept, but in this case it would be the other way about, because Germany was using more sugar than ever before, and instead of weeping the people would be smiling, as instead of one lump they would be sweetening their coffee with two.

The speech of the Member for West Birmingham did not seem to him to have added much to what the House previously knew on the subject. The right hon. Gentleman's chief argument was that the rise in the price of sugar was not due in any way to the Convention, but to natural causes, and that it was ridiculous of them to complain of a Convention against foreign bounties. He admitted that the statistics they had had about sugar from all quarters had been conflicting and difficult to deal with for anyone who was not an expert. But he thought there were some broad results which were incontestable, and which were not disputed by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham.

Sugar was dearer, contrary to the predictions made by members of the Government. It was twice as dear as it was at the time of the Convention, and we were paying £8,000,000 or £9,000,000 a year more than we paid before, and from what he gathered the consumption was decreasing. The consumption of sugar, which three years ago had reached 90 lbs. per head of the population, had now decreased to 80 lbs. The prediction that employment would increase after the Convention had also been falsified, the balance of the changes which had taken place being towards the diminution of trade. True there had been an increase of labour amounting to 400 or 500 hands in the sugar-refining trade, but there had been a diminution in the other sugar-using trades calculated at about 12,000 men out of work and between 40,000 and 50,000 working half time.

The Member for West Birmingham had contended that an explanation of the state of the sugar trade was to be found in natural fluctuation, as in the case of some other commodities. But in regard to cotton and grain there had been no State interference. Here we had a Convention which was intended to have effects, and which had had effects. It was inevitable that we should ascribe some of the alteration of price to a measure which was intended to produce that result.

The House was told that owing to the abolition of bounties less beet was planted in Germany, France, and Austria. That was at any rate a result of the Convention. In those countries, too, the price had fallen and the consumption had increased. Then there was the fact that we had excluded from our market certain exporting countries. The cutting off of the Argentine and Russian supply must have had an effect upon our markets. He had thus pointed out three causes directly due to the Convention, which had no doubt had the principal influence in raising the price of sugar. He was interested to see the Government in the new and unfamiliar character which they generally tried to fix upon the Opposition—that of being the friends of every country but their own. They had benefited the people of Germany and France by giving them cheap sugar, whilst our people had certainly suffered—not merely as consumers, but also as manufacturers using cheap sugar. Why when the Government were entering into these negotiations did they not carry out the policy of making commercial treaties, so strongly recommended by the Member for West Birmingham, and adopted by the First Lord of the Treasury, for the benefit of British sugar products? Instead of that, those industries were now in a worse position than before. Another result of the Convention was that we had lost the advantage of having open ports. Our system of open ports was one of the things that had made our mercantile marine the greatest in the world. For the first time within historical memory we had subjected ourselves to the control of foreign authorities. We had become members of a board, all the other members of which were more or less protectionist and had interests adverse to our own, and we had bound ourselves for the period of the Convention to submit to the deliberations of that board, in which we generally found ourselves in a minority. Then we had made it easier for what were called corners or syndicates to be formed in sugar. It would be obvious that the more the source of supply was restricted the easier it became for a trust or syndicate to create a shortage.

What had been the object of entering into this Convention? First of all, it was suggested that it would stop dumping. After all, the sugar trade had benefited by dumping all these years, and if we suffered from protection in other countries in so many ways, might we not get what little benefit there was to be gained from it? We had been getting some little gain from the mischievous fiscal policy which prevailed on the Continent, but now we were to suffer all the evils and get none of the benefits. He knew the favourite argument was that if dumping was allowed to go on for a certain length of time it would ultimately crush our own industry out of existence; that if any kind of goods was habitually and persistently sold in this country below cost price the foreigner would get a monopoly of the market and would be able to raise the price of those goods and sell them to us at any price he liked to fix.

But sugar was not produced in this country, though it was produced in some of our Colonies. At any rate, English interests were not affected by this dumping. No one could say that it was doing any harm to England at all comparable to the benefit of getting the sugar cheap. The Convention might have been intended as a measure of retaliation. If so, the retaliation had taken the form of making sugar cheaper for the foreigner and dearer for ourselves; in fact, it had turned out to be a retaliation on ourselves, for the tangible result was the greater dearness of sugar in this country and the consequent damage to our own industries. He did not understand what hon. Members meant by saying that they, on his side of the House, supported bounties. They had never supported them.

Sir WALTER THORBURN: You are supporting them to-night.

Mr. BRYCE denied that they had ever said a single word in defence of bounties. They had recognised that the bounties enabled people in this country to get sugar cheaper than they could without them, but they had never advocated bounties. Liberal statesmen had always held that bounties were bad and would oppose them in this country, but they had never attempted to go as missionaries to other countries and ask them to abolish bounties. When the Liberal Government in 1881 or 1882 was urged to approach foreign Governments on the subject, no one opposed the suggestion more warmly than the Member for West Birmingham. In 1887 or 1888, when the late Baron de Worms urged the entering into negotiations with foreign countries with a view to stopping the bounties on sugar, Mr. Gladstone held that, although bounties were wrong, it was no business of ours to interfere.

The real reason for entering into the Convention was the furthering of the interests of the West Indies, and the prime mover was the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. Those who remembered the debates when the Act ratifying the Convention was passed would remember the strenuous vigour with which the right hon. Gentleman supported their case. But the House must not suppose that this was a question on which the prosperity of the West Indies turned. It was a question of importance only for a very few of the islands. If they had given bounties to those particular islands, it would have been far better business for this country than paying the additional price for sugar which we now had to pay. The reason why the West Indies had not succeeded with cane sugar was not solely owing to the competition of beet, but because they had neglected improvements in their methods of production. He had visited Jamaica and Cuba, and knew that wherever there were new plantations equipped with good machinery they were doing well and making a profit. He agreed that it was a wise policy to send out a competent botanist to see how improvements could be made in the cane. That was a decided benefit, and he hoped the Colonial Office would continue a policy of that kind. From what had been said the House might very well suppose that the cane-sugar industry, under the blighting influence of bounties, was dying out, but what were the facts? In 1882–3 the production of cane sugar in the world was 200,000 tons. In 1902–3 the world's production was 4,300,000 tons. The cane contained a greater quantity of sugar in proportion to the expenditure than could be produced by beet. All that was needed was to open up these tropical countries and give them the benefit of the best machinery and scientific appliances, because they already possessed great advantages of climate. What he had said of Cuba could be said of Java and other places, where the production of cane sugar was enormously increasing, and when American capital went into the Philippines the same thing would happen there. His complaint against the Government was not that bounties were a good thing or that the Government should have taken any steps to keep them up, but simply that they should have left them alone. They ought to leave trade and commerce alone, because nature was wiser than they were in these matters. The Government appeared now to be animated by a philanthropic desire to benefit the people of Germany and Austria and give them their sugar cheaper, and in this they had succeeded. He did not think, however, that that was a policy which any sensible commercial country should follow. There never was a case in which it had been shown so clearly that this country was receiving a maximum of inconvenience in return for a minimum of benefit to the West Indies. The whole moral of this was that they should leave trade alone.

*MR. BONAR LAW said this was a subject which had been very much discussed, but there was a large number of arguments which could be regarded as stock-in-trade arguments. He would deal with them, but before doing so he would refer to some of the points brought forward in which individual hon. Members had more of a proprietary interest. The first point he would refer to was the remarks which had just been made about the West Indies. It was a familiar argument that what was wrong with the West Indies was antiquated methods and the want of improved machinery. If the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Aberdeen referred to the right hon. Baronet the Member for Berwick, who was a member of the West Indies Commission, he would learn that because of the bounties the manufacturers of beet sugar could afford to have the best machinery, and that by the abolition of the bounties the West Indies, being placed in a position of equality with their rivals, would be able to obtain the most improved machinery also.

MR. BRYCE said his right hon. friend was opposed to the abolition of the bounties.

*MR. BONAR LAW: I think the right hon. Gentleman is mistaken. I think the right hon. Baronet was in favour of the abolition of bounties.

MR. BRYCE: In the way of countervailing duties.

*MR. BONAR LAW said the right hon. Gentleman opposite and the hon. Member for Carnarvon Boroughs said to the Government, "Look what you have done! You have not only doubled the price of sugar here, but you have reduced it by half on the Continent." He never had the slightest desire to prevent any other country from getting an advantage if they could get it without doing us any harm. Now did the fact that they were getting sugar cheaper on the Continent do this country any harm? The hon. Member for Carnarvon thought it did, but he appeared to be under a misapprehension. What was the chief cause of the lower price? It was because the interval duty had been lowered, but that did not affect competition with this country. In all the countries concerned a drawback was given, and they all competed upon equal terms in regard to the price of sugar. England went into the Convention not merely as a consuming country but as a country producing sugar. If the effect of the Convention was not to stimulate the production of cane sugar in the British Empire it had been a failure, and if it did stimulate this production then it would be a success. Another point alluded to by the hon. Member for Carnarvon was that we had prohibited sugar from our ports, but the real apostle of this doctrine was the hon. Member for West Islington, who contended that three-fourths of the rise in the price of sugar was due to the shutting out of sugar from our markets. He wondered whether the hon. Gentleman realised what that argument came to. It amounted to this, that as far as three-fourths of the rise was concerned, if this country had done what other countries had done, that was to put on countervailing duties instead of prohibition, that rise would not have taken place.

MR. LOUGH (Islington, W.): I do not see that it follows.

*MR. BONAR LAW said that other people saw it. The result of that contention was this, that owing to prohibition the Government had made the price of sugar dearer than it would have been had our markets been open to sugar from Russia and Argentina. But the largest market for Russian sugar was the East, where it went in very large quantities, and where it competed with Austrian and German sugar. Was it not obvious that when Russia was thus selling a large part of her production, all that was necessary to sell any surplus was to take a smaller price than that of her competitors? If the market had been open, Russian sugar would not have been sent here at a lower price than could be obtained in the East. What object could they have in it? He could think of only one. If the Russian Government were as anxious as hon. Gentlemen opposite to turn out this Government they might have sacrificed the price of sugar, but that was the only reason he could conceive for a policy so completely unbusinesslike. There was another point. Switzerland was one of the countries which were open to receive the Russian sugar. It could go there if it was really capable of being sold at a price materially lower than our price. Why was it that sugar was not cheaper in Switzerland? That reminded him of a rather curious incident. The hon. Member for Devonport had made the strongest case hitherto against the Convention, but he was able to do so only by throwing overboard three-fourths of all the speeches and pamphlets which had been delivered on this subject during the recess, in every one of which it was stated that, owing to the prohibition, confectioners in Switzerland were able to get their sugar cheaper, and were so able to beat us in our own markets. The hon. Member for Islington wrote a letter to a newspaper in which he implied that sugar in Switzerland was 5s. cheaper than in this country, but did he only imply this on the platform or did he state it as a fact?

Mr. LOUGH: I have said nothing at all about Switzerland for three or four months.

*Mr. BONAR LAW said that illustrated in a most striking way a fact which he had noticed in the debate of the day before. With one exception, none of the hon. Gentlemen who spoke mentioned Switzerland, and when the hon. Member for Dundee, who did not know so much about his subject, incidentally mentioned that country he noticed a solemn frown gather on the faces of his friends. Why should the hon. Member for West Islington not mention Switzerland for months? It was because he had found that sugar was dearer in that country than here. Hon. Gentlemen opposite talked about the competition, or they did until three months ago, which we suffered from with Swiss manufacturers. What was the fact? If they competed with us in this market or in neutral markets they had to pay in this market not only an equivalent of the sugar duty which our manufacturers had to pay, but they had to pay their own duty of 3s. in Switzerland for which they did not get a drawback. In competing with us, either here or in neutral markets, the Swiss manufacturers were handicapped to the extent of fully 20 per. cent. on the price of their raw material.

He would now refer to what were the common stock arguments on this subject. They were very eloquently put by the hon. Member for Carnarvon. The hon. Member said that in the Convention they had a working model of what fiscal reform meant. Whatever might be said about the Sugar Convention, he did not see how anyone could possibly say with truth that it was a step in the direction of protection. The fact that it was so described illustrated the great change which had come over the minds of those who considered themselves the representatives of free trade as to what free trade really is. It is just the difference between two opposing theories—the theory of free trade and the theory of free imports. To the free-importer cheapness was the one thing necessary, everything else was unimportant, whereas to the free-trader freedom of exchange was the one thing necessary, and everything else, even cheapness, was unimportant. Cobden said that cheapness was not the basis of his policy, but free exchange at natural prices. What, in the opinion of hon. Gentlemen opposite, was Cobden's idea in making that distinction? He did not think it was very difficult to find. Cobden knew, as everyone knew, that cheapness, though it might be a good thing, was not necessarily a good thing, but was often a very bad thing. Take an illustration from the present time. If hon. Gentlemen were in the habit of reading the commercial journals, or the commercial articles in the daily Press, they would find a good deal of talk just now about the revival of trade, which, however, he thought was rather premature. In those articles they would see that the expectation of better trade was based on the fact that prices were a little higher than they had been—that there was a slight rise in the price of commodities. That meant that low prices meant bad trade and bad employment, and that a rise in prices was regarded as an indication of better trade and better employment. The right hon. Gentleman who had just sat down tried, he thought somewhat disingenuously, to show that Mr. Gladstone looked on bounties as bad only for the countries that gave them. He knew that was not the view of Mr. Gladstone.

MR. BRYCE said everyone knew that Mr. Gladstone condemned bounties as bad economically. He must ask the hon. Gentleman not to misrepresent him; he thought his language was discourteous. What he said was that Mr. Gladstone always steadily refused to have anything to do with any negotiations for the abolition of bounties on the basis either of retaliatory duties or of prohibition.

*MR. BONAR LAW said if he had said anything which the right hon. Gentleman thought was discourteous he was sorry, and withdrew it. He would quote the following passage from a speech of Mr. Gladstone's—

> "We do not regard with any satisfaction the system under which an artificial advantage is given in our markets to the products of foreign labour. Some people say it is a good thing because the consumer gets the benefit of it, but I do not think that any benefit founded on inequality and injustice can bring good even to the consumer."

But it was not necessary to go so far back even as Mr. Gladstone. There was a debate on the subject in the House in 1899, when the Leader of the Opposition said—

> "These bounties appear to me to be bad."

But he did not stop them. If he had done so, he might have meant what is his present contention that they are bad for the country which gives, and not for the country which receives them; but he added they are bad because—

> "They disturb trade and hinder the development of the country."

It was, then, our trade which they disturbed, and our country whose development they hindered, so that even he had become a very recent convert to the new theory of what free trade was.

The question for consideration was whether the Convention in itself was a good or bad thing. If it was bad it was bad only because and to the extent to which it had raised the price of sugar. If the Convention were the cause of the rise in price there were two questions which he would like to put. Why did not the rise occur earlier, and why was it not plain from the course of prices that the Convention was the cause of the rise? There were two periods in this connection which must be taken into account—the date when the Convention was signed, and the date when it came into operation. In regard to the first he was bound to say that in connection with any article the moment it became apparent something was going to happen to raise the price was the time when the increase would begin. What had happened? The Convention was signed in March three years ago. What was the average price of sugar for those three years as compared with the average price of the previous three years? The price had fallen in the last three years to the extent of more than 1s. per cwt. Many hon. Gentlemen opposite claimed that the Convention was the sole cause of the rise in the price of sugar. [OPPOSITION cries of "No, no."] Well, he had read a speech of the Leader of the Opposition in which he had practically said so, and stated that the result of the Convention had been to add £8,000,000 a year to the cost of sugar. Well, he had wondered where the right hon. Gentleman had got those £8,000,000 from; but probably it was from a speech of the hon. Member for Islington, where he found the increased cost was £16,000,000, and the right hon. Gentleman had divided that sum by two and thought that he would be comparatively safe.

So much for the first period; he came now to the second period. The Convention came into operation on September 1st, 1903. Did the price immediately rise? On the contrary, it fell; and six months after the Convention came into operation the price had only risen to that figure at which it stood the day before the Convention came into operation. He repeated that if the Convention was the cause of the rise, the rise must have occurred earlier; it would not have taken six months to bring about that change in the price. Now, as to the criticism of the hon. Gentleman opposite; he hoped to put it fairly.

That hon. Gentleman's contention was that, as regarded the first period, there was a great deal of speculation in anticipation of a new duty being imposed here on sugar, and that when a new duty was not put on the price fell to counteract the rise which would otherwise have been occasioned by the Convention. What were the facts? Immediately after the Budget there was a rise instead of a fall. On April 21st a large sugar broker's circular stated that since the Budget had set at rest the fear of an increased duty, a greater demand had been experienced, and the consequent result was not a fall, but a rise of 1½d. per lb. He was surprised that the hon. Gentleman should have put forward that theory at all, because the hon. Gentleman knew better probably than most Members of the House that sugar was an article in the world's market, that the price was quoted f.o.b. Hamburg, and that the effect of an English duty could only be local. As a matter of fact, the duty was really a "bear" point against the market instead of in its favour, because it would have the effect of diminishing the consumption, and, therefore, a tendency to produce a fall rather than a rise. What possible answer was there to that? The hon. Gentleman told the House with a flourish of trumpets that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade had a very superficial acquaintance with the sugar business. He personally did not object to that; he did not pretend to a knowledge of all the details of the trade possessed by the hon. Gentleman. But the hon. Gentleman had omitted something; he had shown a want of knowledge of the general principles which affected every trade. The hon. Gentleman had put forward another argument, which he admitted was a better one, about the price not falling after the Convention came into operation. He admitted that there was something in that argument, which amounted to this, that the Continental Governments had ear-marked a large quantity of sugar to receive the bounty and to be shipped after the date the Convention came into operation. That, he admitted, would have an effect on prices; but he maintained, on the other hand, that it ought not to have had the effect of counteracting the expectation of increased prices owing to the bounty. He had had a large experience in other articles that fluctuated more than sugar. He had seen immediate statistics dead against a rise in price. He had seen stocks increasing month after month, and yet the price steadily rising. Why was that? Because people who knew most about the trade believed that better times were coming in the future, and were quite willing to lie out of their money in expectation of a rise and of the higher profits they would get when that expectation was realised. He maintained that exactly the same thing would have happened in regard to sugar if there had been that belief in the Convention raising the price.

What was the cause of the rise? There was no difficulty in answering that question. Admittedly there was an unexpected shortage in the beet supply of more than 1,000,000 tons. Did anyone for a moment deny that that shortage in itself was bound to produce a big rise in price? He did not say that it might not be possible that the rise had been accentuated by the Convention. He was ready to say something more; that before the Convention was carried out it might have seemed reasonable to anyone that, while the change was taking place, there would be a slight rise in price, but that the change would not have been a permanent one. It was therefore quite possible that some part of the rise was due to the Convention; but there was no evidence whatever of that. In fact, the whole of the evidence was in the contrary direction, for while the crop of beet sugar had decreased, the crop of cane sugar had increased to the extent of nearly 400,000 tons. He wanted the House to notice the way in which hon. Gentlemen opposite dealt with this matter. They said that whenever there was a rise in price, or anything favourable to their contention, that was due to the Convention; but that whenever there was a fall, that was due to other circumstances. Take jam, for instance. They knew that the price of jam was low, and they said that was not due to the Convention, but to the big supply of fruit; that the price of confections was high, but that was not due to the bad crop of beet, it was due to the Convention! In the same way hon. Gentlemen opposite now said that the Convention had nothing whatever to do with increasing the supply of cane sugar. He did not think they could get anyone to believe that. He insisted there was not the slightest doubt that the fact that the Convention was signed did encourage the production of cane sugar all over the world, and that, as a consequence, some part at least of the increase was due to the Convention, and that it counteracted the effect of the shortage in the beet supply.

There was another aspect of this question which should be regarded. Hon. Gentlemen opposite had made a great outcry on behalf of the confectioners. It was said that they were going to be ruined by getting their sugar at the same price as other people. There was something he would like to say in regard to this question of the ruin which was falling on the confectioners. His right hon. friend the Member for West Birmingham had pointed out the previous night that so recently as May of last year the confectioners could have bought sugar for delivery at the end of that year at 9s. per cwt., or only 6d. per cwt. above the price the day before the Convention came into operation, or they could have bought it up to the end of this year at only 6d. advance on that price. Now, a gentleman had been writing very violent letters to the papers on this subject who signed himself as a managing director of a confectionery company. If he was as certain that the Convention was going to raise the price of sugar as he now was that it had raised the price, why did he not buy in advance? If he did not buy under such circumstances it showed he was not a very skilful managing director and was not likely to write any wise letters on that or any other subject. But why did he not buy? There could be only one answer to that question. He did not buy because he did not believe that the Convention would have the effect of raising the price, and neither did anyone else. The people who made their living by buying and selling sugar did not expect it, or they would not have been willing to sell at the lower price, and the fact that they were willing was proof that the rise was not due to something that could have been foreseen, but to something which was absolutely unforeseen—viz., the drought on the Continent. In this direction he wanted to deal with an argument used by the hon. Member for Monmouthshire. That hon. Member said that owing to the Convention sugar had been cheaper on the Continent, and that consumption had largely increased there, and that the supply available here had been in consequence diminished. He admitted that that was an important consideration, but the answer was that in every one of the brokers' circulars as to the price of sugar issued during the months while sugar still kept low, reference was made to the increased consumption. That, therefore, was a factor that was taken into account, and yet did not cause an advance. He understood the hon. Member for Devonport to say that there was no rumour about the drought until August. In that the hon. Gentleman was wrong. He had looked into the circulars and found that the first reference was June 16th, and on July 14th it was given as an explanation of the slight rise that had taken place. All these facts clearly bore out that the rise was not due to the Convention, which could be foreseen, but to the drought, which could not be possibly foreseen.

The hon. Member for Carnarvon made a great point of his having said that in his belief employment in this country would be improved if the Convention were carried, and referred to the fact that there were several thousand people in the confectionery trade out of employment at the moment. Supposing they admitted that, did anyone on the opposite side of the House really maintain that the whole of that want of employment was due to the high price of sugar, whatever the cause of that high price. He would point out that employment had been bad for some time. At a time when there was a great want of employment the trades which suffered first were those which supplied the luxuries. Sugar for tea or cooking was a necessity, but confectionery was a luxury, and the trade which must suffer most was the trade which supplied luxuries consumed by all classes of the community. In 1889 the confectioners were suffering in exactly the same way as they were suffering now. There was want of employment, and they said they were being ruined by the high price of sugar. Then they attributed their misfortunes to the existence of the bounties. Now they attributed them to the abolition of the bounties. It was obvious that the present high price of sugar could not be a lasting price. Hon. Gentlemen who quoted the present price, and told them that it was exacting £10,000,000 a year from us, really knew that they were talking nonsense. If they read The Times to-day they would find that sugar could be bought for the last quarter of this year at 4s. per cwt. below the present prices. They knew that the present high price was temporary and that it could not permanently injure the sugar-users in this country.

Hon. Gentlemen opposite looked at this matter as if our whole interest in it was as consumers—as if it did not matter to us where we got the sugar so long as we got it cheap. That was a very shortsighted policy. What would be the effect of the abolition of the bounties? The prosperity of the West Indies was admitted by every one. It was admitted that money was pouring into the West Indies to an extent which had not been experienced before. With new machinery and more scientific methods they would be able to produce sugar cheaper than they had ever done before. That was, no doubt, an advantage to the West Indies: but hon. Gentlemen opposite imagined that in addressing working men they should appeal only to their direct personal interest. That, he thought, was a mistake. He recently addressed a large working-class audience on the subject, and he thought the working-classes had as strong a sense of fair play as any one in that House, and that they realised that Parliament ought to prevent injustice to our Colonies, just in the same way as it would prevent injustice to any trade in the United Kingdom. Another direct effect of the abolition of the bounties was that the sugar-refining industry in this country, which had suffered from unfair treatment for thirty years, was showing signs of reviving. It was said that the sugar-refining industry was small. It was; and that explained the attitude of hon. Gentlemen. If it were large, if it commanded more votes their attitude would be different. But it was reviving. At Greenock 25 per cent. more raw material passed through the refineries last year, as compared with the previous year. That was not bad for one year. One of the indirect effects of the abolition of the bounties would be the increase of employment in this country. What would now have been the increase of our trade with the West Indies and our Colonies if the enormous increase in our consumption of sugar had been supplied from cane-producing countries, from countries largely within the Empire, instead of from beet-producing countries, from which we got no advantage? In his own time machinery for the West Indies was one of the most important industries in his constituency. Look at the sugar machinery alone, which we would have supplied, but that was not the whole of it. In exchange for their exports of sugar, the sugar Colonies would have required supplies of all kinds, and our factories would have been busy and the men employed in them would have found work in producing these supplies. Consider also what the effect in our shipping trade would have been if ships had been required to bring home that sugar and take out those supplies. That indirect increase of trade would have given employment to an enormously greater number of people than the whole number employed in the confectionery industry. That increased trade we had lost entirely owing to the bounties. Now the bounties had been abolished, and we were gradually regaining it. He was told in Glasgow that the sugar machinery firms were working night and day. What had they gained by importing beet sugar from Germany and Austria? This country did not supply them with any of the machinery they required, and so far was it from being the case that, in consequence of our increased purchases of sugar from these countries they bought more manufactures from us, as a matter of fact, our exports of manufactured goods to Germany were less now than fifteen years ago.

Any one, he thought, who took all those considerations into account would feel that Mr. Gladstone took a wiser and a more far-seeing view than the Gentleman who now sat in his place. They would feel that Mr. Gladstone was right, that the right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition was wrong now but had been right in 1899 when he declared that bounties were bad because "they disturbed trade, and hindered the development of the country."

MR. LOUGH said his only quarrel with the hon. Gentleman was his statement that he (Mr. Lough) had stumbled into a difficulty with reference to Switzerland. That was not the case, as he had visited the country and knew. The hon. Gentleman said that his hon. friends could not be free-traders and free-importers. He, himself, was willing to admit that he was as much a free-importer as he was a free-trader. The only object any Government could have in forming an exchange was to establish cheapness. Why should the Government object to cheapness? Cheapness meant plenty: dearness meant famine. The hon. Gentleman stated that trade was improving everywhere, and he attributed that to the fact that commodities were getting a little dearer. He denied that altogether. Improvement of trade occurred when the purchasing power of the people was increased. The hon. Gentleman was quite candid in his defence of the Sugar Convention, and stated that its main object was to improve a declining industry.

MR. BONAR LAW said that that was only one of the objects.

MR. LOUGH said that the hon. Gentleman referred to the refining industry, but it was of a very limited character. Then the hon. Gentleman spoke of improvements in the West Indies; and he laid down the extraordinary theory that this country did not receive anything in return for the sugar imported from the Continent. What nonsense it all was! The hon. Gentleman ought to remember that the House expected from him some economic doctrine; but if he suggested that imports from the Colonies paid for exports more than imports from foreign countries he was mistaken. Ministers would be judged more by their treatment of sugar than that of any other commodity. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham opened up a vista with regard to many commodities. His policy was vague and distant; but, so far as sugar was concerned, he had had his way. They had now an opportunity of considering the result; and many hon. Gentlemen opposite, who supported the Sugar Convention, would find themselves on a black list as the enemies of free trade when the general election occurred. Any free-trader who had helped forward the Convention might be likened to a soldier who secured an entrance to a beleagured fortress on the pretence of defending it, and then used his position to hand over the citadel to the enemy.

He had been accused of making extravagant statements as to price, but who would now dispute that his view was correct? He did not think the House would agree with the Parliamentary Secretary's treatment of the question of price. To argue that if the Convention was signed to-day, and there was no rise in price to-morrow, the Convention had not affected prices was an absurd way of dealing with the question. Markets were not immediately affected by legislation. It was not until the people engaged in the business concerned had actual experience of the trend of events that the House could tell what results its legislation might have. The question of price should be looked at broadly. He did not quarrel with the list of prices the Government had put forward, for they admitted that in July, 1902, three months after the Convention was signed, the price was 6s. per cwt., and that was a good price to take. Fifteen months later, when the Convention came into operation, the price was 8s. 4½d., a rise of 40 per cent. After the lapse of a twelvemonth the price was 10s. 10½d., a rise of 80 per cent.; while at the end of last month the price had still further risen to 18s. 7¼d., or a rise of 160 per cent. An increase of one penny per lb. on the sugar imported represented £15,000,000; therefore, as the increase was more than a penny, his estimate of £15,000,000 had been fully justified. In addition, there was the £6,000,000 of extra taxation, making a total of £21,000,000 upon this commodity, which must necessarily have dealt a staggering blow to the industries affected. But while his statements as to price had been borne out by the event, how did the prophecies of the Government stand? The President of the Board of Trade declared that the Convention would bring about an era of moderate and comparatively stable prices, and expressed the belief that the average price would not be raised at all, while the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham said he had never admitted that a rise would take place, and denied also that Sir Henry Norman had ever made any such admission. He did not suggest that these statements were not made in good faith, but how extremely foolish the authors of the Convention appeared in face of the tremendous rise of 160 per cent. There had never been so long and so pronounced an upward movement in the price of sugar during the whole of the period over which these discussions had ranged.

But were the Government quite as innocent with regard to the probability of a rise as they pretended to be? Did they really think the price would not go up? Incidentally he might express his belief that the Government were shaping their plans for a Colonial Conference on the model of the conference at Brussels. During the sittings of that conference the Cabinet held meetings at home, and were constantly telegraphing instructions to the British representatives in Brussels. Early in 1902, after urging that the Convention should be pushed forward, they stated that their main reason "for desiring to terminate a system which for a time had tended to cheapen the price of sugar," was their conviction of its injurious effects on the sugar-producing Colonies in the West Indies. That was a remarkable admission in the face of the Prime Minister's declaration that it was no part of his policy to raise the price of food. In February, Lord Lansdowne wired that if the Convention was not arranged the British Government would take steps to safeguard British interests, and, later on, that it was important that a decision should be arrived at without delay. Those despatches created a situation as dramatic as any recently seen. Publicly the Government were declaring against the taxation of food, while in the secrecy of the Cabinet they were working to terminate the period of cheap sugar, and demanding the right to subsidise the Colonies and grant them a preference. To complete the picture, the policy of the Government was now seen in full operation, and the people of this country were suffering grave evils owing to the experiments that had been made. In the face of these facts, it was impossible to come to any other conclusion than that the Government expected a rise in price to follow the Convention, that they did the whole thing deliberately, and that nothing had occurred except what they had anticipated and did their best to promote.

The contention of the Government was that although the prices had gone up they had at any rate established a better system of trade and put the sugar industry on a sound footing. He had grave suspicion of any defence of free trade from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade or the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham. The position of the Opposition on this question ought to be clearly understood. They did not mix up the questions of the abolition of bounties and the Brussels Convention. The former could have been easily secured without the instrumentality of the latter. As free-traders they were and always had been in favour of the abolition of bounties, but that was a very different thing from supporting such an instrument as this Convention. The nature and effect of the bounties had never been really understood in this country, but the results of their abolition had thrown a new light on the question. There had been a great increase in consumption in every beet-producing country. Free-traders had always maintained that the abolition of bounties would result in great blessing to the bounty-giving countries themselves, and this contention had been abundantly borne out by the facts. What had occurred proved that bounties and tariffs were exactly the same in their incidence, nature, and effects, and should therefore be opposed by all free-traders. It had been too readily assumed that the bounties had made sugar cheap in this country. If a French importer produced sugar at a cost of £8 a ton, and received a bounty of £5 for exporting it to this country, would it be sold in Mincing Lane at £5 10s.? Not a bit of it. If the price was £11 the Frenchman would take every penny of it; he would not sell the sugar a farthing the cheaper because he had received a bounty. The object of foreigners in getting their Governments to organise a system of bounties was to put money into their own pockets, not to give anything to the British, but to enrich themselves. The reason sugar fell was that the buyer always found some other sugar on the market which he would have taken if the other had not agreed to meet his wants. The price was settled by the law of supply and demand, and had never been settled by bounties or by any consideration given beforehand to the grower. If that were true, it was also true that the present rise in price was due, not to the bounties, but to something else, and hon. Members, putting aside the sophistries of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade, ought to search patiently for the real reason of the rise in this absolute necessary of life. Much had been made of the difference between the cost of production and the price at which the article was sold being met by a bounty. That was a most dangerous doctrine. What had we to do with the cost of production in any great market? Which cost of production did the Government mean—the highest or the lowest? Sugar was produced in forty-two countries, in some of which the cost of production was as low as £5 a ton. If that question were taken into account at all a stop would be put to all improvement in methods of manufacture, and there would be great difficulty in preserving the commercial supremacy of this country.

But what was the real reason of the great rise in price? The hon. Gentleman opposite had made out that it was largely due to the shortage in the beet crop. But to what was the shortage in the beet crop due? The reason was that when, instead of allowing the bounty system to die a natural death, the Government resolved to take part in the Brussels Convention, and to give a certain day for the termination of the system, they caused a diminution in the sowing of beet to the extent of 6½ per cent., which represented a falling off in the crop of about 400,000 tons. Then came a dry summer, for which of course the Convention was not responsible. But then there was the increased consumption in Continental countries for which the Convention was directly responsible, so that two out of the three great causes of the shortage of beet sugar were immediately due to the Convention. It was true there had been an increased production of cane sugar, but it could certainly not be traced to any effect of the Brussels Convention. For the last twenty years there had been a steady increase in the production of cane sugar, notwithstanding the existence of bounties, but we had been prevented from taking advantage of the last increase of 400,000 tons by the very arrangement made under the Convention. But the Convention had brought into operation something a great deal worse than prohibition. In the place of the free market which formerly existed in this country, the Convention had created the greatest combine the world had ever seen, and what hon. Members forgot was that this combine was working day after day in Brussels against the interests of this country. There were sent by each country and attached to the Permanent Commission one or two gentlemen called "trade experts," whose business it was to discuss the quantities of sugar sent from every country, who knew exactly what we wanted in our markets, and who were fully aware that to send up and maintain prices it was only necessary "to feed us low," to give us a little less than we wanted. The Government had actually called those competitors together, and enabled them to form this great combination against this country. It might be asked whether our own expert was not protecting the interests of Great Britain. It was only necessary to mention the name of the gentleman to answer the question. The British expert was Mr. George Martineau, whose very name suggested sugar refining and producing, and he had joined with other producers to work out a plan by which prices should be kept up steadily. He did not make the slightest attack on Mr. Martineau. Sir Nevile Lubbock also was sent as an expert a year or so ago. He did not at all blame these gentlemen; they were producers; and it was their business to make dear the article they had to sell, and they had done it very effectively. The very words of the Convention stated its object as being "to equalise competition between producers." Why should we equalise competition? The object of buyers was to keep competitors apart, and to buy from the one who would sell the cheapest; whereas the object of the Convention was to bring the competitors together, and pan out the trade of the United Kingdom in this most important article between them. By the creation of this European combine the Convention had indeed been a most powerful instrument in raising the price of sugar in this country.

Then there was prohibition. Prohibition was the invention of Great Britain and was her contribution to this precious instrument. The principle of the Convention was countervailing duties, to the merits of which the whole of the speech of the President of the Board of Trade on November 24th, 1902, was devoted. The House had never heard why that method was abandoned; he would now reveal to them the secret. About four months after that debate there was issued a White Paper, containing the names of forty-two countries from which sugar was exported to this country. It also showed that the value of Great Britain's export to those countries was £201,000,000 or 60 per cent. of her total exports, and seventeen of those countries had treaties containing the most-favoured-nation clause, and absolutely forbidding the policy of countervailing duties. That White Paper killed the first suggestion of the Government, and they then brought forward the idea of prohibition, which in his opinion was worse than countervailing duties. In the Court set up under the Convention there were eleven judges, ten of whom were appointed by foreign countries. What right had foreign countries to pronounce decisions as to where our commerce should go? Never in history had anything so undignified been assented to by Parliament as the position in which Great Britain was placed in this matter. A more wretched or contemptible mockery of a Court had never been set up. It had no rules of procedure; there was no system of cross-examination of witnesses; evidence was not sifted; everything seemed to be upside down, as the House would see from the decisions which had been arrived at. At its first meeting in June, 1903, its business was to examine the trade systems of the various countries. Why should this Court of foreigners examine our trade system? Their own trade systems were not pure, and they themselves were protectionists. Not only was this surtax retained, but three Powers were actually permitted to give bounties. The Court, under the Convention, had to pronounce decisions upon the purity of every trade system in the world. In June, 1903, this Court condemned six countries. Now the Convention contained a provision that the moment condemnation was pronounced it was the duty of each contracting party to act upon it. With regard to those six condemned countries this country only prohibited from three of them, and not the sugar from Japan, Spain, and another country. The Government said that we got no sugar last year from those countries, but then they might get some from them next year. They should either have prohibited the sugar from all those countries or else have expressed their contempt for the Convention by not prohibiting from any. The American Republic had been condemned, and in July, 1904, they started prohibiting from America. Later on twenty more countries were condemned by the Court, and why did the Government not prohibit from all those countries? Why was our own Government the first to set itself up in rebellion against the law the Government had created? Simply because the whole thing was ridiculous and intolerable. What evidence had the Government to justify their appeal against the decision of the Court in regard to those twenty countries? This question of appeal wanted some attention. The Convention provided that appeals must be heard within thirty days, and if any country included in the Convention took exception it had to appeal within eight days. Our Government appealed within eight days, but they never took any pains to get their appeal settled within the thirty days. The whole thing was an intolerable farce, and this postponement of the decision of the Court was a great injustice to British commerce. The intolerable nature of these proceedings was only realised when it was recognised that this nation was the only country in the Convention that did any trade with the condemned countries, and that was the reason why by a majority of ten to one the Court decided not against the trade of their own countries but against the trade of Great Britain. That was an ignominious position for the trade of this country to be placed in. Who were the judges? Why the people who were interested in the supply of sugar. It was very easy for them to tell us to close our ports against this sugar. At the present time we were paying £800,000 a month more for our sugar, and it was not costing any more to produce it. Where was this money going to? The sum of £400,000 a month was going to Germany, £200,000 a month to France, and £150,000 a month to other European countries. Those judges, therefore, had got very good reasons for closing our ports. He wished most seriously to ask the President of the Board of Trade why had they set the decision of the Convention at naught? Why did they refuse to prohibit from certain condemned countries and not from others? Why did they not refuse in all cases and tell the Convention plainly that the ports of England would be kept open by Englishmen?

He wished to say a word or two with regard to the treatment of Russia. Russia was one of the first countries condemned. The President of the Board of Trade rashly contradicted a figure of his, but the right hon. Gentleman had now admitted that he was entirely wrong, and if he was not absolutely right, at any rate he was much nearer the truth than the right hon. Gentleman. Russia was one of their best customers in the world, but they were ordered to prohibit from Russia. The Convention received a Russian deputation on the subject, and after the matter had been fully discussed there was nobody opposed to the Russian demands except Sir Henry Bergne. Why did he oppose? There was not a country in the world that it was more unwise for this country to oppose at the Convention than Russia. And what did Russia do? She immediately put a duty on our tea. The President of the Board of Trade had admitted that the Government did not know what sugar they got from Russia and what amount of tea we sent to Russia. Upon this the right hon. Gentleman had admitted that he was entirely wrong. The Government had not in every case taken into consideration the question whether a bounty was given or not. The Government claimed the right to judge for itself with regard to Russia, but it had no right to do so under the Convention. It was the Permanent Commission which was to decide these matters. Russia had been treated differently from Dominica by the Government. At this moment the decision of the Permanent Commission with regard to Russia had been postponed. Surely if the Government was disposed to open our port with regard to Russian sugar it could do so.

*Mr. GERALD BALFOUR said Russia did give a bounty. The countervailing duty originally fixed was objected to by Russia, and it was subsequently reduced by the Permanent Commission to the amount at which the United States fixed the countervailing duty for Russia. The ultimate decision as to the amount of the countervailing duty had been postponed.

Mr. LOUGH said that was a perfectly candid statement, but he claimed that as the decision was postponed we also should postpone the prohibition. We should act as cautiously as possible before we closed our ports. He thought it was time that this country asserted itself in regard to this matter in order to get the whole thing put on a better basis. The results of the present policy were most alarming. It was all very well for the Secretary to the Board of Trade to say that sweetmeats were a luxury, but that did not help the people who were making a living by the manufacture of confectionery. It was difficult sometimes to draw the line between a necessary and a luxury. There were 3,500 factories, great and small, in the country engaged in this business, and £30,000,000 of capital was invested in it. The president of the Association of the Sugar-using Trades said that the mineral water trade had been brought to the verge of ruin by the increase in the price of sugar. The Aerated Bread Company in London was one of the companies engaged in the distribution of liquid refreshments, and it stated that the sugar given out in cups now cost £5,000 more than a year ago, and £10,000 more than ten years ago. As a result of the sugar policy there had been a decrease in the employment of the people of this country. He thought it had been shown clearly that all the forecasts which the opponents of the Convention made had been proved to be true and that everything the Government said had been falsified. He believed it was utterly impossible to administer the decisions of the Court set up; most important industries had been brought almost to the verge of ruin; and great distress had been caused among certain classes by the rise in the price of sugar. These were things they might expect when the freedom of the commerce of the country was interfered with. This Convention would, he believed, be a lasting monument to the want of, foresight and wisdom of the present Government.

*Mr. DAVID MORGAN (Essex, Walthamstow) said there had been enormous speculation in sugar. There were a great number of people in this country who would raise their hands with horror if asked to go into the Casino at Monte Carlo, but who did not mind having a few tons of beet sugar in the Produce Clearing House in Mincing Lane. That speculation had been very heavy indeed. When the Sugar Convention was foreshadowed beet sugar was at a price below the cost of production. In July, 1902, it was 5s. 11d. The Sugar Convention came into operation in September, 1903. Beet sugar in Mincing Lane on July 3rd, 1903, was 7s. 8½d. and on the July 31st it was 8s. 0¼d. On August 7th, it was 8s. 3d. The total visible supply in Europe and America in July, 1903, was 2,696,296 tons; in Feb., 1904, 3,787,130 tons; in July, 2,594,335 tons, and in September, 1,527,613 tons. From February to July, 1904, the consumption abroad increased a million tons, causing a rise in price from 7s. 8d. in February, 1904, to 9s. 8d. in July, 1904, and 10s. 8d. in September. The sales of 88 per cent. beet sugar registered in London Produce Clearing House during August–January, 1903–4, were 3,261,000 bags; August–January, 1904–5, 11,188,000 bags; but the quantity actually tendered in those periods was only, 1903–4, 630,000 bags; 1904–5, 744,000 bags. They had heard a great deal of the opinions of people on the political side of this question. He should like to quote the opinion of one who, he supposed, was the best informed gentleman on the sugar question in London, namely, Mr. Cæsar Czarnikow. Speaking at the yearly general meeting of the London Produce Clearing House he said—

> "Without wishing to introduce any controversial element, I should like to give you my opinion, as one who has had the closest connection with sugar all his life, that the much-abused Brussels Convention is not responsible for the rise we have had. I might as well add that the Convention came just in time to save the cane-sugar industry from ruin, not only in our West Indian Colonies, but in other parts of the world as well, and if it had not been carried through we should have had under present conditions an even greater scarcity and probably much higher prices."

That was the statement of a man who had a lifelong experience of the sugar trade and whose views were infinitely better than the amateur opinions of many who had addressed them on the subject.

Sir JAMES JOICEY (Durham, Chester-le-Street) said the gambling in sugar to which the hon. Member opposite had referred was very detrimental to the interests of the importers and the consumers. These gambling operations were in the nature of bets, there being no compulsion to deliver the goods. It was customary to have a clause inserted in the contracts to the effect that only the differences in the buying and selling prices must be paid. He would not trouble the House at any great length, but there were one or two general considerations which, as representative of a large sugar-consuming constituency, he thought he ought to allude to. He was an opponent of the bounties which were given in various ways by foreign countries. What he could not understand was, why the Government should have only dealt with one class of bounties, that on sugar, and should have ignored others which caused this country very serious harm. Take the bounties given by the French Government to shipping. Every French shipbuilder who built a ship in France received a bounty, and every French shipowner who sailed a French ship manned by a French crew received a bounty. These bounties affected the shipping industry in this country very prejudicially. A customer of his own had forty-three sailing-ships trading to Chili, and the bounties he received from the French Government amounted to £43,000 a year. Why did not His Majesty's Government, which professed to be very anxious to abolish the system of bounties as against the principles of free trade, try to get the abolition of these shipping bounties which injured this country very seriously instead of dealing with sugar alone from which we received very great benefit? Now, undoubtedly this Convention was intended to raise the price of sugar, because it was from the first stated that it was agreed to in the interests of the West Indian Islands. [Ministerial cries of "No."] If it was not intended to raise the price of sugar he failed to see what was its object, or what good it could have done. But now the Government saw the evil effects of raising the price of sugar in this country, and they naturally wanted to show that it was never intended to raise but to reduce the price of that commodity. He confessed he had never been much against the sugar bounties, because he had always seen that they were a benefit to this country and injurious to those countries which gave them and placed huge tariffs against the goods exported from this country. He had always looked upon the sugar bounties as some sort of compensation for these high tariffs. He knew that for years the bounties given in Continental countries had been increasing, and that these countries had felt them to be a very serious burden on their population. They did not know how to get rid of them until they induced His Majesty's Government to give them their support. He was satisfied that when the five years for which the Convention was to last came to an end, that Convention would not be renewed by this country, and the Continental countries would not be very keen to renew the bounties. The result would be that instead of our getting the very great boon of cheap sugar, that article would remain cheap on the Continent and would enable their manufacturers to compete effectively against ours.

He had listened very carefully to the speeches on both sides, and confessed that any rational line of argument—to use a favourite expression of the Prime Minister's—had been all on one side, and that against the Convention. He could not understand why His Majesty's Government, which was always anxious to get this House to give them the power of making their own bargains in regard to tariff questions—to give them a free hand in short—had handed over the control of the sugar industries of this country to a Commission of ten members, of which only one was an Englishman. Why should His Majesty's Government have tied their hands in every form, and practically handed the control of our sugar industries over to our commercial opponents? It was a mad policy they had pursued in regard to this Sugar Convention. There was no doubt whatever that the open ports which had been maintained in this country for the last fifty years had been a great advantage, had brought cheap food to our people, and given large employment to our workmen; and he could not understand why the Government should have given power to the Sugar Commission to prohibit the entry of sugar into this from other countries, such as Argentina, which was a very rich agricultural country, and would enormously increase its production of sugar if its sugar-growers could only get into our market. This country was entirely dependent on a foreign sugar supply, and why should the importation of sugar be prohibited from certain countries? The result would be that these countries would give up producing the very articles we were anxious to buy from them.

He had been very much interested in what fell the previous night from the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Birmingham, but thought that the right hon. Gentleman was labouring under great difficulties, because he saw clearly that he had a very bad case. Consequently the right hon. Gentleman was not so clear and incisive in his argument as was his usual wont. However, the right hon. Gentleman had made as much of his case as he possibly could, although he did not answer a single one of the arguments put forward so strongly by the mover of the Amendment, the seconder, and the hon. Member for Islington. The arguments of these hon. Gentlemen were overwhelming in showing the folly of the Government in entering into the Sugar Convention. The increase meant an added expenditure of from twenty-two shillings to twenty-six shillings per annum to every householder maintaining a family; and that was important. He was very interested in a statement published by the President of the Mineral Water Manufacturers' Association; and he confessed he had no idea that the association represented such an enormous capital or had such a large number of employees. That industry depended largely on cheap sugar; and it would be a very serious matter if it were interfered with. He failed to see why the Government should have overlooked these considerations. He thought they had not been fully aware of the case in all its bearings. He was satisfied that as time went on the Government would begin to see, notwithstanding the eloquence of the hon. Gentleman the Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade, that they had made a mistake in this matter, and that they would have to retrace their steps. Whether that was the case or not, he was satisfied that when there was an appeal to the country there would be great difficulty in persuading large co-operative societies and other large consumers of sugar that the increase in the price of the commodity was not to a great extent owing to the Convention. Only 50,000 or 60,000 tons were sent from the West Indies; and it was amazing that the Government should have entered into such a scheme on their behalf. How could any such scheme benefit this country? As had been pointed out by his hon. friend the Member for West Islington, the great benefit which was being conferred by the Convention was given to Germany, France, and Austria.

The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham alluded to the various fluctuations in the price of sugar which had taken place, and said that the Convention would have the effect of preventing them. He wished he could hope that that would be the case; but he was afraid that gambling in sugar would continue in the future as in the past. What the Convention would do would be to create a large stock of ready material, and if there was an enormous stock the price would be subject to very serious fluctuations. He thought, therefore, that the Convention would not prevent fluctuations. Again, it would be found that the countries to which this country sent large exports sent back large imports, and that this country sent large exports to the countries from which it received large imports. If, therefore, they prevented imports from any particular country, that country would take less goods from this country; and would take its supplies from other countries. The Convention was a most foolish thing; and it showed the great danger of a Government interfering with questions of tariff. If the Government obtained a free hand to interfere with other trades and manufactures in this country as they had interfered with sugar, the country would never know where it was. He believed, however, that the country would not allow the Government to gamble with its interests as they had gambled with the sugar industry. He protested against any such policy being carried out. He would prefer to trust the traders and manufacturers of the country whose industries depended on free sugar, rather than trust the hon. Gentleman the Member for the Blackfriars Division of Glasgow or the President of the Board of Trade. It appeared to him extraordinary that the Government should have handed over the control of sugar to competing countries and commercial opponents, whose interests it would be to control the trade to their own advantage. He hoped hon. Gentlemen would make clear to the constituencies the serious injury which the Convention inflicted on this country. They ought to have been satisfied with the old conditions.

MR. JAMES REID (Greenock) said there was one point which seemed to have been overlooked by every Member who had spoken in this debate, namely, that we had no guarantee that foreign nations would continue these bounties after they had crushed our sugar refiners out of the trade. What they would no doubt do then would be to keep their cheap sugar for their own consumption and send their dear sugar to us. The firms of Tate and Lyle had been referred to, but the House must remember that the trade of both those firms was exceptional; Messrs. Lyle struck a speciality in syrup, and Tate's in cubes. It was impossible to point to any other refiner in the country who had done such a trade, or anything like such a trade, as either of those firms. In Greenock ten or twelve sugar refiners had been crushed out of the trade, and the four or five who were left were, up to the time of the Convention coming into operation, living from day to day, although there had been some improvement since. The manufacture of sugar-refining machinery and the shipping trade with the West Indies, both good trades in times past, were now gone or almost gone, although it was to be hoped, with the resuscitation of the sugar-growing industry in the West Indies and the arrival here of cargoes of sugar from those islands, there would be a return of prosperity to those trades.

He had no new arguments to place before the House with regard to the fluctuations in the price of sugar, but contended that the Convention could not be held responsible for them inasmuch as sugar, before the Convention came into operation, varied in price from 6s., a price which could not pay the producer, to more than 28s., and again fell to 10s. in the same year. The consumption on the Continent at the time of the drought was largely the cause of the small supply and the high prices. These, however, were temporary, and would pass away owing to the larger area which would be planted in the future. Switzerland had been said to have benefited by admitting Russian and Argentine sugar, but he did not know that sugar was cheaper in Switzerland than in other parts of the Continent. Jams were no doubt dearer, but he could not believe that trade was so ruined as had been made out, for he noticed that one of the firms engaged in the jam manufacturing industry distributed a dividend of 37½ per cent. in 1903. The confectioners wanted their raw material at under cost price, and he made bold to say that any trade which could not exist unless it could obtain its raw material under cost was a rotten trade and one which ought not to be allowed to survive. All the sugar refiners asked for was a fair field and no favour. They were quite prepared to meet fair competition, but said that so long as bounty-fed sugar was allowed to be imported into this country in competition with them they would clamour for relief. That relief they had now got, at all events for five years, by means of the Convention. The outcry of the confectioners was inconsistent, because in 1889, when sugar was 28s. 3d. per cwt., they said the high price was caused by the bounties put upon it, and now they were crying out that the bounties were killing them. No one could be blamed for the fluctuation of prices. Wool, for instance, had recently risen 100 per cent., there was no bounty there, and all that could be done was to face the difficulty and wait for better times in the hope that things would come round in time. He trusted that this Amendment would be rejected by a large majority, and that our sugar trade would be no longer crushed, for he believed that as a result of this Convention we should see a very largely increased supply of sugar both from Europe and the West Indies in the near future.

*MR. ASHTON (Bedfordshire, Luton) thought the Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade, in his anxiety to prove that the Sugar Convention was not responsible for the rise in the price of sugar, had proved almost too much. If the hon. Gentleman's contention was correct, what became of the argument that the Convention was for the benefit of the West Indian planters? Various reasons had been given for the rise, and doubtless the drought on the Continent had occurred most conveniently for hon. Gentlemen opposite. But it was practically admitted that £11, the price of beet for future delivery as against the present price of £15, was a fair price after discounting the drought, and he submitted without hesitation that the whole of the difference between the former price of £6 and £11 was due to the Convention. The fact that the average prices for the three years preceding the Convention, and for the three years since, were very much the same, proved nothing. For years past, until the Convention, there had been a gradual decline in the price of beet owing to the bounty system, but from 1902 the price had steadily increased. Was it not probable that the rise was due to the discussion of the question, and the introduction of the legislation which culminated in the Brussels Convention ? It could not be a question of crop, as the crop was wrong only last year, and prices had been steadily rising for two years before. The various prices were as follows : July, 1902, 6s. ; November, 1902, 7s. 7d. ; February, 1903, 8s. ; September, 1903, 8s. 6d. ; January, 1904, 8s. ; June, 1904, 9s. 3d. ; September, 1904, 10s. 11d ; and at present it was about 16s. He thought that was proof positive that the main part of the rise was due to the Convention. If the shortness of the crop had been the reason, why had not prices risen on the Continent as well as here ? Prices on the Continent had declined just as they had risen in Great Britain. To what could it be owing but the altered circumstances brought about by the legislation complained of ? Prices had gone down abroad because the duties had been lowered, and they had increased here because Great Britain was no longer a free market. Regularity of price was no doubt of enormous importance in all trades, but it was certainly not secured by the Sugar Convention. The Government ought to have left the foreigners to stew in their own juice. It was admitted that the system could not go on for ever, and that the abolition of bounties would have come without any outside interference. There would then have been a gradual rise, and little harm would have been done as compared with the destruction of industries caused by the sudden enormous increase of prices. It was an easy thing to get prices down, but a very difficult thing to get them up, and this Convention had greatly increased the difficulty.

And, it being half-past Seven of the clock, the debate stood adjourned till this Evening's Sitting.

Mr. Ashton.

EVENING SITTING.

KING'S SPEECH (MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS).

Order read, for resuming adjourned debate on Amendment [27th February] to Main Question [14th February], " That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, as followeth :—

" Most Gracious Sovereign,

" We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament."—(Mr. Mount.)

Which Amendment was—

" At the end of the Question, to add the words, ' But we humbly represent to Your Majesty that Your Majesty's Government in committing the country to the policy of the Brussels Sugar Convention have inflicted heavy losses upon trade, diminished employment of labour, enormously increased the cost of a necessary food to consumers, without any compensatory advantage ; and we humbly submit to Your Majesty that these evil results call for an immediate remedy ; and that the Convention should be denounced at the earliest possible moment.' "—(Mr. Kearley.)

Question again proposed, " That those words be there added."

*Mr. ASHTON (continuing his speech) said when the adjournment took place he was endeavouring to develop an argument against that which the right hon. Member for West Birmingham had employed on the previous evening, namely, that the abolition of the bounties would prevent the fluctuation of prices. With that view he agreed, always provided bounties were abolished and that the countries affected had free trade. But that was not the case with this country, because we were not allowed to have free trade within the Convention. Our liberty was largely restricted, and we were only allowed to deal with certain favoured countries for sugar. That being so we should not get the benefit of the reduction in the price of sugar. Theoretically, bounties were absolutely bad. They bolstered up industries by means of false protection, of which they were themselves a form, and therefore he disclaimed entirely any desire to see bounties in this or any other country which studied its own interest. But that was a very different thing from saying that we ought to have assisted in this Convention to get rid of bounties in foreign countries, which, so far from being detrimental to us, were of enormous benefit. In consequence of those bounties we got our sugar cheaper by many millions of pounds sterling than we otherwise should, and there was no reason why we should not have gone on receiving that benefit so long as other countries were satisfied. The advantages were so great that we were enabled to start large numbers of new industries which depended for their prosperity on cheap sugar, and in that way get a start in the markets of the world, with our cheap goods, which it would be very difficult for other countries to overtake. We also gained a very cheap article of food, and sugar being so cheap was one of the great factors which permitted the Chancellor of the Exchequer to put a half-penny tax upon it during the time of war. It would have been extremely difficult for the Chancellor of the Exchequer to have put the duty on sugar if the right hon. Gentleman had not at the same time been able to argue that we were getting our sugar at less than cost price and that, therefore, it was not a hard tax to bear. But now the policy had been altered and the price of sugar raised as it had been by the Convention, he was bound to say this tax had become a very hard tax for the people of this country to bear. Under these circumstances the Government might well be charged with a want of foresight and businesslike methods in conducting the affairs of this country.

The argument that the Convention was entered into for the benefit of the West Indies did not hold good, because the benefit to the West Indies could only be a few hundreds of thousands of pounds, whereas the loss to this country was £8,000,000, taking the price of sugar at £11 a ton, the price to which it was expected to drop when the next crop came in. He quite admitted that there had been considerable hardship felt in our West Indian colonies in having to compete with bounty-fed sugar, but at the same time the benefit to ourselves was so enormous and the loss to the Colonies so infinitesimal that it would have paid this country over and over again to give some sort of subvention to the Colonies, while the bounties lasted, rather than deprive itself of the vast benefit accruing from cheap sugar. If the condition of things had been met in that way the great free-trade policy of this country would not have been interfered with. It would have been left intact. That could not be said under the present circumstances. This Convention had brought us to a condition of preferential trading. And to whom was the preference given? Not to our Colonies, but to the hated foreigner. That was hardly the thing to expect from the right hon. Gentleman, and those who supported him. This preference had already led to retaliation, and was in itself a splendid illustration of what the policy of retaliation would be. The innocent suffered for the guilty. Russia was prevented from sending sugar to this country and therefore had retaliated not by putting a tax upon this country, not even by taxing the sugar-growers of India, but by putting an extra tax on the unoffending tea-grower of India. One set of people had to suffer for the sins of another set of people. What a commentary that was on the proposals of the right hon. Gentleman for a policy of retaliation. America would not take South Wales tin plates, and therefore we were to tax not American tin plates but American agricultural implements imported into this country!

Were we quite sure that the West Indian Islands were in need of this policy of a Convention which had had such a disastrous effect on this country? There had hardly been a period in the history of those islands when the people had not been calling out about the distressed condition of their trade and expecting this country to go to their assistance. In private life the giving of doles was known to be a most dangerous proceeding, and it was open to question as to whether this policy of giving doles to communities did not sap the enterprise of the people. Want of enterprise was one very important factor in the economic history of the islands. How was it that the West Indies had been unable to compete with sugar bounties when Cuba and Java had not only been able to compete, but had increased their production? The reason that Cuba was able to compete was because in that island the planters lived on their plantations and took an interest in them and were up to date in their machinery and methods. Nothing but indolence and want of enterprise prevented the West Indies from doing what Cuba had done. Were we quite sure these Colonies were going to make so much out of this Convention? Speaking for himself he was not so sure. If sugar fell to £11 a ton were these islands going to be much better off for it. Before the Convention came into operation the West Indies were admitted to the American markets, which were closed against bounty-fed sugars. That advantage had now gone. The bounties were now abolished, the Continental growers would keenly compete in the American markets, and he thought the West Indies would not have the advantage that they had before the abolition of the bounties. On the other hand there were the industries in this country which had been injured by this Convention, not only those directly concerned with sugar, but also those which were injured indirectly. We had excluded the sugar of certain countries from our ports. That was to say, we were going to restrict their exports to this country, and the natural result of that would be that they must restrict our exports to them. We could not restrict the imports of sugar into this country without affecting our exports to the countries whose sugar we did not allow to come into our ports. That was a very serious matter. Our exports to the Argentine amounted to £8,500,000, and it would be a most serious thing to the manufacturers of this country if the Government's action in this matter restricted their markets for the benefit of foreigners. Another great result of this Convention was that it placed the policy of the fiscal system of this country at the mercy of the foreigner. The right hon. Member for West Birmingham had admitted on the previous evening that he could not carry out the changes in our fiscal policy which he desired to carry out, and the reason for that was that we had bound ourselves to the foreigners, and we had tied ourselves to the tail of certain interests in this country—the sugar interests.

MR. SEYMOUR ORMSBY-GORE (Lincolnshire, Gainsborough) said he had always looked upon the Convention as a gross monstrosity, and he had voted against it at every stage during the last session. On this question, the Government had shown great precipitation. They had plunged headlong into the question without taking the opinion of their Party beforehand. Their supporters were not told before the last election that they would be called upon to vote for a measure so far-reaching. The Government had shown scarcely less impetuosity than another historic collective body which once ran down a steep place into the sea. They had gone into this alliance in haste, and were now repenting at leisure. The result of the Convention so far had been that works directly or indirectly interested in the sugar industry were shut in all parts of the country, and we were paying in increased prices of sugar no less than £8,000,000. [Cries of "No, no!"] He would refer those who differed from him to the Board of Trade statistics. They had heard the statement cited that evening that the people of this country were paying over £8,000,000 more for their sugar than they were before the Convention, and he did not think any answer had been given which actually refuted that statement.

SIR FREDERICK BANBURY (Camberwell, Peckham): It has been pointed out that the increase is £2,000,000 and not £8,000,000.

MR. SEYMOUR ORMSBY-GORE said that was the statement of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, but he appeared to have left out of his calculation the freights and the duties.

Three reasons had been adduced by the Government in favour of this Convention. First of all, it was contended that the recent rise in the price of sugar had not been caused by the Convention, and that in any case the price of sugar would have risen to its present level. The second reason was that the Convention would render assistance to the struggling sugar industry in the West Indies, but that had proved true only to an infinitesimal extent. The third reason advanced in support of the Convention was that it would rehabilitate the sugar-refining industry of this country. With regard to the contention that the Convention was not responsible for the rise in the price of sugar, he was not an admirer of the argument of post hoc, ergo propter hoc, but he thought an argument like that could be urged upon this occasion. He thought there was overwhelming evidence that the increased price of sugar had been produced by the Convention. They had been told that this increased price was largely due to an attempt to "corner" the sugar market, but no such attempt had been made. There had, of course, been a great impetus given to speculation that might be entered upon. The results of this Convention might have been foreseen by any business man. What happened on the Continent, with the abolition of the bounties and the surtax limited to 6 francs per 100 kilos for refined, and 5½ francs for unrefined sugars? The fence round our Continental neighbours broke down, and the price dropped heavily, consequently a great increase in consumption, and a restriction in production. In France up to the year ending August, 1904, consumption increased from 371,119 tons to nearly 700,000 tons, or about 90 per cent.; in Germany, from 740,000 tons to over 11,000,000 tons, or 52 per cent.; in Austria, from 380,000 to over 500,000 tons, or 37 per cent. The production on the Continent had decreased. This might be due to last season's drought, but not to that alone, because the sowings of beet had largely diminished. The area under beet had diminished by over 100,000 hectares. The diminished yield was accounted for by the withdrawal of the bounties, but that only accounted for a minimum of the increased price, for present visible supply with sugar at 14s. 3d. per cwt. was 10,250,000 tons, against 10,750,000 tons in 1902, and 10,375,000 tons in 1903.

Had the Convention benefited the West Indies? He had always questioned the great utility of the West Indies to this country as a sugar-producing colony. The people were very pig-headed. They still thought they cou'd grow sugar at a great profit. This country had given them doles, but what had they done with them? Had they improved their machinery or systems of production? No, their capital had been what was called "blown" and not expendedon the importation of machinery. Besides, the greater number of the islands in the West Indies were not adapted to sugar growing. They were hilly, whereas flat countries were required for the conveyance of the produce. Nor could he see that the West Indies had benefited by this Convention. The West Indies could only manage to distil 58 per cent. of their sugar, whilst in Honolulu they distilled 92 per cent. The West Indies had brought most of their misfortunes on their own heads. They had squandered the many doles and subventions that had been accorded them by the House. The hopes raised had prevented the West Indies from making arrangements with the United States. It would have been far cheaper for this country to have given them £350,000 per annum rather than to have imposed £8,000,000 on this country. Let them take Barbadoes as an instance. In 1902 the production of Barbadoes was valued at £301,602; in 1903 it was valued at £259,746. In 1903 the imports from the West Indies and British Guiana to this country were 522,907 cwts. In 1904 they were 809,929 cwts., or an increased value of only about £20,000 to the whole of the West Indies. The West Indies were not adapted to growing sugar except Cuba, Antigua, Barbadoes, St. Kitts, and British Guiana, which were now growing fruit instead. They were too mountainous and did not permit of the cheap construction of tramways to the central factories. With regard to sugar refining, there were just as many men employed in this industry as there were twenty years ago, and therefore there was not the slightest grievance on that score. Some twenty-three pigmies had been consolidated into two giant factories, and that was the only difference. Mr. Martin, a director of Tate's, said in a pamphlet—

> "Sugar refiners have never asked for more than fair competition, and if anyone has cause to grumble at the Sugar Convention surely it is the British refiner, who still feels the effect of the surtaxes allowed the foreign refiner which give him a distinct protection in his own market."

The increased price of sugar was due to the Sugar Convention, which had given a stimulus to speculation. Having been on the Stock Exchange he knew the game. We had almost wrecked certain industries through this disastrous legislation, and had made ourselves the laughing-stock of the foreigner. Why, having had this large sugar-plum put into our mouths, should we insist on rejecting it? We had shut Russia and Argentina out of our markets, and had given an impetus to Java only. The 250,000 tons of sugar from Russia and Argentina would have relieved the market. Speaking upon the subject of retaliatory duties in regard to Indian sugar, Lord Curzon said he thought that was indisputable. He imagined that that opinion was synonymous with that which was held by those on his side of the House who took the same opinion on this Convention as he did. He looked upon the whole Convention as a disaster. But, to speak metaphorically, they were "sucked" into this Convention and the foreigner was reaping the benefit. He thought he might be allowed to read what Monsieur Josef Caillaux said in "La Gironde" of September 22nd last—

"Several years ago the impost on sugar was fixed at the exorbitant rate of 65 frs. per 100 kilos., 65 centimes per kilo. As everyone knows, a large portion of the product of this growing tax does not return to the Treasury. The annual consumption of sugar in France oscillating between 400,000,000 and 500,000,000 of kilos., the State ought to recoup 450,000,000 frs. yearly; it only receives 150,000,000 to 200,000,000, the surplus being employed in bounties distributed to the manufacturers of sugar. This custom has had the principal result of creating a disproportion between the production, which, roused by the stimulus of bounties, develops itself beyond all measure and the consumption which remains stationary, overwhelmed by the weight of the impost; above all, furnishing the English at the expense of the French taxpayers with cheap sugar. The laws of concurrence prevented, therefore, the producers retaining the greater part of the bounties which were paid, though they employed them to lower the price of sugar, and, as they sold in England about two-thirds of the goods which they manufactured, two-thirds of the bounties paid by the French reached the English. We were thus benevolently turning over to our neighbours across the Channel a subsidy of 50,000,000 or 100,000,000 frs. yearly. Ah, my dear neighbours, what is so remarkable about your astonishment? What you have not understood is that the imposition of bounties on the powers of the Continent had the effect of diminishing the price of sugar to your advantage; that when the bounties disappeared, necessarily the tendency of sugar was to rise; that, however, was only to be expected."

Now, Sir, that was a faithful witness as to the effect of the bounties in this country. Even had they wished to raise the money by the further taxation of sugar in this country that even would have been better than to have attempted to bolster up the West Indies at the price of the British taxpayer. But here they got nothing, and they gave £8,000,000 for nothing, and that was an act of the grossest stupidity which the Government could have been capable of. He had always voted against the Government on this question, but to-day a vote did not mean that the Convention would be repealed, and even if the Convention were repealed, they could not force the sugar-growers and manufacturers in Germany and Austria to reimpose their cartels. The Convention would continue in force for the next three years and a half. We had bound ourselves in this unfortunate alliance with nine other Powers, but if he were in the House two years and a half hence he should certainly vote for denouncing the Convention.

*MR. CROOKS (Woolwich) said that he remembered the agitation in the old days when sugar refining first encountered foreign competition and its improved methods. He was then one of the injured working men whose trade had been taken away, and he remembered the masters getting up mass meetings of five or six in a public-house to protest against the bounty-fed sugar when an unanimous vote was easily secured after the champagne and cigars had gone round. He remembered reading a speech which the right hon. Member for West Birmingham made in Greenock, and in which, talking of the disappearing industries of the district, he pointed to the decadence of the sugar industry, and asked where it had gone to. If he had been behind the right hon. Gentleman he would have said that it had gone to Silvertown. In former days there were thirteen sugar houses in the Tower Hamlets, and they were now all shut up. But when they were working the number of men employed was only 300—all Germans too. They never heard anything about aliens in those days. A firm which had to leave Greenock owing to the acquisition of the site of their premises for the extension of a dock came to Silvertown and started in this ruined industry there. This one firm now employed far more men than all the thirteen sugar houses did in their time. They might get an Englishman, or a Welshman, or an Irishman to invest his money in a ruined industry, but they would never get a Scotchman to do it. That gentleman knew all about bounties, and yet he started in Silvertown, where he put improved machinery in his works, and where he had convenient rail and river transit facilities. There was also the case of Messrs. Tate & Co. He could affirm that this particular firm—he did not know the technical name for it, but he would put it in his own rough way—was on the verge of bankruptcy in 1869 or 1870 when the duty was taken off sugar. That firm discovered a new method of refining sugar, and they went to the various refiners throughout the kingdom, and informed them of the discovery which they said would enable British refiners to fight their foreign competitors. They invited the other firms to co-operate with them in working on the new system, but their request was refused. Messrs. Tate & Co. went on with the new process on their own account, with the result that they had built up a great business which had prospered during the worst periods of competition with imported bounty-fed sugar. Why? It was because the quality of their sugar was better than that produced by the foreigner. This ruined industry enabled Sir Henry Tate, who was a philanthropist, and an exceedingly good sort, to present Liverpool with money to build a children's hospital, to present Battersea Polytechnic with £10,000, and to leave to the nation the beautiful collection of pictures in the gallery at Millbank.

Was there any need for this Convention at all? We had suddenly discovered that our neighbours on the Continent were so immoral as to endeavour to improve their trade by means of bounties, and we had to teach them better manners by saying we would not have their cheap sugar. That was a new doctrine for Englishmen, who generally wanted all they could lay their hands upon. Was it because we were getting it for nothing that we would not have it? If £250,000,000 had been wasted on a war to make dividends for somebody, it would have been a different thing altogether. They were asked to look at the profits made in the confectionery business. Would not the mine-owners like to make such profits? Of course they would. But the confectioner was probably getting his 37 per cent. on his invested capital, while the others wanted to make it out of their watered stock, which was a different thing. The Member for West Birmingham claimed that the Convention had increased the growth of cane sugar, and also maintained that there had not yet been time for its effects to be felt at home. He could not have it both ways. A rise of £2,000,000 in the price of sugar had been spoken of as if it were of little importance; but it made the difference between having sugar in their tea and doing without it to many people whom he knew. An increased profit had been given to the sugar refiners of this country, but he would like to know where the working men had received increased wages. Confectioners had been obliged to dismiss hands. How could it be said that the cause of such a condition of things had made no difference? The fact was that cheap sugar gave us markets at home and abroad, and we were able to employ thousands of the humblest of the population in the sugar-using industries. The depression which the country was passing through was bad enough before, but it was worse now. How could it be said that the cause of this condition of things made no difference? Anyone who said so must live in the clouds. By this policy the value of the shares in the sugar-refining companies had been increased, but an irreparable injury had been done to the working men of this country.

MR. LOUIS SINCLAIR (Essex, Romford) said the hon. Member for the Chester-le-Street Division had stated in his speech that the Member for West Birmingham had made a bad case. If that was the hon. Member's opinion he did not think it was shared by anyone else in the House. He thought his right hon. friend had made a splendid case, and that his arguments were absolutely unanswerable. He was convinced that if the Convention had done anything in the way of altering our fiscal policy and removing difficulties under which we laboured, it was a step in the right direction. It was patent to all that anything that was unstable with regard to raw material must be a bad factor so far as the manufacturer was concerned. Nothing could make the sugar industries more unstable than the fact that they were bolstered up by bounties. It was obvious that something had to be done in order to meet the difficulty in which we found ourselves as the result of the bounty system. It had been said that if the West Indies were in a good condition, they could easily compete. The fact was that there had been no confidence whatever in the investment of capital in the West Indies, and consequently no machinery went out to enable sugar-growers there to carry on their industry to the best advantage. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham had introduced confidence, and the result had been that machinery was being set up for the purpose of producing sugar under more favourable conditions than had hitherto been possible. He considered that was one proof that the Convention had so far done good. They did not say for a moment that the best effects of the Convention had yet taken place, but he thought they would come in the near future. It was now realised that the principle of bounties was a bad one, and that foreign countries should be prevented, if possible, from giving them. If bounties were to be successful in destroying our sugar trade, foreign countries might be encouraged to attack our shipping and other industries by means of subsidies. That was not a good business policy. He did not think the hon. Member for West Islington would ask the Government to abolish the Convention and reinstate bounties. On account of the artificially low price of sugar a number of factories were established in this country for the purpose of producing confectionery, because the goods could be exported to the countries which sent us the sugar and sold there at lower prices than they could be produced at in those countries. It was a peril to this country to have factories which could not compete unless they were bolstered up by low-priced sugar. He thought the time had come when we should set our house in order by putting our commercial administration on a thoroughly sound basis.

*MR. SYDNEY BUXTON (Tower Hamlets, Poplar) said he had listened with very great interest to the speech of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade. He did not understand that the hon. Gentleman was altogether very happy about the Convention or that he was disposed to take the responsibility which the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham seemed inclined to put upon him. The fact was that the rise in the price of sugar had been very annoying to the Government, because it had made it obvious that the Convention had not been the success which they anticipated it would be. The Under-Secretary and other hon. Gentlemen opposite had said that, because free-traders were averse to a system of bounties, therefore they ought to welcome this Convention. They did not appear to be able to appreciate the great difference between our proposing to abolish bounties to which we were opposed, and our coming to an arrangement with other Powers to abolish bounties which, in our opinion, were financially to our advantage. The Under-Secretary to the Board of Trade had quoted the authority of Mr. Gladstone and other eminent Liberals on this subject, but he was quite certain that if those great authorities had had to deal with the abolition of bounties which, in theory, were abolished by the Convention, their object would have been two-fold. In the first place, they would have endeavoured to effect it gradually and by degrees, without the violent convulsions of prices and trade which had attended the introduction of the Convention. And, further, they would have desired and obtained an absolute and complete abolition of all bounties. They would not have agreed to a Convention which retained the principle of cartels and surtax, which secured to each foreign country concerned "efficient protection" in its own market against our sugared goods, and forced us to prohibit sugar from all other countries. The right hon. Gentleman the President of the Board of Trade in his original speech looked upon the Convention as a diplomatic triumph, and seemed to think that the Government had been able to induce reluctant foreign countries to agree to the British proposal. The Under-Secretary to the Board of Trade, following the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham, developed the idea that the bounties had been put on with the object of destroying our sugar industry in the West Indies and our refineries here, and that that being accomplished, they would secure a great monopoly. He did not think that the history of the sugar question justified that attitude. It was quite certain that the bounty-giving nations had not been able to come to any agreement to abolish bounties —the only result of their manifold conferences being that the bounties had been increased—until they found a Government, like the present Government of this country, to act as a cat's-paw for them, and to enable them to come to an arrangement by which they finally abolished the bounties. The fact was that these bounties had become a sort of Old Man of the Sea to foreign Governments, clinging round their necks and continually becoming tighter and heavier. They were consequently anxious to obtain relief from them.

The point for us was what had been the financial result of the Convention, especially taking into account the attitude of the Government and the prophesies they had made in regard to it? A great deal had been heard in reference to the increased cost of sugar. He was not quite sure that too much had not been made of that particular point; for, putting it for the moment aside, he condemned the Convention on its merits. How did we stand with regard to this matter? The Prime Minister some time ago very rightly said that so far as he was concerned—

> "The riches of one nation conduced not to the poverty but to the wealth of another nation; and if we could double or treble by the stroke of some fairy wand the wealth of every other nation in the world but our own, depend upon it our nation would greatly profit by the process."

He agreed with that statement, with this emendation, that the additional prosperity to other nations should not be carried out at the expense of this country, or we be impoverished for the greater comfort of other countries. Now, it was admitted that the Convention had cheapened the cost of sugar in other countries, while it had raised it here. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham had said that the price of sugar abroad was not cheaper than here. That was true, but what had happened was that relatively to the position before the Convention came into force, the price of sugar in this country was infinitely higher than it was before to the foreign consumer and competitor. The best evidence of that was that while in Germany the consumption of sugar had jumped up 25 per cent., in this country, if it had not diminished, it had not increased in the ordinary degree. Then our manufacturers were admittedly in a worse position than they were before. The Under-Secretary to the Board of Trade in his speech the previous evening had stated more than once that in consequence of the drawback given on the exports of foreign sugared goods, as far as our own markets were concerned the English manufacturers were not in a worse position than they were before. He ventured to dispute that position, because the mere fact that the foreign manufacturers got very much cheaper sugar than before would be a benefit to them. Then the hon. Gentleman forgot the very important element that when we had cheap sugar here, and dear sugar abroad, our manufacturers of sugared goods had not only been able to advance their position in our own markets, but to export, in increasing amounts, their manufactured goods to those countries in which bounties were given. But now the reduction of the Excise duty and the increased import duty very much prejudiced the foreign markets against our manufacturers, and, therefore, these would lose very largely in the foreign market.

There was one point to which he thought no reference had yet been made, though it was important in his judgment. In this country we were going to pay a toll in the increase of cost to an extent variously calculated up to £15,000,000 a year, while our taxpayers would have to pay an additional price for their sugar. What had happened abroad in consequence of the abolition of the bounty system? It was found that in France, Austria, and Germany the Exchequers had enormously benefited. It made a difference to the Austrian Exchequer of £800,000 a year, and had given the Austrian Chancellor a surplus instead of a deficit. Last December the German Chancellor stated that, in consequence of the increased consumption of sugar in that country, the sugar revenue had increased to the extent of no less than £700,000. That was a very different position to that in which we stood here. Our Chancellor of the Exchequer would be very glad to receive such a sum as that. While our consumers and manufacturers had suffered from the Convention, the taxpayers and consumers abroad had enormously benefited.

He now came to the question, largely discussed, as to how far the additional cost of sugar in this country was due to the Convention or to other causes. They were in rather a remarkable position in regard to this matter. The previous night the right hon. Member for West Birmingham, in defending the Convention—although he would not admit it was due to him—said that the increase of price, be it two or fifteen millions, had "had nothing whatever to do with the Convention." He was glad to hear that afternoon that the Under-Secretary of the Board of Trade had practically admitted the whole of the case of the Opposition, because he started by saying that some of the increase in the price was due to the Convention. Nobody on that side of the House said that the whole increase in price was due to the Convention, but that the Convention had largely aggravated it.

MR. BONAR LAW said that he had denied there was any evidence that the Convention had been the cause of the rise. So far as he could judge it was the drought.

*MR. SYDNEY BUXTON: Very well, but he could not understand why the Government and the right hon. Member for West Birmingham should be much annoyed at the suggestion that the Convention had raised the price of sugar, because the whole object of the Convention had been supposed to be to raise the price of sugar. The President of the Board of Trade had several times said that the price of sugar before the Convention was unnaturally low, below the cost of production, and that the Convention would raise the price to £10 per ton, and enable the West Indian planters to make a profit. Why, then, should he be so much annoyed when it was said that the Convention led to an increase in price. He understood the Under-Secretary to the Board of Trade to argue, that if the rise in price were due to the Convention, that rise must have come earlier, and his argument was that the increase of price was entirely due to shortage of crop. But his hon. friend the Member for Devonport had shown by figures that there was a surplus of stocks immediately after the Convention came into force, which, under market conditions, kept down the price. This was entirely confirmed by a Question which on February 25th, 1904, was asked of the Secretary of State for the Colonies in reference to the operation of the Sugar Convention and its effect on the exports of sugar from the West Indies. That was at the period when the Under-Secretary said the price ought to have risen. In his Answer the right hon. Gentleman the Colonial Secretary said—

> "The existence of large surplus stocks of sugar in the home market necessarily retards the natural operation of the abolition of bounties."

But "the natural operation of the abolition of bounties" was to increase the price, and it proved entirely the contention of those on that side of the House that the reason why the price did not rise earlier was because there were surplus stocks which kept values below their normal prices. He came now to the other point of the Under-Secretary, namely, that the whole of the increase in price was due to the short crop. Now, the shortage of crop in 1904 admittedly amounted to 700,000 tons, and the increase in consumption admittedly amounted to 840,000 tons. It seemed to him, therefore, clear that the greater effect on the increase of price was due to the Convention, which caused the increase of consumption, rather than to the shortage of crop. The Under-Secretary and the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham had also argued that the considerable speculation which had taken place had driven up the price of sugar. Of course if 1,500,000 tons were taken off the market by shortage and consumption it afforded a greater facility to speculators to run up the price. But his contention was that the restriction of the area to which we could go for our supply had had a very considerable effect also on the power of speculators to run up the price. It had been said that a very small amount of sugar from Russia, Argentina, and other prohibited countries had ever come into this country; but the point was how much would have come in if the price had risen from £6 to £16? He contended that if our ports had been open to the products of these countries there would have been a very large addition to the amount of sugar exported from them to this country, and that would have very much affected the question of price.

It had also been argued by the Under-Secretary and the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham that the great advantage of such a Convention as this would be that fluctuations in price would in the future diminish. If there were less fluctuations in the future it would only be because the price was permanently on a higher level. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham said that they would not get so much fluctuation because they would stimulate the production of cane sugar. He confessed that he had listened with very great surprise to the development of that argument. The right hon. Gentleman had said that if there was a short crop of beet sugar last year, on the other hand, there was an increase of 400,000 tons of cane sugar, and that that was due to the Convention. He denied that because, with the very small exception of Java, all the other nations from which that increase had come were not under the Convention at all, but were in the prohibited area. But assuming that the Convention had stimulated the growth of cane sugar, he maintained that that was not the object of the Convention at all. The great sacrifice we made was not made to increase cane sugar cultivation in Argentina, Java, and the Philippines and other tropical countries. Its whole object was to increase the production of cane sugar in the West Indies. Had it done so? The Under-Secretary shook his head, but only a few months ago the Prime Minister said—

> "If it were not for the fact that in this case the proper investment of capital in the West Indian Islands, capital belonging to the Empire, was rendered impracticable and dangerous under our existing system, if it was not, in fact, for the case for the West Indies, there is no conceivable reason why we should not allow the foreigner to tax himself for the benefit of the British consumer."

Surely, it was not intended that we should pay so many millions a year in order to benefit the cane sugar planters elsewhere than in the West Indies; yet the West Indies was the one spot in the world where the crop had been shorter than in previous years. Of course, the West Indies had benefited in that for the smaller crop they had got about £16 a ton instead of £6. But we had been told that as members of a great Empire and lovers of the Colonies we were to be benefited by being able to consume West Indian sugar whilst the West Indies got a higher price. Whether they looked at the Convention from the point of view of the supposed advantage to the West Indies, the enormous disadvantages of our own consumers and manufacturers, or the increased price which had followed it, the words of the Amendment properly condemned it, and the judgment of the country would condemn it as well.

*MR. GERALD BALFOUR said that after listening to the three speeches delivered from the front Opposition Bench, he was still at a loss to know what was the real attitude of the Liberal Party towards the Convention. First of all the hon. Member for Dundee told them that, so far as foreign bounties were concerned, he would lie on his back, open his mouth, and ask for more. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Aberdeen held that bounties were economically unsound, and said, if without any effort of ours we could see bounties abolished that would be a matter for rejoicing. Last of all came the hon. Member for Poplar, who told them if Cobden and Mr. Gladstone had had to deal with the problem they would have been quite ready to enter into a Convention for abolishing bounties, the only difference being that they would have objected to certain provisions in the present Convention, such as the penal clause and the surtax. He did not know which of these three views represented the view of the Liberal Party at the present time; but he congratulated the hon. Member for Poplar on having returned to the traditions of the old Liberal Party on this subject. Two questions had been asked by the hon. Member for Dundee as to the proceedings of the Permanent Commission. They did not appear to him to be particularly relevant; but as one involved a reflection on the action of the British delegate at Brussels he would answer them at once. The first question had reference to the resolution passed at the last meeting of the Commission as to the possibility of a bounty being given by any of the Governments, parties to the Convention, on sugar products; and the hon. Member asked whether a resolution of that kind had executive force. In a narrow and technical sense he did not suppose that the resolution would carry with it executive force. It was binding on the Commission, and in the case supposed the Commission would be under an obligation to express an opinion; but there was no clause in the Convention binding the contracting Powers to accept such an expression of opinion. He had little doubt, however, that it would be practically operative, nor did he think that the Governments, parties to the Convention, were at all likely to ignore a recommendation of the Permanent Commission made in accordance with the terms of this resolution. If they did it would be a justification for this country to take such steps as the circumstances might seem to require.

An HON. MEMBER: What would you do?

*Mr. GERALD BALFOUR said to the hon. Member: it was not the custom in this House to answer hypothetical questions. When the matter came up it would be time enough to decide what action should be taken. Next, a reference was made by the hon. Member to a further resolution of the Commission by which a countervailing duty was fixed in the case of about seventeen States outside the Convention; and the hon. Member asked whether the British delegate voted against this resolution. It did not appear that any vote was actually taken on the subject, but the British delegate did record his objection in the most formal manner against the action taken by the Commission. His Majesty's Government concurred with Sir Henry Bergne in the objection which he raised, and he had every expectation that the Permanent Commission would meet the views of the Government on the subject.

He did not think it necessary to spend many words on any abstract question raised in connection with the Amendment or to discuss whether the Sugar Convention was a step in the direction of free trade or not. The general contention of hon. Gentlemen opposite appeared to be that the importation of bounty-fed goods was not inconsistent with free trade. All he would say was that it was inconsistent with free trade as understood by such authorities as Cobden and Mr. Gladstone. Trade was free when it flowed in natural channels, and it ceased to be free when diverted from those channels either by protection or bounties. As regards what, after all, had been the main subject of the debate—namely, the relation which the Convention had had to the great rise in the price of sugar—he would not contend for a moment that the Convention was not likely to have any effect on the price of sugar. It was the intention of the Convention to restore the natural price of sugar by restoring the natural conditions of demand and supply. The price during a considerable period before the Convention was such that the production of sugar in many parts of the world could no longer be carried on at a profit. A price below the cost of production could not possibly be a natural price; and if they started from a price of 6s., of course the tendency of the Convention would be to raise that price to one more nearly approaching the natural or normal price. At the same time, the Government had always contended that the Convention would have the other effect of preventing great and rapid fluctuations of price. In spite of the rise of price during last year, from which we were still suffering, he still maintained the soundness of this contention; but it was also necesary to add that they must distinguish between the policy of the Convention and the mere process of change from the old bounty system to the new system under which bounties were abolished.

The real question was what, if any, effect had the Convention had in producing the great and rapid rise of price during the last five or six months of last year. Now, assuming for the sake of argument that the Convention was responsible for the rise, was it the abolition of the bounties which had been the cause, or was it some special provision in the Convention apart from the abolition of the bounties? In other words, was it contended that if the sugar-producing countries on the Continent had of their own accord abolished bounties without any action on our part, the great rise in price would have resulted, or had the rise in price been caused solely by some special provision in the Convention, and in particular by the penal clause? Various opinions had been expressed on this subject by hon. Gentlemen opposite. The hon. Member for Carnarvon Boroughs said that the bounties were worth £6,000,000 annually to this country. Therefore, his view was that it was the abolition of the bounties that produced the increase in price. On the other hand, the hon. Member for West Islington advanced the view that the abolition of bounties had had no effect whatever on the rise in the price of sugar. The hon. Gentleman's contention was that three-fourths of the rise was entirely due to the action of the Government in excluding Russian and Argentine bounty-fed sugar from this country. During the last five months of the year the rise in the price of sugar was something like 4s. Therefore, if the view of the hon. Member for West Islington was correct, at least 3s. of that rise must have been due to the action of this country in applying the penal clause to Russian and Argentine sugar. Was that admitted? Very well. It happened that a practical test could be applied to the matter. If the application of the penal clause was the real cause of the rise in the price of sugar, it was clear that that rise in price must be a phenomenon peculiar to the country applying the penal clause. In countries which were not parties to the Convention the rise in the price of sugar, according to the view of the hon. Member for West Islington, should be at least 3s. less than it had been in the United Kingdom. But what was the fact in Switzerland? There the rise in the price of sugar was greater even than than it had been in this country.

AN HON. MEMBER: France?

* MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The price had also increased in France more than in this country. Surely these facts blew the entire case of the hon. Member to the winds. The truth was that in all Continental countries, whether they applied the penal clause in the form of prohibition or in the form of countervailing duties, sugar had risen in price as much and as fast as in the United Kingdom. The Member for Devonport had attacked him with some vehemence in respect to certain statements which he had made on a previous occasion regarding the amount of sugar sent by Russia into this country. The statement he had made was in reply to a statement of the hon. Member for Islington that the amount of sugar sent into this country by Russia in 1902 was 100,000 tons. He had traversed that statement, and, quoting from Russian official statements, had said the amount was only 1,000 tons. He was prepared to admit that subsequent investigation had convinced him that the official document on which he relied did not give an accurate account of the facts. There was no doubt that a good deal of sugar formerly came into this country from Russia through Germany which was not shown in the Russian statement. On the other hand it was perfectly clear that in 1902 not more than 69,000 tons crossed the European frontier, and it was therefore absolutely impossible that the figure given by the hon. Member—100,000 tons—could have been anything near the mark. He was prepared to admit that he might have been wrong to the extent of 20,000 tons, but in that case the hon. Member for Islington would still be in error to the extent of about 80,000 tons. Even taking the higher figure of the hon. Member for Devonport, and allowing that 36,000 tons might come from Russia into the United Kingdom, it would be seen that, as the total imports into this country were something like 1,600,000 tons, the Russian contribution was a comparatively trifling affair. Putting the amount which might have come from Russia and Argentina together after the Convention at 50,000 tons, the absolute annihilation of this small quantity would not have been likely to cause a very great difference of price. But this sugar was not annihilated. Although Russian sugar was excluded from this country, it was not prevented from taking the place of sugar that did come to this country. Russia exported sugar in considerable quantities to Turkey Persia, Egypt, and the Levant generally, where she competed with Austria. The moment prices rose in the London market, Austrian sugar would be attracted here, and its place in the East would be taken by Russian sugar. He hoped that what he said would convince the House that they might really neglect absolutely any effect of the penal clause in producing the rise in the price of sugar.

It remained to be considered whether the abolition of sugar bounties, as distinguished from the application of the penal clause, had had any effect on the rise of price and, if so, what effect. There was really no mystery about the cause of the rise that had taken place. Everybody in their candid moments would admit that it had been produced by two causes—in the first place, by a shortage in production, and in the second place by an increase in consumption. Price depended upon considerations of demand and supply, and in this case there had been at once a greater demand and a smaller supply. If the abolition of bounties had had any effect on the rise of price it must have been by affecting the demand or the supply or both. It was admitted on all hands that there had been a very great shortage in the supply. The best authorities put it at something very little short of 1,200,000 tons. Reference had been made to diminished sowings during the past season. These diminished sowings had been estimated at about 6½ per cent. of the whole, but the shortage in the yield of the beet crop was no less than 20 per cent., so that only about one-third of the shortage could be put down to diminished sowings, the remaining two-thirds, an amount which might be estimated at not less than 800,000 tons, being due to a drought of altogether exceptional character.

Mr. RUNCIMAN (Dewsbury) asked what the diminished sowings were due to.

*Mr. GERALD BALFOUR said that if he granted that possibly the diminished sowings, representing a shortage of 400,000 tons, were due to the Convention, he was equally justified in assuming that the increased yield of cane, which came to almost exactly the same figure, was the result of the Convention too. Therefore, setting one against the other, both might be written off the account. The dominating feature of the situation, so far as supply was concerned, was the shortage of 800,000 tons, due entirely to climatic conditions, which neither this nor any other Government could control. The hon. Member for Carnarvon Boroughs had said that speakers on the Government side contended that the rise in price was due to the drought and to nothing else. At any rate it was better to insist upon what everybody admitted to be a real and a most important cause than to omit mention of it altogether. He had read speeches made in the country by the right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition, the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Aberdeen, and the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Montrose, in which the rise of price was invariably ascribed to the Convention pure and simple, and in which no mention whatever was made of the drought. He put this question to those right hon. Gentlemen. If they knew of the drought, was it fair or honest to say nothing about it in the country? And if they did not know of it, what title had they to discuss this subject at all? So much for the question of supply.

He now came to the question of demand. He did not dispute for a moment that in connection with the abolition of bounties there had been a great reduction of price in Continental countries. That reduction of price was caused partly by the reduction of internal taxes, which was certainly not due to any provision of the Convention. In fact, internal taxes had not been reduced at all in some countries that were parties to the Convention, as for instance Austria and Holland. Still he was quite prepared to admit that the abolition of bounties did afford a convenient occasion for the Governments of various countries to diminish internal taxation, and so to reduce the cost of sugar. But was the Convention to be condemned on that account? Hon. Gentlemen opposite, who had cosmopolitan sympathies, should rejoice that the price of sugar had been reduced in those countries. [AN HON. MEMBER: At our expense.] Was the excess of consumption as compared with production a permanent or a temporary effect? If it was a permanent effect, he could well understand that it would be fair enough to connect it with the Convention; but there was a great difference between an increased consumption as compared with production that arose from the temporary disturbance in the relations of supply and demand incidental to the change from a bounty system to a non-bounty system, and one which would be a permanent effect of a system in which bounties did not exist. Was it the abolition of the bounty system, or the mere transition from one system to another that had produced that effect? He said it was a merely transitional disturbance, and it was not fair to attribute the effect to the Convention itself or to the policy of the Convention. He submitted that he had shown that the penal clause had had nothing whatever to do with the rise of price; that the most important element in the rise was shortage of supply caused by climatic conditions; and next to that the increased consumption: but this increased consumption was not directly the result of the Convention, but was due to the transition from one system to another, during which production had temporarily fallen behind the increase of consumption. Both these factors in the rise of price were of a temporary character, and if we had a favourable season next year it was practically certain that the prices would again resume their normal level. Even to-day the prices for delivery in the later months of this year were £4 or £5 below the current price.

¶He desired to add a few words about the effect of the Convention upon the sugar-using trades. It had been said that unemployment in those trades had been entirely the result of the Convention. If the Convention had not been the cause of the rise of price, then, so far as rise of price had affected those trades, it was clear that the Convention could not be responsible for the depression which he was sorry to say existed. Then it was said that the sugar-using trades in foreign countries, especially in countries outside the Convention, had the advantage of cheap, and even of bounty-fed sugar, and were thus able to compete unfairly with our own sugar-using industries. So far as the countries in the Convention were concerned, it was quite clear that they were not in a position to use bounty-fed sugar in the manufacture of confectionery. Switzerland, as a matter of fact, did not use bounty-fed sugar, except to an extremely small extent from Russia. The import of sugar from Russia into Switzerland last year was less than 400 tons, he believed, or about 1-200th part of the entire amount of sugar that Switzerland used. Therefore it was clear that the depression in the confectionery trade was not due to serious competition arising from the use of bounty-fed sugar in Switzerland. There was no sign in the figures that our sugar-using industries were losing their position in the foreign markets. Our exports of sugared goods were almost exactly the same in the present year as they were last year. It had been asserted that sugared products of Continental manufacture were beginning to invade neutral markets, which had hitherto been supplied by this country, and even to invade our home market. The figures gave absolutely no sign to point to that conclusion. There had been a considerable increase in the imports of sugared goods, but this increase consisted exclusively of fruit preserved in their syrup, a class of goods with which our own trade did not directly compete. Confectionery imports, properly so called, were not increasing, but declining. In the face of these facts he submitted that there was no justification for the allegation in the Amendment that the policy of the Brussels Convention had > "inflicted heavy losses upon trade, diminished employment of labour, and enormously increased the cost of a necessary food to consumers without any compensatory advantages."

The Convention could not be expected to produce within eighteen months all the results which they ultimately anticipated would accrue from it. One of the declared objects of the Convention was to equalise competition between beet and cane sugar, and by that equalisation of competition to increase the sources of supply and give steadiness to the price of sugar. Such objects could not be secured in a day, and to judge the Convention by the results of a year's experience was altogether unreasonable. The Parliamentary Secretary had earlier in the evening quoted from a speech in which Mr. Gladstone declared that the bounty system with all its inequalities and injustice was not really to the advantage of either the consumer or the producer. The Government held the same opinion as Mr. Gladstone, and assuredly nothing had occurred since the Convention came into operation, or been said in the course of the debate, to shake their conviction that time would vindicate the wisdom of the policy they had pursued.

MR. RUNCIMAN said that the right hon. Gentleman had endeavoured to prove that the Convention had nothing to do with the rise in the price of sugar. If the right hon. Gentleman honestly believed that, he was the only man connected with the trade, either officially or unofficially, who did believe it. The right hon. Gentleman practically contended that it was possible to cut off important sources of supplies of raw material without that cutting-off of supplies having any effect on prices; in other words, that supply had nothing whatever to do with price. That might be very good special pleading, but it was uncommonly bad economics. The whole of the Convention was nothing but a gratuitous scheme for putting large sums of money into the pockets of foreigners, and a small amount into the pockets of the West Indian planters. The Government had intended to do the latter, though not the former, but they had succeeded admirably in both. According to the preamble of the Convention, one of the main objects was to increase the consumption of sugar. That object had been attained—on the Continent—but the right hon. Gentleman had overlooked the fact that increased consumption without increased supply must increase the price. It was true there had been a drought, but prices were rising long before the drought occurred. The right hon. Gentleman admitted that diminished sowing had something to do with the rise. That was an extraordinary admission on the part of one who was contending that the Convention had nothing whatever to do with the rise in price, as the diminished sowings were directly caused by the Convention. If bounties were abolished or diminished, it obviously meant less chance for the growers to make a profit on their commodity, and naturally they would sow less. Climatic conditions doubtless had something to do with the rise, but to cut off sources of supply simply accentuated the evils caused by the drought. There were two obvious facts which no amount of argument or special pleading would overcome. Before the Convention £20,000,000 a year were paid in sugar bounties, and those bounties were now practically wiped out. This country would never be persuaded that the wiping-out of those bounties had had no effect on the price of sugar. But one of the main arguments for the Convention had always been that it was to benefit the West Indies. If the Convention had not raised prices, how had it been a boon to the West Indies? The rise was due to the act of God; it was God, not the authors of this Convention, who had conferred the boon on the West Indies. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Birmingham had stated that the disadvantage under which the West Indies laboured before the Convention was about £5 per ton of sugar. If that statement meant anything, it meant that the Convention had resulted in a loss of something like £8,000,000 a year to this country. The Convention was certainly not the product of free-trade principles. The Parliamentary Secretary had supported it in an eloquent and ingenious speech, but he had ended by enunciating the most orthodox protectionist principles. The Convention was really a step in the direction of that retaliation of which the Prime Minister was an ardent advocate. Sugar had had a peculiar political history. It brought about the downfall of Lord Melbourne's Administration in 1841; it brought into peril Sir R. Peel in 1844, and Lord John Russell in 1846; and it had certainly not benefited the standing of the present Government in the year 1904.

Question put.

The House divided:—Ayes, 211; Noes, 276. (Division List No. 10.)

AYES.

Abraham, William (Cork, N.E.)
Abraham, William (Rhondda)
Ainsworth, John Stirling
Allen, Charles P.
Ambrose, Robert
Ashton, Thomas Gair
Asquith, Rt. Hn. Herbert Henry
Atherley-Jones, L.
Barlow, John Emmott
Barran, Rowland Hirst
Barry, E. (Cork, S.)
Beaumont, Wentworth C. B.
Bell, Richard
Benn, John Williams
Black, Alexander William
Boland, John
Bolton, Thomas Dolling
Brigg, John
Bright, Allan Heywood
Broadhurst, Henry
Brown, George M. (Edinburgh)
Bryce, Rt. Hon. James
Buchanan, Thomas Ryburn
Burke, E. Haviland
Burns, John
Buxton, Sydney Charles
Caldwell, James
Campbell, John (Armagh, S.)
Campbell-Bannerman, Sir H.
Causton, Richard Knight
Cawley, Frederick
Channing, Francis Allston
Cheetham, John Frederick
Churchill, Winston Spencer
Cogan, Denis J.
Condon, Thomas Joseph
Crean, Eugene
Cremer, William Randal
Crombie, John William
Crooks, William
Cullinan, J.
Dalziel, James Henry
Davies, M. Vaughan (Cardigan
Delany, William
Devlin, Chas. Ramsay (Galway
Dickson-Poynder, Sir John P.
Dilke, Rt. Hon. Sir Charles
Doogan, P. C.
Douglas, Charles M. (Lanark)
Duffy, William J.
Duncan, J. Hastings
Edwards, Frank
Elibank, Master of
Ellice, Capt EC(SAndrw'sBghs.
Ellis, John Edward (Notts.)
Emmott, Alfred
Esmonde, Sir Thomas
Evans, Sir Francis H(Maidstone
Eve, Harry Trelawney
Farrell, James Patrick
Fenwick, Charles
Ferguson, R.C. Munro (Leith)
Ffrench, Peter
Field, William
Findlay, Alex. (Lanark, N.E.
Fitzmaurice, Lord Edmond
Flavin, Michael Joseph
Flynn, James Christopher
Freeman-Thomas, Captain F.
Fuller, J. M. F.
Furness, Sir Christopher
Gilhooly, James
Grant, Corrie
Goddard, Daniel Ford
Griffith, Ellis J.
Guest, Hon. Ivor Churchill
Gurdon, Sir W. Brampton
Haldane, Rt. Hon. Richard B.
Hammond, John
Harcourt, Lewis Vernon
Hardie, J Keir(Merthyr Tydvil
Harmsworth, R. Leicester
Harrington, Timothy
Harwood, George
Hayden, John Patrick
Hayter, Rt. Hon. Sir Arthur D.
Helme, Norval Watson
Hemphill, Rt. Hon. Charles H.
Henderson, Arthur (Durham)
Higham, John Sharpe
Hobhouse, C. E. H. (Bristol, E.
Holland, Sir William Henry
Horniman, Frederick John
Hutchinson, Dr. Charles Fredk.
Hutton, Alfred E. (Morley)
Isaacs, Rufus Daniel
Jacoby, James Alfred
Johnson, John
Joicey, Sir James
Jones, William (Carnarvonshire
Joyce, Michael
Kearley, Hudson E.
Kennedy, Vincent P.(Cavan, W
Kilbride, Denis
Kitson, Sir James
Labouchere, Henry
Langley, Batty
Law, Hugh Alex. (Donegal, W.
Lawson, Sir Wilfrid (Cornwall
Layland-Barratt, Francis
Leese, Sir Joseph F. (Accrington
Leigh, Sir Joseph
Levy, Maurice
Lewis, John Herbert
Lloyd-George, David
Lough, Thomas
Lundon, W.
Lyell, Charles Henry
Macnamara, Dr. Thomas J.
MacNeill, John Gordon Swift
MacVeagh, Jeremiah
M‘Crae, George
M‘Fadden, Edward
M‘Hugh, Patrick A.
M‘Kean, John
M‘Kenna, Reginald
M‘Killop, W. (Sligo, North)
M‘Laren, Sir Charles Benjamin
Markham, Arthur Basil
Mooney, John J.
Morgan, J. Lloyd(Carmarthen)
Morley, Rt. Hn. John (Montrose
Murnaghan, George
Murphy, John
Nannetti, Joseph P.
Newnes, Sir George
Nolan, Col. John P. (Galway, N.
Nolan, Joseph (Louth, South)
Norman, Henry
Norton, Capt. Cecil William
Nussey, Thomas Willans
O'Brien, Kendal(Tipperary Mid
O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
O'Brien, P. J. (Tipperary, N.)
O'Connor, John (Kildare N.)
O'Donnell, John (Mayo, S.)
O'Dowd, John
O'Kelly, James (Roscommon, N
O'Malley, William
O'Shaughnessy, P. J.
O'Shee, James John
Parrott, William
Partington, Oswald
Pease, J. A. (Saffron Walden)
Perks, Robert William
Pirie, Duncan V.
Power, Patrick Joseph
Rea, Russell
Reckitt, Harold James
Reddy, M.
Redmond, John E. (Waterford
Reid, Sir R. Threshie (Dumfries
Richards, Thomas (W. Monm'th
Rickett, J. Compton
Roberts, John Bryn (Eifion)
Roberts, John H. (Denbighs.)
Robertson, Edmund (Dundee)
Robson, William Snowdon
Roche, John
Roe, Sir Thomas
Runciman, Walter
Schwann, Charles E.
Scott, Chas. Prestwich (Leigh)
Shackleton, David James

Sheehan, Daniel Daniel
Sheehy, David
Shipman, Dr. John G.
Sinclair, John (Forfarshire)
Slack, John Bamford
Smith, Samuel (Flint)
Soares, Ernest J.
Spencer,RtHnC.R (Northants)
Stanhope, Hon. Philip James
Stevenson, Francis S.
Strachey, Sir Edward
Sullivan, Donal
Taylor, Theodore C. (Radcliffe)
Tennant, Harold John
Thomas, Sir A. (Glamorgan, E.
Thomas,David Alfred(Merthyr
Toulmin, George
Trevelyan, Charles Philips
Waldron, Laurence Ambrose
Wallace, Robert
Walton, Joseph (Barnsley)
Warner, Thomas Courtenay T.
Wason, Eugene (Clackmannan
Wason, John Cathcart (Orkney
White, George (Norfolk)
White, Luke (York, E. R.)
Whiteley, George (York, W. R.
Whitley, J. H. (Halifax)
Whittaker, Thomas Palmer
Williams, Osmond (Merioneth)
Wills,ArthurWalters(N Dorset
Wilson, Chas. Henry (Hull, W.
Wilson, Fred. W. (Norfolk,Mid
Wilson, John (Durham, Mid.
Woodhouse,SirJ.T.(Huddersf'd
Young, Samuel
Yoxall, James Henry

Tellers for the Ayes—Mr. Herbert Gladstone and Mr. William M'Arthur.

NOES.

Agg-Gardner, James Tynte
Agnew, Sir Andrew Noel
Allhusen,AugustusHenry Eden
Allsopp, Hon. George
Anson, Sir William Reynell
Arkwright, John Stanhope
Arnold-Forster,Rt.Hn. HughO
Arrol, Sir William
Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
Aubrey-Fletcher,Rt.Hn. Sir H.
Bailey, James (Walworth)
Bain, Colonel James Robert
Baird, John George Alexander
Balcarres, Lord
Balfour,Rt.Hn. A.J. (Manch'r.
Balfour,RtHnGerald W(Leeds)
Balfour, Kenneth R. (Christch.
Banbury, Sir Frederick George
Banner, John S. Harmood-
Bartley, Sir George C. T.
Bathurst, Hn. Allen Benjamin
Beach,RtHn.Sir MichaelHicks
Bentinck, Lord Henry C.
Bhownaggree, Sir M. M.
Bigwood, James
Bill, Charles
Bingham, Lord
Blundell, Colonel Henry
Bond, Edward
Boscawen, Arthur Griffith
Brassey, Albert
Brodrick, Rt. Hn. St. John
Brotherton, Edward Allen
Brown, Sir Alex. H. (Shropsh.
Brymer, William Ernest
Bull, William James
Burdett-Coutts, W.
Butcher, John George
Campbell,J.H.M(Dublin Univ.
Carson, Rt. Hon. Sir Edw. H
Cautley, Henry Strother
Cavendish, V.C.W.(Derbyshire
Cayzer, Sir Charles William
Cecil, Evelyn (Aston Manor)
Cecil, Lord Hugh (Greenwich)
Chamberlain, Rt. Hn J. (Birm.
Chamberlain,RtHn.J A(Worc.
Chamberlayne, T. (S'thampton
Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry
Chapman, Edward
Coates, Edward Feetham
Cochrane, Hon. Thos. H. A. E.
Cohen, Benjamin Louis
Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
Colomb, Rt. Hn. Sir John C. R.
Colston, Chas. Edw. H. Athole
Compton, Lord Alwyne
Cook, Sir Frederick Lucas
Corbett, A. Cameron (Glasgow)
Corbett, T. L. (Down, North)
Craig, Charles Curtis (AntrimS.
Cripps, Charles Alfred
Crossley, Rt. Hon. Sir Savile
Dalkeith, Earl of
Davenport, William Bromley
Davies,Sir HoratioD.(Chatham
Denny, Colonel
Dewar,Sir T. R (Tower Hamlets
Dickinson, Robert Edmond
Dickson, Charles Scott
Dimsdale,RtHn.Sir Joseph C.
Disraeli, Coningsby Ralph
Dixon-Hartland,Sir FredDixon
Dorington, Rt. Hn. Sir John E.
Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers
Doxford, Sir William Theodore
Duke, Henry Edward
Dyke, Rt Hn. Sir William Hart
Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
Faber, Edmund B. (Hants, W
Fardell, Sir T. George
Fergusson,Rt.Hn.Sir J(Manc'r
Fielden, Edward Brocklehurst
Finch, Rt. Hn. George H.
Finlay,SirR B(Inv'rn'ss B'ghs)
Fisher, William Hayes
Fison, Frederick William
FitzGerald,Sir RobertPenrose-
Fitzroy, Hn. Edward Algernon
Flannery, Sir Fortescue
Flower, Sir Ernest
Forster, Henry William
Foster,Philip S(Warwick,S.W.
Galloway, William Johnson
Gardner, Ernest
Garfit, William
Gibbs, Hon. A. G. H.
Godson,Sir Augustus Frederick
Gordon,Hn. J.E.(Elgin &Nairn
Gordon, J. (Londonderry, S.
Gordon,MajEvans-(T'r H'mlets
Goschen, Hn. George Joachim
Goulding, Edward Alfred
Graham, Henry Robert
Gray, Ernest (West Ham)
Green,Walford D.(Wednesbury
Greene, Henry D(Shrewsbury)
Greene, W. Raymond-(Cambs.)
Grenfell, William Henry
Gretton, John
Greville, Hon. Ronald
Guthrie, Walter Murray
Hall, Edward Marshall
Halsey, Rt. Hon. Thomas F.
Hambro, Charles Eric
Hamilton,RtHnLordG (Midd'x
Hamilton, Mar. of (L'nd'nderry
Hardy,Laurence(Kent Ashford
Hare, Thomas Leigh
Harris, F. Leverton(Tynem'th
Haslam, Sir Alfred S.
Hay, Hn. Claude George
Heath Arthur Howard(Hanley
Heath SirJames(Staffords.NW
Heaton, John Henniker
Helder, Augustus
Henderson, Sir A (Stafford, W.
Hermon-Hodge, Sir Robert T.
Hogg, Lindsay
Hope,J.F.(Sheffield, Brightside
Horner, Frederick William
Houldsworth, Sir Wm. Henry
Hoult, Joseph
Houston, Robert Paterson
Howard, J. Kent, Faversham
Howard, J. (Midd.Tottenham)
Hozier, Hn. James Henry Cecil
Hunt, Rowland
Hutton, John (York N. R.)
Jameson, Major J. Eustace
Jeffreys, Rt. Hon. Arthur Fred
Jessel, Captain HerbertMerton
Kennaway,RtHn Sir John H.
Kenyon, Hn. Geo T. (Denbigh)
Kenyon-Slaney,Rt Hn. Col. W.
Kerr, John
Keswick, William
Kimber, Sir Henry
Laurie, Lieut -General
Law, Andrew Bonar (Glasgow)
Lawrence,Sir Joseph (Monm'th
Lawson,Hn H L W. (Mile End
Lawson, JohnGrant(Yorks.NR
Lee,Arthur H (Hants. Fareham
Lees, Sir Elliott (Birkenhead)
Legge, Col. Hon. Heneage
Leveson-Gower, FrederickN.S.
Llewellyn, Evan Henry
Lockwood, Lieut.-Col. A. R.
Loder, Gerald Walter Erskine
Long, Col. Chas. W. (Evesham
Long,Rt.Hn.Walter (Bristol,S.
Lonsdale, John Brownlee
Lowe, Francis William
Lowther, C. (Cumb., Eskdale)
Loyd, Archie Kirkman

Lucas, Col. Francis (Lowestoft
Lucas, Reginald J (Portsmouth
Lyttelton, Rt. Hon. Alfred
Macdona, John Cumming
MacIver, David (Liverpool)
Maconochie, A. W.
M'Arthur, Charles (Liverpool)
M'Calmont, Colonel James
M'Iver, Sir Lewis (Edinburgh W.)
Majendie, James A. H.
Malcolm, Ian
Manners, Lord Cecil
Marks, Harry Hananel
Martin, Richard Biddulph
Massey-Mainwaring, Hn. W. F.
Maxwell, W. J. H (Dumfriesshire
Milner, Rt. Hn. Sir Frederick G.
Molesworth, Sir Lewis
Montagu, G. (Huntingdon)
Montagu, Hon. J. Scott (Hants
Moon, Edward Robert Pacy
Moore, William
Morgan, David J (Walthamstow
Morpeth, Viscount
Morrell, George Herbert
Morrison, James Archibald
Morton, Arthur H. Aylmer
Mount, William Arthur
Mowbray, Sir Robert Gray C.
Muntz, Sir Philip A.
Myers, William Henry
Nicholson, William Graham
Palmer, Sir Walter (Salisbury)
Peel, Hn. W. Robert Wellesley
Percy, Earl
Pierpoint, Robert
Pilkington, Colonel Richard
Platt-Higgins, Frederick
Plummer, Sir Walter R.
Powell, Sir Francis Sharp
Pretyman, Ernest George
Pryce-Jones, Lt.-Col. Edward
Purvis, Robert
Pym, C. Guy
Quilter, Sir Cuthbert
Rankin, Sir James
Rasch, Sir Frederic Carne
Ratcliff, R. F.
Reid, James (Greenock)
Remnant, James Farquharson
Renwick, George
Ridley, S. Forde
Roberts, Samuel (Sheffield)
Robertson, Herbert (Hackney)
Robinson, Brooke
Rothschild, Hn. Lionel Walter
Round, Rt. Hn. James
Rutherford, John (Lancashire)
Rutherford, W. W. (Liverpool
Sackville, Col. S. G. Stopford
Sadler, Col. Samuel Alexander
Sandys, Lieut.-Col. Thos. Myles
Scott, Sir S. (Marylebone, W.
Sharpe, William Edward T.
Shaw-Stewart, Sir H (Renfrew)
Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
Skewes-Cox, Thomas
Sloan, Thomas Henry
Smith, Abel H (Hertford, East)
Smith, H C (North'mb. Tyneside
Smith, Hon. W. F. D. (Strand)
Spear, John Ward
Stanley, Hn. Arthur (Ormskirk
Stanley, Rt. Hn. Lord (Lancs.)
Stewart, Sir Mark J. M'Taggart
Stirling-Maxwell, Sir John M
Stock, James Henry
Stone, Sir Benjamin
Stroyan, John
Strutt, Hon. Charles Hedley
Talbot, Lord E. (Chichester)
Thorburn, Sir Walter
Thornton, Percy M.
Tollemache, Henry James
Tomlinson, Sir Wm. Edw. M.
Tuff, Charles
Tufnell, Lieut.-Col. Edward
Tuke, Sir John Batty
Turnour, Viscount
Valentia, Viscount
Vincent, Col. Sir C. E. H (Sheffield
Vincent, Sir Edgar (Exeter)
Walrond, Rt. Hn. Sir William H
Wanklyn, James Leslie
Warde, Colonel C. E.
Webb, Colonel William George
Welby, Lt.-Col. A. C E (Taunton)
Welby, Sir Charles G. E. (Notts.
Wharton, Rt. Hn. John Lloyd
Whitmore, Charles Algernon
Williams, Colonel R. (Dorset)
Willoughby de Eresby, Lord
Wilson, A. Stanley (York, E.R.
Wilson, John (Glasgow)
Wilson-Todd, Sir W. H. (Yorks.
Wodehouse, Rt. Hn. E. R (Bath)
Wolff, Gustav Wilhelm
Worsley-Taylor, Henry Wilson
Wylie, Alexander
Yerburgh, Robert Armstrong

Tellers for the Noes—Sir Alexander Acland-Hood and Mr. Ailwyn Fellowes.

Main Question again proposed.

Debate arising; and, it being after midnight the debate stood adjourned. Debate to be resumed to-morrow.

On the Motion for the adjournment of the House.

Mr. J. A. PEASE (Essex, Saffron Walden) asked what business would be taken on Thursday in the event of the debate on the Address being concluded.

*The PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY to the TREASURY (Sir A. Acland-Hood, Somersetshire, Wellington) said that in the event of the debate on the Address being concluded on Wednesday, Supplementary Army Estimates would be taken on Thursday, to be followed by the Supplementary Civil Service Estimates.

REPORTED RESIGNATION OF MR. WYNDHAM.

Mr. RUNCIMAN: May I ask the Patronage Secretary to the Treasury whether he is able to give us any information as to the reported resignation of the Chief Secretary for Ireland?

* Sir A. ACLAND-HOOD: There is no foundation for it.

Mr. WINSTON CHURCHILL (Oldham): Is it untrue?

* Sir A. ACLAND-HOOD: Quite untrue.

Adjourned at twelve minutes after Twelve o'clock.

[APPENDICES.

APPENDIX I.

PUBLIC BILLS

DEALT WITH IN VOLUME CXLI.

Those marked thus * are Government Bills. The figures in parentheses in the last column refer to the page in this volume. "[H.L.]" following title indicates that the Bill originated in the Lords.

(A.) House of Lords.

Title of Bill.	Brought in by	Progress.
Advertisement Regulation [H.L.]	Lord Balfour of Burleigh	Read 1^a 24th Feb. (1205)
Bishopric of Bristol [H.L.]	Lord Bishop of Bristol	Read 1^a 16th Feb. (285) Read 2^a 21st Feb. (724)
*Congested Districts (Scotland) [H.L.]	Marquess of Linlithgow	Read 1^a 24th Feb. (1205) Read 2^a 28th Feb. (1443)
*Criminal Cases Reservation of Points of Law [H.L.]	Lord Chancellor	Read 1^a 21st Feb. (723)
Ecclesiastical Commissions [H.L.]	Lord Archbishop of Canterbury	Read 1^a 16th Feb. (286)
Military Manœuvres [H.L.]	Earl of Donoughmore	Read 1^a 16th Feb. (285)
*Municipal Corporations (Merthyr Tydvil Scheme Confirmation) [H.L.]	Marquess of Londonderry	Read 1^a 16th Feb. (286)
Newcastle Chapter Amendment [H.L.]	Lord Bishop of St. Albans	Read 1^a 27th Feb. (1275)
*Reserve Forces [H.L.]	Earl of Donoughmore	Read 1^a 16th Feb. (285) Read 2^a 24th Feb. (1207) Committee Report 28th Feb. (1444)
Sale of Intoxicants to Children [H.L.]	Lord Dunboyne	Read 1^a 27th Feb. (1275)
*Seamen and Soldiers' False Characters [H.L.]	Earl of Donoughmore	Read 1^a 16th Feb. (285) Read 2^a 21st Feb. (724) Committee Report 23rd Feb. (1019) Read 3^a and passed 24th Feb. (1208)
Select Vestries [H.L.]		Read 1^a 14th Feb. (5)
Street Betting [H.L.]	Lord Davey	Read 1^a 21st Feb. (725) Read 2^a 28th Feb. (1441)
Sunday Closing (Shops) [H.L.]	Lord Avebury	Read 1^a 20th Feb. (544)

(B.) House of Commons.

Title of Bill.	Brought in by	Progress.
Access to Mountains (Scotland)	Mr. Bryce	Read 1° 21st Feb. (756)
Canals	Mr. Barran	Read 1° 17th Feb. (475)
Catholic Disabilities Removal	Mr. MacVeagh	Read 1° 17th Feb. (477)
Chartered Societies	Sir John Rolleston	Read 1° 22nd Feb. (911)
Children's Courts	Sir Howard Vincent	Read 1° 17th Feb. (479)
Church Discipline	Mr. Austin Taylor	Read 1° 17th Feb. (477)
Church Organisation and Discipline	Lord Hugh Cecil	Read 1° 17th Feb. (480)
Closing of Licensed Premises (Christmas Day) (Ireland)	Mr. Nannetti	Read 1° 28th Feb. (1494)
Coal Mines (Employment)	Mr. Jacoby	Read 1° 17th Feb. (473)
Coal Mines (Weighing of Minerals)	Mr. Compton Rickett	Read 1° 17th Feb. (473)
Colonial Marriages	General Laurie	Read 1° 17th Feb. (478)
Compensation for Damage to Crops	Mr. Mount	Read 1° 17th Feb. (476)
Congested Districts (Scotland) Act (1897) Amendment	Mr. Ainsworth	Read 1° 27th Feb. (1346)
Contempt of Court (Ireland)	Mr. Patrick M'Hugh	Read 1° 17th Feb. (478)
Criminal Law and Procedure (Ireland) Act (1887) Repeal	Mr. Lundon	Read 1° 20th Feb. (622)
Crofters' Holdings (Scotland) Act (1886) Amendment	Mr. Weir	Read 1° 27th Feb. (1346)
Crofters' Holdings (Scotland) Acts Amendment	Mr. Ainsworth	Read 1° 27th Feb. (1346)
Drunkenness (Ireland)	Mr. T. W. Russell	Read 1° 17th Feb. (478)
Dublin Police Acts Amendment	Mr. Clancy	Read 1° 17th Feb. (476)

Title of Bill.	Brought in by	Progress.
Foreign Trawlers Regulation	Mr. Black	Read 1° 20th Feb. (621)
Franchise and Removal of Women's Disabilities	Sir Charles Dilke	Read 1° 17th Feb. (479)
House-letting (Scotland)	Mr. Alexander Cross	Read 1° 17th Feb. (477)
Housing of the Working Classes Acts Amendment	Sir Walter Foster	Read 1° 22nd Feb. (1015)
Jurors' Expenses (Ireland)	Mr. O'Dowd	Read 1° 21st Feb. (755)
Land Drainage and Sewers	Mr. Harold Reckitt	Read 1° 17th Feb. (477)
Lands Valuation (Scotland) Amendment	Mr. M'Crae	Read 1° 17th Feb. (480)
Land Values (Assessment and Rating)	Sir John Brunner	Read 1° 17th Feb. (474)
Land Values Taxation (Scotland)	Mr. Ainsworth	Read 1° 17th Feb. (474)
Leasehold Enfranchisement	General Laurie	Read 1° 17th Feb. (478)
Liquor Traffic Local Veto (Scotland)	Mr. Hunter Craig	Read 1° 17th Feb. (474)
Local Authorities (Qualification of Women)	Dr. Shipman	Read 1° 17th Feb. (475)
Local Government (Ireland) Acts Amendment	Mr. Mooney	Read 1° 17th Feb. (476)
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister	Colonel Lockwood	Read 1° 17th Feb. (474)
Medical Act (1886) Amendment	General Laurie	Read 1° 17th Feb. (478)
Merchandise Marks	Sir Howard Vincent	Read 1° 17th Feb. (479)
Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment	Mr. Louis Sinclair	Read 1° 28th Feb. (1493)
Milk Depôts (London)	Mr. Lough	Read 1° 17th Feb. (481)
Minister of Commerce and Industry	Mr. Louis Sinclair	Read 1° 28th Feb. (1493)
Municipal Franchise (Companies)	Sir Albert Rollit	Read 1° 17th Feb. (480)
Nurses Registration	Mr. Munro Ferguson	Read 1° 23rd Feb. (1112)

(B.) HOUSE OF COMMONS—continued.

Title of Bill.	Brought in by	Progress.
Osborne Estate Act (1902) Amendment	Mr. Victor Cavendish	Read 1° 27th Feb. (1346)
Outlawries		Read 1° 14th Feb. (80)
Pharmacy	Mr. Lough	Read 1° 17th Feb. (480)
Plural Voting	Mr. Soames	Read 1° 17th Feb. (475)
Private Bill Procedure (Ireland)	Mr. O'Doherty	Read 1° 23rd Feb. (1112)
Private Legislation Procedure (Wales)	Mr. Vaughan Davies	Read 1° 17th Feb. (475)
Public Entertainment	Captain Jessel	Read 1° 24th Feb. (1271)
Public Trustee and Executor	Sir Howard Vincent	Read 1° 17th Feb. (479)
Purchase of Land (England and Wales)	Mr. Jesse Collings	Read 1° 22nd Feb. (911)
Rating of Machinery	Mr. George Whiteley	Read 1° 20th Feb. (622)
Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Saturdays (Ireland)	Mr. Sloan	Read 1° 17th Feb. (477)
Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Sunday)	Mr. Perks	Read 1° 17th Feb. (476)
Salmon Fisheries (Ireland) Acts Amendment	Sir Henry Seton-Karr	Read 1° 22nd Feb. (911)
School Board Electorate (Scotland)	Mr. Weir	Read 1° 27th Feb. (1346)
Shipowners' Negligence (Remedies)	Sir Harry Samuel	Read 1° 17th Feb. (472)
Small Dwellings (Acquisition)	Sir Thomas Wrightson	Read 1° 17th Feb. (910)
Small Holdings (Scotland)	Mr. Black	Read 1° 27th Feb. (1346)
Small Holdings	Mr. Channing	Read 1° 17th Feb. (476)
Small Holdings (No. 2)	Mr. Jesse Collings	Read 1° 23rd Feb. (1112)
Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge)	Mr. Joseph Walton	Read 1° 17th Feb. (477)
Sunday Closing (Wales) Act (1881) Amendment	Mr. Herbert Roberts	Read 1° 17th Feb. (479)

Title of Bill.	Brought in by	Progress.
Town Tenants (Ireland)	Mr. Patrick O'Brien	Read 1° 17th Feb. (473)
Trades Unions and Trade Disputes	Mr. Whittaker	Read 1° 17th Feb. (473)
Tramways and Public Companies (Ireland) Act (1883) Amendment	Mr. Patrick M'Hugh	Read 1° 20th Feb. (622)
Trawlers' Certificates Suspension	Mr. Weir	Read 1° 28th Feb. (1494)
Vehicles Lights	Mr. Bigwood	Read 1° 17th Feb. (474)
Voting Disqualification (Poor Law) Removal	Mr. Schwann	Read 1° 17th Feb. (479)
Wages Boards	Sir Charles Dilke	Read 1° 17th Feb. (479)
Women's Enfranchisement	Mr. Slack	Read 1° 17th Feb. (475)

APPENDIX II.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, SESSION 1905.

LIST OF RULES, ORDERS, &c., which have been presented during the Session, and are required by Statute to lie for an appointed number of Days upon the Table of the House.

Title of Paper.	Date from which the Period runs.	Period to lie upon the Table.
Intermediate Education (Ireland),—Copy of Time Table of Examinations for 1905 [41 and 42 Vic., c. 66, s. 6]	14 February	40 days
Intermediate Education (Ireland),—Copy of Rule making an addition to Rule 9 (a) of the Rules and Programme for 1905 [41 and 42 Vic., c. 66, s. 6]	14 February	40 days
Intermediate Education (Ireland),—Copy of Rule for the Examination in Music [41 and 42 Vic., c. 66, s. 6]	14 February	40 days
Intermediate Education (Ireland),—Copy of Additional Rule as to the French Course [41 and 42 Vic., c. 66, s. 6]	14 February	40 days
Factory and Workshop Acts (Special Exception—Overtime),—Copy of Order, dated 15th November 1904, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 49 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, extending the special exception under that section to non-textile factories and workshops, or parts thereof, in which the making up of any article of table linen, bed linen, or other household linen is carried on [1 Edw. VII., c. 22, s. 126 (3)]	14 February	40 days
Factory and Workshop Acts (Special Exception—Nightwork),—Copy of Order, dated 9th August 1904, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 54 (4) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, extending the special exception in that section to male young persons of the age of 16 years and upwards, employed on the system of three shifts of not more than eight hours each in the processes of pressing and reeling cordite and nitrating and moulding gun cotton carried on in non-textile factories [1 Edw. VII., c. 22, s. 126 (3)]	14 February	40 days

Title of Paper.	Date from which the Period runs.	Period to lie upon the Table.
Factory and Workshop Acts (Dangerous and Unhealthy Industries),—Copy of Regulations, dated 24th October 1904, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of Section 79 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, in respect of the processes of loading, unloading, moving, and handling goods in, on, or at any dock, wharf, or quay, and the processes of loading, unloading, or coaling any ship in any dock, harbour, or canal [1 Edw. VII., c. 22, s. 84]	14 February	40 days
Inebriate Reformatories (Regulations),—Copy of Regulations made with the approval of the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the management and discipline of the certified Inebriate Reformatory at East Harling, Norfolk [61 and 62 Vic., c. 60, s. 21 (1)]	14 February	4 weeks (whilst the House is sitting)
Universities of Oxford and Cambridge Act, 1877 (Oxford),—Copy of Statutes made by the Governing Body of Magdalen College, Oxford, on 11th May 1904, amending the existing Statutes of the College [40 and 41 Vic., c. 48, s. 50]	14 February	12 weeks
Universities of Oxford and Cambridge Act, 1877 (Oxford),—Copy of Statute made by the Governing Body of New College, Oxford, on 15th June 1904, amending Statute XV. (Pension Fund) of the Statutes of the College [40 and 41 Vic., c. 48, s. 50]	14 February	12 weeks
Universities of Oxford and Cambridge Act, 1877 (Oxford),—Copy of Statutes made by the Governing Body of Balliol College, Oxford, on 26th May 1904, amending (1) Statute III. and (2) Statute IV. and Schedule B of the Statutes of the College [40 and 41 Vic., c. 48, s. 50]	14 February	12 weeks
Supreme Court (Rules),—Copy of Rules of the Supreme Court dated 1st October 1904 [38 and 39 Vic., c. 77, s. 25]	14 February	40 days
Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887 (Rules),—Copy of Rule under the Act, dated 1st October 1904 [38 and 39 Vic., c. 77, s. 25]	14 February	40 days
Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Acts, 1883 to 1902,—Copy of the Patents Rules 1905, dated 20th October 1904 [46 and 47 Vic., c. 57, s. 101 (5)]	15 February	40 days
Osborne,—Copy of Rule for Osborne in connection with the Regulations prescribed by The Parks Regulation Act, 1872 [35 and 36 Vic., c. 15, s. 9]	16 February	One month
Education (Scotland),—Copy of Minute of the Committee of Council on Education in Scotland, dated 16th February 1905, providing for the distribution of the General Aid Grant [35 and 36 Vic., c. 62, s. 67]	16 February	One month
Public Records (His Majesty's Stationery Office),—Copy of Schedule containing a List and Particulars of Classes of Documents existing or accruing in His Majesty's Stationery Office which are not considered of sufficient public value to justify their preservation in the Public Record Office [40 and 41 Vic., c. 55, s. 1]	16 February	4 weeks

LIST OF RULES, ORDERS, &C.—continued.

Title of Paper.	Date from which the Period runs.	Period to lie upon the Table.
Public Records (Board of Agriculture and Fisheries),—Copy of Second Schedule containing a List and Particulars of Classes of Documents existing or accruing in the Office of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries which are not considered of sufficient public value to justify their preservation in the Public Record Office [40 and 41 Vic., c. 55, s. 1]	16 February	4 weeks
Board of Education,—Copy of Draft Order in Council continuing certain provisions contained in the Order in Council of 6th March 1902 [62 and 63 Vic., c. 33, s. 5]	17 February	4 weeks
Prisons (England and Wales),—Copy of Draft Rules proposed to be made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department under the Prisons Acts, 1877 and 1898, with respect to the constitution of the Visiting Committee of Stafford Prison [61 and 62 Vic., c. 41, s. 2]	20 February	30 sitting days
Prisons (England and Wales),—Copy of Draft Rules proposed to be made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department under the Prisons Acts, 1877 and 1898, with respect to the constitution of the Visiting Committee of Borstal Prison [61 and 62 Vic., c. 41, s. 2]	21 February	30 sitting days
Factory and Workshop Acts (Special Exception—Nightwork),—Copy of Order, dated 18th February 1905, made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department in pursuance of Section 54 (4) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, extending the special exception in that section to male young persons of the age of 16 years and upwards employed in the process of continuous wire drawing carried on in non-textile Factories [1 Edw. VII., c. 22, s. 126 (3)]	21 February	40 days
Railways (Certificates) (Corringham Light Railway Company),—Copy of Draft Certificate of the Board of Trade authorising the Corringham Light Railway Company to raise additional Capital [27 and 28 Vic., c. 120, s. 14]	21 February	6 weeks
Prisons (Scotland),—Copy of Rule made by the Secretary for Scotland as to the appointment of Visiting Committees to the Prisons at Barlinnie, Perth, and Peterhead [40 and 41 Vic., c. 53, s. 58]	28 February	40 days

INDEX

TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

[AUTHORISED EDITION.].

FIRST VOLUME OF SESSION 1905.

FEBRUARY 14—FEBRUARY 28.

EXPLANATION OF ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS.

Bills: Read First, Second, or Third Time — 1R., 2R., 3R. [c.] = Commons. [l.] = Lords. Amendt. = Amendment. Os. = Observations. Qs. = Questions. = As. = Answers. Com. = Committee. Con. = Consideration. Rep. Report.

Where in the Index * is added with Reading of a Bill, or a Vote in Committee of Supply, it indicates that no Debate took place on that Stage of the Bill, or on that Vote.

Subjects discussed in Committee of Supply are entered under their headings, and also under Members' Names, without reference to the actual Vote before the Committee.

Aberdare Tramways Bill
c. 1R.Feb. 20*, 563.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1294.

Aberdeen
University, Reports Presented, Feb. 27, 1274, 1296.

Abertillery Urban District Water Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 21, 721.

Abraham, Mr. W. [Cork Co. N.E.]
Kingston Estate, Sale of, Feb. 22, 901.
Fair Rent Appeals—Kingston Estate Second Term Rents, Feb. 20, 612.

Abyssinia
Frontier Survey—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 51, 92.

Access to Mountains (Scotland) Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 21, 756.

Accidents
Industrial, Notification of, Amendment of Law relating to.
References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 5.
Railways, see that title.

Accrington Corporation Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 563.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1294.

Accrington District Gas and Water Board Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 564.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1294.

Achill Island
Distress in—Relief Works proposed.
Q. Dr. Ambrose; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 588.

Acland-Hood, Rt. Hon. Sir A.—Parliamentary Secretary to the Treasury. [Somerset, Wellington]
Business of the House, Course of, Feb. 28, 1585.
Ireland—Resignation of Chief Secretary, Feb. 28, 1586.

Acton Sewage Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 564.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1294.

Aden
Frontier Force, Casualties in, Rewards to, etc.
Qs. Sir C. Rasch; Mr. C. Hobhouse; As. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 22, 893.
Mail Service to Bombay, Conditions of Work in.
Q. Mr. S. Smith; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 21, 761.

Adjournment of the House
Motion for, by Mr. E. Gray.
Os. Mr. W. Churchill, Sir W. Tomlinson, Mr. Speaker, Feb. 15, 274; Mr. E. Gray, 275, Motion for, Member moving, not Entitled to Speak again except by General Consent of the House.
Os. Mr. Speaker, Feb. 15, 274; Mr. E. Gray, Mr. Speaker, Lord H. Cecil, Feb. 16, 330.

Administrative County of London and District Electric Power Company Bill.
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 21, 721.

Admiralty
First Lord.—Rt. Hon. Earl of Selborne.
Financial Secretary—Mr. E. G. Pretyman.
Board—Distribution of Business, Statement as to, proposed.
Q. Sir J. Colomb; A. Mr. Pretyman, Feb. 20, 592.
Yacht "Enchantress," see Navy—Enchantress.

Adrianople
British Consulate at, Re-establishment of,
O. Earl Percy, Feb. 27, 1374.

Advertisements Regulation Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 24, 1205.

Afghanistan
Ameer of, Attitude of, towards the Indian Government.
O. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 14, 154.
British Mission to Kabul.
Information as to.
Q. Mr. H. Roberts; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 16, 307.
Q. Mr. G. Bowles; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 23, 1096.
References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 4.
Os. Marquess of Winchester, Feb. 14, 8.
Defence of—Army Re-organisation Proposals.
Os. Duke of Bedford, Feb. 21, 725, 727.
Os. Capt. Norton, Feb. 22, 917.
Sirdar Mayatulla of, Visit of, to Viceroy of India.
References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 4.
Os. Marquess of Winchester, Feb. 14, 8.

Africa, Central
British Protectorate—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 48, 91.
Convention between United Kingdom and France Presented, Feb. 28, 1447.

Africa, East
Currency Order in Council, Presented, Feb. 14, 62, 102.
Educational System—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 47, 88.
Frontier Delimitation between British Territory and Abyssinia—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 51, 92.
Report Presented, Feb. 14, 51, 92.
Uganda, see that title.

Africa, South
Chartered Company of South Africa, see that title.
Garrison in.
Cost of.
Q. Mr. Whitley; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 20, 595.
Stores.
Fire at Bloemfontein, Loss incurred by.
Q. Mr. Whitley; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 28, 1469.
Sale of, by Colonel Morgan, alleged.
Qs. Mr. C. Hobhouse, Mr. S. MacNeill; As. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Mr. Speaker, Feb. 23, 1086, 1087.
Qs. Mr. C. Hobhouse, Mr. S. MacNeill; As. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 28, 1469, 1470.
Gold and Diamonds imported into United Kingdom, Duty on, proposed.
Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 23, 1077.
Inter-Colonial Council—Railway Department, alterations in.
Qs. Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Whitley; As. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 22, 892, 893.
Milner, Lord—Termination of Tenure of Office.
Q. Mr. J. Ellis; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 28, 1474.
Orange River Colony, see that title.
Railways, Purchase of—Expenditure, etc.,
Q. Mr. Buchanan; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 27, 1311.
Total amount paid under Loan Act of 1903.
Q. Mr. Buchanan; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 21, 769.
Settlement of, Progress made with.
Os. Earl Spencer, Feb. 14, 22; Marquess of Lansdowne, 32.
Os. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Feb. 14, 136; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 156.
Transvaal, see that title.

Africa, West

Convention between United Kingdom and France, Presented, Feb. 28, 1447.

Educational System—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 47, 88.

Aghnacliffe

Telegraph Service, Extension of.
Qs. Mr. Farrell; As. Lord Stanley, Feb. 27, 1336.

Agricultural Rates Act

Renewal of.
Os Marquess of Winchester, Feb. 14, 11; Mr. Mount, 113.
Os. Mr. Spear, Feb. 24, 1242; Mr. J. Collings, 1252.

Renewal of.

References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 5.

Agricultural Rating Bill

Introduction, Date of.
Q. Sir W. Thorburn; A. Mr. W. Long, Feb. 28, 1458.

Agriculture

Agricultural Organisation Society, Work done by.
O. Mr. Yerburgh, Feb. 24, 1262.

Canadian Store Cattle, Effect of Importation of, on laying down of land to grass.
Os. Lord Willoughby de Eresby, Feb. 24, 1231, 1232; Mr. M. Ferguson, 1236, 1237.

Capital invested in Holding by Tenant, Government Security for, proposed.
Os. Mr. Spear, Feb. 24, 1240, 1241.

Civil and Religious Liberties of Tenant Farmers, Interference with, by Landlords, Os. Mr. Channing, Feb. 24, 1224–1226, Mr. Bright, 1243–1245.

Collection, packing, grading and dispatching of produce, Necessity for combined action as to.
Os. Mr. Channing, Feb. 24, 1221; Mr. M. Ferguson, 1239.

Co operation and Combination, Necessity for.
Os. Mr. Channing, Feb. 24, 1219–1223; Lord Willoughby de Eresby, 1235, Mr. A. Fellowes 1249; Mr. Yerburgh 1260.

Danish Methods, Success of.
Os. Mr. Channing, Feb. 24, 1218–1220. Mr. Whitley, 1227; Mr. M. Ferguson 1237; Mr. A. Fellowes, 1246; Mr. Tomkinson, 1258; Mr. Yerburgh, 1260.

Agriculture—cont.

Depopulation of Rural Districts, Causes of, etc.
Os. Mr. Channing, Feb. 24, 1216, 1217; Mr. M. Ferguson, 1237, 1239; Mr. Spear, 1239, 1240, 1242; Mr. A. Fellowes, 1246–1248; Mr. Brigg, 1250, 1251. Mr. J. Collings, 1251; Mr. Tomkinson, 1255, 1256.

Education and Research, Grants for, etc.—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 42, 89.

Fertilisers and Foodstuffs Act, see that title.

Insecurity of Tenure and lack of Business Organisation, Effect of, on Agricultural prosperity.
Os. Mr. Channing, Feb. 24, 1218. 1219, 1222–1224; Mr. Whitley, 1228; Lord Willoughby de Eresby, 1230, 1231, 1232.
Os. Mr. Bright, Feb. 24, 1243–1245; Mr. A. Fellowes, 1248, 1249; Mr. J. Collings, 1252.

Labourers.

Housing Accommodation for, Necessity for Improvement in.
Os. Mr. Spear, Feb. 24, 1241; Mr. Tomkinson, 1256; Sir C. Rasch, 1267.

Irish—Report, etc., Presented, Feb. 14, 44, 86.

Report Presented, Feb. 14, 54, 85.

Local Taxation, Re-arrangement of Basis of, proposed.
Os. Mr. Spear, Feb. 24, 1241.

Produce—Price of, Reduction in—Effect on Employment in Rural Districts, etc.
Os. Mr. Spear, Feb. 24, 1239, 1240; Sir C. Rasch, 1266.

Railway Rates on Produce.

Departmental Committee on, Proceedings of.
Os. Mr. Channing, Feb. 24, 1220; Mr. A. Fellowes, 1247.

acilities offered by the Railway Companies.
Os. Mr. Yerburgh, Feb. 24, 1261.

Preferential treatment of Foreign Produce.
Os. Lord Willoughby de Eresby, Feb. 24, 1235, 1236; Mr. Spear, 1241; Mr. Lambert, 1263.

Sheep, Dipping, etc.—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 42, 89.

Small Holdings, Encouragement of, proposed.
Os. Lord Willoughby de Eresby, Feb. 24, 1234, 1235; Mr. M. Ferguson, 1238; Mr. J. Collings, 1253, 1254; Mr. Tomkinson, 1257–1259; Mr Yerburgh, 1259, 1260; Mr. Lambert 1264; Sir C. Rasch, 1265.

[cont.

Agriculture—cont.

Stock, Raising Quality of, Co-operation of the Board of Agriculture, etc.
Os. Mr. Channing, Feb. 24, 1221.

Tax on Capital Value of Land, proposed.
O. Mr Whitley, Feb. 24, 1229.

Tenants' interests, Lack of Legal Protection for.
Os. Mr. Channing, Feb. 24, 1223–1225; Mr. Whitley, 1228; Lord Willoughby de Eresby, 1232; Mr. Tomkinson, 1259; Mr. Lambert, 1265.

Valuation Rents of Farms, Method of Fixing.
Os. Lord Willoughby de Eresby, Feb. 24, 1232, 1233; Mr. M. Ferguson, 1237, 1238.

Wheat, Bounty on, proposed.
O. Sir C. Rasch, Feb. 24, 1267.

Workmen's Compensation Act, Extension of, to Agricultural Labourers.
O. Mr. Spear, Feb. 24, 1241.

Agriculture, Board of President—Earl of Onslow.

Agriculture and Technical Instruction Department (Ireland)

Fisheries (Ireland) Acts—Manual Presented, Feb. 14, 48, 87.

Minutes Presented, Feb. 14, 58, 94.

Schemes.

Expenditure, etc.—Return Presented, Feb. 28, 1447.

Instructors Native to a County, Regulation as to.
Q. Mr. O'Doherty; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1304–1305.

Staff—Number Employed—Return Presented, Feb. 14, 94.

Veterinary Branch—Position of Clerks.
Q. Capt. Donelan; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 21, 763.

nsworth, Mr. J. S. [Argyll]

Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in, Feb. 15, 234–236.

Alexandra Park and Palace Bill

l. 1R* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 21, 721.

Alexandria

Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 39.

Aliens

Immigration of, into Great Britain.

Arrivals from the Continent in 1905—Return ordered, Feb. 14, 38, Feb. 15, 176; Presented, Feb 14, 64; Feb. 16, 296.

Legislative proposals.
Os. Mr. S. Roberts, Feb. 14, 117, Sir H. Vincent, 139; Col. Pilkington, 146.

References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 4.
Os. Marquess of Winchester, Feb. 14, 8; Earl Spencer, 25; Marquess of Lansdowne, 35.

Urgency of the Matter.
O. Mr. E. Gray, Feb. 15. 275.

Ireland, Influx into—Evidence before the Commission of Inquiry.
Qs. Mr. Sloan; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 28, 1491, 1492.

United States, Criminal Aliens in—Number Sentenced and Number Prohibited from Landing, etc.
Q. Mr. H. Samuel; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 22, 896, 897.

Alington, Lord

Privilege, Breach of, by Interference in Parliamentary Election, alleged.
Os. Sir W. Lawson, Feb. 14, 66; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 67, 74, ; Mr. Dalziel, 71, 74.

Allen, Mr. C. P. [Gloucester, Stroud]

Volunteers—Notices of Parades, etc., Exhibition of, at Country Post Offices, Feb. 22, 895.

Altcar

Rifle Range, Closing of—Protest.
Q. Colonel Pilkington; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 28, 1470.

Ambrose, Dr. R. [Mayo, W.]

Achill Island, Distress in—Relief Works proposed, Feb. 20, 588.

Lucan Estate, Sale of, Progress with, etc., Feb. 20, 587.

America, Central

Educational System—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 47, 88.

Amoy

Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Ancona

Trade Report, Presented Feb. 14, 41.

Andover

Polling District Order, Altering, Presented, Feb. 14, 60, 97.

Andover Lighting and Power Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 564.

Feb. 14—Feb. 28.

Anglo-Foreign Relations

References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 1.
Os. Marquess of Winchester, Feb. 14, 6; Earl Spencer, 19; Mr. Mount, 109.

Angola

Trade Report, Presented Feb. 14, 39.

Animals

Experiments on—Cats, Source of Supply of—Brockwell Hall Case, etc.
Q. Mr. Tomkinson, A. Mr. Akers-Douglas, Feb. 23, 1073–1075.

Anson, Sir W. R.—Secretary to the Board of Education [Oxford University]

Bishop's Stortford College—Dismissal of Mr. Kitchener, Feb. 28, 1462.

Church Attendance, Regulation as to counting, as School Attendance, Feb. 27, 1303; Feb. 28, 1461.

Grants, Period for Payment of, Feb. 23, 1076.

Physical Deterioration Committee Report and Recommendations, Adoption of, Feb. 21, 776; Feb. 27, 1318.

Underfed Children, Provision of Meals for, by Local Authority, proposed, Feb. 21, 776; Feb. 28, 1483.

Appeal Committee

Appointment of—Sessional Order, Feb. 14, 64.

Appleby

Parliamentary Election—New Writ, Feb. 16, 329.

Arbitration

Extension of Principle of.
O. Mr. Mount, Feb. 14, 109, 110.

Treaties of, see under names of Countries, as France, Portugal, etc.

Archangel

Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Argentina

Sugar Exports to the United Kingdom.
- Amount of, in 1904—Information as to.
  Q. Mr. G. Bowles, A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 28, 1460.
- Falling off in.
  O. Mr. Lloyd-George, Feb. 28, 1499.

Armagh, County

Evicted Tenants, Reinstatement of.
Q. Mr. J. Campbell; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1331.

Armenia

Disturbances in, Responsibility of Turkish Government—Reform Measures, etc.
Os. Mr. Stevenson, Feb. 27, 1354, 1355; Earl Percy, 1381, 1382.

Gendarmerie Scheme, Application of, proposed.
O. Mr. Bryce, Feb. 27, 1390.

Armstrong Estate

Evicted Tenants, Reinstatement of.
Q. Mr. J. Campbell; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1331.

Army

Secretary of State—Right Hon. H. O. Arnold-Forster.

Under Secretary—Earl of Donoughmore.

Financial Secretary—W. B. Davenport.

Adjutancies, Militia Officers' grievances in connection with.
O. Sir A. Hayter, Feb. 23, 1117.

Advisory Boards, Abolition of.
Os. Duke of Bedford, Feb. 21, 733; Duke of Marlborough, 747.

Afghanistan, Defence of, see under Afghanistan.

Appropriation Account Presented, Feb. 20, 581.

Arms and Ammunition (see also subheadings Guns and Rifles.)
- "M. D. Cordite," use of, with Small Arms.
  O. Earl of Donoughmore, Feb. 23, 1054.

Army Corps Scheme, Failure and Abolition of.
O. Mr. W. Churchill, Feb. 23, 1195.

Army Service Corps, Additions to.
O. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1173.

Artillery.
- Additions to.
  O. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1173.
- Armament—Provision for Expenditure.
  Qs. Mr. Buchanan; As. Mr. Forster, Feb. 23, 1091.
- Guns, see that subheading.
- Re-armament Proposals—Date of completion—Delay in carrying out.
  Os. Capt. Norton, Feb. 22, 914–916; Mr. C. Warner, 963.

Auxiliary Forces (see also titles Militia, Volunteers and Yeomanry.)
- Director of.
  - Appointment of.
    O. Duke of Bedford, Feb. 21, 733.
  - Duties and Status of.
    O. Sir H. Vincent, Feb. 22, 927.

[cont.

Army—cont.
Auxiliary Forces—cont.
Reorganisation Proposals.
O. Capt. Norton, Feb. 22, 918.

Strength of.
Q. Capt. Ellice; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1091.

Barracks, Expenditure on, and Progress of Works.
O. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1171.

Cavalry.
Officers, Deficiency in Number of.
O. Sir A. Hayter, Feb. 23, 1116; Capt. Jessel, 1151.

Patterson Equipment, Adoption of.
Q. Sir C. Rasch; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 22, 890, 891.

Colonial Garrisons, Reasons for Reducing.
O. Capt. Jessel, Feb. 23, 1153.

Commissions for University Candidates, Facilities for obtaining.
Os. Sir M. Stewart, Feb, 23, 1155; Sir A. Rollit, 1167.

Continuous changes of Policy with regard to, Disastrous effect of.
Os. Capt. Norton, Feb. 22, 912; Major Seely, 919; Col. Welby, Feb. 23, 1113; Mr. C. Hobhouse, 1120; Sir J. Colomb, 1132; Mr. Lambert, 1132.
Os. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1169; Mr. W. Churchill, 1192–1194.

Duties and Functions of.
Os. Sir J. Colomb, Feb. 23, 1129; Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, 1139, 1140.

Engineers, Royal, Additions to.
O. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1173.

Enteric, Inoculation for—Results of Experiments.
O. Mr. E. Wason, Feb. 23, 1164.

Expenditure on.
Increase in, Necessity for Reduction.
Os. Mr. McCrae, Feb. 22, 933; Major E. Gordon, 946; Col. Welby, Feb. 23, 1115, 1116; Capt. Ellice, 1156.
Os. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1172, 1174.

Reduction to be effected under Reform Proposals.
Q. Mr. McCrae; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 20, 595.

Finance, Director of, Duties of—Order in Council, Presented, Feb. 14, 87.

Foreign Service Army and Territorial Army, Connection and Relations between.
O. Mr. Peel, Feb. 23, 1159.

General [Service Army, Proposals as to.
Os. Duke of Bedford, Feb. 21, 726; Earl of Donoughmore, 742.

Army—cont.
Guards—Officers, Deficiency in Number of.
Os. Sir A. Hayter, Feb. 23, 1117; Capt. Jessel, 1151; Mr. Arnold-Forster, 1188.

Guns.
Fuse-setters, Automatic, Decision as to.
Q. Mr. Soames; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 20, 593.

Mark 1 Guns, Date of issue of, Number of Batteries armed with, etc.
Q. Mr. Soames; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 20, 593.

Quick-firing.
Changes in Wagons and Harness, Necessity for.
Q. Col. Nolan; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 28, 1450.

Delay in supply of.
Os. Major Seely, Feb. 22, 920; Sir W. Foster, 949; Sir C. Rasch, 959.
O. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1184, 1185.

European Armament of.
O. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1184.

Health of the Troops on Active Service, Precautions taken to insure—Japanese Methods, etc.
Os. Sir W. Foster, Feb. 22, 949–953.

Highland Light Infantry, Brigading of.
Q. Mr. Malcolm; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 28, 1450, 1451.

Home Service Army, Proposals as to.
Os. Duke of Bedford, Feb. 21, 726, 727; Earl of Donoughmore, 742.
Os. Mr. C. Hobhouse, Feb. 23, 1123.
Class of Recruits to be accepted.
Os. Duke of Bedford, Feb. 21, 728.

Horses—Epizootic Lymphangitis Out-break at Waterford.
Qs. Mr. Power; As. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1087, 1088.

Imperial Defence, Number of Men required for.
Os. Mr. Lambert, Feb. 23, 1135; Mr. Fuller, 1147, 1148.

India, see that title.

Inefficiency of, Unsuitability to the Needs of the Empire, etc., alleged.
Os. Mr. O. Williams, Feb. 23, 1167, Mr. Arnold-Forster, 1169, 1174, 1183, 1191.

Infantry, Additions to.
O. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1173.
Inspector-General of the Forces, Duties of—Order in Council, Presented, Feb. 14, 87.

[cont.

Army—cont.

Linked Battalion System, Abolition of.
Os. Mr. Lambert, Feb. 23, 1134.

Medical College, Progress of work on.
Os. Sir W. Foster, Feb. 22, 949, 950; Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1172.

Medical Department.

Additions to Corps.
O. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1173.

Scientific training, Facilities for.
Os. Sir W. Foster, Feb. 22, 949–953.

Military Works Acts, see that title.

Mowat Programme.

Abstract of Committee Report—Date of publication.
Q. Mr. Buchanan; A. Mr. Bromley Davenport, Feb. 21, 759, 760.

Completion of.
O. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1173.

Nine years Service System.
O. Earl of Donoughmore, Feb. 21, 743, 744.
Os. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Feb. 23, 1142; Mr. Arnold-Forster, 1175.

Officers.

Education and Training of.
O. Duke of Bedford, Feb. 21, 732.

Mess subscriptions on transfer to Militia.
Q. Dr. Thompson; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1083, 1084.

Pay of.
O. Captain Jessel, Feb. 23, 1151, 1152.

Scarcity of, Reasons for.
Os. Sir A. Hayter, Feb. 23, 1116, 1117; Captain Jessel, 1151; Captain Ellice, 1156; Mr. Arnold-Forster, 1188.

Ordnance Factories—Appropriation Account Presented, Feb. 27, 1295.

Pay and Allowances.

List of Exceptions, Presented, Feb. 14, 46, 87.

Statement available for Recruits, proposed.
Q. Sir H. Vincent; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 22, 888.

Pensioners.

District Asylums, Irish, Maintenance in.
Qs. Mr. Sloan; As. Mr. B. Davenport, Feb. 16, 327.

Prison Discipline, etc.—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 48, 87.

Army—cont.

Recruiting and Enlistment.

Conditions of, Class of recruit, etc.
Os. Major Seely, Feb. 22, 921; Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 23, 1143; Mr. Fuller, 1145.

Pay of Recruits, Increase in, proposed.
Os. Colonel Welby, Feb. 23, 1115; Captain Jessel, 1151.

Physical condition of Recruits.
Os. Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 23, 1143–1145; Mr. Fuller, 1145, 1146; Mr. Llewellyn, 1160.

New terms of Enlistment, Progress made under.
Q. Mr. Marks; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1082–1084.

Pay, Conditions of Service, etc.—Statement available for Recruits, proposed.
Q. Sir H. Vincent; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 22, 888.

Reduction in numbers, proposed.
O. Mr. Guest, Feb. 22, 957.

Reorganisation Proposals.
Os. Earl Spencer, Feb. 14, 24; Marquess of Lansdowne, 34.
O. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Feb. 14, 137, 138.
Os. Duke of Bedford, Feb. 21, 725–737; Earl of Donoughmore, 742–748.
Os. Major E. Gordon, Feb. 22, 945–948; Major Rasch, 959–961; Colonel Welby, Feb. 23, 1113–1116; Sir A. Hayter, 1117; Mr. C. Hobhouse, 1123; Sir J. Colomb, 1126–1132; Mr. Lambert, 1133; Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, 1138, 1139; Captain Jessel, 1149, 1150; Mr. Arnold-Forster, 1170, 1189–1191; Mr. W. Churchill, 1196, 1199.

Adoption of, en bloc or in part.
Os. Mr. Lambert, Feb. 23, 1134.

Afghanistan, Defence of.
Os. Duke of Bedford, Feb. 21, 725, 726.

Expenditure, Reduction to be effected in.
Q. Mr. McCrae; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 20, 595.

Financial effect of.
O. Duke of Bedford, Feb. 21, 728.

Reserve, Increase in.
O. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1174, 1176.

Rifle Ranges, see that title.

[cont.

Army—cont.

Rifles.

Lee-Metford, Advantages of.
O. Earl Roberts, Feb. 23, 1036.

New.

Ballistic qualities of.
Os. Lord Tweedmouth, Feb. 23, 1029, 1030; Earl Donoughmore, 1054.

Barrel, length of.
O. Cap. Norton, Feb. 22, 916.
Os. Lord Tweedmouth, Feb. 23, 1023, 1024, 1033.
Os. Earl Roberts, Feb. 23, 1035–1038.

Bayonet fighting, disadvantage for.
Os. Lord Tweedmouth, Feb. 23, 1033; Earl of Donoughmore, 1056.

Bisley, Facilities for trying at.
Os. Lord Roberts, Feb. 23, 1042.

Cartridges to be used with, importance of Uniformity in.
Os. Earl Spencer, Feb. 23, 1064.

Charger Loading advantages of.
Os. Lord Tweedmouth, Feb. 23, 1020; Earl of Donoughmore, 1051.

Colonial Opinion as to, Ascertaining.
O. Sir H. Seton-Karr, Feb. 22, 956.

Commander-in-Chief, sanction and Approval of.
Q. Sir J. Colomb; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 20, 593.

Committee, Freedom of action allowed to.
O. Mr. Peel, Feb. 23, 1157, 1158.

Cost of.
Os. Capt. Norton, Feb. 22, 916; Mr. C. Warner, 963.
Os. Lord Tweedmouth, Feb. 23, 1033; Earl Spencer, 1064.

Defects in, and Disadvantages of.
Os. Lord Tweedmouth, Feb. 23, 1021–1023; Earl Roberts, 1035; Earl of Donoughmore, 1057.
Os. Sir A. Hayter, Feb. 23, 1118.

Flash emitted by.
Os. Mr. Hunt, Feb. 23, 1162.

Genesis of.
O. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1186.

Army—cont.

Rifles—cont.

New—cont.

Infantry and Navy, Unsuitability of the Rifle for, alleged.
O. Sir H. Seton-Karr, Feb. 22, 953.
Os. Lord Tweedmouth, Feb. 23, 1019, 1034; Earl of Erroll, 1043–1045.
Os. Earl of Donoughmore, Feb. 23, 1050, 1058, 1059; Lord Lansdowne, 1066–1069; Earl of Selborne, 1069.

"M. D. Cordite," Use of.
O. Earl of Donoughmore, Feb. 23, 1054.

Merits of, Compared with long-barrelled Rifle.
Os. Sir H. Seton-Karr, Feb. 22, 954–956; Sir C. Rasch, 960.

Military Opinion v. Sporting Opinion.
Os. Earl of Donoughmore, Feb. 23, 1046–1048; Earl Spencer, 1063.

Mounted Troops—Facilities for carrying Rifle, Progress made with.
Os. Lord Tweedmouth, Feb. 23, 1024–1027; Earl Roberts, 1034.
Os. Earl of Wemyss, Feb. 23, 1060.

Muzzle velocity of.
Os. Lord Tweedmouth, Feb. 23, 1029, 1030; Earl of Donoughmore, 1054, 1055.

Necessity for re-arming the Cavalry, Advantages of the long Rifle, etc.
Os. Earl of Wemyss, Feb. 23, 1059–1061.

Orders, Cancellation of, proposed.
O. Marquess of Lansdowne, Feb. 23, 1066, 1069; Lord Tweedmouth, 1070.

Patterson Equipment, Advantages of.
Os. Lord Tweedmouth, Feb. 23, 1026; Earl Roberts, 1034.

Range of.
Os. Lord Tweedmouth, Feb. 23, 1030; Earl of Donoughmore, 1055.

Recoil, Strength of.
Os. Earl of Donoughmore, Feb. 23, 1053; Earl Spencer, 1035.

[cont.

Army—cont.
- Rifles—cont.
  - New—cont.
    - Responsibility of the War Office for.
      - Os. Earl of Londsdale, Feb. 23, 1046; Marquess of Lansdowne, 1069.
    - Rifling of, Alterations in.
      - O. Lord Tweedmouth, Feb. 23, 1029.
    - Sights of, Merits and Demerits of.
      - Os. Lord Tweedmouth, Feb. 23, 1020, 1028, 1029; Earl of Donoughmore, 1056; Earl Spencer, 1064.
      - Os. Mr. Hunt, Feb. 23, 1162.
    - Snap-shooting, Alleged Advantages for.
      - Os. Lord Tweedmouth, Feb. 23, 1027, 1028.
    - Testing of, Details as to.
      - Os. Sir H. Seton-Karr, Feb. 22, 954.
      - Os. Lord Tweedmouth, Feb. 23, 1031, 1032; Earl Roberts, 1038–1042; Earl of Donoughmore, 1051–1053.
      - O. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1186, 1187.
    - Trial of Short Rifle—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 46, 88.
    - Weight of.
      - Os. Lord Tweedmouth, Feb. 23, 1027; Earl of Donoughmore, 1049.
  - Old Pattern, Conversion of.
    - Os. Marquess of Lansdowne, Earl of Donoughmore, Feb. 23, 1069.
- Roberts, Earl, Circumstances of Withdrawal of, from Post of Commander-in-Chief.
  - Os. Mr. W. Churchill, Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1198.
- Savings Banks—Accounts Presented, Feb. 16, 282, 298; Feb. 20, 542, 581.
- Soldiers.
  - Discharged—Disposal of clothing for, price given, etc.
    - Q. Sir E. Strachey; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 28, 1449.
  - Thrift among, Encouragement of—System adopted in the United States.
    - Q. Sir H. Vincent; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 24, 1214, 1215.
- Staff, Reduction of, proposed.
  - O. Mr. C. Warner, Feb. 22, 963.
- Territorial Battalions, Establishment of, proposed.
  - Os. Duke of Bedford, Feb. 21, 726, 728, 729, 730; Viscount Hardinge, 738.

Army—cont.
- Three years service system, Failure of, alleged.
  - Os. Captain Jessel, Feb. 23, 1152, 1153; Mr. Arnold-Forster, 1175.
- Uniforms, Changes in, Return as to cost of.
  - Q. Mr. C. Hobhouse; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 21, 764–768.

Army Act
- Rules of Procedure—Amendments Presented, Feb. 14, 46, 87.

Army Council
- Duties—Order in Council, Presented, Feb. 14, 46, 87.

Army Estimates
- Supplementary, Presented, Feb. 23. 1072.
  - Amounts of (1873–1904)—Return ordered, Feb. 21, 755.

Arnold-Forster, Rt. Hon. H. O.—Secretary of State for War [Belfast, W.]
- Africa, South, Garrison in—Sale of stores by Col. Morgan alleged, Feb. 28, 1470.
- Altcar Rifle Range, Closing of, Protest against, Feb. 28, 1470.
- Army Service Corps, Additions to, Feb. 23, 1173.
- Artillery.
  - Additions to, Feb. 23, 1173.
  - Armament, Provision for Expenditure on, Feb. 23, 1091.
- Barracks, Expenditure on, and Progress of Works, Feb. 23, 1171.
- Bloemfontein, Fire in military stores at, Feb. 28, 1469.
- Cavalry—Adoption of Patterson Equipment, Feb. 22, 891.
- China, British Troops in—Shooting of Private Mahon, Feb. 20, 594, 595.
- Continuous changes of policy, Disastrous effect of, alleged, Feb. 23, 1169.
- Duke of York's School—Disposal of Chelsea Site, Feb. 17, 472.
- Engineers, Royal, Additions to, Feb. 23, 1173.
- Expenditure.
  - Increase in, Feb. 23, 1172, 1174.
  - Reduction to be effected under Reform proposals, Feb. 20, 595.
- Guns.
  - Fuse-setters, Automatic, Decision as to, Feb. 20, 593.
  - Mark I. guns, Date of issue of, Number of batteries armed with, etc., 593.
  - Quick-firing.
    - Changes in wagons, etc., Necessity for, Feb. 28, 1450.
    - Delay in provision of, alleged, Feb. 23, 1184, 1185.
    - European armament of, Feb. 23, 1184.

Arnold-Forster, Rt. Hon H. O.—cont.

- Horses—Epizootic Lymphangitis outbreak at Waterford, Feb. 23, 1087, 1088.
- Highland Light Infantry, Brigading of, Feb. 28, 1451.
- Indian Army—Patterson Equipment for Cavalry, Feb. 22, 891.
- Inefficiency of the Army—Unsuitability to the needs of the Empire, alleged, Feb. 23, 1169, 1174, 1183.
- Infantry, Additions to, Feb. 23, 1173.
- King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 23, 1122, 1168–1191.
- Medical College, Progress made with, Feb. 23, 1172.
- Medical Department, Additions to, Feb. 23, 1173.
- Militia.
  - Foreign Service for, Proposals as to, Feb. 23, 1176.
  - Officers.
    - Mess subscription on transfer from Army, Feb. 23, 1084.
    - Uniform, Right to Wear, on Abolition of Battalions, proposed, Feb. 22, 889.
  - Reorganisation Proposals, Feb. 23, 1176, 1177.
  - Strength of, Feb. 23, 1091.
- Mowat Programme, Completion of, Feb. 23, 1173.
- Nine Years Service, Proposals as to, Feb. 23, 11.5, 1176.
- Officers.
  - Mess Subscriptions on Transfer to Militia, Feb. 23, 1084.
  - Shortage of, Feb. 23, 1188.
- Orange River Colony, Cost of Garrison in, Feb. 20, 595.
- Pay—Statement available for Recruits, proposed, Feb. 22, 888.
- Recruiting and Enlistment.
  - New Terms of Enlistment, Progress made under, Feb. 23, 1084.
  - Pay and Conditions of Service, Statement Available for Recruits, proposed, Feb. 22, 888.
- Re-organisation Proposals, Feb. 23, 1170, 1189–1191.
  - Expenditure, Reduction to be effected in, Feb. 20, 595.
- Reserve, Increase in, Feb. 23, 1174, 1176.
- Rifles.
  - New Pattern, Feb. 23, 1185–1187.
    - Commander-in-Chief, Sanction and Approval of, Feb. 20, 593.
- Roberts, Earl, Circumstances of withdrawal of, from Post of Commander-in-Chief, Feb. 23, 1198.
- Ross-shire Regiments, Depôt for, at Dingwall, proposed, Feb. 23, 1091.

Arnold-Forster, Rt. Hon. H. O.—cont.

- Soldiers.
  - Discharged, Clothing for—Disposal, Price given, etc., Feb. 28, 1449.
  - Thrift, Encouragement of, among—System adopted in United States, Feb. 24, 1215.
- Somaliland, Troops stationed in, etc., Feb. 27, 1298; Feb. 28, 1468.
- South African War—Sentences on Military Convicts, Feb. 21, 770; Feb. 23, 1088, 1089; Feb. 28, 1449.
- Three Years System, Working of, Feb. 23, 1175.
- Transvaal.
  - Garrison in, Cost of, Feb. 20, 595.
  - Stores, Sale of, by Colonel Morgan, alleged, Feb. 23, 1086.
- Uniform, Changes in, and Cost of, Return as to, Feb. 21, 764–768.
- Volunteers.
  - Camp Allowances, Possibility of Increasing, Feb. 23, 1182.
  - Division of, into Two Classes, proposed, Feb. 23, 1181.
  - Grants to.
    - Increase in, proposed, Feb. 23, 1181.
    - System of, Feb. 28, 1471.
  - Metropolitan Regiments, Strength of, etc., Feb. 20, 590.
  - Mounted Infantry—Continuance of Grant, Feb. 22, 888.
  - Reduction in Number and Improvement in Efficiency, proposed, Feb. 23, 1179, 1182.
  - Shooting, Facilities for, Provision of Ranges, etc., Feb. 23, 1181.
  - Strength of, Feb. 23, 1091.
  - Value of, as a Fighting Force, Feb. 23, 1178, 1183.
- War Office.
  - Clerks, Retirement of, Feb. 20, 583.
  - Re-organisation of, Progress made with, Feb. 23, 1170, 1171.
- Yeomanry.
  - Ammunition Allowances, Feb. 28, 1467
  - Reduction in Number of, Feb. 23, 1122.

Art, Royal College of see Science and Art, Royal College of.

Artillery

see under Army.

Arsenical Poisoning

- Royal Commission on—Adoption of Recommendations of.
  - Q. Sir C. Quilter; A. Mr. W. Long, Feb. 28, 1458.

Ashton, Mr. T. G. [Beds., Luton]
- Sugar—Working of Brussels Convention, Feb. 28, 1550–1556.

Asquith, Rt. Hon. H. H. [Fife, E.]
- Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in—Policy of the Government, Date of Appeal to the Country, etc., Feb. 15, 183–190.
- King's Speech, Address in Answer, Feb. 15, 178–190, 201; Feb. 22, 998–1003.
- MacDonnell, Sir A., Conditions of Appointment of, as Under-Secretary for Ireland, Feb. 22, 998–1003.
- Unionist Party, Continuance of, in Office, Lessons of the Bye-Elections, etc., Feb. 15, 179–182.

Assam
- Excise Administration—Papers Presented, Feb. 14, 45, 83.
- Tea Plantations, Vernacular Education of Children on.
  - Q. Sir M. Bhownaggree; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 27, 1303, 1304.

Assizes
- Ireland—Winter Assizes—Orders in Council Presented, Feb. 14, 58, 94.

Atkinson, Rt. Hon. J.—Attorney-General for Ireland [Londonderry, N.]
- Caldbeck Estate, Sale of, Feb. 28, 1488.
- Drumlish, Seizure of Cattle at, Feb. 27, 1324.
- Dundrum Lunatic Asylum—Dismissal of Shoemaker, Feb. 28, 1486, 1487.
- Kerry County Council Auditor, Complaint as to, Feb. 28, 1488.
- Local Government Board—Public Bodies Order, 1904, Opposition to, Feb. 28, 1489.
- Local Government (Ireland) Amendment Act, 1902, Repeal of Clause 6, Feb. 28, 1490.
- Longford County.
  - Constabulary Removals, Cost of, etc., Feb. 28, 1485.
  - Extra Police for, Charge for, Stopped out of Agricultural Grant, Feb. 27, 1323.
  - Magistracy, Appointments to, Feb. 28, 1485.
- Riverstown Petty Sessions—Action of Crown Solicitor in Advising Police not to act on Warrants issued by the Bench, Feb. 27, 1344, 1345.
- Swine Fever—Refusal of Dr. Gibbon to slaughter Herd, etc., Feb. 28, 1467.

Attorney-General
- Sir R. B. Finlay.

Attorney-General for Ireland
- Rt. Hon. J. Atkinson.

Australia
- Deceased Wife's Sister, Marriage with—Letter asking for Legislation.
  - Q. Mr. Jas. O'Connor; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 20, 620.
- Duty on Price Lists, etc., Sent to.
  - Q. Mr. Runciman; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 23, 1085.
- Mail Service—Terms of New Contract.
  - Qs. Sir M. Bhownaggree, Mr. C. Wason; As. Lord Stanley, Feb. 28, 1479, 1480.

Austria-Hungary
- Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 39, 40.

Avondale Estate
- Grazing Lands, Protest against Letting of.
  - Q. Mr. J. O'Connor; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 16, 321, 322.

Axminster and Lyme Regis Light Railway (Further Capital Powers)
- Order Presented, Feb. 14, 50, 84.

Aylesbury Gas Bill
- c. 1r.* Feb. 20, 564.

Ayrshire
- Motor Traffic Regulations.
  - Q. Mr. C. Wason; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 20, 605, 606.

Bagdad Railway
- Progress made with Construction of, etc.
  - Q. Mr. R. Lucas; A. Earl Percy, Feb. 23, 1076, 1077.

Bahamas
- Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 42, 90.

Bahia
- Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 39.

Bahr-el-Ghazal
- see under Soudan.

Baker Street and Waterloo Railway Bill
- c. 1r.* Feb. 20, 564.

Balcarres, Lord [Lancashire, Chorley]
- Green Park—Information as to new pathway, Feb. 20, 603, 604; Feb. 22, 899, 900.
- Mall to Charing Cross new roadway, Plans etc., of, Feb. 20, 582.
- Parliament—House of Commons, Ventilation, Progress made with improvemen in, Feb. 22, 883.

Balfour, Rt. Hon. A. J.—Prime Minister and First Lord of the Treasury [Manchester, E.]
- Afghanistan, Relations of, with the Indian Government, Feb. 14, 154.
- Blocking Notices, Amendment of Standing Order as to, Feb. 27, 1340, 1341.
- Contracts, Government, Decentralisation of, Proposed, Feb. 27, 1339.

[cont.

Balfour, Rt. Hon. A. J.—cont.

- Deceased Wife's Sister Bill—Australian Commonwealth letter asking for Legislation, Feb. 20, 620.
- Dogger Bank Fishing Fleet, Protection of, during passage of third Baltic Fleet, Feb. 22, 890.
- Education—Meals for Underfed Children, Feb. 22, 908, 909.
- Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in, Feb. 14, 163–166; Feb. 16, 410–424.
    - Conservative Free-Trade Members and Candidates, Position of, Feb. 16, 416–419.
- India, Secretary of State for—Placing Salary on Estimates, Proposed, Feb. 17, 470.
- Ireland.
    - Administration of, Commission of Inquiry into, Proposed, Feb. 27, 1297.
    - Aliens, Influx of—Evidence before the Commission, Feb. 28, 1491, 1492.
    - Chief Secretaryship—Method of making appointment, Feb. 27, 1334, 1335.
    - Dunraven Devolution Scheme.
        - Lord-Lieutenant, Views of, Feb. 27, 1329,
        - MacDonnell, Sir A., Attitude of, Feb. 21, 853–866.
    - Lord-Lieutenant, Resignation of Office by, Feb. 23, 1109, 1110.
    - MacDonnell, Sir A.
        - Appointment of.
            - Conditions of, Feb. 22, 903, 906, 991–996.
            - Letter from Prime Minister to Chief Secretary Approving of, Tabling, Feb. 28, 1491.
        - Correspondence with Chief Secretary, Tabling, Feb. 22, 904.
        - Dunraven Devolution Scheme, attitude towards, Feb. 21, 853–866.
        - Term of Office, Feb. 22, 904.
    - Roman Catholic University question, Attitude of the Government towards, Feb. 27, 1328.
- Judge-Advocate-General—Discharge of Duties, Feb. 16, 328.
- King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 14, 153–168; Feb. 15, 182; Feb. 16, 410–424; Feb. 21, 792, 793, 853–866; Feb. 22, 991–996; Feb. 27, 1392–1395.
    - Proceedings on, to have precedence, Feb. 21, 782.
- Macedonia, Condition of, Progress of reforms, etc., Feb. 27, 1392–1395.
- Marine Insurance [Codification] Bill, Introduction of, Feb. 28, 1491.
- Orange River Colony, Representative Institutions for.
    - Delay in granting, Feb. 14, 155.
    - Discussion, Opportunity for Feb. 23, 1094-1096.
- Parliament, Date of summoning, Feb. 14, 157.
- Parliamentary Elections—Interference of Peers, Feb. 14, 67, 74.
- Physical Deterioration Committee Report, Opportunity for discussing, in Parliament, Feb. 23, 1094.
- Revenue and Expenditure—System of Accounts, Commission of Inquiry into, proposed, Feb. 27, 1297.
- Ritualistic Practices, Commission on—Date of publication of Report, Feb. 21, 780.
- Scotland, Secretary for, Company directorships held by, Feb. 16, 329.
- Sugar—Operation of Brussels Convention, Feb. 14, 156–159.
- Tibet Expedition.
    - Cost of—Imperial Exchequer Contribution, proposed, Feb. 17, 469.
    - Policy of the Government, Feb. 14, 154.
- Transvaal.
    - Chinese labour, Importation of, Results of Experiment, etc., Feb. 14, 155, 156.
    - Representative institutions for, Feb. 14, 155.
        - Discussion in the House, Opportunity for, Feb. 23, 1094–1096; Feb. 27, 1312–1314, 1340.
- Turkey—Import Duties, Request for Increase of—Application of Surplus, etc., Feb. 27, 1338.
- Unionist Party, Continuance of, in Office, Feb. 14, 159–163.
- Warsaw, Alleged shooting of workmen at—Protest by British Government, proposed, Feb. 22, 908.

Balfour, Rt. Hon. G. W.—President of the Board of Trade [Leeds, Central]

- Aliens, Criminal, in United States—Number sentenced and number prohibited from landing, etc., Feb. 22, 897.
- Cattle, Transit Facilities for, Improvement in, Use of Patent Humane Car, etc., Feb. 27, 1302.
- Ireland—Lough Foyle—Erection of buoy on Tuns Bank, Feb. 24, 1211.
- King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 27, 1406; Feb. 28, 1542, 1570–1579.

[cont.

Balfour, Rt. Hon. G. W.—cont.
- Lights and Lighthouses.
  - Foreign, Maintenance of, Defrayed by Great Britain, Feb. 27, 1316.
  - Lighthouse Fund, General—Date of presenting accounts, Feb. 27, 1301.
  - Lightships—Wireless telegraphy apparatus, progress made with installation of, Feb. 16, 300.
- Merchant Shipping.
  - Boy Sailor Scheme.
    - Expiration of, Arrangements to be made on, Feb. 28, 1482, 1483.
    - Number enrolled, amount allowed for, etc., Feb. 27, 1302; Feb. 28, 1482.
  - Seamen, Sending home, Payment of cost of, Feb. 28, 1452.
- Railway.
  - Electrification of—Board of Trade Inspection, Feb. 21, 777.
  - Engines, Tank, with passenger trains—Return as to accidents, proposed, Feb. 22, 897.
  - Rates and Transit Facilities for Foreign Produce, Inquiry as to, proposed, Feb. 21, 756.
- Sugar.
  - Beet and Cane—Information as to amount produced, Feb. 28, 1461.
  - Brazil—Exclusion proposed by Brussels Convention, value of imports to United Kingdom, etc., Feb. 20, 583.
  - Brussels Convention.
    - Appeal under Article VII., Information as to, Feb. 16, 309.
    - Cuban Sugar, decision as to, Feb. 16, 313, 314.
    - Dominican Sugar, decision as to, Feb. 16, 312, 313.
    - Prohibition of Importation, Regulation as to, Feb. 16, 311.
    - Russian Sugar.
      - Exports of, to United Kingdom, Feb. 27, 1406, 1420, 1422; Feb. 28, 1574, 1575.
      - Removal of prohibition against, proposed, Feb. 16, 310.
    - Working of, Feb. 28, 1570–1579.
  - Imports in 1904—Information as to, Feb. 28, 1460.
  - Price of, in Great Britain, Argentina, and on the Continent, Feb. 28, 1459.
- Tea Industry—Russian Duty on Indian Tea, Feb. 20, 601.

Balfour of Burleigh, Lord
- Committees, Decision as to Chairmanship of.
  - Os. Marquess of Lansdowne, Earl Spencer, Feb. 16, 287, 289.
- Military Training for youths, Necessity of, Feb. 20, 557.

Balkan States
- Armenia, see that title.
- Austro-Russian Reform proposals.
  - References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 2.
    - Os. Marquess of Winchester, Feb. 14, 7; Earl Spencer, 20; Marquess of Lansdowne, 31.
- Condition of.
  - Os. Marquess of Winchester, Feb. 14, 7; Marquess of Lansdowne, 29, 30; Mr. Mount, 111.
  - References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14., 2.
- Macedonia, see that title.

Ballyhaunis
- Dispensary District, Maternity Nurse for. Qs. Mr. J. O'Donnell; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 23, 1081, 1082.

Ballymena
- Urban County District—Order Presented, Feb. 14, 58, 95.

Baltic Fleet
- North Sea Incident, see under North Sea—British Trawlers.

Banbury, Sir F. G. [Camberwell, Peckham]
- Animals, Experiments on — Supply of Cats—Brockwell Hall Case, etc., Feb. 23, 1074.

Bangor, Bishop of
- Introduced to the House of Lords, Feb. 14, 5.

Bangor (County Down) Water and Improvement Bill
- l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
- 2R.* Feb. 21, 721.

Banking (Ireland)
- Statistics Presented, Feb. 14, 48, 86.

Bankruptcy
- Rules Presented, Feb. 20, 542, 582.

Banks
- England, Bank of.
  - Accounts and Returns Presented, Feb. 14, 56, 103, 108.
  - Advances to Government, Application for, Presented, Feb. 20, 542 582.

Barbados
Military Establishment, Reduction in, Q. Mr. Buchanan; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 23, 1073.
Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 43, 90.

Barlinnie Prison
Visiting Committee, Rules for, Presented, Feb. 28, 1447.

Barra, Island of Naval Reserve Battery, Delay in erection of. Q. Mr. J. Dewar; A. Mr. Pretyman, Feb. 28, 1468.

Barry Railway Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 24, 1205.

Bartley, Sir G. C. T. [Islington, N.]
Blocking Notices, Amendment of Standing Order as to, Feb. 27, 1341.
Income Tax Collection, Date of, Operation of new rule, etc., Feb. 20, 598.

Basutoland
Educational System—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 47, 88.
Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 43, 90.

Bayley, Mr. T. [Derbyshire, Chesterfield]
Postmen, Wages of—Tabling Bradford Committee Correspondence, proposed, Feb. 16, 298.
Somaliland Expedition, Cost of—Date of Presentation of Supplementary Estimates, Feb. 21, 774.
Transvaal.
Labour.
Chinese—Number of Labourers, Death Rate, number in hospital, etc., Feb. 21, 771.
Native—Death rate, Feb. 21, 771.
White, Discharged from mines, Feb. 23, 1093.
Loan—Date of issue of first instalment, Feb. 22, 892.

Bechuanaland Protectorate
Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 43, 90.

Beck, Adolf, case of Committee Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 51, 81.

Bedford, Duke of
Army Re-organisation Proposals, Feb. 21, 725-737.
Militia Re-organisation Proposals, Feb. 21, 725-737.

Belfast
Constabulary Doctors, Allocation of work among.
Q. Mr. Sloan; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 614, 615.
Post Office.
Learners.
Application for transfer by.
Q. Mr. Sloan; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 24, 1210, 1211.
School attendance of.
Q. Mr. Sloan; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 20, 585.
Medical Officer, Duties of.
Q. Mr. Sloan; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 24, 1211.
Memorial from Employees, Preparation of.
Q. Mr. Sloan; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 20, 584, 585.
Water Commissioners—Award as to land acquired near Carrickfergus.
Q. Colonel McCalmont; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1305, 1306.

Belgium
Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 39; Feb. 17, 431.

Bell, Mr. R. [Derby]
Postal Telegraph Clerks' Association, Official dissuasion of clerks from joining, alleged, Feb. 22, 884.
Railways—Tank Engines with Passenger Trains—Return as to Accidents, proposed, Feb. 22, 897.
Transvaal.
Chinese Labour—Venereal Diseases among Coolies, Feb. 16, 306.
White Labour in Mines, Proportion of, Feb. 16, 306.

Berkshire
Navy Recruiting Notice Posted in, Authority for.
Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. A. Lee, Feb. 16, 304, 305.
Polling Districts, Order altering, Presented, Feb. 14, 60, 97.

Bermuda
Military and Naval Works, Expenditure on.
Q. Mr. Buchanan; A. Mr. V. Cavendish, Feb. 21, 758.
Military Establishment, Reduction in.
Q. Mr. Buchanan; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 23, 1073.

"Berwick," H.M.S.
Flogging of Boys on.
Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. Pretyman, Feb. 28, 1468, 1469.

Beverley
Motor-cars, Regulations as to, Presented, Feb. 16, 284, 298.

Bhownaggree, Sir M. M. [Bethnal Green, N.E.]
Clocks, Public, Maintenance of, by Local Authorities, Feb. 23, 1102.
India.
Mineral Deposits in Central Provinces, Information as to, Feb. 23, 1097.
Tea Plantations, Vernacular Education of Children on, Feb. 27, 1303.
Mail Service, Australian—Terms of New Contract, Feb. 28, 1479.
Sydney, Conviction of Lascar Seamen at, Feb. 28, 1473, 1474.

Bideford, Westward Ho and Appledore Light Railway
Order Presented, Feb. 14, 49, 84.

Bills
Ballot for, Sessional Order and Motion (Mr. A. J. Balfour), Feb. 15, 177, 178.
Introduction into House of Commons, Transmission to House of Lords, etc., Dates of—Return Ordered, Feb. 16, 291.
Scotland—Introduction under Private Legislation Procedure Act, Application of Section 16, etc, Feb. 16, 285, 297.
Unopposed Bill Committees, Selection of Panel for, Feb. 28, 1492.

Birmingham
Bishopric of—Order in Council Presented, Feb. 14, 63, 100.

Birmingham Corporation Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 564.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1294.

Births
Scotland—Annual Report Presented, Feb.14, 51, 89.

Bishopric of Bristol Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 16, 285.
2R., Feb. 21, 724.

Bishop's Stortford College
Kitchener, Mr., Dismissal of.
Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Sir W. Anson, Feb. 28, 1461, 1462.

Blackpool
Motor Cars, Index Marks for—Regulation Presented, Feb. 16, 284, 298.

Blackpool Improvement Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 21, 721.

Blackpool, St. Anne's, and Lytham Tramways Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.

Black Rod, Gentleman Usher of Stephenson, Sir H. F., Appointment of, Feb. 14, 1.

Blake, Mr. E. [Longford, S.]
Administration of Ireland—Home Rule Question, etc., Feb. 21, 866–876.
MacDonnell, Sir A., Conditions of Appointment of, as Under-Secretary, Feb. 22, 907.

Blocking Notices
see under Parliamentary Procedure.

Board of Trade
see Trade, Board of.

Bolton Corporation Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 564.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1294.

Bond, Mr. E. [Nottingham, E.]
Macedonia, Condition of, Progress of Reforms, etc., Feb. 27, 1366.

Bootle Corporation Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 565.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1294

Borneo
Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Borstal Prison
Visiting Committee—Rules Presented, Feb. 21, 722, 753; Feb. 22, 881.

Bosnia
Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Bourke, Isadore, Estate of Grazing Farms, Distribution of.
Q. Mr. J. O'Donnell; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 23, 1079, 1080.

Bowles, Mr. T. G. [Lynn Regis]
Afghanistan, British Mission to, Feb. 23, 1096.
Blocking Notices, Amendment of Standing Order as to, Feb. 27, 1341.
Commerce and Industry, Ministry of, Proposed Establishment of, Feb. 14, 150.
Electoral Areas, Redistribution of, Feb. 14, 147.
Fiscal Policy of the Government, Definition of, Feb. 14, 150–152.
Green Park—Information as to New Pathway, Feb. 20, 603, 604; Feb. 22, 899, 900.
Income Tax Collection, Date of, Operation of New Rule, etc., Feb. 20, 600.
King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 14, 147–152.
Proceedings on—Opportunity for Discussion of Amendments, Feb. 21, 781.
Lighthouses, Foreign, Maintained at the Cost of the British Government, Feb. 27, 1316.

[cont.

Bowles, Mr. T. G.—cont.

National Debt—Information as to Unfunded Debt, Feb. 16, 314, 315.

Navy.

Battleships, Obsolete, Number of, and Cost of Repairs to—Return proposed, Feb. 21, 770.

"Enchantress" Admiralty Yacht, Cost of Alterations to, etc., Feb. 22, 890.

Flogging in—Information as to Return, Feb. 27, 1312.

North Sea Incident—Commission of Inquiry, Appointment of, Feb. 14, 148.

Pacific Cable, Cost of, Recovery of Colonial Contribution to, Feb. 16, 314.

Revenue and Expenditure—Accounts, Commission of Inquiry into System of, proposed, Feb. 27, 1297.

Russo-Japanese War.

"Knight Commander," Sinking of, by Russian Cruiser, Feb. 14, 148.

Lessons of, Feb. 14, 148.

Savings Bank, Post Office—Omission of Deficiency from Finance Account, Feb. 23, 1099.

South African War, Colonial Contribution towards Cost of—Provision for Payment, Feb. 16, 315–317.

Sugar.

Brussels Convention—Regulation as to Prohibition of Importation, Feb. 16, 311.

Imports in 1904, Information as to, Feb. 28, 1460.

Price of, in Great Britain, Argentina, and on the Continent, Feb. 28, 1459.

Tibet Expedition—Policy of the Government, etc., Feb. 14, 149.

Transvaal War Loan—First Instalment, Date of issue of, Feb. 20, 601; Feb. 22, 892.

Turkey—Import Duties, Request for Increase of—Application of Surplus, etc., Feb. 27, 1337.

Vaccination Exemption Certificates, Procedure in Granting, Feb. 23, 1101.

Brackenhill Light Railway (Extension of Time)

Order Presented, Feb. 14, 50, 84.

Brandon, Duke of

Sat first in Parliament after the Death of his Kinsman, Feb. 27, 1273.

Brandy

British, Import Duty on, in the United States.

Qs. Sir E. Sassoon; As. Earl Percy, Feb. 16, 310.

Brazil

Exports and Imports to and from United Kingdom.

Q. Mr. Bright; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 20, 583.

Sugar—Exclusion proposed by Brussels Convention, Value of Imports to United Kingdom, etc.

Q. Mr. Bright; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 20, 583.

Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 39, 40.

Brentwood Gas Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 565.

Brewers' Licences

see under Liquor Licensing, etc.

Bridgewater Canals Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.

Bridlington

Piers and Harbour—Accounts Presented, Feb. 27, 1274, 1296.

Brigg, Mr. J. [York, W.R., Keighley]

Agriculture, State of, Depopulation of Rural Districts, etc., Feb. 24, 1250, 1251.

Bright, Mr. A. H. [Shropshire, Oswestry]

Agriculture, Condition of, Feb. 24, 1242–1245.

Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in, Feb. 16, 381.

Navy.

Rosyth Base, Expenditure on, Feb. 23, 1086.

Wei-hai-Wei Station, Expenditure on, Feb. 28, 1452.

Sugar—Brazil—Exclusion proposed by Brussels Convention, Value of Imports United Kingdom, etc., Feb. 20, 583.

Unionist Party, Continuance of, in Office, Feb. 16, 380.

Workhouse Accounts, Simplification of, Feb. 27, 1319.

Bristol, Bishop of

Bishopric of Bristol Bill, 2R., Feb. 21, 724.

Bristol Blind Asylum Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.

Bristol Corporation Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 565.

British Museum

Grant-in-Aid—Trustees' Report Presented, Feb. 28, 1446.

British Protectorate Neutrality (Amendment) Order in Council

Presented, Feb. 14, 62, 102.

British South Africa Company
see Chartered Company of South Africa.

Broderick, Rt. Hon. St. John—Secretary of State for India [Surrey, Guildford]
- Aden Frontier Force, Casualities in, and Rewards to, etc., Feb. 22, 893.
- Administration—Separation of Judicial and Executive functions, Feb. 23, 1073.
- Afghanistan, British Mission to, Feb. 16, 307; Feb. 23, 1096.
- Army.
  - Reorganisation of—Proposals of Lord Kitchener, Feb. 28, 1465.
  - Roman Catholic Chaplains, Position of, Feb. 23, 1098.
- Bengal Excise Bill—Views of Indian Government , etc., Feb. 27, 1315.
- urmah, Medical Service in, Feb. 17, 471.
- Cancer, Statistics as to, Feb. 21, 773.
- Curzon, Lord, Position and Functions of, during residence in Great Britain, Feb. 28, 1476.
- Dir, Information as to, Subsidy received by Khan, etc., Feb. 20, 587.
- Forest Service, Instruction for, Feb. 28, 1465.
- Irrigation Schemes, Information as to, Feb. 23, 1078.
- Mineral Deposits in Central Provinces, Information as to, Feb. 23, 1097.
- National Congress Resolutions, Refusal of Copy of, by Viceroy, alleged, Feb. 16, 308.
- Police, Commission on—Date of Tabling Report, Feb. 16, 302, 307.
- Post Office—Aden-Bombay service, Conditions of work in, Feb. 21, 761.
- Railway from Bombay to Sind viâ Cutch, progress made with, Feb. 21, 760.
- Salt Tax, reduction of, proposed, Feb. 23, 1078.
- Tea,
  - Indian and Cingalese, Russian import Duty on, Feb. 24, 1212.
  - Plantations, Vernacular education of Children on, Feb. 27, 1303.
- Tibet Expedition, Expenditure on, Feb. 16, 306, 307.
- Tilak, Mr., Case of—Tabling Report of Mr. Brewin, proposed, Feb. 16, 301.

Brompton, Chatham, Gillingham, and Rochester Water Bill.
c. 1R.Feb. 20*, 565.

Brussels.
Sugar Convention, see under Sugar.

Bryce, Rt. Hon. J. [Aberdeen, S.]
- King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 27, 1385–1392, 1393; Feb. 28, 1515–1521, 1525.
- Macedonia, Condition of, Progress of Reform Schemes, etc., Feb. 27, 1385–1392.
- Sugar—Working of Brussels Convention, Effect on prices, etc., Feb. 28, 1515–1521.
- Tibet Expedition, Expenditure on, Feb. 16, 306.
- Transvaal, Representative institutions for, discussion of, Feb. 23, 1096; Feb. 27, 1313.

Buchanan, Mr. T. R. [Perthshire, E.]
- Africa, South.
  - Intercolonial Council Railway Department, Alterations in, Feb. 22, 892, 893.
  - Railways, Expenditure on purchase of Feb. 27, 1311.
    - Total Amount paid under Loan Act of 1903, Feb. 21, 769.
- Army.
  - Artillery re-armament, Expenditure on, Provision for, etc., Feb. 23, 1091.
  - Mowat Committee Report, Abstract of—Date of publication, Feb. 21, 759.
- Canada.
  - Cattle, Removal of restrictions on importation into United Kingdom, Canadian opinion, etc., Feb. 16, 319, 320, Feb. 22, 898.
  - Halifax and Esquimault, Cost of defences of, etc., Feb. 27, 1299.
- Indian Army, Reorganisation of—Proposals of Lord Kitchener, Feb. 28, 1465.
- National Debt—Amount of Unfunded Debt, Feb. 15, 176.
- Navy—Obsolete Battleships, Number of, and cost of repairs to—Return proposed, Feb. 21, 770.
- Orange River Colony—Revenue, Information as to, Feb. 20, 591.
- Somaliland, Troops stationed in, etc., Feb. 27, 1298; Feb. 28, 1467.
- Tibet Expedition, Expenditure on, Feb. 16 306, 307.
- Transvaal.
  - Representative Institutions, Method of introducing, Opportunity for discussing, etc., Feb. 21, 772.
  - Revenue, Information as to, Feb. 20, 591.
- West Indies.
  - Military and Naval Works, Expenditure on, Feb. 21, 758.
  - Military Establishment, Reduction in, Feb. 23, 1073.

Buenos Ayres Grand National Tramways Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 20, 541.

Building Bye-laws
Rural District Councils, Byelaws made by—Return proposed.
Q. Mr. H. Hobhouse; A. Mr. W. Long, Feb. 23, 1076.

Building Societies' Acts
Proceedings under—Annual Report Presented, Feb. 17, 431, 469.

Bulgaria
Improvement in condition of, since emancipation from Turkey.
O. Lord E. Fitzmaurice, Feb. 27, 1359.

Burghclere, Lord
Army Reorganisation Proposals, Feb. 21, 751.
Militia—Foreign Service, Proposals as to, Feb. 21, 751.

Burmah
Medical Service, Compensation allowance for.
Q. Mr. Hemphill; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 17, 471.

Burtonport Harbour
Dredging of.
Q. Mr. H. Law; A. Mr. V. Cavendish, Feb. 24, 1212.

Business of the House
Blocking Notices, see under Parliamentary Procedure.
Course of.
Os. Mr. J. A. Pease; Sir A. Acland-Hood, Feb. 28, 1585.
King's Speech, Address in Answer, Proceedings on, to have precedence—Motion (Mr. A. J. Balfour) Feb. 21, 780.
Os. Mr. G. Bowles, Mr. Speaker, Feb. 21, 781; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 782.

Bute, County of Parliamentary Election—New Writ issued, Feb. 17, 469.

Butter
Adulteration of.
References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 5.

Butter Bill
Re-introduction of.
Os. Mr. Spear, Feb. 24, 1241, 1242.

Buxton, Mr. S. C. [Tower Hamlets, Poplar]
Green Park—Information as to new pathway, Feb. 22, 900.
King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 28, 1564–1570.
Sugar—Working of Brussels Convention, Effect on prices etc., Feb. 28, 1570.
Transvaal.
Labour Question—White labour employed in Mines, Feb. 24, 1215.
Loan—Date of issue of first instalment, Feb. 22, 892.
Representative Institutions for, etc. Feb. 23, 1095; Feb. 27, 1314.
Unemployed—Exhaustion of London Relief Fund, Provision for Additional funds, etc., Feb. 22, 896.

Caldbeck Estate
Sale of, etc.
Q. Mr. Delany; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 28, 1488.

Caldwell, Mr. J. [Lanark, Mid.]
Lords of Session, Scotland, Table of Precedence for, Feb. 20, 606.

Campbell, Mr J. [Armagh, S.]
Armagh County evicted tenants, Reinstatement of, Feb. 27, 1331.
Post Office Night Messengers, Increase in pay of, Feb. 27, 1318.

Campbell, Mr. J. H. M.—(Solicitor-General for Ireland) [Dublin University]
Dunraven Devolution Scheme, Connection of Sir A. MacDonnell with, Feb. 22, 1004.

Campbell-Bannerman, Rt. Hon. Sir H. [Stirling, Burghs
Africa, South, Settlement of, Progress made with, Feb. 14, 136.
Army Re-organisation Proposals, Feb. 14, 137, 138; Feb. 23, 1138–1143.
Blocking Notices, Amendment of Standing Order relating to, Feb. 27, 1341.
Fiscal Policy, Proposed changes in, Feb. 16, 404–410.
Appeal to the country, Date of, Feb. 14, 121, 122.
Colonial Conference, Reasons for Convening, Feb. 14, 126.
Government attitude towards proposals of Mr. Chamberlain, Feb. 14, 126–129.
Retaliation, Sugar Convention as an instance of, Feb. 14, 130–132.
Ireland, Administration of—Sir A. MacDonnell and the Dunraven Devolution Scheme, Feb. 21, 846–853.
Correspondence with Chief Secretary, Tabling, Feb. 22, 903.

[cont.

Campbell-Bannerman, Rt. Hon. Sir H.—cont.
King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 14, 120–138, 165; Feb. 16, 404–410; Feb. 21, 846–853, 864, 865; Feb. 23, 1138–1143.
Militia, Foreign Service for, proposed, Feb. 23, 1140, 1141.
Navy Reform Proposals, Feb. 14, 137.
North Sea Incident, Commission of Inquiry into, Feb. 14, 133.
Orange River Colony, Representative Institutions for, Delay in Granting, Feb. 14, 135.
Parliament.
  Date of Summoning, Feb. 14, 121, 157.
  Dissolution of, Date of, etc., Feb. 14, 122–125.
Scottish Free Church Property dispute, Feb. 14, 136.
Sugar Convention, Operation of, Feb. 14, 131-133.
  Dominican Sugar, Decision as to, Feb. 16, 313.
Tibet Expedition, Objects of, Policy of the Government, etc., Feb. 14, 134.
Trade Unions, Status of, Failure of Government to deal with, Feb. 14, 138.
Transvaal.
  Chinese labour, Importation of, Feb. 14, 136.
  Representative Institutions for, Feb. 14, 135; Feb. 27, 1313.
  War Contribution, Date of Payment of first instalment of, Feb. 14, 136.
Unemployed, Methods of dealing with Feb. 14, 138.
Unionist Party, Continuance of, in Office, Feb. 14, 123–126.

Canada
Cattle Imported into England, Repeal of Act restricting, Proposed.
  Os. Lord Willoughby de Eresby, Feb. 24, 1231, 1232; Mr. M. Ferguson, 1236, 1237.
  Canadian Opinion as to—Tabling Correspondence etc.
    Q. Mr. C. Wason; A. Mr. A. Fellowes, Feb. 27, 1320.
    Qs. Captain Donelan, Mr. Buchan, Mr. C. Wason; As. Mr. A. Fellowes, Feb. 17, 319, 320.
    Q. Sir J. Long; A. Mr. A. Fellowes, Feb. 20, 591.
    Qs. Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Kilbride; As. Mr. A. Fellowes, Feb. 22, 898, 899.
Halifax and Esquimault, Cost of defences of, Repayment by Canada, etc.
  Q. Mr. Buchanan; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 27, 1299, 1300.

Canals
Bills etc., relating to—Report on, Ordered Feb. 23, 1072; Feb. 24, 1209.

Canals Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 475.

Cancer
Colonies, Research in—Correspondence Presented, Feb. 14, 54, 91.
India, Statistics as to.
  Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 21, 772, 773.

Canterbury, Archbishop of Bishopric of Bristol Bill, 2R., Feb. 21, 724.

Canton
Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 39.

"Captain W. Menzell," ss.
Detention of—Warrant Presented, Feb. 14, 52, 93.

Cardiff Railway Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
  2.R,* Feb. 28, 1441.

Carrickfergus
Land Acquired by Belfast Water Commissioners, Award as to.
  Q. Col. M'Calmont; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1305, 1306.

Catholic Disabilities Removal Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 477.

Cattle
Canada, see that title.
Transit Facilities, Improvement in, Use of Humane Car, etc.
  Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. A. Fellowes, Feb. 21, 757, 758.
  Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 27, 1302.

Caucasus
Tea Cultivation in—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 41.

Cavendish, Mr. V. C. W. –Financial Secretary of the Treasury [Derbyshire, W.]
Civil Service Clerkships, Examinations for—Case of Mr. Percy Ludgate, Feb. 20, 619.
Customs and Excise.
  Boatmen, Alleged Grievances of, Decision as to, Feb. 21, 775.
  Excise Department—Pay for Extra Duty, Feb. 22, 884.
Inland Revenue Department—Pay for Extra Duty, Feb. 22, 884.
Ireland.
  Accounts, Public, Audit of, in Dublin, proposed, Feb. 28, 1453.
  Burtonport Harbour, Dredging of, Feb. 24, 1212.

[cont.

Cavendish, Mr. V. C. W.—cont.
Ireland—cont.
Donegal Railway System, Disposal of, Feb. 27, 1302.
Education.
National School Teachers—Administration of Pension Fund, Feb. 28, 1486.
Schools, Erection of, Plans for, etc, Feb. 22, 903.
Galway Docks, Dredging of, Feb. 28, 1466.
Inland Revenue and Post Office, Adjustment of Accounts between, Feb. 23, 1111.
Riffey River Drainage Schemes, Feb. 28, 1490.
Viceregal Lodge, Painting Work at, Feb. 27, 1335.
West Indies—Naval and Military Works, Expenditure on, Feb. 21, 758.

Cecil, Mr. E. [Aston Manor]
Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in, Feb. 15, 232–234.

Cecil, Lord H. R. H. [Greenwich]
Adjournment of Debate, Motion for, Right of Mover to speak again, Feb. 16, 330.
Dissolution, Alleged Necessity for, Feb. 16, 351.
Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in, Feb. 16 350–359.
Ireland, Administration of—Sir A. MacDonnell and the Dunraven Devolution Scheme, Feb. 20, 670–675.

Central Electric Supply Bill
l. 1r.* Feb. 20, 541.

Central London Railway Bill
c. 1r.* Feb. 20, 565.

Ceylon
Education of Coolie Children on Tea Plantations.
Qs. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 28, 1474, 1475.
Mineral Survey, Report on, presented, Feb. 14, 43, 90.
Report, Annual, presented, Feb. 14, 42, 90.
Tea, Russian Import Duty on—Retaliatory Measures, etc.
Q. Mr. Partington; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 24, 1211, 1212.

Chairman of Committees
see Committees, Chairman of.

Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. J. [Birmingham, W.]
Dissolution, Date of, Necessity for an Appeal to the Country, etc., Feb. 16, 334–339.

Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. J.—cont.
Fiscal Policy, Proposed changes in, Feb. 16, 339–350.
King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 14, 127; Feb. 16, 334–350: Feb. 27, 1424–1440.
Sugar—Working of Brussels Convention—Effect on prices, etc., Feb. 27, 1407, 1414 1424, 1427.

Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. J. A., Chancellor of the Exchequer [Worcestershire, E.]
Africa, South—Gold and diamonds imported into United Kingdom, duty on, proposed, Feb. 23, 1077.
Coal, Export duty on—information as to Remissions, Feb. 28, 1462–1464.
Fiscal Policy of the Government, date of appeal to the Country, etc., Feb. 15, 191–202.
Income Tax.
Appeals—Ignorance of taxpayer of date of hearing, Procedure in Case of, Feb. 22, 894.
Collection.
Date of, operation of new rule, etc., Feb. 20, 598–600.
Notices, authority for issuing, Feb. 16, 301.
Treasury suggestions as to expediting, etc., alleged, Feb. 23, 1077.
Uniformity of practice in England and Scotland, Issue of ten-day notices, etc., Feb. 21, 773, 774.
Exemptions—Supply of Forms to Applicants, Feb. 21, 775.
Ireland, Collection in—Non-payment by landlord and threat of distraint on tenanted land, Feb. 20, 617.
Recovery.
Goerz & Co., Messrs., decision in case of, Feb. 20, 597, 598.
Return as to, proposed, Feb. 23, 1099.
Ireland—Grants for Seed Potatoes, Feb. 16, 326.
Remission of interest on loan proposed, Feb. 20, 618, 619.
King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 15, 190–202.
National Debt—Unfunded Debt.
Amount of, Feb. 15, 176.
Information as to, Feb. 16, 315.
Pacific Cable, Cost of—recovery of Colonial contribution, Feb. 16, 314.

[cont.

Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. A. J.—cont.

Revenue and Expenditure—Deficit, provision for meeting, Feb. 28, 1477.

Solicitor's Certificate Duty, Amount received from, Feb. 27, 1303.

Somaliland Expedition, Cost of—Date of presenting Supplementary Estimates, Feb. 21, 774.

Transvaal Loan, Repayment of, Feb. 16, 315–317.

Application of sum repaid, Feb. 20, 600.

First instalment, Period for payment of, Feb. 20, 601.

Unionist Party, Continuance of, in Office, Feb. 15, 191, 192.

Chancellor of Exchequer

Rt. Hon. J. Austen Chamberlain.

Channel Ferry Railway and Quay Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 565.

Channing, Mr. F. A. [Northants, E.]

Agriculture, State of, Depopulation of rural districts, etc., Feb. 24, 1216–1227.

Charing Cross and Strand Electricity Supply Corporation Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1273.

Charing Cross, Euston, and Hampstead Railway Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 566.

Charities

Wiltshire, Return as to, Presented, Feb. 20, 582.

Chartered Company of South Africa

Capital, price of Shares, etc.
Q. Mr. Labouchere; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 17, 472.

Chartered Societies Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 22, 911.

Chelsea

Duke of York's School, see that title.

Chelsea Electricity Supply Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 566.

Chelsea Hospital

Accounts and Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 58, 103.

Chelsea and District Light Railway (Extension No. 3)

Order Presented, Feb. 14, 50, 83.

Chicago

Summer Vacation—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 41.

Chief Secretary for Ireland

Rt. Hon. G. Wyndham.

Chiengmai

Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Children

Employment of, Bye-laws as to, Progress made with Sanctioning of.
Q. Dr. Macnamara; A. Mr. A. Douglas, Feb. 28, 1481.

Tobacco and Cigarettes, Restrictions on Sale of—Legislation proposed.
Q. Dr. Macnamara; A. Mr. A. Douglas, Feb. 21, 775.

Underfed, see Education—Underfed Children.

Children's Courts Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 479.

Chile

Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 39, 40.

China

British Troops in—Shooting of Private Mahon.
Qs. Mr. S. MacNeill; As. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 20, 594, 595.

Import Duties on British Goods—Statement Presented, Feb. 14, 52, 85.

Labour Convention, Presented, Feb. 14, 44, 91.

Ssuch'uan, Province of—Report of Gen. Hosie, Presented, Feb. 14, 49, 93.

Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 39, 40

Wei-Hai-Wei, see that title.

China and Corea Order in Council

Presented, Feb. 14, 63, 101

Chorley

Polling Districts, Alteration in—Order Presented, Feb. 17, 431, 467.

Chungking

Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Church Discipline

Pledge given by the Liberal Party as to.
Q. Mr. A. Taylor, Feb. 16, 383.

Church Discipline Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 477.

Church Organisation and Discipline Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 480.

Churchill, Mr. W. L. S. [Oldham]
Adjournment of Debate, Motion for, by Mr. E. Gray, Feb. 15, 274.
Army.
Army Corps Scheme, Failure of, Feb. 23, 1195.
Continuous Changes of Policy, Disastrous Effects of, Feb. 23, 1192, 1193.
Re-organisation Proposals, Feb. 23, 1196, 1199.
Fiscal Policy—Preferential Trade with the Colonies—Terms of Motion, Feb. 27, 1343.
Ireland.
Administration of—Sir A. MacDonnell and the Devolution Scheme, etc., Feb. 20, 701–714.
Chief Secretary for, Resignation of, Feb. 28, 1586.
King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 20, 662, 701–714; Feb. 23, 1191–1200.
Roberts, Earl, Circumstances of Withdrawal of, from Post of Commander-in-Chief, Feb. 23, 1198.
Volunteers, Decrease in Numbers of, Treatment by the War Office, etc., Feb. 23, 1197.

City of London Electric Lighting Company Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1273.

City of London (Escape from Fire) Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 566.

Civil Contingencies Fund
Accounts—Copy ordered, Feb. 15, 175; Presented, Feb. 16, 296.

Civil Service
Appropriation Accounts Presented, Feb. 17, 468.
Clerkships, Examinations for—Case of Mr. Percy Ludgate.
Q. Mr T. Harrington; A. Mr. V. Cavendish, Feb. 20, 619.
Indian—Examinations, Regulations as to, Presented, Feb. 14, 61, 100.
Superannuation.
Appointment without certificate, Feb. 14, 57, 106, 107; Feb. 20, 542, 581.
Hemming, Sir A. W. L., Pension of—Minute Presented, Feb. 14, 56, 106.
Retiring Allowances granted—Minute Presented, Feb. 14, 56, 57, 104, 105.

Civil Service Estimates
Presented, Feb. 27, 1295.
Supplementary.
Amounts of (1873–1904)—Return ordered, Feb. 21, 755; Presented, Feb. 27, 1295.
Ireland—Land Commission—Presented, Feb. 28, 1448.
Presented, Feb. 22, 881.

Clacton Improvement Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2.R.* Feb. 21, 721.

Clacton-on-Sea Commissioners Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 23, 1017.

Clanricarde Estate
Evictions and reinstatements.
Q. Mr. Roche; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1326.

Clay Cross Railway (Abandonment) Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 566.

Clinton, Lord
Sat first in Parliament after the death of his father, Feb. 14, 5.

Clocks, Public
Maintenance, Powers of local authorities as to.
Q. Sir M. Bhownaggree; A. Mr. W. Long, Feb. 23, 1102.

Closing of Licensed Premises (Christmas Day) (Ireland) Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 28, 1494.

Clyde Navigation Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 24, 1205.
2R.* Feb. 28, 1441.

Clyde Navigation (Reconstitution) Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 28, 1441.

Coagh
Nationalist procession, Prevention of.
Q. Mr. Doogan; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 24, 1214.

Coal
Export Duty on—Information as to Remissions.
Q. Sir W. Plummer; A. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 28, 1462–1464.
Resources of the United Kingdom—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 53, 81.

Coal Mines

Electricity in—Publication, etc., of Rules Q. Mr. J. Ellis; A. Mr. A. Douglas, Feb. 16, 299.

Coal Mines Employment Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 473.

Coal Mines (Weighing of Minerals) Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 473.

Cohen, Mr. B. L. [Islington, E.]

Fiscal Policy, Proposed changes in, Feb. 14, 226–229.

Ireland—Administration of, Question of Home Rule, Feb. 21, 826–828.

Collings, Rt. Hon. J. [Birmingham, Bordesley]

Agricultural Ratings Act, Renewal of, Feb. 24, 1252.

Agriculture, Condition of, Rural depopulation, etc., Feb. 24, 1251–1255.

King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 24, 1251–1255, 1257, 1259.

Colne Corporation Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 566.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1294.

Colomb, Rt. Hon. Sir J. C. R. [Great Yarmouth]

Admiralty Board—Distribution of Business, Statement as to, proposed, Feb. 20, 592.

Army Reorganisation Proposals, Feb. 23, 1126–1132.

Rifles, New—Commander-in-Chief's sanction and approval of, Feb. 20, 593.

Volunteers, Value of, in time of War, Feb. 23, 1128–1132.

Colombia

Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Colonial Marriages Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 478.

Colonial Office

Secretary of State — Rt. Hon. A. Lyttelton.

Colonies

For particular Colonies see their names.

Cancer research in—Correspondence Presented, Feb. 14, 54, 91.

Corn-growing in, evelopment and encouragement of, proposed.
Os. Mr. H. Robertson, Feb. 15, 252.

Crown Agents, see that title; also names of Colonies.

Navy, Contributions towards cost of, see under Navy.

Pacific Cable, see that title.

Postal Orders, Regulations as to, presented, Feb. 14, 95, 96; Feb. 16, 283.

Preferential Treatment for, see under Fiscal Policy—Colonies.

Reports.

Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 42, 90.

Miscellaneous, Presented, Feb. 14, 43, 90.

Weights and Measures, Metric System—Papers Presented, Feb. 22, 881; Feb. 23, 1018.

Commerce and Industry

Ministry of, Establishment of.
Os. Marquess of Winchester, Feb. 14, 11; Lord Oranmore and Brown 18; Earl Spencer, 26; Viscount Goschen, 38; Mr. S. Roberts, 119; Colonel Pilkington; 147; Mr. G. Bowles, 150.

References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 5.

Commercial Union Assurance Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 28, 1441.

Committees

Standing—Selection of Chairmen's Panel, Feb. 28, 1492.

Unopposed Bill—Selection of Panel, Feb. 28, 1492.

Committees, Chairman of Morley, Lord, Resignation of, and appointment of Lord Onslow.

Os. Marquess of Lansdowne; Earl Spencer, Feb. 16, 286–290.

Commons House of see Parliament—House of Commons.

Compensation for Damage to Crops Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 476.

Congested Districts Board (Ireland)

Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 47, 87.

Congested Districts (Scotland) Act (1897) Amendment Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 27, 1346.

Date of introduction of.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 20, 605.

Congested Districts (Scotland) Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 24, 1205.
2R., Feb. 28, 1443.

Congo Free State

Administration of, by Belgian Government.
De Tiége, M,. Case of.
Q. Mr. Emmott; A. Earl Percy, Feb. 15, 177.
Inquiry into, Information as to.
Q. Mr. Emmott; A. Earl Percy, Feb. 16, 311.
Report Presented, Feb. 14, 51, 93.
Missionaries, British, Treatment of.
Q. Mr. H. Samuel; A. EarlPercy, Feb.20, 596.
Van Calcken, M., Case of—Publication of Papers, proposed.
Qs. Mr. H. Samuel; As. Earl Percy, Feb. 20, 597.

Consolidated Fund

Account Presented, Feb. 14, 104.

Constabulary, Royal Irish

Appointments to, Proportion of Protestants and Roman Catholics, etc.
Os. Mr. T. M. Healy, Feb. 21, 814; Mr. Gordon, 818; Mr. Mooney, 837, 838.
Belfast Doctors, Allocation of work among.
Q. Mr. Sloan; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 614, 615.
Extra Police, Charges for, Method of recovery, etc.
Q. Mr. P. J. O'Brien; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1308, 1309.
Kildalkey Force, Dispersion of.
Q. Mr. Sheehy; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1305.
Longford, Extra Police in, Charge for, Stopped out of Agricultural Grant.
Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 27, 1323.
Pensions, Return as to, Presented, Feb. 14 102.
Reduction of, in Sligo and King's County
Q. Mr. Lonsdale; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 608.
Removals, Cost of.
Q. Mr. Farrell; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 28, 1485.

Contempt of Court (Ireland) Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 478.

Contraband of War

Russo-Japanese War.
Correspondence Presented, Feb. 14, 54, 93.
Definition of Contraband.
Os. Marquess of Winchester, Feb. 14, 6; Marquess of Lansdowne, 29.

Contracts, Government

Decentralisation of Manufactories, proposed.
Q. Sir H. Vincent; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 27, 1338, 1339.

Convicts

Conditional Licences granted, Feb. 14, 59, 60, 98, 99.
Prisons, see that title.

Corbett, Mr. A. C. [Glasgow, Tradeston]

Licensing Act, 1904, Charges leviable under, Date of payment of, Feb. 21, 759.

Corbett, Mr. T. L. [Down, N.]

Administration of Ireland,—Appointment of Sir A. MacDonnell, Feb. 20, 714.
Roman Catholic University Question, Attitude of the Government towards, Feb. 27, 1328.

Cordite, &c., Factories

Night work, Order as to,Presented, Feb. 14, 59, 96.

Cordoba and Rosario Railway Bill

l. 1R,* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1273.

Cork

Lunatic Asylum, District — Patients chargeable to Local Rates, Grievance as to.
Qs. Mr. Flynn, Mr. Flavin; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 21, 778, 779.

Cork Junction Railways Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 566.

Corn

Colonial Cultivation of, Development of, proposed.
O. Mr. H. Robertson, Feb. 15, 252.

Cornwall, Duchy of Lord Warden—Earl of Ducie.

Accounts Presented, Feb. 14, 58, 103.

Corringham Light Railway Company

Certificate authorising raising additional capital, Presented, Feb. 21, 723, 754.

Costa Rica

Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 39.

County Courts
Fees, Reduction in, proposed.
Q. Sir A. Rollit; A. Sir R. Finlay, Feb. 16, 320, 321.
Rules Presented, Feb. 14, 55, 108.
Salford Registrar, R. F. Addie—Order excluding from Private Practice, Presented, Feb. 14, 55, 107.

County of London Electric Supply Company Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 20, 541.

Craig, Mr. C. C. [Antrim, S.]
Ireland, Administration of—Sir A. MacDonnell and the Dunraven Devolution Scheme, Feb. 16, 324, 326; Feb. 20, 611; Feb. 21, 801–808.
Lord-Lieutenant, Views of, Feb. 27, 1329.

Craig, Mr. R. H. [Lanark, Govan]
Fiscal Policy—Colonial Preference, Feb. 16, 385–387.

Crete
Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Criminal Appeal, Court of Establishment of, Decision as to.
Qs. Mr. Sloan, Mr. S. MacNeill; As. Mr. A. Douglas, Feb. 28, 1480, 1481.

Criminal Cases (Reservation of Points of Law) Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 21, 723.

Criminal Law and Procedure (Ireland) Act (1887) Repeal Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 622.

Criminal Statistics
see Judicial Statistics.

Crofters and Cottars
see under Scotland.

Crofters' Holdings (Scotland) Act (1886) Amendment Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 27, 1346.

Crofters' Holdings (Scotland) Acts Amendment Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 27, 1346.

Crombie, Mr. J. W. [Kincardineshire]
Moray Firth, Trawling in—Closing Ports of Landing, proposed, Feb. 20, 583.

Crooks, Mr. W. [Woolwich]
Dundrum Lunatic Asylum—Dismissal of Shoemaker, Feb. 20, 1487.
Sugar—Working of Brussels Convention, Feb. 28, 1560–1562.

Crown Agents for the Colonies
Accounts Presented, Feb. 14, 47, 91.

Croydon Corporation Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 567.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1294.

Croydon Gas Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 567.

Cuba
Industrial Property Convention, Accession to, Presented, Feb. 14, 45, 92.
Sugar, Brussels Convention Decision as to.
Qs. Mr. Lough; As. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 16, 313, 314.
Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 41.

Cullinan, Mr. J. [Tipperary, S.]
Land Purchase — Accommodation for Labourers on Estates, Feb. 27, 1310.
Local Government Board Public Bodies Order, 1904, Opposition to, Feb. 28, 1489.
Local Government (Ireland) Amendment Act, 1902—Repeal of Clause 6, Feb. 28, 1490.

Culloden Estate
Crofters' Act, Inclusion of Leaseholders in—Resolution.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 20, 605.

Curzon, Lord
see under India.

Customs and Excise
Boatmen, Alleged Grievances of, Decision as to.
Q. Major E. Gordon; A. Mr. V. Cavendish, Feb. 21, 775.
Excise Department—Pay for Extra Duty.
Q. Mr. J. Devlin; A. Mr. V. Cavendish, Feb. 22, 884.

Cyprus
Educational System—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 47, 88.
Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 52, 91.
Telegraphs—Order in Council Presented, Feb. 14, 63, 102.

Dahomey
Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Dalziel, Mr. J. H. [Kirkcaldy Burghs]
MacDonnell, Sir A., Conditions of Appointment of, as Under-Secretary, Feb. 22 906, 907.
Privilege, Breach of—Interference by Lord Alington in Parliamentary Election, alleged, Feb. 14, 71, 74.

Damascus
Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 39.

Davenport, Mr. W. B.—Financial Secretary to the War Office [Cheshire, Macclesfield]
Mowat Committee Report, Abstract of—Date of Publication, Feb. 21, 760.
Pensioners, Maintenance of, in Irish District Lunatic Asylums, Feb. 16, 327.

Davey, Lord
Street Betting Bill, 2R., Feb. 28, 1442.

de Tiege, M., Case of see under Congo Free State.

Dearne Valley Railway Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 20, 541.

Deaths
Certificates, Charges for, to Members of Friendly Societies and Trade Unions.
Q. Colonel Sadler; A. Mr. W. Long, Feb. 28, 1458.
Scotland—Annual Report Presented, Feb. 14, 51, 89.

Deceased Wife's Sister Bill
Australian Commonwealth Letter asking for Legislation.
Q. Mr. Jas. O'Connor; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 20, 620.

Deeds of Arrangement Act
Rule under, Presented, Feb. 14, 55, 107.

Delany, Mr. W. [Queen's Co., Ossory]
Caldbeck Estate, Sale of, Feb. 28, 1488.
MacDonnell, Sir A., Connection of, with Dunraven Devolution Scheme, Feb. 20, 611.
Mountmellick Bog, Sale of, Feb. 27, 1329, 1330.
Swine, Movement of—Revocation of Restrictions proposed, Feb. 20, 585, 586.

Delmege, Mr., Estate of
Sale of.
Q. Mr. Lundon; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 23, 1105.

Denmark
Agriculture, Prosperous State of.
Os. Mr. Channing, Feb. 24, 1218–1220; Mr. Whitley, 1227; Mr. M. Ferguson, 1237; Mr. A. Fellowes 1246; Mr. Tomkinson, 1258; Mr. Yerburgh, 1260.
Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 17, 431.

Dernageas Farm
Sale of
Q. Mr. Farrell; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 23, 1109.

Devlin. Mr. C. R. [Galway]
Galway Docks, Dredging of, Feb. 28, 1465.

Devlin. Mr. J. [Kilkenny, N.]
Administration of Ireland—Appointment of Sir A. MacDonnell, etc., Feb. 20, 611, 675–682.
Inland Revenue and Excise Departments, Pay for Extra Duty in, Feb. 22, 884.
Local Government Board (Ireland)—Necessity for Public Bodies Order (1904), etc., Feb. 22, 885, 886.

Devonport
Polling Districts, Order altering, Presented, Feb. 14, 60, 97.

Dewar, Mr. J. A. [Inverness]
Grimsay, Island of—Petition for Rebuilding Dykes, Feb. 27, 1300.
Navy
  Channel Fleet, Visit of, to Portree, suggested, Feb. 28, 1452.
  Reserve Batteries on Skye and Barra, Delay in erection of, Feb. 28, 1468.
Portree Mail Service Delays, Feb. 22, 883.
Skye, Island of—Road between Portree and Staffin, Payment for Construction of, etc., Feb. 23, 1104.

Dickson, Rt. Hon. C. S.—Lord Advocate [Glasgow, Bridgton]
Ayrshire—Motor Traffic Regulations, Feb. 20, 606.
Congested Districts Act Amendment (Scotland) Bill, Date of Introduction of, Feb. 20, 605.
Crofters and Cottars—Inclusion of Leaseholders in Crofters Act—Resolution of Culloden Estate Tenants, Feb. 20, 605.
Deer Forests—Names, Acreage etc., Return as to, proposed, Feb. 20, 604.
Education.
  Cookery and Household Economy, Instruction in, Feb. 22, 900.
  Renfrew Landward School, Appointment of Pupil Teacher vetoed on ground of Unsuccessful Vaccination, Feb. 27, 1322.
  Ross-shire Schools, Provision of Pure Water Supply for, Feb. 28, 1484.
Fish, Railway Rates for Carriage of, Feb. 27, 1321.
Fisheries.
  Kyle, Facilities for Conveyance of Fish to, from Western Highlands, Feb. 27, 1322.
  Lochbroom, Provision of Motor Cars to facilitate Transit of Fish from, proposed, Feb. 27, 1322.
  Motor Power for Fishing Boats, Result of Inquiry as to, Feb. 27. 1300.
Grimsay, Island of—Petition for Rebuilding Dykes, Feb. 27, 1301.
Highlands and Islands, Medical Officers for, Feb. 27, 1322.
Lewis, Island of.
  Sanitation, Inspection of, by Local Government Board, proposed, Feb. 27, 1321.
  Skigersta Pier Works, Progress with, Feb. 23, 1103.
  Social Condition, Report on—Adoption of Recommendations, Feb. 23, 1103.

[cont.

Dickson, Rt. Hon. C. S.—cont.
- Lords of Session, Table of Precedence for, Feb. 20, 606.
- Moray Firth.
  - Fisheries, Decline in—Tabling Report of Mansfield Commission, proposed, Feb. 20, 605.
  - Illegal Trawling in—Closing Ports of Landing, proposed, Feb. 20, 583.
- Skye, Island of—Road between Portree and Staffin, Payment for Construction of, etc., Feb. 23, 1104.
- Trawling.
  - Illegal.
    - Moray Firth, in, Feb. 20, 583.
    - Penalties for, Feb. 21, 777.
  - Norwegian Trawlers with English Masters and Crews, Right of, to Fish in Territorial Waters, Feb. 28, 1484, 1485.

Dickson-Poynder, Sir. J. [Wilts. Chippenham]
- Sugar—Working of Brussels Convention, Effect on Prices, etc., Feb. 27, 1408, 1428.

Differential Duties
- Return (1823–1860), Presented, Feb. 20, 580.

Dilke, Rt. Hon. Sir C. W. [Gloucestershire, Forest of Dean]
- Merchant Shipping—Number of Boy Sailors in the Naval Reserve, Feb. 27, 1301.
- Navy—Submarine Minefields and Quick-firing Batteries, Decision as to, Feb. 28, 1451.

Dillon, Mr. J. [Mayo, E.]
- Administration of Ireland—Sir A. MacDonnell and the Dunraven Devolution Scheme, Feb. 21, 788–798.
  - Conditions of Appointment of Sir A. MacDonnell, Feb. 23, 1110.
- Education (Ireland), Legislative Proposals as to, Feb. 23, 1078.
- Evictions—Return as to Reinstatements, proposed, Feb. 22, 900.
- King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 21, 788–798, 799, 845, 846, 859.
- Land Act, 1903.
  - Administration—Instructions issued by Commissioners, Feb. 20, 609.
  - Estates Commissioners—Date of Presenting Report, Feb. 20, 607.
- Potatoes—Seed Grants—Remission of Interest on Loan, proposed, Feb. 20, 619.

Dingwall
- Depot for Ross-shire Regiments at, proposed.
  - Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1091.

Diseases of Animals
- Work done by the Board of Agriculture in Stamping out.
  - Os. Mr. Spear, Feb. 24, 1241; Mr. A. Fellowes, 1248.

Dissolution
- see General Election.

Divisions
- Home Rule Amendment Division, Discrepancy in Record of.
  - Os. Mr. C. R. Spencer, Mr. Speaker, Feb. 22, 909.

Docks, Wharves and Quays
- Regulations.
  - Draft—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 49, 82.
  - Presented, Feb. 14, 58, 96.

Dogger Bank
- Fishing Fleet, Protection of, During Passage of Third Baltic Fleet.
  - Q. Sir S. King; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 22, 890.

Dogs Bill
- Re-introduction of.
  - Q. Sir E. Strachey; A. Mr. A. Fellowes, Feb. 27, 1320.

Dombey Estate Athenry
- Sale of.
  - Q. Mr. Duffy; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1325.

Donegal
- Agricultural and Technical Instruction Schemes—Regulation as to Appointment of Instructors.
  - Q. Mr. O'Doherty; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1304, 1305.
- Railway System, Disposal of, Remission of Guarantee Tax, etc.
  - Q. Mr. O'Doherty; A. Mr. V. Cavendish, Feb. 27, 1302.

Donelan, Capt. A. J. C. [Cork, E.]
- Agriculture and Technical Instruction Department—Veterinary Branch Clerks, Position of, Feb. 21, 763.
- Canadian Cattle—Removal of Restrictions on Importation, proposed, Feb. 16, 319.
- Local Government Board—Withdrawal of Public Bodies Order (1904), proposed, Feb. 20, 763.
- Poor Law Reform Commission—Date of presenting Report, Feb. 23, 1079.
- Riverstown Petty Sessions—Action of Crown Solicitor in advising Police not to act on Warrants issued by the Bench, Feb. 27, 1343–1345.
- Youghal Auxiliary Lunatic Asylum, Information as to, Feb. 23, 1109.

Donoughmore, Earl of—Under Secretary for War.

Military Training for Youths, Necessity for, Feb. 20, 559.

Militia Reorganisation Proposals, Feb. 21, 742–748.

Reorganisation Proposals, Feb. 21, 742–748, 749.

Reserve Forces Bill, 2R., Feb. 24, 1207; Com. and Rep., Feb. 28, 1444.

Rifles, New Pattern, Criticisms on, Feb. 23, 1046–1059.

Seamen's and Soldiers' False Characters Bill, 2R., Feb. 21, 724; Com., Feb. 23, 1019.

Doogan, Mr. P. C. [Tyrone, E.]

Coagh Nationalist Procession, Prevention of, Feb. 24, 1214.

Dornoch Forth

Norwegian Trawlers in.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 28, 1484.

Dorsetshire

Motor Cars, Index Marks for—Regulation Presented, Feb. 16, 284, 298.

(Northern Division), Parliamentary Election—New Writ and New Member sworn, Feb. 14, 65.

Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. A.—Secretary of State for the Home Department [Kent, St. Augustine's]

Animals, Experiments on—Supply of Cats—Brockwell Hall case, etc., Feb. 23, 1074.

Children, Employment of, Sanctioning of Bye-laws as to, Feb. 28, 1481.

Criminal Appeal, Court of, Decision as to Establishment of, Feb. 28, 1480.

Coal Mines, Electricity in—Publication, etc., of Rules, Feb. 16, 299.

Licensing Act, 1904.

  Charges leviable under, Date of Payment of, Feb. 21, 759.

  Compensation Allowance, Increase of, proposed, Feb. 16, 300.

Linen Factories—Overtime Order, Reason for issuing, Feb. 17, 470.

Physical Deterioration Committee, Steps taken to carry out Recommendations of, Feb. 27, 1316, 1317.

Street Traffic in London—Report of Committee, Date of Presenting, Feb. 28, 1449.

Tobacco, Restrictions on sale of, to Children, Legislation for, proposed, Feb. 21, 775.

Vaccination Exemption Certificates, Procedure in granting, Feb. 23, 1100, 1101.

Douglas, Mr. C. M. [Lanark, N.W.]

MacDonnell, Sir A., Censure of, by the Government, Feb. 27, 1327.

Drumheel

Evicted Farm, Letting of.
Q. Mr. V. Kennedy; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 612.

Drumlish

Cattle Seizures in, Circumstances of.
Q. Mr. J. P. Farrell; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 27, 1324.

Drummeel Bog

Turbary Rights of J. Archbold.
Q. Mr. Farrell; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 21, 779.

Drunkenness (Ireland) Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 478.

Du Cane, Lady

Manuscripts of—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 51, 82.

Dublin

Hackney Carriages.

  Licences for.

    Extension of period for Payment of, proposed.
    Q. Mr. Nannetti; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 16, 323, 324.

    Summer Licences, Refusal of, proposed.
    Q. Mr. Nannetti; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 606, 607.

  Inspector, Appointment of.
  Q. Mr. Nannetti; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 607.

  Stands, Changes in Location of.
  Qs. Mr. Nannetti; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 16, 323.

Metropolitan Police—Connection of Chief Commissioner with University Education Scheme.
Q. Mr. Sloan; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 24, 1213.

Post Office.

  Learners, Pay of.
  Q. Mr. Nannetti; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 23, 1111.

  Leave, Annual, Arrangements as to,
  Q. Mr. Nannetti; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 20, 620.

Public Works Contracts, Painters employed on.
Q. Mr. Nannetti; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 23, 1104, 1105.

Science, Royal College of—Zoology Professor—Minute as to Qualifications Presented, Feb. 14, 57, 106.

Viceregal Lodge—Employment of Unskilled Labour on Painting Work.
Qs. Mr. Nannetti; As. Mr. V. Cavendish, Feb. 27, 1335.

Dublin Corporation (Superannuation) Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 567.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1294.

Dublin Police Acts Amendment Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 476.

Dublin United Tramways Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 567.

Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford Railway Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 567.

Duchy of Cornwall
see Cornwall, Duchy of.

Duchy of Lancaster
see Lancaster, Duchy of.

Duffy, Mr. W. J. [Galway, S.]
Dombsy Estate, Sale of, Feb. 27, 1325.
Gloves, Grazing Farm at—Condition of Tenantry, etc., Feb. 27, 1325.
Kinvarra Harbour Works, Decision as to, Feb. 27, 1333.

Duke of York's School
Chelsea Site, Disposal of.
Q. Mr. Whitmore; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 17, 472.

Duncan, Mr. J. H. [Yorks, W.R. Otley]
Poor Law Officers' Superannuation—Regulations for School Attendance Officers, Feb. 23, 1102.

Dundrum
Lunatic Asylum—Dismissal of Shoemaker.
Qs. Mr. Mooney, Mr. Hayden, Mr. Crooks; As. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 28, 1486, 1487.

Dunraven, Earl of Irish Reform Scheme, Origin of, Connection of Sir Antony MacDonnell with, etc., Feb. 17, 432.

Dunraven Devolution Scheme
see Ireland — Administration — Reform Association.

Durham, County of
Polling Districts, Order altering, Presented, Feb. 14, 60, 97.

Durning-Lawrence, Sir E. [Cornwall, Truro]
Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in, Feb. 16, 359–368.
Unionist Party, Continuance of, in Office, Feb. 16, 363–366.

Ealing Corporation Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 568.

East Cowes Gas Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1273.

East Hailing
Inebriate Reformatory—Regulations for Management, Presented, Feb. 14, 60, 96.

East London and Lower Thames Electric Power Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 21, 721.

Ecclesiastical Commission
Report Presented, Feb. 28, 1441, 1446.

Ecclesiastical Commissioners Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 16, 286.

Edgeware and Hampstead Railway Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 568.

Edgeworthstown
Loan Fund Society—Failure of—Relief to Losers, etc.
Q. Mr. Farrell; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 23, 1107.

Edinburgh
University.
Reports Presented, Feb. 16, 283.
Statistical Report, etc., Presented, Feb. 15, 172.

Education, Board of President—Marquess of Londonderry.
Secretary—Sir W. R. Anson.
Draft Order in Council, Presented, Feb. 17, 431, 468.
Reports Presented, Feb. 14, 46, 47, 89.

Education (England and Wales)
Agriculture, see under that title.
Attendance, see under subheading Schools.
Attendance Officers—Superannuation.
Regulations.
Q. Mr. Duncan; A. Mr. W. Long, Feb. 23, 1102.
Bishop's Stortford College—Dismissal of Mr. Kitchener.
Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Sir W. Anson, Feb. 28, 1461, 1462.
Grants.
Payment of, Period for.
Q. Mr. Soares; A. Sir W. Anson, Feb. 23, 1075, 1076.
Report on, Presented, Feb. 14, 47, 88.
Schools.
Attendance—Church Attendance, Regulation as to Counting.
Qs. Mr. F. Wilson; As. Sir W. Anson, Feb. 27, 1303; Feb. 28, 1461.
Secondary, etc., List of, Presented, Feb. 14, 47, 89.

Education (England and Wales)—cont.

Underfed Children, Provision of Meals for, by Local Authorities.
Os. Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 14, 144, 145; Col. Pilkington, 145.
Q. Dr Macnamara; A. Sir W. Anson, Feb. 21, 776.
Qs. Mr. K. Hardie, Mr. Lough, Dr. Macnamara; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 22, 908, 909.
Q. Dr. Macnamara, A. Sir W. Anson, Feb. 28, 1483.

Education (Ireland)

Intermediate.
Accounts Presented, Feb. 14, 56; Feb. 15, 173; Feb. 17, 467.
Examinations—Time Table Presented, Feb. 14, 56, 94, 95.
Rules Presented, Feb. 14, 56, 94, 95.

Larkhill School, Provision for Education of Roman Catholic Children at.
Q. Mr. O'Dowd; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1324, 1325.

Legislative proposals as to.
Q. Mr. Dillon; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 23, 1078, 1079.

National School Teachers.
Pension Fund, Administration of.
Qs. Mr. Sloan; As. Mr. V. Cavendish, Feb. 28, 1485, 1486.
Polling Clerks, Employment as.
Q. Mr. Sloan; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 16, 324.

Needlework.
Directress of—Duties, Salary, etc.
Q. Mr. Sloan; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 22, 887.
Manual Instructress, etc., Method of Testing Qualifications of.
Q. Mr. Sloan; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 22, 887.

Report—Appendices Presented, Feb. 14, 52, 53, 86.

Roman Catholic University, see that sub-heading under Ireland.

Schools.
For particular schools see names of places.
Erection etc., plans for.
Qs. Mr. Farrell; A. Mr. V. Cavendish, Feb. 22, 903.

Secondary and Technical.
Grants for Technical Instruction, Allocation of.
Q. Mr. Sheehy; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1307.
Officials—Return Presented, Feb. 21, 753.

Education (Scotland)

Cookery and Household Economy, etc., Instruction in.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 22, 900.

Education (Scotland)—cont.

Expenditure—Return Presented, Fe
282, 297.

Grants—Distribution of General Grant—Minute Presented, Feb
282, 297.

Renfrew—Engagement of Miss Hoc
Pupil Teacher cancelled on Grou
Unsuccessful Vaccination.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. S. Dic
Feb. 27, 1321, 1322.

Ross-shire Schools, Provision of pure
Supply for.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. S. Dic
Feb. 28, 1484.

Teachers, Training of—Committee M
Presented, Feb. 14, 54, 102.

Education (Scotland) Bill

Re-introduction of.
Os. Lord Oranmore and Brc
Feb. 14, 16.
References to, in the King's Sp
Feb. 14, 4.

Egerton, Earl

Military Training for Youths, Nece for, Feb. 20, 555.

Egmont, Earl of Manuscripts of, Report on—Prese

Feb. 14, 51, 81.

Egypt

British Garrison in, Maintenance of.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Earl Percy, Fe
1476.

Convention Between United Kingdom
France, Presented, Feb. 28, 1448.

Infant Mortality in.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Earl Percy, Fe
1098.

Pilgrims.
Protection, etc. of, Arrangement
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Earl P
Feb. 22, 893, 894.
Treatment of, at Suez, by Khe
Mail Steamship Company.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Earl P
Feb. 21, 773.

Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 39.

Elba

Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 41.

Electoral Areas

Redistribution of.
Os. Lord Oranmore and Brc
Feb. 14, 17; Earl Spencer,
Marquess of Lansdowne, 36;
Mount, 112; Mr. S. Roberts,
Col. Pilkington, 146; Mr
Bowles, 147.
References to, in the King's Sp
Feb. 14, 4.

Electricity
Coal Mines, see that title.
Supply of, Report on Bills, etc., Relating to, Ordered, Feb. 23, 1072; Presented, Feb. 24, 1209.

Elibank, Master of [Edinburgh, Midlothian]
Transvaal, Representative Institutions for—Constitution of Barbados, Feb. 27, 1299.

Ellice, Capt. E. C. [St. Andrews Burghs]
Army.
Expenditure, Increase in, Feb. 23, 1156.
Officers, Shortage in, Feb. 23, 1156.
King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 23, 1155.
Militia and Volunteers, Strength of, Feb. 23, 1091.
Trawling—Right of Norwegian Trawlers to Fish in British Territorial Waters—Correspondence as to, Feb. 28, 1484.

Elliot, Mr. A. R. D. [Durham]
Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in, Feb. 15 202–208.
King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 15, 202–208; Feb. 16, 418.
Sugar—Brussels Convention, Disabilities of Great Britain under, Feb. 15, 203, 204.

Ellis, Mr. J. E. [Nottinghamshire, Rushcliffe]
Blocking Notices, Amendment of Standing Order as to, Feb. 27, 1340, 1342.
Coal Mines, Electricity in—Publication, etc., of Rules, Feb. 16, 299.
Dissolution, Necessity for, Feb. 15, 255–257.
Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in, Feb. 15, 252–257.
Income Tax Collection—Authority for Issuing Notices, Feb. 16, 300.
King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 15, 252–257.
Milner, Lord—Termination of Tenure of Office, Feb. 28, 1474.
North Sea Trawlers Fired on by Baltic Fleet—Result of Investigations of Commission of Inquiry, Feb. 23, 1098; Feb. 27, 1315.
Standing Order as to Selection of Chairman of Committee of Selection, Feb. 20, 621.
Transvaal, Representative Government for—Date of Publication of Papers, Feb. 16, 303.

Emigration and Immigration
Aliens, see that title.

Emmott, Mr. A. [Oldham]
Congo Free State, Belgian Administration of.
de Tiége, M., Case of, Feb. 15, 177.
Information as to Inquiry into, Feb. 16, 311.
Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in, Feb. 15, 216–220.

Entre Rios Railways Bill.
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1274.

Epizootic Lymphangitis
see under Army—Horses.

Epping Gas Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 568.

Erne Estate
Sale of, Proposals as to.
Q. Mr. J. O'Donnell; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1307.

Erroll, Earl of
Army—New Pattern Rifles, Feb. 23, 1043–1045.

Esmonde, Sir T. G. [Wexford, N.]
War Office Clerks, Retirement of, Feb. 20, 582.

Estimates
References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 4.
Os. Earl Spencer, Feb. 14, 24; Mr. G. Bowles, 149.
Supplementary—Amounts of (1873–1904)—Return Ordered, Feb. 21, 755.

Everton
Parliamentary Election — New Member Sworn, Feb. 28, 1492.

Evictions, Ireland
For particular estates see their names.
Notices, etc.
Returns Presented, Feb. 14, 49, 50, 86.
Reinstatements, Particulars of — Return proposed.
Q. Mr. Dillon; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 22, 900.

Excise
see Customs and Excise.

Explosions
see names of places.

Explosives Act, 1875
Fireworks, Order in Council as to, Presented, Feb. 14, 63, 100.

Feb. 14—Feb. 28.

Exports and Imports

- Africa, South, Import Duty on Gold and Diamonds from, proposed.
  - Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 23, 1077.
- Foreign Import Duties—Statement Presented, Feb. 14, 52, 85.
- Wines, Imported—Return as to Quantity and Strength, Ordered, Feb. 27, 1296.

Factories and Workshops

- Inspectors, see that title.
- Linen Factories see that title.
- Night Work.
  - Cordite and Gun Cotton Workshops, Order as to, Presented, Feb. 14, 59, 96.
  - Wire-drawing, Continuous, Order as to, Presented, Feb. 21, 722, 753.
- Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 49, 82.

Falkland Islands

- Educational System—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 47, 88.

Fareham

- Polling District, Order altering, Presented, Feb. 14, 60, 97; Feb. 21, 722, 753.

Farrell, Mr. J. P. [Longford, N.]

- Aghnacliffe, Telegraph Extension to, Feb. 27, 1336.
- Dernageas Farm, Sale of, Feb. 23, 1109.
- Drummeel Bog—Turbary Rights of J. Archbold, Feb. 21, 779.
- Drumlish, Seizure of Cattle at, Feb. 27, 1324.
- Edgeworthstown—Loan Fund Society, Failure of—Relief to Losers, etc., Feb. 23, 1107.
- Education (Ireland)—Schools, Plans for erection of, Feb. 22, 903.
- Income Tax—Appeals, Ignorance of Taxpayer of Date of Hearing—Procedure, Feb. 22, 894.
- Local Government Board Public Bodies Order 1904.
  - County Councils' Opinions as to, Feb. 27, 1327.
  - Withdrawal of, proposed, Feb. 20, 613.
- Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898—Occupier, Rating of—Repeal of Sections of Act, proposed, Feb. 20, 613.
- Longford County.
  - Constabulary Removals, Cost of, etc., Feb. 28, 1485.
  - Evicted Tenants, Reinstatement of, Feb. 22, 901.
  - Extra Police for, Charge for, stopped out of Agricultural Grant, Feb. 27, 1323.
  - Magistracy, Appointments to, Feb. 28, 1485.

Farrell, Mr. J. P.—cont.

- Mohill—Case of Dr. Pentland, Feb. 20, 613
- Mullinalaghta—Case of Gillespie, Feb. 23, 1106.
- Paupers, Deportation of, to Ireland, Feb. 27, 1337.
- Riffey River Drainage Schemes, Feb. 28, 1490.

Fellowes, Mr. A. E. [Huntingdonshire, Ramsey]

- Afforestation, Committee on, Date of Carrying out Recommendations of, Feb. 24, 1268.
- Agriculture, State of, Depopulation of Rural Districts, etc., Feb. 24, 1245–1250.
- Cattle.
  - American, Importation of, into Great Britain, Feb. 20, 602.
  - Canadian, Removal of Restrictions on Importation of, proposed, Feb. 16, 320; Feb. 20, 591.
    - Canadian Opinion, etc., Feb. 22, 898, 899; Feb. 27, 1320.
  - Transit of—Improvement in Methods employed on Sea and Land, Feb. 21, 757, 758.
- Dogs Bill, Reintroduction of, Feb. 27, 1320.
- Ireland—Movement of Swine—Revocation of Restrictions, proposed, Feb. 20, 586.
- King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 24, 1245–1250.

Ferguson, Mr. R. C. Munro [Leith, Burghs]

- Agriculture, State of, Depopulation of Rural Districts, etc., Feb. 24, 1236–1239.

Fertilizers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1893

- Working of—Report, etc., Presented, Feb. 14, 42, 89.

Ffrench, Mr. P. [Wexford, S.]

- Refusal of Dr. Gibbon to slaughter Herd, etc., Feb. 28, 1466.

Ffrench Estate

- Sale of.
  - Q. Mr. Reddy; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1330.

Field, Mr. W. [Dublin, St. Patrick]

- Accounts, Irish Public, Audit of, in Dublin, proposed, Feb. 28, 1452.
- Africa, South—Gold and Diamonds imported into the United Kingdom, Duty on, proposed, Feb. 23, 1077.
- Cattle, Transit of—Improvements in Methods employed on Sea and Land, Feb. 21, 757; Feb. 27, 1302.
- Income Tax Collection—Treasury suggestions as to expediting, etc., alleged, Feb. 23, 1077.

[cont.

Field, Mr. W.—cont.

- Ireland, Administration of, Burden of Taxation, etc., Feb. 21, 831–834.
- Lights Board, Administration of, Reason for not lighting Rock Angus, etc., Feb. 21, 762.
- Meat, Inspection of, Feb. 28, 1457.
- Postal Orders, Irish—Transfer of Clerical Work to Dublin, proposed, Feb. 28, 1453.
- Post Office, Printing and Stationary Contracts—Employment of Irish Firms, Feb. 28, 1454.
- Railways—Preferential Rates for Foreign Produce—Inquiry proposed, Feb. 21, 756.
- Savings Bank, Post Office—Transfer of Irish Accounts to Dublin, proposed, Feb. 28, 1453.
- Taxation—Assimilation of Irish Procedure with that of Great Britain, proposed, Feb. 23, 1079.

Fiji

- Educational System—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 47, 88.
- Native Taxation, etc.—Correspondence Presented, Feb. 14, 46, 91.
- Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 43, 90.

Finland

- Trade Report, Presented Feb. 14, 39.

Finlay, Sir R. B.—Attorney-General [Inverness Burghs]

- County Courts—Reduction in Fees proposed, Feb. 16, 321.

Fireworks

- Prohibition, except under certain conditions—Order in Council Presented, Feb. 14, 63, 100.

First Commissioner of Works

- Lord Windsor.

First Lord of the Admiralty

- Earl of Selborne.

First Lord of the Treasury

- Rt. Hon. A. J. Balfour.

Fiscal Policy—Free Trade v. Protection

- Debates on the Address—Motion (Mr. Asquith) Feb. 15, 178; Feb. 16, 330.
  - Agriculture, Condition of, 390.
  - Alteration in Fiscal Policy, Necessity for, 203, 257, 258, 408.
  - America.
    - Iron and Steel Trade of, Impetus given to, by Protection, 367.
    - Shipping Trade of, Effect of Protection on, 391.

Fiscal Policy—cont.

- Debates on the Address—cont.
  - Appeal to the Country, Date of, and necessity for, 188–190, 191, 193, 226, 248, 268, 330, 338, 369, 370, 377, 380, 382, 410.
  - Chamberlain, Mr., Proposals of.
    - Circumstances of Introduction of of the Policy, 252, 253.
    - Continental opinion as to, 220.
    - Definition of, 183, 253, 340, 370, 411.
    - Government attitude towards, 184, 205, 208, 209, 224, 236, 237, 255, 340, 342, 369, 371, 405, 406.
    - Limehouse Speech, 341, 342.
    - Misrepresentations of, at By-Elections, etc., 208, 341.
    - Old Age Pensions Scheme dropped, 373.
    - Policy of, the real issue before the country, 184, 369, 370, 380, 407.
    - Propaganda initiated by, 253, 254.
    - Shipowners, Attitude of, towards Proposals, 210, 211, 214.
    - Working Classes, Attitude of, towards the Proposals, 254, 255.
  - Chancellor of the Exchequer, Protectionist sympathies of, alleged, 223, 229.
  - Cobden, Mr.
    - Campaign waged by, in favour of free trade, 344, 345.
    - Prophecies of, unfulfilled, 367.
  - Colonies, Preferential Treatment for (see also subheading names of Colonies) 198, 199, 346, 349, 355, 400.
    - Advantages offered by the Colonies in Exchange, 228, 231, 237, 239, 246, 250, 261, 346.
    - Conference.
      - Date of holding, 260.
      - Proportion of representation to be allowed to each Colony, 249.
      - Reasons and objects of convening, 186–188, 200–202, 228, 229, 235, 238, 240, 246, 251, 260, 272, 346, 402, 403, 406, 407.
      - Subjects to be discussed at, 186–188, 200–202, 228, 229, 235, 238, 240, 246, 251, 260, 272, 346, 347–349, 353, 354, 368, 369, 400, 407.
        - Food, Taxation of, as a subject for discussion, 347, 368.

[cont.

Fiscal Policy—cont.
  Debates on the Address—cont.
    Colonies, Preferential Treatment—cont.
      Corn-growing in Colonies, Development of, proposed, 252.
      Limitation of Food Supply, Danger of, 381.
      Misapprehension of Mr. Chamberlain's scheme by Colonies, alleged, 261, 262.
      Opinion in the Colonies, 229, 230.
      Wheat-producing Colonies, Effect on, of exemption from tax, 385–387.
    Commercial treaties in no sense "bargains," 375.
    Competition.
      Industries of the Country, Effect on, 243, 257.
      Unfair Competition, Definition of, 234, 235.
    Conservative Members and Candidates not accepting the proposals, position of, 356, 387, 416–419.
    Consolidating the Empire, Closer union with the Colonies, etc., 199, 346, 355, 368, 421, 422.
    Corn and Wheat, Import duties on, Proposed, 216, 273, 393, 394, 396, 397.
      Wheat-producing Colonies, Effect on, of exemption from tax, 385–387.
    Cost of Production, Increase in, owing to Foreign Competition, 258.
    Cotton Industry, Condition of—Dangers of Protection as a remedy 218, 219.
    Discussion of, Advantages of, 204, 218, 227, 237, 382.
    Dumping.
      Cases where beneficial, 381.
      Definition of, 362.
      Effect of, on British Industries, 362, 363, 394, 395.
    Evasion of discussion and appeal to the Country, Mistaken policy of, 266, 267, 356–358, 371, 372, 408–410.
    Everton Division of Liverpool, Opinions of Conservative Candidate for, 383, 384.
    Exports, Statistics as to, 213.
    Fishing Industry, Condition of, under Free Trade, 362.
    Food, taxation of.
      Chamberlain, Mr., Opinions of, as to, in 1881, 399.
      Discussion of, at Colonial Conference, proposed, 347, 368.

Fiscal Policy—cont.
  Debates on the Address—cont.
    Food, taxation of—cont.
      Government attitude towards, 217, 232, 251, 253, 398.
      Increase in employment and Trade likely to result from, alleged, 399.
      Limitation of food supply, Dangers of, 381.
    Free Imports, Failure of system of, 345.
    Free Trade.
      Definition of, 221, 233.
      Prosperity of England due to, alleged, 395.
    Freedom of Commercial Negotiation aimed at, by the Government, 197, 198, 245, 263, 415.
    Germany, Position of, under Protection, Decrease in Exports, etc., 220.
    Imports, Loss represented by, Fallacy of theory as to, 389.
    India, Position of, under Protection, 272.
    Industries [see also subheadings names of Industries.]
      Condition of, 212, 218, 233, 234, 390.
      Dumping, Effect of, on, 362, 363, 394, 395.
      Foreign Competition, Effect of, 243.
      Ruined Industries argument, Fallacy of, 390, 395.
    Iron and Steel Trade, Condition of, 234, 236.
      American Competition, Effect of, 367.
      Prosperity of, due to protection afforded by patents, 359, 360.
    Labour Market, Effect of Foreign Competition on, 257, 346.
    Laissez faire Policy of the Opposition, 196.
    Local Taxation, Incidence of, 215.
    Manufactured Goods, Ten per cent. Tax on, Government attitude towards, 265.
    Money Market, Effect of uncertainty of the Situation on, 225.
    Montreal Chambers of Commerce, Resolution passed by, 238, 239.
    New Zealand, Preferential and Reciprocal Proposals of, 230, 231, 250.
    Opposition, Alternative Policy of, Definition of, 257, 332, 419–421.
    Policy of the Government.
      "Bluff," Policy of, 373.

[cont.

Fiscal Policy—cont.

- Debates on the Address—cont.
  - Policy of the Government—cont.
    - Definition of, 185, 196, 197, 209, 259, 263, 265, 269, 270, 342, 372, 405, 410–416.
    - Misrepresentations of, at By-Elections, etc., 208, 242.
  - Protection.
    - Employment, Increase in, likely to result, alleged, 248, 271.
    - Home Industries, Effect on, 259.
    - India, Position of, 272.
    - Iron and Steel Trade of America, Impetus given to, by Protective Duties, 367.
    - Meaning of the term, 392, 393.
    - Patents a form of, 359–361.
    - Working of, in Foreign Countries, 374.
  - Present Parliament, Question not to be dealt with by, 382, 387.
  - Raw Material, Taxation of, Government attitude towards, 273, 400.
  - Retaliation.
    - Advantages of, as a weapon in dealing with other countries, 197, 198, 209, 245, 374, 402.
    - Basis of a General Tariff leading to tariff war, 374, 375, 376.
    - Destruction of Trade as a result of, 376.
    - Importation of Foreign Manufactured Goods Increased by, alleged, 249.
    - Meaning of the term, 352, 372.
    - Methods of Initiating the Policy, 247, 263.
    - Permanent or Temporary Tariff, Question as to, 263, 264, 352.
    - Power of Executive to impose, Consulting House of Commons, etc., 263, 331.
    - Stepping-stone to Protection, alleged, 264, 352, 373.
    - Sugar Convention an Instance of, 406.
  - Shipping Industry.
    - Built up by the System of Free Imports, alleged, 247, 248.
    - Carrying Trade of Great Britain, 234, 245.
    - Condition of, 212, 233, 234, 245, 247.
  - Straw-plaiting Industry, Condition of, 390.
  - Tariff Reform League, Tactics of, and misleading language used by, alleged, 353, 403.

Fiscal Policy—cont.

- Debates on the Address—cont.
  - Tariffs.
    - Commerce of the Country, Effect of High Tariffs on, 243, 244, 249.
    - Foreign Tariffs no Damage to a Free Trade Country, alleged, 391.
  - Tea Industry, Condition of, Deputation to Chancellor of the Exchequer, etc., 224, 225.
  - Ten per cent. Import Duties, Question of, 403.
  - Tinplate Industry.
    - American Tariff, Effect of, 244, 390.
    - Dumping, Effect of, 381.
  - Trade and Commerce.
    - Board of Trade Statistics of Value and Volume, 213.
    - British Trade valued by Foreign Countries, 375, 376.
    - Condition of, 212.
    - Foreign Trade of Great Britain, Condition of, 390, 397.
      - Exclusion of Great Britain from Foreign Markets, alleged, 388, 389.
    - Uncertainty of the Situation, Effect of on, 187, 195, 218, 223, 225, 226, 238, 239, 266, 344, 364, 380, 397, 398, 410.
  - "Urgency" of the Question, 408–410.
- Chamberlain, Mr., Proposals of.
  - Appeal to the Country, Date of. Os. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Feb. 14, 121, 122; Earl Spencer, 27; Viscount Goschen, 38.
  - Government Attitude towards. Os. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Feb. 14, 126–129; Mr. G. Bowles, 150–152; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 165.
- Colonial Conference, Reasons for Convening. Os. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Feb. 14, 126; Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 15, 200.
- Colonies, Preferential Treatment for.
  - Duties imposed, raised, etc., Return as to—Order read and discharged, Paper withdrawn, Feb. 17, 540.
  - Notice of Motion by Mr. W. Churchill, Terms of. Q. Mr. P. Pease; A. Mr. W. Churchill, Feb. 27, 1343.
  - Resolutions as to, Presented, Feb. 14, 43, 91.
- Differential Duties imposed, etc. (1823–1860), Return as to, Presented, Feb. 20, 580.

[cont.

Feb. 14—Feb. 28.

Fiscal Policy—cont.

Government Policy, Necessity for Definition of.
Os. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Feb. 14, 129; Mr. G. Bowles, 150–152; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 166.

Present Parliament, Question not to be dealt with by.
Os. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 14, 163. 164; Mr. A. Taylor, Feb. 16, 382.

Retaliation.

Duties imposed, raised, etc., Return as to—Order read and discharged, Paper withdrawn, Feb. 17, 540.

Sugar Convention as an instance of:
Os. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Feb. 14, 130–132.

Fish

Railway Rates for Carriage of, Reduction in, proposed.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 27, 1321.

Fisheries

Motor Power for Fishing Boats, Result of Inquiry as to.
Q. Mr. C. Wason; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 27, 1300.

Scotland.

Kyle, Conveyance of Fish to, from Western Highlands, Facilities for.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 27, 1322.

Lochbroom, Provision of Motor Cars to facilitate transit of Fish, proposed.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 27, 1323.

Trawling, see that title.

Fisheries, Board of President—Earl of Onslow.

Fisheries (Ireland) Acts
Manual of, Presented, Feb. 14, 48, 87.

Fitzmaurice, Lord E. G. P. [Wilts, Cricklade]
Macedonia, Condition of, Progress of Reform Schemes, etc., Feb. 27, 1357–1366, 1380.

Turkey, Possibilities of Reform of, Feb. 27, 1363, 1364.

Fiume
Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 39.

Flavin, Mr. M. J. [Kerry, N.]
Cork Lunatic Asylum, Patients in, Feb. 21, 779.

Flower, Sir E. F. S [Bradford, W.]
Netherlands, Decision as to Claim of Mr. Godden, Feb. 16, 308; Feb. 28, 1459.

Flynn, Mr. J. C. [Cork, N.]
Cork District Lunatic Asylum—Patients chargeable to Local Rates, etc., Feb. 21, 778.

Income Tax Collection—Delays permitted, Application of Instruction to Ireland, Feb. 23, 1100.

Newman Estate, Sale of, Feb. 21, 761.

Orpen Estate Proceedings—Arrests, Private Inquiry by Magistrate, etc., Feb. 21, 777, 778.

Poor Law Unions—Accounts and Forms, Date of Order as to, Feb. 23, 1101.

Foochow
Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 41.

Foreign Office
Secretary of State—Marquess of Lansdowne

Foreign Jurisdiction Neutrality Order in Council.
Presented, Feb. 14, 63, 101.

Foreign Trawlers Regulation Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 621.

Forestry
Committee on Afforestation, Date of carrying out recommendations of.
Os. Mr. J. H. Lewis, Mr. A. Fellowes, Feb. 24, 1268.

Formby Township Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.

Formosa, S.
Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 39.

Foster, Sir B. W. [Derbyshire, Ilkeston]
Army Medical Department—Facilities for Scientific Training, Feb. 22, 949–953.

South African War, Lessons of, Feb. 22, 948, 949.

Foyle, Lough
Buoy, Erection of, on Tuns Bank.
Q. Mr. O'Doherty; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 24, 1211.

France
Arbitration Treaty with Great Britain, Ratification of.
Os. Earl Spencer, Feb. 14, 21; Marquess of Lansdowne, 31; Mr. Mount, 110.

References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 3.

Muscat Dhows, Grant of French Flag to—Agreement Presented, Feb. 20, 541, 581.

Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 40, 41.

Franchise and Removal of Women's Disabilities Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 479.

Friendly Societies
Death Certificates, Charge for.
Q. Colonel Sadler; A. Mr. W. Long, Feb. 28, 1458.
Registrar, Reports of, Presented, Feb. 17, 431, 469.

Fuller, Mr. J. M. F. [Wiltshire, Westbury]
Army.
Number of men required for Imperial Defence, Feb. 23, 1147–1149.
Recruits, Physical condition of, Feb. 23, 1145, 1146.
Volunteers, Grant to, Feb. 28, 1470.

Galbraith Estate
Sale of.
Q. Mr. Farrell; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 22, 901.

Galway
County Council Minutes, Copy of, furnished to Local Government Board.
Q. Colonel Nolan; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 606.
Docks, Dredging of.
Q. Mr. C. Devlin; A. Mr. V. Cavendish, Feb. 28, 1465, 1466.
Poor Rate Collection, New Regulations for.
Q. Colonel Nolan; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 615.

Gambia
Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 42, 90.

Gardner, Mr. E. [Berkshire, Wokingham]
Motors—Regulations for heavy cars, Feb. 28, 1477.

Gas
Supply of, Report on Bills, etc., relating to, Ordered, Feb. 23, 1072; Presented, Feb. 24, 1209.

Gas Light and Coke, South Metropolitan, and Commercial Gas Companies Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 568.

General Election
By-elections, Loss of, as a reason for Dissolution.
Os. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 14, 160, 161; Mr. J. Morley, 161; Mr. Asquith, Feb. 15, 180–182; Mr. Renwick, 241; Mr. J. Ellis; 255, 256; Sir E. Grey, 266, Feb. 16, Mr. S. Wortley, 379.
House of Commons the sole judge as to advisability of Dissolution.
Os. Mr. S. Wortley, Feb. 16, 379; Mr. T. Shaw, 401.
Necessity for, Date of Appeal to the Country, etc.
Os. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Feb. 14, 122–125; Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 16, 334–339; Mr. Bright, 380; Mr. T. Shaw, 401.

Geological Survey and Museum
Report Presented, Feb. 14, 88.

Germany
Arbitration Treaty with Great Britain, Presented, Feb. 14, 44, 91.
Art Trade Schools—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 41.
Cement—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 41.
Colonies—Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 40.
Commercial Instruction—Report Presented, Feb. 14, ct.
Machinery Import, etc.—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 41.
Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Gibraltar
Educational System—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 47, 88.

Glasgow
University—Report Presented, Feb. 15, 172; Feb. 16, 283.

Gloves, Athenry
Grazing Farm at, Purchase of, by Congested Districts Board, Condition of Tenants, etc.
Q. Mr. Duffy; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1325, 1326.

Goa
Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Gold Coast
Northern Territories—Annual Report Presented, Feb. 14, 43, 90.
Railways—Correspondence Presented, Feb. 14, 45, 91.
Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 42, 90.
Rubber, Report on, Presented, Feb. 14, 43, 90.

Goole
Pilotage Rates to Hull—Order in Council Presented, Feb. 14, 62, 102.

Gordon, Major W. E. [Tower Hamlets, Stepney]
Customs Boatmen, Alleged Grievances of, Feb. 21, 775.
Volunteers—Reform Proposals, Feb. 22, 946–948.

Gordon, Mr. J. [Londonderry]
Administration of Ireland—Policy of Sir Antony MacDonnell, etc., Feb. 21, 817–823.

Gorst, Rt. Hon. Sir J. E. [Cambridge University.]
Army Recruits, Physical Deterioration among, Feb. 23, 1143–1145.
Indian Forest Service, Instruction for, Feb. 28, 1465.
Physical Deterioration Committee, Report and Recommendations of, Steps taken to carry out, Feb. 14, 141–145; Feb. 27, 1316–1318.

Goschen, Viscount

Commerce and Industry, Ministry of, Proposed Establishment of, Feb. 14, 38.

Fiscal Policy, Proposed changes in, Feb. 14, 38.

Gosport and Fareham Tramways Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1274.

Government Contracts

see Contracts, Government.

Gray, Mr. E. [West Ham, N.]

Adjournment of Debate, Right of Mover of, to speak again, Feb. 17, 330.

Aliens Bill, Necessity for Passing, Feb. 15, 275.

Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in, Feb. 16, 331–334.

Unemployed—Urgency of the Question, Feb. 15, 276; Feb. 16, 333, 334.

Great Berkhampstead Gas Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 568.

Great Central Railway Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.

Great Central Railway (Pension Fund) Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.

Great Eastern Railway Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 569.

Great Northern (Ireland) and Midland Railways Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 569.

Great Northern, Piccadilly, and Brompton Railway (No. 1) Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 569.

Great Northern, Piccadilly, and Brompton Railway (No. 2) Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 569.

Great Northern Railway Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 569.

Great Western Railway (Additional Powers) Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 570.

Great Western Railway (New Railways) Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 570.

Greece

Loan of 1832—Account Presented, Feb. 16, 283, 297.

Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 39, 40.

Green Park, London

Pathway, new, Information as to.
Qs. Mr. G. Bowles, Mr. C. R. Spencer; As. Lord Balcarres, Feb. 20, 603, 604.
Qs. Mr. G. Bowles, Mr. S. Buxton; As. Lord Balcarres, Feb. 22, 899.

Greenwich Hospital, &c.

Accounts Presented, Feb. 15, 173; Feb. 16, 283.

Grenada

Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 43, 90.

Grey, Rt. Hon. Sir E. [Northumberland, Berwick]

Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in, Feb. 15, 258–267.

General Election, Necessity for, Feb. 15, 266.

King's Speech, Address in Answer, Feb. 15, 258–267; Feb 16, 348.

Grimsay, Island of Dykes, Petition for rebuilding of.

Q. Mr. J. Dewar; A. Mr. S. Dickson Feb. 27, 1300, 1301.

Guest, Mr. I. C. [Plymouth]

Army.

Reduction in Numbers, Necessity for, Feb. 22, 957.

Reorganisation Proposals, Feb. 22, 957–959.

Guiana, British

Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 43, 90.

Guiana, Dutch

Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Guinea, French

Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 41;

Gully, Rt. Hon. W. C. [Carlisle]

see Speaker.

Gun-Cotton Factories

Night-work, Order as to, Presented, Feb. 14, 59, 96.

Guns.

Army, see that title—Guns.

Gurdon, Sir W. B. [Norfolk]

Dir, Information as to, Subsidy received by Khan, etc., Feb. 20, 587.

Transvaal—Chinese Labour—Disturbances with Kaffirs, etc., Feb. 24, 1215.

Hague Tribunal

Reports—Date of Issue.
Q. Mr. Moon; A. Earl Percy, Feb. 24. 1210.

Haldane, Rt. Hon. R. B. [Haddington]

Ireland, Administration of, Feb. 20, 663-670.

MacDonnell, Sir A., Conditions of Appointment of, as Under-Secretary, Feb. 20, 663–664.

Halifax Corporation Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 570.
2R.* Feb. 27 1294.

Halsbury, Earl of—Lord Chancellor

Morley, Earl of, Death of—Tribute to Services as Chairman of Committees, Feb. 27, 1276.

Harbours

see Piers and Harbours.

Harcourt, late Sir William

Tributes to.
Os. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Feb. 14, 120; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 153.

Hardie, Mr. J. K. [Methyr Tydvil]

Education—Meals for Underfed Children, Feb. 22, 908, 909.

Warsaw, Alleged Shooting of Workmen at, Protest by British Government, proposed, Feb. 22, 908.

Hardinge, Viscount

Army Re-organisation Proposals, Feb. 21, 737–739.

Militia, Re-organisation of, Feb. 21, 737–739.

Hardwicke, Earl of

Sat first in Parliament after the Death of his Nephew, Feb. 14, 5.

Harrington, Mr. T. [Dublin Harbour]

Civil Service Clerkships, Examinations for —Case of Mr. Percy Ludgate, Feb. 20, 619.

Harris, Lord

Transvaal—Chinese Labour, Supersession of White Labour by, alleged, Feb. 27, 1285–1289, 1292.

Harwood, Mr. G. [Bolton]

Ireland, Administration of—Home Rule Question, Feb. 21, 829–831.

Haslett, Sir J. H. [Belfast, N.]

Ireland, Administration of—Home Rule Question, etc., Feb. 21, 786–788.

King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 20, 716–720; Feb. 21, 785–788.

Hastings Harbour Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 23, 1017.

Hastings Harbour District Railway (Abandonment) Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 28, 1441.

Hastings Tramways Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 430.

Hayden, Mr. J. P. [Rosscommon, S.]

Drainage Schemes, Funds for, Feb. 27, 1334.

Dundrum Lunatic Asylum—Dismissal of Shoemaker, Feb. 28, 1487.

Income Tax Exemption Forms, Supply of, to Applicants, Feb. 21, 774.

Irish Language, Knowledge of, by Postal Officials, Feb. 27, 1336.

Land Purchase—Advances under Act of 1903, Feb. 27, 1333.

Hayter, Rt. Hon. Sir A. D. [Walsall]

Army.
Adjutancies, Militia Officers' Grievances in connection with, Feb. 23, 1117.
Officers, Shortage in Number of, Feb. 23 1116, 1117.
Reform Proposals, Feb. 23, 1117.
Rifle, New Pattern, Feb. 23, 1118.

Hayti

Sugar, Exportation of—Decision of Brussels Convention.
Qs. Mr. Lough; As. Mr. Gerald Balfour, Feb. 16, 312, 313.

Healy, Mr. T. M. [Louth, N.]

Administration of Ireland, Party Tactics, etc., Feb. 21, 808-817.

Hemphill, Mr. [Tyrone, N.]

Indian Medical Service—Compensation for Service in Burmah, Feb. 17, 471.

Strabane Dispensary Doctor, Salary of, Feb. 17, 471.

Herzegovina

Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Hessle Gas Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 430.
2R.* Feb. 24, 1205.

Higham and Hundred of Hoo Water Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 571.

Highland Light Infantry

Brigading of.
Q. Mr. Malcolm; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 28, 1450.

Highland Railway Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 27, 1295.

Historical Manuscripts
For particular Manuscripts see their names.
Reports of Royal Commission Presented, Feb. 14, 51, 81.

Hitchin and District Gas Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20. 571

Hobhouse, Mr. C. E. [Bristol, E.]
Aden Frontier Force, Withdrawal of, Feb. 22, 893.
Africa, South, Garrison in—Sale of Stores by Colonel Morgan, alleged, Feb. 23, 1086; Feb. 28, 1469.
Army.
  Continuous Changes of Policy as to, Disastrous Effect of, Feb. 23, 1120–1126.
  Reform Proposals, Feb. 23, 1123–1126.
  Uniform, Changes in, and Cost of—Returns, Feb. 21, 764.
Yeomanry, Reduction in number of, Feb. 23, 1122.

Hobhouse, Rt. Hon. H. [Somersetshire, E.]
Rural District Council Bye-laws as to Building of Cottages—Return proposed, Feb. 23, 1076.

Holland, Sir W. H. [Yorkshire W. R. Rotherham]
Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in, Feb. 15, 238–240.
Navy, Colonial Contributions towards cost of, Feb. 15, 240.

Home Office
Secretary of State—Rt. Hon. A. A. Douglas.
Under Secretary—Mr. T. H. Cochrane.

Hong Kong
Educational System—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 47, 88.

Hope, Mr. J. [Sheffield, Brightside]
Navy.
  Cruisers, Date of Ordering Armour for, Feb. 24, 1210.
  "Orion," Information as to construction of, Feb. 20, 584.

Horsham
Parliamentary Election—New Writ and new Member sworn, Feb. 14, 65.

House of Commons and House of Lords
see under Parliament.

House-letting (Scotland) Bill
c. 1R*. Feb. 17, 477.

Housing of the Working Classes Acts Amendment Bill.
c. 1R.* Feb. 22, 1016.

Hull
Pilotage Rates to Goole—Order in Council Presented, Feb. 14, 62, 102.

Hull, Barnsley, and West Riding Junction Railway and Dock Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20. 571.

Hull (Channel Islands Animals) Landing Place Revocation Order Presented, Feb. 15, 173; Feb. 16, 283.

Humber Conservancy Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
  2R.* Feb. 21, 721.

Hunt, Mr. R. [Shropshire, Ludlow]
Army Rifle, New Pattern, Feb. 23, 1162, 1163.
Military Training for Lads, Feb. 23, 1163.

Hythe Corporation Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
  2R.* Feb. 21, 721.

Ilfracombe Harbour and Improvement Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 571.
  2R.* Feb. 27, 1294.

Imperial Institute
Indian Section—Annual Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 43, 83.

Imperial Ottoman Guaranteed Loan 1855
Account Presented, Feb. 14, 58, 103.

Imports
see Exports and Imports, and for particular Industries, see names of Industries.

Ince
Polling District, Order altering, Presented, Feb. 14, 60, 97.

Income Tax
Appeals—Ignorance of Taxpayer of Date of Hearing, Procedure in case of.
  Qs. Mr. Farrell; As. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 22, 894.
Collection.
  Date of, Operation of New Rule, etc.
    Qs. Mr. Lough, Sir G. Bartley, Mr. G. Bowles; As. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 20, 598–600.
  Delays permitted—Application of instructions to all parts of the United Kingdom.
    Qs. Mr. M'Crae, Mr. Flynn; As. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 23, 1099, 1100.
  Ireland—Non-payment by Landlord and threat of distraint on tenanted land.
    Qs. Mr. Jas. O'Connor, Mr. O'Shaughnessy; As. Mr A. Chamberlain, Feb, 20. 617.

[cont.

Income Tax—cont.

Collection—cont.

Notices, Authority for issuing.
Q. Mr. J. Ellis; A. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 16, 300, 301.

Treasury suggestions as to expediting, etc., alleged.
Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr A. Chamberlain, Feb. 23, 1077.

Uniformity of Practice between England and Scotland, Issue of ten-day notices, etc.
Qs. Mr. McCrae; As. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 21, 773, 774.

Exemptions—Supply of Forms to applicants.
Q. Mr. Hayden; A. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 21, 774, 775.

Recovery.

Goerz & Co., Messrs., Decision in case of.
Qs. Mr. Whitley; As. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 20, 597, 598.

Return as to, proposed.
Q. Mr. McCrae; A. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 23, 1099.

India Office

Secretary of State—Rt. Hon. Sir John Brodrick.

Under Secretary—Marquess of Bath.

India

Administration—Separation of Judicial and Executive Functions.
Q. Mr. H. Roberts; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 23, 1073.

Army.

Cavalry—Adoption of Patterson Equipment.
Q. Sir C. Rasch; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 22, 890, 891.

Drafts for, Provisions for supply of.
O. Mr. Peel, Feb. 23, 1158, 1159.

Re-organisation of—Lord Kitchener's proposals.
Os. Mr. C. Hobhouse, Feb. 23, 1124.
Q. Mr. Buchanan; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 28, 1465.

Reserves for.
Os. Mr. C. Hobhouse, Feb. 23, 1124.

Roman Catholic Chaplains, Position of.
Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 23, 1097, 1098.

Assam, see that title.

Bengal Excise Bill—Procedure for ascertaining Local Opinion as to Opening of Liquor Shops.
Q. Mr. H. Roberts; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 27, 1314, 1315.

India—cont.

Cancer in—Statistics as to.
Qs. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 21, 772, 773.

Civil Service, see that title.

Curzon, Lord, Position and Function of, during residence in Great Britain.
Qs. Mr. S. MacNeill; As. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 28, 1475, 1476.

Dir, Information as to, Subsidy received by Khan, etc.
Q. Sir B. Gurdon; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 20, 587.

Forest Service, Scheme for Instruction for,
Q. Sir J. Gorst; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 28, 1465.

Irrigation Schemes, Information as to.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 23. 1078.

Loans.

England, raised in—Return Presented, Feb. 14, 62, 100.

India, raised in—Return Presented, Feb. 14, 61, 100.

Medical Service—Compensation for Service in Burmah.
Q. Mr. Hemphill; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 17, 471.

Mineral Deposits in Central Provinces, Information as to.
Q. Sir M. Bhownaggree; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 23, 1097.

National Congress Resolutions, Refusal of Copy of, by Viceroy, alleged.
Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 16, 307, 308.

Police, Commission on—Date of Tabling Report.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 16, 301, 302.
Q. Mr. H. Roberts; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 16, 307.

Post Office—Aden-Bombay Service, Conditions of work in.
Q. Mr. S. Smith; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 21, 761.

Railway from Bombay to Sind viâ Cutch, Progress made with.
Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 21, 760.

Salt Tax, Abolition or Reduction of, proposed.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 23, 1077, 1078.

Sanitary measures, Report on, Presented, Feb. 14, 46, 83.

Secretary of State.

Establishment, Revision of—Order in Council, Presented, Feb. 14, 63, 102.

India—cont.

Secretary of State.—cont.

Salary, Placing on Estimates, proposed. Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 17, 470.

Sirdar Mayatulla of Afghanistan, Visit of, to Viceroy.

References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 4.
Os. Marquess of Winchester, Feb. 14, 8.

Statistical Abstract, Presented, Feb. 14, 46, 83.

Tea.

Plantations, Vernacular Education of Children on.
Q. Sir M. Bhownaggree; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 27, 1303, 1304.

Russian Duty on.
Q. Mr. E. Wason; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 20, 601.

Retaliatory Measures, etc.
Q. Mr. Partington; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 24, 1211, 1212.

Trade Review, Presented, Feb. 14, 46, 83.

Transvaal, British Indians in, see under Transvaal.

Industrial and Provident Societies

Report of Registrar Presented, Feb. 17, 431, 469.

Industrial Property Convention

Cuba, Accession of, Feb. 14, 45, 92.

Industrial Schools

see Reformatory and Industrial Schools.

Inebriate Reformatories

East Hailing—Regulations Presented, Feb. 14, 60, 96.

Rules for Management of, Presented, Feb. 14, 60, 96; Feb. 17, 431, 468.

Inebriates Acts

Report of Inspector, Presented, Feb. 14, 49, 82.

Inland Revenue Department

Extra Duty, Pay for.
Q. Mr. J. Devlin; A. Mr. V. Cavendish, Feb. 22, 884.

Ireland—Adjustment with Post Office, Arrangement as to.
Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. V. Cavendish, Feb. 23, 1110, 1111.

Inspectors of Workshops, &c.

Number Appointed by Local Authorities, Salaries, Duties, etc.—Return Ordered, Feb. 15, 173.

International Copyright Acts

Sweden, Accession of—Order in Council, Presented, Feb. 14, 63, 92.

Ionian Islands

Trade Reports, Presented, Feb. 14, 39.

Ireland

Lord-Lieutenant—Earl of Dudley.

Chief Secretary—Rt. Hon. G. Wyndham.

Attorney-General—Rt. Hon. J. Atkinson.

Solicitor-General—Mr. J. H. M. Campbell.

For particular places see their names; also titles of subjects, as Land Commission, Post Office, etc.

Accounts, Public Audit of—Transfer to Dublin, proposed.
Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. V. Cavendish, Feb. 28, 1452, 1453.

Administration of, Objections to Existing System, Question of Self-government, etc.

Debates [Lords] Feb. 17, 432; [Commons] Feb. 20, 622; Feb. 21, 785; Feb. 22, 964.

Cavan County Rate Collector, Action of the County Council, 638, 679, 813.

Chief Secretary.

Average Duration of Office of, 626, 632.

Cognisance of, and Responsibility for Proceedings of Boards, 626, 713.

Dunraven Devolution Scheme, Connection with, 641, 643, 644, 650, 652, 653–656, 676, 683, 690, 700, 707-710, 793, 794, 797, 806, 825, 840, 850, 855, 860, 861, 971, 972.

Irish Reform Association, Cognisance of Report of, 439, 441, 789, 971, 976, 978.

Resignation of, Question as to, 825,

Responsibility of, for Administrative Schemes, 444, 825, 848–850, 857–860.

Civil Governments, Cost of, per Head of the Population, 627, 695.

Civil Service Staff, Changes in, 639.

Conciliation, Policy of, 445, 646, 647, 667, 670, 672, 673, 701.

Condition of Ireland, 842, 843.

Continuity of Policy, Necessity for, 669.

Co-ordination, Direction and Control of Detached Boards, Scheme for, 651, 664, 682, 685, 688, 698, 874, 968, 971, 982, 983.

Cost of, Burden of Taxation, etc., 624, 627, 694, 695, 798, 832, 833, 847, 868.

[cont.

Ireland—cont.
- Administration of, etc.—cont.
  - Debates—cont.
    - Delegation of Legislative Powers to Boards, Question of, 457, 647, 649, 654, 655, 659, 661, 670, 673, 710, 711, 969, 971, 983.
    - Development Fund Grant—Advantages of the Scheme, 656, 657.
    - Drummond, Sir T., Treatment of, by the Government in 1839, 448, 625, 668, 809.
    - Dublin Castle System.
      - Denunciation of, 630, 678, 680, 696, 697, 720, 798, 819, 823–826, 838, 839, 840, 990.
      - Manifesto by Ulster Members, 630, 631.
    - Dunraven Devolution Scheme, 629, 630, 647–656, 670, 711, 996.
      - Attorney-General, Charges made by, 432, 433, 435, 450, 452–454, 456, 463, 465, 466, 792, 990.
      - Betrayal of Unionist Policy, etc., 642, 644–646, 652, 682–685, 699, 997.
      - Chief Commissioner of Dublin Police, Connection of, with, 684.
      - Genesis and History of the Scheme, 434–440, 457.
      - Home Rule tendency of the Scheme, 450–452, 465, 804, 827, 828, 830.
      - Land Conference Committee, Connection of, with, 435, 436, 440, 446.
      - Lord-Lieutenant and Chief Secretary, Cognisance by, of Sir A. MacDonnell's Connection with the Scheme, 448, 449, 466, 641, 642–644, 650–656, 675, 676, 683, 690, 700, 707–710, 793, 794, 797, 806, 825, 840, 850, 855, 860, 861, 969, 971, 972, 974, 976, 1002.
      - MacDonnell, Sir A., Connection of, with, 433, 439, 440, 442, 457, 458, 462, 464, 641, 642, 643, 652, 670, 682–685, 700, 707, 708, 789, 790, 804, 805, 822, 965, 967, 970, 971, 973, 974.
      - Meeting at House of Sir A. MacDonnell, Abandonment of, 438, 652, 654, 655, 797.

Ireland—cont.
- Administration of, etc. cont.
  - Debates—cont.
    - Dunraven Devolution Scheme—cont.
      - Personal Explanation by Lord Dunraven, 432–443.
      - Report issued by Irish Reform Association, Terms of, etc., 439, 441.
      - Responsibility for, 433, 642, 644, 697, 698, 708, 822, 969.
      - Transfer of Money in Bulk to the Administration, proposed, 643, 689.
    - Emigration, Causes of Increase in, 786.
    - Financial Council, Creation of, 457, 657, 659, 660, 665, 666, 670, 690, 788, 874, 969, 971, 982, 983.
    - History of, since 1882, Party Tactics, etc., 810, 817, 863, 864.
    - Home Rule, Question of, 623, 624, 631, 632, 662, 670, 674, 680, 681, 683, 719, 787, 799, 819, 820, 827–831, 835–837, 840–842, 861, 862, 864, 865, 870, 991.
      - Definition of, 715, 716, 718, 787, 843.
      - Irish Unionist Party, Attitude of, towards, 634, 646, 683, 820–822, 838.
      - Liberal Party, Attitude of, towards, 633, 799–801, 828–831.
    - Imperial Contribution, Increase in, 627, 694, 833.
    - Irish Parliamentary Party, Policy of, Adherence to Principle of Home Rule, etc., 623, 624, 634.
    - Irish Question, Changed aspect of, since 1886, 702, 703, 718.
    - Irish Reform Association.
      - Formation of, Circumstances of, 629, 658, 660.
      - MacDonnell, Sir A., Connection with, 641, 642, 643, 652, 789.
      - Report issued by, on August 30, 1904, Terms of, Knowledge of, by the Chief Secretary, etc., 439, 441, 789, 971, 976, 978.
      - Transfer of Money in Bulk to the Administration, proposed, 643, 689.

[cont.

Ireland—cont.

Administration of, etc.—cont.

Debates—cont.

Irish Unionist Discontent, 634–646, 676, 682–687, 696, 699, 705, 706, 714, 812, 813, 819, 997, 998.

Land Act, 1903.

Administration and Working of, 692–694.

Non-judicial Tenants, Treatment of, 692, 693.

Law Officers, Position of, in the Administration, 639.

Liberal Party and the Nationalists, Understanding between, 800, 801, 814.

Local Boards, Unionists and Protestants excluded from, alleged, 637, 638.

MacDonnell, Sir Antony.

Address presented to, by Nationalists in Ireland, 445, 456.

Chief Secretary's Attitude towards, 628, 648, 660, 661, 681, 682, 791, 845, 984–986, 988, 989, 1007–1010.

Censure of, by the Cabinet, Reasons for, 661, 662, 671, 672, 678, 682, 709, 790, 849, 984–986, 988, 990, 995, 1001–1003, 1007–1010.

Cabinet Meeting to discuss, alleged, 792, 793, 794.

Changes in Administration effected by, 639, 640.

Conditions of Appointment, Special Powers Granted to, etc., 442, 449, 461, 464, 465, 648–652, 664, 699, 707, 714, 787, 788, 791, 792, 802, 805, 806, 847, 856–858, 872, 874, 965, 967, 970, 971, 973, 974, 978–982, 986, 992, 994, 997, 999–1003, 1005–1010.

Variation of, Proposals as to, 977, 1003, 1004.

Correspondence with Chief Secretary, Tabling, 650, 690, 839, 850, 859, 873, 967, 978.

Text of, 979–981, 985, 986, 999.

Ireland—cont

Admininistration of—cont.

Debates—cont.

MacDonnell, Sir A.—cont.

Dunraven Devolution Scheme, Connection with, 433, 439, 440, 442, 457, 458, 462, 464, 641, 642, 643, 652, 670, 671, 683–685, 700, 707, 708, 789, 790, 804, 805, 822, 965, 967, 970, 971, 973, 974.

Indian Record of, 447, 454, 459, 460, 677.

Partisan Methods of, 700, 701, 717.

Policy, Points of, discussed prior to Appointment, 650–652, 664, 688, 872, 873, 979, 992, 993.

Qualifications for Position, 648–650, 677, 678, 827, 844.

Reasons for Appointing, 986, 987.

Retention of, as Under-Secretary, Question as to, 455, 820.

Unionist Feeling against Appointment and Policy of, 791, 801–803, 815, 821, 844.

Material and Intellectual Progress of the People not promoted by, alleged, 624, 633, 786, 798, 832, 842, 846, 847, 868.

Moderate Central Party, Proposals as to, 437, 450, 652, 655, 795, 796, 998.

"Nationality" and "Nationalists" — Misleading Terms, 673, 674, 710, 715, 716, 813, 852, 853.

North Armagh, Member for, Absence of, from Debate, 633.

Police, Cost of, 627, 695.

Popular Representation, Lack of, 624, 625, 833, 867.

Population, Decrease in, 627, 786, 832.

Press Opinion, 635.

Priests, Influence of, 640, 686.

Private Bill Legislation, Proposals as to, 445, 447, 689, 690.

Public Appointments, Allocation of, 814, 818, 837, 838.

Public Boards, Government by, Lack of responsibility to the People, etc., 626, 713.

Public Funds, Unfair Distribution of, Boycott of Unionist Counties, etc., 635–638, 646, 686, 717

Ireland—cont.

Administration of, etc.—cont.

Debates—cont.

Ridgeway, Sir W., Memorandum of, Outlining Scheme of Self-Government, 629, 630, 851, 852, 966, 967.

Straightforwardness, Lack of, alleged, 634–646, 681, 697.

Taxation, Method of Levying, 831.

Ulster Union, Formation of, 645, 680.

Under Secretaryship.

Character of the Office, Powers granted, etc., 965, 966.

MacDonnell, Sir A., see that subheading.

Origin of the Appointment, 965

University Education Question.

Delay in Settlement of, Attitude of the Government, etc., 690, 691, 712, 820, 845, 846, 869, 987, 988, 993.

Dunraven, Lord, Scheme of, 691, 692.

Roman Catholic Bishops, Promises to, etc., 640, 641, 691, 692.

Chief Secretary.

Method of Making Appointment.
Qs. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 27, 1334, 1335.

Resignation of.
Qs. Mr. Runciman, Mr. W. Churchill; As. Mr. Acland-Hood, Feb. 28, 1586.

Commission of Inquiry into, proposed.
Q. Dr. Thompson; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 27, 1297.

Lord-Lieutenant.

Dunraven Devolution Scheme, Views on.
Qs. Mr. C. Craig, Mr. Lonsdale; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 27, 1329.

Resignation of.
Qs. Mr. Pirie; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 23, 1109, 1110.

MacDonnell, Sir A.

Censure of, by the Government, Reason for.
Qs. Mr. C. Douglas, Mr. J. Redmond; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1327, 1328.

Ireland—cont.

Administration of, etc.—cont.

MacDonnell, Sir A.—cont.

Conditions of Appointment of, etc.
Qs. Mr. Lonsdale, Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Mr. T. W. Russell, Mr. Daziel; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 22, 903–907.
Qs. Mr. Dillon, Mr. Sloan; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 23, 1110.

Motion for Adjournment of the House.
Qs. Mr. J. Redmond, Mr. Speaker. Feb 22, 910.

Variation of, etc.
Qs. Mr. Dalziel, Mr. Blake; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 22, 906, 907.

Correspondence with Chief Secretary, etc.
Qs. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Mr. Whitley, Mr. J. Redmond; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Mr. Wyndham, Mr. Speaker, Feb. 22, 903–905

Dunraven Devolution Scheme, Connection with.
Qs. Mr. C. Craig, Mr. W. Moore; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 16, 324–326.
Qs. Mr. W. Moore, Mr. Lonsdale, Mr. Russell, Mr. Delany, Mr. J. Devlin, Mr. C. Craig; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 610, 611.

Prime Minister's Letter to Chief Secretary approving of Appointment—Tabling.
Q. Mr. Whitley; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 28, 1491.

Term of Office of.
Q. Mr. C. Craig; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 16, 325.
Q. Mr. Lonsdale, Mr T. W. Russell; As. Mr. A. J Balfour, Feb. 22, 904–906.

Reform Association, Policy of, Origin of Dunraven Devolution Scheme, etc.

References to, in Debate [Lords] Feb. 17, 432, 446, 450, 456, 464, 465.

Agricultural Statistics Presented, Feb. 14, 44, 86.

Agriculture and Technical Instruction, see that title.

cont.

Ireland—cont.

Alien Immigration into—Evidence before the Commission of Inquiry.
Qs. Mr. Sloan; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 28, 1491, 1492.

Assizes, see that title.

Banking, Railway and Shipping Statistics, Presented, Feb. 14, 48, 86.

Beetroot, Encouragement of Cultivation of.
Q. Mr. O'Dowd; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 24, 1212.

Committals—Returns Presented, Feb. 22, 723, 753.

Congested Districts Board, see that title.

Constabulary, Royal Irish, see that title.

Deputy-Lieutenants, Qualifications of—Returns Presented, Feb. 14, 56, 94.

Development Grant Act—Proceedings—Report Presented, Feb. 14. 50, 87.

Drainage Schemes, Provision of Funds for.
Q. Mr. Hayden;; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1334.

Education, see Education (Ireland.)

Estates, see names of estates.

Evictions, see that title.

Financial System—Inland Revenue and Post Office, Amount annually adjusted between.
Q. Mr. P.. O'Brien; A. Mr. V. Cavendish, Feb. 23, 1110, 1111.

Harbours, see title Piers and Harbours, also names of places.

Irish Language, Necessity for Knowledge of, by Postal Officials, alleged.
Q. Mr. Hayden; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 27, 1336, 1337.

Land Commission, see that title.

Land Purchase, see that title.

Lights Board, see under Lights and Lighthouses—Ireland.

Local Government Board, see that title.

Lunatics and Lunatic Asylums, see that title—Ireland.

MacDonnell, Sir A., see under subheading Administration.

Mail Service, see under Post Office.

Marine Works, Grants for—Allocation, etc.
Q. Mr. O'Doherty; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 24, 1213.

Motors, see that title—Ireland.

National School Teachers, see under Education (Ireland.)

Parliamentary Elections, see that title, subheadings New Writs and New Members Sworn.

Paupers, Deportation of, see under Poor Law—Paupers.

Pharmacy Acts, see that title.

Piers and Harbours, see that title, also names of places.

Police, see Constabulary, Royal Irish.

Polling Clerks, National School Teachers as.
Q. Mr. Sloan; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 16, 324.

Poor Rate Collection in Galway, New Regulations for.
Q. Col. Nolan; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 615.

Potatoes, Seed, Grants for
Q Col. Nolan; A Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 16, 326.

Railways, see under that title; also names of places, as Donegal.

Reform Association, see under subheading Administration.

Reformatory and Industrial Schools, see that title.

Rock Angus, Reason for not lighting.
Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 21, 762.

Roman Catholic University Question.

Government Attitude towards.
Qs. Mr. T. L. Corbett, Mr. A. Taylor; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Mr. Speaker, Feb. 27, 1328.

Metropolitan Police Chief Commissioner, Connection of, with scheme.
Q. Mr. Sloan; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 24, 1213.

Science, Royal College of, see under Dublin.

Supreme Court of Judicature, see Law Courts—Ireland.

Swine, Movement of—Revocation of restrictions proposed.
Qs. Mr. Delany; A. Mr. A. Fellowes, Feb. 20, 585, 586.

Taxation, see that title—Ireland.

Telephone Service, see that title.

Universities, see subheading Roman Catholic University; and for particular Universities, see their names.

Irish Language
see under Ireland.

Irish Reform Association
see Ireland—Administration.

Iron and Steel
Exhibits at the St. Louis Exhibition—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 41.

Ispahan
Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Italy
Foreign Trade of, Report Presented, Feb. 14, 41.

Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 39, 41.

Ivory Coast
Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 41.

Jamaica
Military and Naval Works, Expenditure on. Q. Mr. Buchanan; A. Mr. V. Cavendish, Feb. 21, 758.
Military Establishment, Reduction in. Q. Mr. Buchanan; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 23, 1073.
Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 43, 90.

James of Hereford, Lord
Business of the House, Opportunity of dealing with, in the House of Lords, Feb. 16, 290.

Japan
Import Duties on British Goods—Statement Presented, Feb. 14, 52, 85.
Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 39, 40.
War with Russia, see Russo-Japanese War.

Jessel, Capt. H. M. [St Prancras, S.]
Army.
  Colonial Garrisons, Reasons for Reduction in, Feb. 23, 1153.
  Officers.
    Pay of, Feb. 23, 1151, 1152.
    Shortage in, Feb. 23, 1151.
  Reorganisation proposals, Feb. 23, 1149, 1150.
Volunteers, Reduction in number of, proposed, Feb. 23, 1150.

Joicey, Sir J. [Durham, Chester-le-Street]
Sugar—Working of Brussels Convention, Effect on Prices, etc., Feb. 28, 1544–1548.

Joint Stock Companies, etc.
Russia, Agreement with, Presented, Feb. 14, 45, 92.

Journal of the House of Commons
Sessional Order, Feb. 14, 80.

Journals Committee
Appointment of—Sessional Order, Feb. 14, 64.

Joyce, Mr. M. [Limerick]
Limerick School, Report on Knitting in, Qualifications of Inspectress, etc., Feb. 27, 1332.

Judge Advocate-General
Duties, Discharge of, etc.
Qs. Mr. S. MacNeill; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 16, 328.

Judicature, Supreme Court of see under Law Courts.

Judicial Statistics
England and Wales.
  Criminal Statistics, Presented, Feb. 14, 52, 83.
  Part II, Presented, Feb. 22, 881; Feb. 23, 1018.
Scotland—Presented, Feb. 14, 51, 89.

Jurors' Expenses (Ireland) Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 21, 755.

Kearley, Mr. H. E. [Devonport]
Marshall Islands—Treatment by Germany of British Shipping Trade, Feb. 27, 1298.
Navy Establishments, Discharges from, Feb. 27, 1311.
Sugar—Working of Brussels Convention, Effect on Prices, etc., Feb. 27, 1396–1408, 1413, 1414, 1424, 1426, 1427, 1435, 1438.

Kennaway, Rt. Hon. Sir J. H., Bart. [Devonshire, Honiton]
Macedonia, State of, Progress of Reform Measures, etc., Feb. 27, 1355–1357.
Volunteers—Reform Proposals, Feb. 22, 943.
Yeomanry—Ammunition Allowances, Feb. 28. 1467.

Kennedy, Mr. Vincent P. [Cavan, W.]
Drumheel—Evicted Farm, Letting of, Feb. 20, 612.
Land Purchase—Latnadronagh Crosserlough—Quarry Rights of Owen M'Cabe. Feb 20, 611.

Kenyon-Slaney, Rt. Hon. Col. W. [Shropshire, Newport]
Ireland, Administration of—Home Rule Question, Feb. 21, 799–801.

Kent
(Isle of Thanet Division), Parliamentary Election—New Writ and New Member Sworn, Feb. 14, 65.

Kerry County
Council Auditor, Complaint as to.
Q. Mr. T. O'Donnell; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 28, 1487, 1488.

Khorassan
Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 39.

Killbride, Mr. D. [Kildare, S.]
Canadian Cattle, Restrictions on importation of, into United Kingdom, Feb. 22. 899.

Kildalkey
Constabulary Force, Dispersion of.
Q. Mr. Sheehy; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1305.

Kildare
Parliamentary Elections—New Member Sworn, Feb. 16, 329.

Killadysert
Union Accounts, Surcharge on.
Q. Mr. Sheehy; A. Mr. Wyndham. Feb. 27, 1333, 1334.

Kimber, Sir H. [Wandsworth]
Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in, Feb. 16, 392–395, 397.

King, Sir H. S. [Hull, Central]
Dogger Bank Fishing Fleet, Protection of, during Passage of Third Baltic Fleet, Feb. 22, 890.

King's County
Constabulary, Reduction in.
Q. Mr. Lonsdale; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 608.

Rent, Seizures for—Police Assistance, etc.
Q. Mr. Reddy; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1330, 1331.

King's Speech
Address in Answer.

For details of Debates on Amendments see Subjects of Amendments.

Debates, Feb. 14, 6, 108; Feb. 15, 178; Feb. 16, 329; Feb. 17, 481; Feb. 20, 622; Feb. 21, 785; Feb. 22, 911; Feb. 23, 1112; Feb. 24, 1216; Feb. 27, 1347; Feb. 28, 1494.

Fiscal Policy of the Country—Motion [Mr. Asquith], Feb. 14, 178.

Ireland, Administration of—Motion [Mr. J. Redmond], Feb. 20, 622.

Macedonia, State of—Motion [Mr. Stevenson], Feb. 27, 1347.

Motion [Marquess of Winchester] Feb. 14, 6—Seconder [Lord Oranmore and Browne], 11.

Motion [Mr. Mount], Feb. 14, 108; Seconder [Mr. S. Roberts.], 114.

Proceedings on, to have Precedence—Motion [Mr. A. J. Balfour], Feb. 21, 780.
Os. Mr. Bowles, Mr. Speaker, Feb. 21, 781; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 782.

Transvaal, Chinese Labour Question—Motion [Dr. Macnamara], Feb. 17, 481.

Omissions from.
Os. Earl Spencer, Feb. 14, 22, 25; Viscount Goschen, 37; Sir H. Vincent, 140; Mr. G. Bowles, 150.

Text of, Feb. 14, 1–5.

Kingston Estate
Rent Appeals at Mitchelstown.
Q. Mr. W. Abraham; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 612, 613.

Sale of.
Q. Mr. W. Abraham; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 22, 901, 902.

Kingston-upon-Hull
Port Regulations Presented, Feb. 14, 61, 99.

Kinvarra Harbour
Works, Decision as to.
Q. Mr. Duffy; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1333.

Kiukiang
Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

"Knight Commander"
Sinking of, by Russian Cruiser, Information as to.
O. Mr. G. Bowles, Feb. 14, 148.

Kobe
Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Kyle
Conveyance of Fish to, from Western Highlands, Facilities for.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 27, 1322.

Labouchere, Mr. H. [Northampton]
Chartered Company of South Africa—Capital, Price of Shares, etc., Feb. 17, 472.

Transvaal — Chinese Labour, Feb. 17, 506–513.

Labourers' Cottages (Ireland)
Schemes, Allocation of Grant for.
Q. Mr. Lundon; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 23, 1106.

Lagos
Railways—Correspondence Presented, Feb. 14, 45, 91.

Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 42, 90.

Lambert, Mr. G. [Devonshire, South Molton]
Agriculture, Condition of, Feb. 24, 1262–1266.

Army Reorganisation Proposals, Feb. 23, 1132–1135.

Militia Reform Proposals, Feb. 23, 1134, 1135.

Lambton, Mr. F. W. [Durham, S.E.]
Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in, Feb. 15, 268–271.

Lancashire
County Court Registrar, R. F. Addie—Order excluding from private practice, Presented, Feb. 14, 55, 107.

Inebriate Reformatory, Rules as to, Presented, Feb. 17, 431, 468.

Lancaster
Polling District, Order Altering, Presented, Feb. 14, 60, 97.

Lancaster, Duchy of Chancellor—Rt. Hon. Sir W. H. Walrond.
Accounts Presented, Feb. 17, 431, 468.

Land Commission, Ireland
Administration of Act of 1903—Instructions issued by Commissioners.
Qs. Mr. Dillon, Mr T. W. Russell; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 609.
Estimate, Supplementary, Presented, Feb. 28, 1448.
Fair Rent Appeals—Kingston Estate second term Rents.
Q. Mr. W. Abraham; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 612, 613.
Proceedings—Returns Presented, Feb. 14, 47, 54, 86, 94.
Report of Estates Commissioners, Date of Presenting.
Qs. Mr. T.W. Russell, Mr. Dillon; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 607 608.

Land Drainage and Sewers Bill
c. 1R. *, Feb. 17, 477.

Land Purchase
For particular Estates see their names.
Advances under Act of 1903, Information as to.
Q. Mr. Hayden; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1333.
Compulsory Powers of purchase, proposed, Q. Mr. J. O'Kelly; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 15, 177.
Future tenants, Purchasing powers of. Q. Mr. O'Dowd; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 609.
Labourers, Accommodation for, on Estates, under Clause 96 of Land Act, 1903. Q. Mr. Cullinan; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1310.
Latnadronagh Crosserlough—Quarry rights of Owen M'Cabe.
Q. Mr. V. Kennedy; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 611, 612.
Sligo—Refusal of Landowners to sell, alleged.
Q. Mr. O'Dowd; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 614.

Land Registry (New Buildings) Act, 1900
Accounts Presented, Feb. 14, 104.

Land System
Dual Ownership, Objections to.
Os. Lord Willoughby de Eresby, Feb. 24, 1233, 1234; Mr. Bright, 1243; Mr. A. Fellowes, 1248; Mr. J. Collings, 1253.
Evils of, necessity for Reform, etc.
Os. Mr. Whitley, Feb. 24, 1227–1230; Lord Willoughby de Eresby, 1231.
Tax on Capital Value of Land, proposed, O. Mr. Whitley, Feb. 24, 1229, 1230.

Land Values (Assessment and Rating) Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 474.

Land Values Taxation (Scotland) Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 474.

Lands Valuation (Scotland) Amendment Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 480.

Lansdowne, Marquess of—Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.
Alien Immigration, Legislative Proposals as to, Feb. 14, 35.
Army.
Reform Proposals, Feb. 14. 34.
Rifle, New Pattern, Feb. 23, 1066–1069.
Business of the House, Opportunity of dealing with, in the House of Lords, Feb. 16, 290.
Committees, Chairman of—Resignation of Lord Morley and Appointment of Lord Onslow, Feb. 16, 286, 290.
Dunraven Devolution Scheme, Origin of, Connection of Sir A. MacDonnell with, etc., Feb. 17, 455, 466.
Electoral Areas, Redistribution of, Feb. 14, 36.
France, Arbitration Agreement with Great Britain, Ratification of, Feb. 14, 31.
King's Speech—Address in Answer. Feb. 14, 28–37.
Macedonia, Reform Proposals, Progress made with, Feb. 14, 29, 30.
Morley, Earl of, Death of—Tribute to Services as Chairman of Committees, etc., Feb. 27, 1275.
North Sea Incident, Commission of Inquiry into, Feb. 14, 29.
Russo-Japanese War.
Contraband, Definition of, Feb. 14, 29.
Neutrality of Great Britain, Feb. 14, 28.
Tibet Expedition, Government Policy as to, Feb. 14, 32–34.
Transvaal.
Chinese Labour, Importation of, Feb. 14, 32.
Representative Institutions for, Feb. 14, 32.
Unemployed, Method of dealing with, Feb. 14, 35.

Larkhill, Sligo
School at, Provision for Education of Roman Catholic Children at.
Q. Mr. O'Dowd; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1324, 1325.

Lascar Seamen
see under Merchant Shipping—Seamen.

Latnadronagh Crosserlough
Quarry Rights of Owen M'Cabe.
Q. Mr. V. Kennedy; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 611, 612.

Laurenço Marques
Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 39.

Laurie, Lt. Gen. J. W. [Pembroke and Haverfordwest]
Motors—Heavy Car Regulations, Feb. 28, 1478, 1479.

Law, Mr. A. B. [Glasgow, Blackfriars]
King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 28, 1521–1533, 1567.
Sugar—Working of Brussels Convention, Effect on Prices, etc., Feb. 27, 1404, 1405, Feb. 28, 1521–1533.

Law, Mr. H. A. [Donegal, W.]
Administration of Ireland, Question of Home Rule, etc., Feb. 20, 715.
Burtonport Harbour, Dredging of, Feb. 24, 1212.
Macedonia, Condition of, Progress of Reforms, etc., Feb. 27, 1367–1369.

Law Courts
Cases stated for the Court of Crown Cases Reserved, Amendment of Law as to.
References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 5.
Os. Marquess of Winchester, Feb. 14, 11.
Criminal Appeal, Court of, Decision as to Establishment of.
Qs. Mr. Sloan, Mr. S. MacNeill; As. Mr. A. Douglas, Feb 28, 1480, 1481.
Ireland—Supreme Court of Judicature, Accounts of—Return Ordered, Feb. 15, 175; Presented, Feb. 16, 297.
Judicature, Supreme Court of.
Accounts and Reports Presented, Feb. 14, 55, 103.
Rules Presented, Feb. 14, 58, 107.

Lawrence, Mr. W. F. [Liverpool, Abercrombie]
Merchant Shipping—Sending home Seamen, Payment of Cost, etc., Feb. 28, 1451.
Sugar—Working of Brussels Convention, Effect on Prices, etc., Feb. 28, 1503–1507.

Lawson, Mr. J. G. [Yorkshire, North Riding, Thirsk]
Motors—Speed Regulations for Heavy Cars—Compensation for damage done, Feb. 20, 602.

Lawson, Sir W. [Cornwall, Camborne]
Parliamentary Elections, Interference of Peers at, Feb. 14, 66.

Leasehold Enfranchisement Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 478.

Lee, Mr. A. H.—Lord of the Admiralty (Hampshire, Fareham]
Recruiting Notice posted in Berkshire, etc., Authority for, Feb. 16, 305.
Rosyth Base, Expenditure on, Feb. 23, 1086.
Speech by, on the Strength of the Navy, Criticisms on.
Os. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Feb. 14, 125; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 168.
Ullapool, Progress Made with Establishment of Naval Base at, Feb. 20, 592.
Vessels put out of Commission—Disposal of Guns, Feb. 16, 304.

Leeds and Liverpool Canal Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 430.
2R.* Feb. 24, 1205.

Leeds Corporation (Consolidation) Bill
l. 1R., and 2R.* Feb. 16, 282; Feb. 20, 541
c. 1R., 2R., and 3R.* Feb. 20, 580.

Leeward Islands
Prisoners, Female, Employment of—Rule Presented, Feb. 14, 63, 95.

Leitrim
Magistrates, etc.—Appointment of Mr. B. J. Youell.
Q. Mr. P. A. McHugh; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 21, 779, 780.

Leng, Sir J. [Dundee]
Canadian Cattle, Restrictions on Importation of, into United Kingdom, Feb. 20, 591.
India—Railway from Bombay to Sind viâ Cutch, Feb. 21, 760.

Levy, Mr. M. [Leicestershire, Loughborough]
Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in, Feb. 15, 271–273.

Lewis Estate, Ballinagar
Evictions and Reinstatements.
Q. Mr. Roche; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1326.

Lewis, Mr. J. H. [Flint Boroughs]
Afforestation, Committee on, Date of carrying out recommendations of, Feb. 24, 1268.

Lewis, Island of Sanitation of, Inspection of, by Local Government Board, proposed.

Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 27, 1321.

Skigersta Pier Works, Progress with.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 23, 1103.

Social Condition, Report on—Adoption of Recommendations.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 23, 1103.

Liberal Party

Programme of.
Os. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 14, 167; Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 16, 335, 336; Mr. Malcolm, 404.

Spencer, Earl, Manifesto by.
Os. Marquess of Lansdowne, Feb. 14, 36; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 166, 167; Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 16, 336.

Licences

Hackney Carriages, for—Dublin, see that title.

Licensing Act, 1904.

Charges leviable under, Date of Payment of.
Q. Mr. A. C. Corbett; A. Mr. A. Douglas, Feb. 21, 759.

Compensation Allowance, Increase of, proposed.
Q. Mr. F. Wilson; A. Mr. A. Douglas, Feb. 16, 299, 300.

Life Assurance Companies

Accounts, etc., Statement as to, Presented, Feb. 14, 60, 99.

Light Dues

Reduction in, Proposed.
O. Mr. C. McArthur, Feb. 28, 1482.

Lights and Lighthouses

Commissioners, Particulars as to—Return Presented, Feb. 14, 99; Feb. 17, 467.

Foreign Lighthouses, Cost of Maintenance of, Defrayed by Great Britain.
Qs. Mr. S. Ormsby-Gore, Mr. G. Bowles; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 27, 1316.

Ireland—Lights Board Administration, dissatisfaction with, Reason for not Lighting Rock Angus, etc.
Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 21, 762.

Lighthouse Fund, General Accounts.

Date of Presenting.
Q. Mr. C. McArthur; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 27, 1301.

Presented, Feb. 14, 61, 99.

Lightships—Wireless Telegraph Apparatus, Progress made with Installation of.
Q. Major Seely; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 16, 300.

Light Railways

see under Railways.

Limerick

Postmen, Rural—Dismissal of C. Keane.
Q. Mr. Lundon; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 22, 902.

School, Report on Knitting in—Qualifications of Inspectress, etc.
Qs. Mr. Joyce; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1332.

Linen Factories

Overtime, Order as to.

Presented, Feb. 14, 59, 96.

Reason for Issuing.
Q. Mr. Shackleton; A. Mr. A. Douglas, Feb. 17, 470.

Linlithgow, Marquess of Congested Districts (Scotland) Bill, 2R., Feb. 28, 1443.

Liquor Licensing, etc.

Brewers' Licences, Particulars as to—Return Ordered, Feb. 15, 174, 175; Presented, Feb. 16, 296.

Licensing Act, 1904, see that title.

Liquor Traffic Local Veto (Scotland) Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 474.

Lislea

National School Manager, Appointment of.
Q. Mr. Lonsdale; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 16, 302.
Q. Mr. Lonsdale; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1306.

Littlehampton Urban District Council Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 21, 721.

Live Stock

Transit of, see under Cattle.

Liverpool

(Everton Division) Parliamentary Election—New Writ issued, Feb. 15, 169; New Member Sworn, Feb. 28, 1492.

Liverpool Corporation Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 571.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1294.

Llandrindod Wells Urban District Council Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.

Llewellyn, Mr. E. H. (Somerset, North)

Militia—Re-organisation Proposals—Physical Condition of Recruits, Feb. 23, 1160.

Volunteers—Reduction in Establishment, proposed, Feb. 23, 1161.

Lloyd-George, Mr. D. [Carnarvon Boroughs]

Sugar—Working of Brussels Convention, Feb. 28, 1495-1503.

Loan Societies, England & Wales

Accounts—Abstract Presented, Feb. 14, 56; Feb. 15, 173.

Loans

see also Names of Countries.

Imperial Ottoman Guaranteed Loan, 1855—Account Presented, Feb. 14, 58, 103.

Local Authorities

Contracts, Wages and Conditions of, etc.—Return Ordered, Feb. 22, 881.

Liabilities of—Return Ordered, Feb. 21, 755.

Local Authorities (Qualification of Women) Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 475.

Local Government Board

President—Rt. Hon. W. H. Long.
Secretary—Mr. J. G. Lawson

Status of, Improvement in.

References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 5.
Os. Marquess of Winchester, Feb. 14, 11; Lord Oranmore and Browne, 18.

Local Government Board (Ireland)

For particular places see their names.

County Council Minutes supplied to.
Q. Col. Nolan; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 616.

Inspectors and Auditors, Return as to, Ordered, Feb. 27, 1296.

Public Bodies Order (1904).

Necessity for, Defects in Previous Order, etc.
Qs. Mr. J. Devlin, Mr. W. McKillop; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 22, 885, 886.

Opposition to, etc.
Qs. Mr. Cullinan; As. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 28, 1489.

Withdrawal of, proposed.
Qs. Mr. J. O'Connor; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 16, 322.
Q. Mr. Farrell; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 613, 614.
Q. Capt. Donelan; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 21, 763, 764.
Q. Mr. P. J. O'Brien; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1308.

Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 52, 87.

Union Accounts Order, 1905, Presented, Feb. 22, 881; Feb. 23, 1018

Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898.

Occupier, Rating of—Repeal of Sections of Act proposed.
Q. Mr. Farrell; A. Mr. Wyndham Feb. 20, 613.

Local Government (Ireland) Act Amendment Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 476.

Local Government (Ireland Amendment Act 1902

Clause 6, Repeal of.
Qs. Mr. Cullinan; As. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 28, 1490.

Local Government Provisional Orders (No 1) Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 21, 752.

Local Taxation

see under Taxation.

Lochbroom

Fishing Industry—Provision of Motor Cars to facilitate Transit of Fish, proposed.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. Scott Dickson, Feb. 27, 1323.

Lockwood, Lt.-Col. A. [Essex, Epping]

Motors, Heavy, Adequacy of Regulations for, Feb. 23, 1101, 1102.

Lombardy

Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 39.

London

Government Manufactories, Decentralisation of.
Q. Sir H. Vincent; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 27, 1338, 1339.

Street Traffic, see under Streets.

London Building Acts (Amendment) Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 572.

London County Council (General Powers) Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 572.

London County Council (Tramways) Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 573.

London Gas Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 573.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1294.

London and India Docks Company Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 20, 541.

London and North Western Railway Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 572.

London Port and Docks Commission Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 573.

London Southern Tramways Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 573.

London Squares and Enclosures Preservation) Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.

London United Tramways (Extension of Time) Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 573.

Londonderry
Telephone Extension to, Delay in.
Q. Mr. O'Doherty; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 28, 1454.

Londonderry Marquess of—Lord President of the Council, and President of the Board of Education.
Dunraven Devolution Scheme, Connection of Sir A. MacDonnell with, etc., Feb. 17, 465.

Long, Rt. Hon. W. H.—President of the Local Government Board [Bristol, South]
Agricultural Rating Bill—Date of Introduction, Feb. 28, 1458.
Arsenical Poisoning, Royal Commission on, Adoption of recommendations of, Feb. 28, 1458.
Clocks, Public, Maintenance of, by Local Authorities, Feb. 23, 1102.
Death Certificates, Charges for, Feb. 28, 1458.
Meat, Inspection of, Feb. 28, 1457.
Motors.
  Heavy Cars, Regulations for, Feb. 28, 1477, 1479.
    Adequacy of, Feb. 23, 1101, 1102.
Physical Deterioration Committee, Steps taken to carry out Recommendations of, Feb. 27, 1317, 1318.
Poor Law.
  Officers, Superannuation of—Regulations as to School Attendance Officers, Feb. 23, 1102.
  Paupers, Deportation of, to Ireland, Feb. 27, 1337.
  Simplification of Workhouse Accounts—Recommendations of Committee, Feb. 27, 1319.
  Unions—Accounts and Forms, Date of Order prescribing, Feb. 23, 1101.
Rural District Council Bye-laws as to Building of Cottages—Return proposed, Feb. 23, 1076.
Unemployed—London Relief Fund, Exhaustion of, Provision for additional Funds, etc., Feb. 22, 896; Feb. 28, 1477.

Longford County
Constabulary Removals, Cost of.
Q. Mr. Farrell; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 28, 1485.
Evicted Tenants, Reinstatement of.
Q. Mr. Farrell; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 22, 901.
Magistracy, Appointments to.
Q. Mr. Farrell; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 28, 1485.
Police, Extra, in, Charge for, Stopped out of Agricultural Grant.
Qs. Mr. J. P. Farrell; As. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 27, 1323.

Lonsdale, Earl of
Army Rifles, new pattern, Feb. 23, 1045.

Lonsdale, Mr. J. B. [Armagh, Mid.]
Administration of Ireland—Sir A. MacDonnell and the Devolution Scheme, etc., Feb. 20, 610, 611, 698–701.
  Conditions of Appointment of Sir A. MacDonnell as Under-Secretary, Term of office, etc., Feb. 22, 903, 906.
  Lord Lieutenant, Views of, Feb. 27, 1329.
Constabulary, Royal Irish, Reduction of, in King's County and Sligo, Feb. 20, 608.
Lislea National School Manager, Appointment of, Feb. 16, 302; Feb. 27, 1306.

Lord Advocate for Scotland
Right Hon. C. Scott-Dickson.

Lord Chancellor
Earl of Halsbury.

Lord Chancellor of Ireland
Lord Ashbourne.

Lord Chief Justice
Lord Alverstone.

Lord Great Chamberlain
Marquess of Cholmondeley.

Lord Lieutenant of Ireland
Earl Dudley.

Lord President of the Privy Council
Marquess of Londonderry.

Lord Privy Seal
Marquess of Salisbury.

Lords, House of see Parliament—House of Lords.

Lothian, Marquess of Manuscripts of—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 51,81.

Lough, Mr. T. [Islington, West]
Education, Meals for Underfed Children, Feb. 22, 909.
Fiscal Policy, Proposed changes in, Feb. 15, 222–226.
Income Tax Collection, Date of operation of new rule, etc., Feb. 20, 598-600.
Sugar—Brussels Convention.
  Appeal under Article VII, Information as to, Feb. 16. 309.
  Cuban Sugar, Decision as to, Feb. 16, 313, 314.
  Dominican Sugar, Decision as to, Feb. 16, 312, 313.
  Prohibition of Importation, Regulations as to, Feb. 16, 312.
  Russian Sugar, Removal of Prohibition against, proposed, Feb 16, 309, 310.
  Working of, Effect on Prices, etc., Feb. 28, 1533–1543.

Loughborough Corporation Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20. 574.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1294.

Lucan Estate
Sale of, Progress with, etc.
  Q. Dr. Ambrose ; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 587.

Lucas Mr. R. J. [Portsmouth]
Bagdad Railway, Progress made with, Feb. 23, 1076.
Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in, Feb. 16, 387.
Militia Officers—Right to wear uniform on abolition of battalions, proposed, Feb. 22, 889.
Navy—Meritorious Service Rewards for Petty Officers, proposed, Feb. 21, 756.
Unionist Party, Continuance of, in Office, etc., Feb. 16, 387.

Lunatics and Lunatic Asylums
Ireland.
  Army Pensioners in District Asylums, Maintenance of,
    Qs. Mr. Sloan ; As. Mr. B. Davenport, Feb. 16, 327.
  Cork—Patients chargeable to local rates, etc.
    Qs. Mr. Flynn, Mr. Flavin, As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 21, 778, 779.
  Holland, Nurse, Case of,
    Q. Mr. Sloan ; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 24, 1213.
  Report Presented, Feb. 14, 44, 87.
  Youghal Auxiliary Asylum, Information as to.
    Qs. Mr. Sloan, Capt. Donelan ; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 23, 1107–1109.
Returns Presented, Feb. 14, 55, 107, 108.

Lundon, Mr. W. [Limerick, East]
Delmege, Mr., Sale of Estate of, Feb. 23, 1105.
Labourers' Cottages, Allocation of Grant for, Feb. 23, 1106.
Limerick Rural Postmen—Dismissal of E. Keane, Feb. 22, 902.
Synan's Estate, Sale of, Feb. 23, 1106.

Lyttelton, Rt. Hon. A.—Secretary of State for the Colonies [Warwick and Leamington]
Africa, South.
  Intercolonial Council—Alterations in Railway Department, Feb. 22, 892, 893.
  Milner, Lord—Termination of Tenure of Office, Feb. 28, 1474.
  Railways, Expenditure on Purchase of, Feb. 27, 1311.
    Total Amount paid under Loan Act of 1903, Feb. 21, 769.
Australia.
  Price Lists, etc., Import Duty on, Feb. 23, 1085.
  Sydney, Conviction of Lascar Seamen at, Feb. 28, 1474.
Canada—Defences of Halifax and Esquimault, Cost of, etc., Feb. 27, 1300.
Chartered Company of South Africa—Capital, Price of Shares, etc., Feb. 17, 472.
Ceylon Tea Plantations—Education of Coolie Children, Feb. 28, 1475.
King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 17, 483, 488, 492, 522–536.
Malay States, Federated—Relations with British Government, Feb. 22, 889.
Marshall Islands—German Treatment of British Shipping Trade, Feb. 27, 1299.
New Zealand—Shipping and Seamen's Act, 1903, Delay in Royal Assent to, Feb. 27, 1298.
Orange River Colony—Revenue, Information as to, Feb. 20, 591.
Transvaal.
  Chinese Labour, Importation of, Feb. 17, 522–536.
    Kaffirs, Disturbances with, etc., Feb. 24, 1215.
    Limitation of number to be imported, Feb. 23, 1092, 1093.
    Number of Labourers, Death Rate, Number in Hospital, etc., Feb. 21, 771.
    Punishments inflicted by Courts, Feb. 16, 303 ; Feb. 20, 596 ; Feb. 23, 1085.
    Riots, Information as to, Feb. 23, 1094.

[cont.

Lyttelton, Rt. Hon. A.—cont.
- Transvaal—cont.
  - Chinese Labour, etc.—cont.
    - Venereal Diseases, Number of Coolies treated for, Feb. 16, 306.
    - Wages, Rate of, etc., Feb. 16, 305.
  - Labour Question.
    - Chinese Labour, see subheading Transvaal—Chinese Labour.
    - Native Labour—Death Rate, Feb. 21, 771.
    - Statistics as to Mines, Feb. 21, 772.
    - White Labour Employed in Mines, Feb. 16, 302, 305, 306; Feb. 24, 1215.
      - Discharges from Mines, Number of, Feb. 23, 1093.
      - Witwatersrand, Information as to, Feb. 20, 596.
  - Loan, Repayment of, etc., Feb. 28, 1471, 1472.
    - First Instalment, Date of issue of, Feb. 22, 891, 892.
  - Mines.
    - Commissioner, Appointment of, Feb. 21, 772.
    - Labour in, see subheading Transvaal—Labour.
    - Profit tax, Receipts from, Feb. 28, 1473.
  - Representative Institutions for.
    - Barbados, Constitution of, Feb. 27. 1299.
    - Introduction, Method of, Opportunity for discussion, etc., Feb. 21. 772.
    - Papers, Date of Publication of, Feb. 16, 303.
  - Revenue, Information as to, Feb. 20, 591.
- Uganda—Native Population, Decline of, alleged, Feb. 27, 1300.
- West Indies—Military Establishment, Reduction in, Feb. 23, 1073.

McArthur, Mr. C. [Liverpool, Exchange]
- Lighthouse Fund, General—Date of Presenting Accounts, Feb. 27, 1301.
- Marine Insurance (Codification) Bill, Introduction of, Feb. 28, 1491.
- Merchant Shipping.
  - Boy Sailors, Number carried, Amount allowed out of Light Dues, etc., Feb. 28, 1481–1483.
  - Light Dues, Reduction in, proposed, Feb. 28, 1482.

McCalmont, Col. J. [Antrim, East]
- Carrickfergus—Award as to Land acquired by Belfast Water Commissioners, Feb. 27, 1305.

McConnell's Divorce Bill
- l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 430.

McCrae, Mr. G. [Edinburgh, East]
- Army Expenditure—Reduction to be effected under Reform Proposals, Feb. 20, 595.
- Income Tax.
  - Collection of.
    - Delays Permitted in—Application of Instructions, Feb. 23, 1099.
    - Uniformity of Practice in England and Scotland, Issue of Ten-day Notices, etc., Feb. 21, 773, 774.
  - Recovery, Return as to, proposed, Feb. 23, 1099.
- King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 22, 931–937.
- Revenue and Expenditure—Provision for meeting Deficit, Feb. 28, 1477.
- Transvaal Loan, Repayment of, Feb. 16. 316, 317.
  - Application of Sums repaid, Feb. 20, 600.
- Transvaal War Loan, Repayment of, Feb. 28, 1471, 1472.
  - First Instalment, Date of Issue of, etc., Feb. 22, 891, 892.
  - Guarantee, Period for Payment of first Instalment, Feb. 20, 601.
- Volunteers.
  - Home Defence dependent on, Feb. 22, 931, 932.
  - Reform Proposals, Feb. 22, 933–937.

MacDonnell, Sir Antony
- see under Ireland—Administration.

Macedonia
- Debates [Commons] Feb. 27, 1347.
  - Adrianople—British Consulate at, Re-establishment of, 1374.
  - Adrianople Vilayet, Exclusion of, from Scheme of Reforms, 1350, 1354, 1369.
  - Atrocities Committed by all Parties, 1351, 1360, 1370, 1380–1382, 1389.
  - Austria, Inability of, to deal with Situation, 1356, 1366.
  - Berlin Treaty, Provisions of, and Policy due to, 1362, 1389, 1391, 1392.

[cont

Macedonia—cont.
Debates—cont.
British Government.
Policy of, 1347, 1351, 1357, 1358, 1361, 1367, 1384, 1391–1393, 1395.
Reform Proposals of, 1352, 1353, 1383, 1384.
Responsibility of, 1348, 1351, 1355, 1366, 1369, 1384, 1385, 1391, 1392.
Bulgaria and Turkey, Understanding between, 1350.
Causes of the Constant Disturbances, 1366.
Christian Governor-General, Necessity for appointment of, 1352, 1373, 1383, 1390, 1393.
Civil Agents, Work done by, 1378, 1379.
Condition of the Country, 1386, 1387.
Delay in dealing with the Situation, Dangers of, 1356, 1368, 1392.
European Concert as an Instrument of Reform, 1361, 1394.
Gendarmerie, Reorganisation of, under European Officers.
Adrianople, Exclusion of, from Scheme, 1350, 1354.
Authority of, Restrictions imposed by the Porte, etc., 1348–1350, 1379, 1388.
British Officers, Number appointed, Sphere of Activity, etc., 1349, 1389.
Cost of, Money allotted by the Turkish Government for, 1375.
Details and Progress of the Scheme, 1371, 1372, 1379, 1380.
Number of Officers appointed, Restrictions imposed by the Porte, etc., 1348, 1349, 1374, 1375, 1380.
Training of, Progress made with, 1379.
Hilmi Pasha, Position of, 1372.]
Improvement in Condition of, Since Emancipation from Turkey, 1359.
Mürzsteg Scheme, Failure of, alleged, 1368, 1376–1379, 1386, 1388.
Mussulman Governor assisted by European Assessors, proposed, 1352, 1372.
Reforms.
Adrianople Vilayet, Exclusion of, 1350, 1354, 1369.
Austro-Russian Scheme, 1348, 1356, 1369, 1376.

Macedonia—cont.
Debates—cont.
Reforms—cont.
British Government, Proposals of, 1352, 1353, 1383, 1384.
European Concert as an Instrument of, 1361, 1394.
Gendarmerie, Reorganisation of, see that subheading.
Mürzsteg Scheme, Failure of, alleged, 1368, 1376–1379, 1386, 1388.
Opposition of the Porte and the Sultan to, 1348, 1358, 1365, 1377.
Progress of, 1371, 1375, 1376.
Revolutionary Committee, Attitude of, 1380, 1383, 1384, 1389.
Turkish Proposals, Information as to, 1353, 1356.
Refugees, Progress made with Repatriation of, 1374, 1386.
Russia, Inability of, to deal with Situation, 1356, 1367.
San Stefano Treaty, Withdrawal of, due to Great Britain, 1391.
Tithe Collection, Alteration in System of, 1371, 1375.
Turkey.
Demoralisation of the Administration, 1350, 1354.
Reform Proposals of, Information as to, 1353, 1356.
Responsibility of, 1381, 1382, 1391.
Gendarmerie, Progress made with Reorganisation of.
References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 2.
Os. Marquess of Lansdowne, Feb. 14, 30.

M'Goohan, Daniel, Case of Compensation given, etc.,
Q. Mr. W. McKillop; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 21, 779.

M'Hugh, Mr. P. A. [Leitrim, North]
Leitrim Magistrates—Appointment of Mr. B. J. Youell, Feb. 21, 779, 780.

MacIver, Mr. D. [Liverpool, Kirkdale]
Fiscal Policy, Proposed changes in, Feb. 15, 208–216.

McKenna, Mr. R. [Monmouthshire, N.]
Sugar—Brussels Convention, Working of, Effect on Prices, etc., Feb. 28, 1507–1511.

McKillop, Mr. W. [Sligo, N.]

- Local Government Board (Ireland)—Public Bodies Order (1904), Necessity for, etc., Feb. 22, 885.
- McGoohan, Daniel, Case of, Feb. 21, 779.

Macnamara, Dr. T. J. [Camberwell, N.]

- Children, Employment of, sanctioning of bye-laws as to, Feb. 28, 1481.
- Cigarette-smoking among children, prohibition of, Feb. 27, 1317.
- Education—Underfed Children, provision of meals for, Feb. 21, 776; Feb. 22, 909; Feb. 28, 1483.
- King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 17, 481–490, 515, 516, 525.
- Physical Deterioration Committee Report and Recommendations.
  - Adoption of, Feb. 21, 775, 776.
  - Discussion in Parliament, Opportunity for, Feb. 23, 1094.
- Savings Bank, Post Office.
  - Balance Sheet, date of Presenting, Feb. 16, 317.
  - Deficiency, Omission of, from Finance Account, Feb. 23, 1099.
  - Deposits, Assets, etc., Feb. 16, 317.
- Transvaal.
  - Chinese Labour, Importation of, Feb. 17, 481–490.
    - Restrictions on number imported, Feb. 23, 1092.
  - Mines.
    - Commissioner, Appointment of, Feb. 21, 771.
    - Labour in, Statistics as to, Feb. 21, 772.
- Transvaal and Orange River Colonies, Representative Institutions for—Opportunity for Discussion, Feb. 23, 1094; Feb. 27, 1312–1314.
  - Stroyan, Mr., Notice of Motion by, Feb. 27, 1339.
- Unemployed—Assistance to London Relief Fund, Feb. 28, 1477.

MacNeill, Mr. J. G. S. [Donegal, S.]

- Africa, South, Garrison in—Stores sold by Col. Morgan, alleged, Feb. 23, 1087; Feb. 28, 1470.
- Bishop's Stortford College—Dismissal of Mr. Kitchener, Feb. 28, 1461.
- Blocking Notices, Amendment of Standing Order as to, Feb. 27, 1342, 1343.
- China, British Troops in—Shooting of Private Mahon, Feb. 20, 594, 595.
- Criminal Appeal, Court of, Decision as to Establishment of, Feb. 28, 1481.

MacNeill, Mr. J. G. S.—cont.

- India.
  - Army—Position of Roman Catholic Chaplains, Feb. 23, 1097
  - Bombay National Congress Resolutions, alleged refusal of copy of, by Viceroy, Feb. 16, 307.
  - Curzon, Lord, Position of functions of, during residence in Great Britain, Feb. 28, 1475, 1476.
- Ireland.
  - Administration of, Attack on, Feb. 21, 823–826.
  - Chief Secretaryship of Ireland—Method of making appointment, Feb. 27, 1334, 1335.
- Judge-Advocate-General, Discharge of duties of, Feb. 16, 328.
- Navy.
  - Flogging in.
    - "Berwick," H.M.S., On, Feb. 28, 1468, 1469.
    - Information as to Return, Feb. 27, 1312.
  - Recruiting Notice Posted in Berkshire, etc., Authority for, Feb. 16, 304.
  - Training Ships—Number of, and of Lads under Training, Feb. 23, 1085.
- Scotland, Secretary for, Company Directorships held by, Feb. 16, 328, 329.
- Transvaal and Orange River Colony, Representative Institutions for, Discussion of, Feb. 23, 1094–1096; Feb. 27, 1314.
  - Stroyan, Mr., Notice of Motion by, Feb. 27, 1339, 1342.

MacVeagh, Mr. J. [Down, S.]

- Uganda Native Population, Decline of, alleged, Feb. 27, 1300.

Madagascar

- Convention between United Kingdom and France Presented, Feb. 28, 1448.

Madeira

- Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 39.

Magistrates and Justices of the Peace

- Ireland.
  - Leitrim—Appointment of Mr. Youell.
    - Q. Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 21, 779, 780.
  - Longford, Appointments in.
    - Q. Mr. Farrell; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 28, 1485.

Maidstone and Faversham Junction Light Railway (Extension of Time)

- Order Presented, Feb. 14, 50, 84.

Mail Service

- see under Post Office.

Malay States, Federated
Educational System—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 47, 88.
Relations with British Government.
Q. Mr. Spear; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 22, 889.
Reports, Presented, Feb. 14, 48, 90.

Malcolm, Mr. I. Z. [Suffolk, Stowmarket]
Army—Brigading of Highland Light Infantry, Feb. 28, 1450.
Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in, Feb. 16, 401–404.

Mall to Charing Cross.
New Roadway—Placing Plans, etc., in Tea Room.
Q. Mr. Whitmore; A. Lord Balcarres, Feb. 20, 582.

Malta
Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 43, 90.

Mansfield Corporation Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 23, 1017.

Margate Pier aud Harbour Company
Accounts and Report Presented, Feb. 14, 64.

Marine Insurance (Codification) Bill
Introduction and Passing of, Facilities for.
Q. Mr. C. M'Arthur; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 28, 1491.

Marks, Mr. H. H. [Kent, Thanet]
Army Recruiting under New Terms of Enlistment, Feb. 23, 1082.

Marlborough, Duke of—Parliamentary Secretary for the Colonies.
Transvaal—Chinese Labour, Supersession of White Labour by, etc., Feb. 27, 1280–1285.

Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 474.

Marriages
Scotland—Annual Report Presented, Feb. 14, 51, 89.

Marshall Islands
British Shipping Trade, German Treatment of.
Q. Mr. Kearley; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 27, 1298, 1299.

Martinique
Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Marylebone Chapels Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 20, 541.

Matlock Bath Improvement Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 21, 721.

Mauritius
Educational System—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 47, 88.
Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 43, 90.

Mayo, Earl of
Dunraven Devolution Scheme, Feb. 17, 446.

Meat Inspection of.
Qs. Mr. Field; A. Mr. W. Long, Feb. 28, 1457.

Meath, Earl of
Military Training for Youths, Necessity for, Feb. 20, 543, 559, 561.

Medical Act (1886) Amendment Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 478.

Medway and Thames Canal Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 20, 541.

Merchandise Marks Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 479.

Merchant Shipping
Boy Sailor Scheme.
Expiration of, Arrangements to be made on.
Qs. Mr. C. McArthur; As. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 28, 1481–1483.
Number enrolled in Naval Reserve.
Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 27, 1301, 1302.
Number of Boys carried, Amount allowed out of Light Dues, etc.
Qs. Mr. C. McArthur; As. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 28, 1481, 1482.
British Trade with Marshall Islands, German treatment of.
Q. Mr. Kearley, A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 27, 1298, 1299.
Ireland, Statistics as to, Presented, Feb. 14, 48, 86.
Light dues, Reduction in, proposed.
O. Mr. C. McArthur, Feb. 28, 1482.
Seamen.
Deceased, Wages and Effects of—Accounts Presented, Feb. 21, 722, 754; Feb. 22, 881.
Lascars, Conviction of, at Sydney.
Qs. Sir M. Bhownaggree; As. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 28, 1473, 1474.
Money Orders—Accounts Presented, Feb. 21, 723, 754.
Savings Banks Accounts Presented, Feb. 21, 723, 754.
Sending home, Payment of Cost of.
Q. Mr. Lawrence; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 28, 1451, 1452.
Wages—Accounts Presented, Feb. 21, 723, 754.

Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 28, 1493.

Mersey Docks and Harbour Board
Accounts Presented, Feb. 14, 64, 108.

Meteorology
Report of Council Presented, Feb. 14, 50, 90.

Methil
Sea-fishing boats, Order in Council as to Registry of, Presented, Feb. 17, 62, 102.

Metric System
Colonies, Adoption in—Papers Presented, Feb. 22, 881; Feb. 23, 1018.

Metropolitan and Great Central Railway Companies Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 430.

Metropolitan District Railway Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17. 430.
2R.* Feb. 24, 1205.

Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Acton District) Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 430.
2R* Feb. 27, 1274.

Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Various Powers) Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 430.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1274.

Metropolitan Electric Tramways Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 20, 574.

Metropolitan Pneumatic Despatch Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 574.
2R.* Feb. 28, 1445.

Metropolitan Police
see under titles Dublin and Police.

Metropolitan Police Provisional Order Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 27. 1345.

Metropolitan Railway Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 430.

Mexborough and Swinton Tramways (Extension of Time) Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 430.

Mexico
Post Office Money Orders—Agreement Presented, Feb. 14, 54, 95.
Postal rates on letters to New Zealand—Convention Presented, Feb. 21, 722, 754.
Trade Report-Presented, Feb. 14, 39, 40.

Middleton
Polling District, Order Altering, Presented, Feb. 14, 60, 97.

Midland Railway Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 574.

Midlothian
Motor Car Traffic, Order Prohibiting, Presented, Feb. 17, 432, 468.

Mile End
Parliamentary Election—New Writ and New Member Sworn, Feb. 14, 65.

Mile Hill, Ballinrobe
Grazing Lands, Purchase of.
Qs. Mr. J. O'Donnell; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1306, 1307.

Military Manœuvres Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 16, 285.

Military Prisons
see Army—Prisons.

Military Training for Youths Necessity for.
- Debate (Lords) Feb. 20, 543.
  - Adult Compulsory Military Service, Objections to, 546.
  - Cadet-corps Principle, Extension of, 556, 558.
  - Colonial Systems, 552, 556.
  - Committee of Inquiry, proposed, 543, 562.
  - Defence of the Empire, Military Forces available for, 543.
  - Headmasters of Schools, Opinions of, 551, 560.
  - Japan, System in, 549.
  - Militia Ballot, Objections to reviving, 546.
  - Roberts, Earl, Opinion of, 547.
  - War Office Co-operation, Conditions of, 552, 554, 560.

Rifle and Air-Gun Clubs, Encouragement of.
O. Mr. Hunt, Feb. 23, 1163.

Military Works Acts
Expenditure under—Approximate Estimate, Presented, Feb. 14, 46, 87.

Militia
Adjutancies, Officers' Grievances in Connection with.
O. Sir A. Hayter, Feb. 23, 1117.
Assistance rendered by, in Various Campaigns.
O. Duke of Bedford, Feb. 21, 733.

[cont.

Militia—cont.

Condition of, Lack of Efficiency, etc.—Norfolk Commission Report.
Os. Duke of Bedford, Feb. 21, 729–732.

Conversion of, into Territorial Battalions, proposed.
Os. Duke of Bedford, Feb. 21, 726, 728, 729; Viscount Hardinge, 738.

Decline in Numbers.
O. Lord Raglan, Feb. 21, 740.

Foreign Service, Proposals as to.
Os. Duke of Bedford, Feb. 21, 734; Lord Raglan, 740, 741; Earl of Donoughmore, 743; Lord Tweedmouth, 749; Lord Burghclere, Lord Selborne, 751.
Os. Mr. C. Warner, Feb. 22, 962; Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, 1140, 1141; Mr. Peel, 1159; Mr. Llewellyn, 1160.

Ballot Act, Position of Men Enlisted under.
Os. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Feb. 23, 1141; Mr. Arnold-Forster, 1176.

Officers.

Mess Subscriptions on Transfer from Army.
Q. Dr. Thompson; A. Mr. Arnold Forster, Feb. 23, 1083, 1084.

Uniform, Right to Wear, on Abolition of Battalions, proposed.
Q. Mr. R. Lucas; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 22, 889.

Recruiting, Alteration in Present System of, Proposed.
Os. Duke of Bedford, Feb. 21, 735; Duke of Marlborough, 747.

Re-organisation of, Proposals as to.
Os. Duke of Bedford, Feb. 21, 725, 726, 732, 734–737; Viscount Hardinge, 737; Earl of Donoughmore, 742, 746; Lord Tweedmouth, 750; Sir C. Rasch, Feb. 22, 960, 961; Mr. C. Warner, 961, 962; Mr. Lambert, Feb. 23, 1134; Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, 1140, 1141; Mr. Arnold-Forster, 1176, 1177.

Strength of.
Q. Captain Ellice; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1091.

Submarine Mining Divisions, Decision as to.
O. Sir A. Rollit, Feb. 23, 1166.

Training of, Facilities for Musketry Training, etc.
Os. Duke of Bedford, Feb. 21, 731; Viscount Hardinge, 738; Lord Raglan, 740; Earl of Donoughmore, 747.

Vote for.
Os. Earl of Donoughmore, Feb. 21, 748; Lord Tweedmouth, 749.

Milk Depots (London) Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 481.

Milner, Lord
see under Africa, South.

Mines and Quarries
Coal Mines, see that title.
Report, General, and Statistics Presented, Feb. 14, 48, 82.

Minister of Commerce and Industry Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 28, 1493.

Mitchell, Mr. E. [Fermanagh, N.]
Cattle, American, Importation of, into Great Britain, Feb. 20, 602.

Mitchelstown
Rent Appeals of Kingston Estate Tenants.
Q. Mr. W. Abraham; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 612, 613.

Mohill
Pentland, Dr., Case of.
Q. Mr. Farrell; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 613.

Monkswell, Lord
Reserve Forces Bill, Com. and Rep., Feb. 28, 1445.
Transvaal—Chinese Labour, Supersession of White Labour by, etc., Feb. 27, 1277–1280, 1283, 1291, 1292.

Monmouth
Western Division, Parliamentary Election—New Writ and New Member sworn, Feb. 14, 65.

Moon, Mr. E. R. P. [St. Pancras, N.]
Hague Tribunal Reports, Date of Issue of, Feb. 24, 1210.
Macedonia, Condition of, Progress made with Reforms, etc., Feb. 27, 1369–1373.
Venezuela, Claims against—Hague Tribunal Award, Feb. 24, 1210.

Mooney, Mr. J. J. [Dublin Co., S.]
Administration of Ireland, Home Rule Question, etc., Feb. 21, 837–841.
Dundrum Lunatic Asylum—Dismissal of Shoemaker, Feb. 28, 1486, 1487.

Moore, Mr. W. [Antrim, N.]
Administration of Ireland, deficiencies of present system, etc., Feb. 20, 633–646, 672.
MacDonnell, Sir A., Appointment of, Connection with Dunraven Devolution Scheme, etc., Feb. 16, 326; Feb. 20, 610; Feb. 22, 996–998.
King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 20, 633–646, 652, 654, 672; Feb. 22, 996–998.
Strabane Rate Collector—Appointment of Mr. Torish, Feb. 20, 616.

Moray Firth

Fisheries, Decline in—Report of Mansfield Commission, Tabling, proposed.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 20, 605.

Trawling, Illegal, in—Legislation for closing Ports of Landing for Fish, proposed.
Q. Mr. Crombie; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 20, 583.

Morgan, Col.

Sale of Stores by, see under Africa, South—Garrison in.

Morgan, Mr. D. J. [Essex, Walthamstow]

Sugar—Brussels Convention, Effect of, on Prices, etc., Feb. 28, 1543.

Morley, Earl of—Chairman of Committees

Committees, Resignation of Chairmanship of.
Os. Marquess of Lansdowne, Earl Spencer, Feb. 16, 286–290.

Death of—Tribute to Services as Chairman of Committees, etc.
Os. Marquess of Lansdowne, Earl Spencer, Earl of Halsbury, Bishop of Rochester, Feb. 27, 1275–1277.

Morley, Rt. Hon. J. [Montrose Burghs]

Bye-elections, Loss of, as a reason for Dissolution, Feb. 14, 161.

King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 16, 344; Feb. 21, 859; Feb. 22, 985–991, MacDonnell, Sir A., Conditions of Appointment of, as Under Secretary for Ireland, Feb. 22, 985–991.

Morley Corporation Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 574.
2R.* Feb. 28, 1445.

Morocco

Convention between United Kingdom and France Presented, Feb. 28, 1448.

Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 39, 41.

Mortgage Insurance Corporation Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 430.
2R.* Feb. 24, 1205.

Motions

Ballot for—Sessional Order and Motion (Mr. A. J. Balfour), Feb. 15, 177, 178.

Motors

For particular places see their names.

Heavy Cars, Regulations for.

Adequacy of.
Qs. Col. Lockwood; As. Mr. W. Long, Feb. 23, 1101, 1102.

Compensation for Damage done by Cars, etc.
Q. Mr. C. Wason; A. Mr. G. Lawson, Feb. 20, 602.

Motors—contd.

Heavy Cars—Regulations for—contd.

Local Authorities' Opinions of, etc.
Qs. Mr. Gardner, Mr. C. Wason, Gen. Laurie; As. Mr. W. Long, Feb. 28, 1477–1479.

Ireland—Order as to Heavy Motors, Presented, Feb. 23, 1018, 1072.

Scotland.

Order as to Heavy Motors Presented, Feb. 15, 173; Feb. 16, 283.

Prohibition Orders Presented, Feb. 17, 432, 468.

Traffic Regulations in Ayrshire.
Q. Mr. C. Wason; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 20, 605, 606.

Mount, Mr. W. A. [Berkshire, Newbury]

Agricultural Rates Act, Renewal of, Feb. 14, 113.

Arbitration.
Extension of Principle of, Feb. 14, 109, 110.

France and Great Britain, Ratification of Treaty between, Feb. 14, 110.

Balkan Peninsula, Condition of, Progress of Reforms, etc., Feb. 14, 111.

Electoral Areas, Redistribution of, Feb. 14, 112.

North Sea Incident, Commission of Inquiry into, Feb. 14, 110.

Tibet Expedition, Conduct of, Feb. 14, 112.

Unemployed, Measures taken to deal with, Feb. 14, 113.

Mountmellick Bog

Sale of.
Qs. Mr. Delany; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1329, 1330.

Mullinalaghta

Gillespie, Case of, Permission to carry Firearms, etc.
Q. Mr. Farrell; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 23, 1106, 1107.

Municipal Corporation (Merthyr Tydvil Scheme Confirmation) Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 16, 286.

Municipal Franchise (Companies) Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 480.

Muscat

Dhows, Grant of French Flag to—Agreement Presented, Feb. 20, 541 581.

Museums

Regulations Presented, Feb. 14, 47, 88.

Nannetti, Mr. J. P. [Dublin, College Green]
Dublin.
Car and Cab Licence Duty, Period for Payment of, Feb. 16, 323.
Hackney Carriages.
Inspector, Appointment of, Feb. 20, 607.
Stands for, Feb. 16, 323.
Summer Licences, Refusal of, proposed, Feb. 20, 606.
Post Office.
Learners, Pay of, Feb. 23, 1111.
Leave, Annual, Arrangements as to, Feb. 20, 620.
Public Works Contracts, Painters Employed on, Feb. 23, 1104.
Viceregal Lodge, Painting Work at, Feb. 27, 1335.
Post Office—Night Messengers, Increase in Pay of, Feb. 27, 1319.

National Debt
Amounts, Liabilities, etc., Return as to—Ordered, Feb. 21, 755; Presented, Feb. 27, 1295.
Commissioners, Report of, Presented, Feb. 14, 55, 103.
Reduction of—Accounts (Military Savings Banks), Presented, Feb. 20, 542, 581.
Unfunded Debt.
Amount of.
Q. Mr. Buchanan; A. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 15, 176.
Information as to.
Qs. Mr. G. Bowles; As. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 16, 314, 315.

National Gallery
Report—Ordered, Feb. 15, 175; Presented, Feb. 16, 297.

National School Teachers
see under Education (Ireland.)

National Telephone Company
Agreement with—Memorandum Presented, Feb. 14, 108.

Naval Works (Portsmouth Barracks Site) Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 20, 541.
Report of Attorney-General Presented, Feb. 28, 1442.

Navigation
Accounts, Copy Ordered, Feb. 15, 176; Presented, Feb. 16, 296.

Navy
First Lord—Rt. Hon. Earl of Selborne.
Financial Secretary—Mr. E. G. Pretyman.
Appropriation Account Presented, Feb. 20, 581.

Navy—cont.
Battleships, Obsolete, Number of, and Cost of Repairs to—Return proposed.
Qs. Mr. Whitley, Mr. G. Bowles, Mr. Buchanan; As. Mr. Pretyman, Feb. 21, 769, 770.
"Berwick," H.M.S., Flogging on.
Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. Pretyman, Feb. 28, 1468, 1469.
Cadets, Newcastle as an Examination Centre for, proposed.
Q. Sir W. Plummer; A. Mr. Pretyman, Feb. 23, 1075.
Channel Fleet—Visit to Portree, suggested.
Q. Mr. J. Dewar; A. Mr. Pretyman, Feb. 28, 1452.
Colonial Contributions towards cost of.
Os. Sir W. Holland, Feb. 15, 240.
Cruisers.
Armour for, Date of ordering.
Q. Mr. J. F. Hope; A. Mr. Pretyman, Feb. 24, 1210.
Effective Ships of War, Cruisers not struck off List of—Return Ordered Feb. 22, 882.
Distribution and Mobilisation of the Fleet, Memorandum Presented, Feb. 14, 53, 90.
"Enchantress," Admiralty Yacht, Cost of Alterations to, etc.
Qs. Mr. Bowles; As. Mr. Pretyman, Feb. 22, 890.
Establishments, Discharges from.
Q. Mr. Kearley; A. Mr. Pretyman, Feb. 27, 1311.
Flogging in.
"Berwick," H.M.S., on.
Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. Pretyman, Feb. 28, 1468, 1469.
Return, Information as to.
Qs. Mr. S. MacNeill, Mr. G. Bowles; As. Mr. Pretyman, Feb. 27, 1312.
Guns.
Quick-firing Batteries, Decision as to.
Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. Pretyman, Feb. 28, 1451.
Vessels put out of Commission, see that sub-heading.
Meritorious Service Rewards for Petty Officers, proposed.
Q. Mr. R. Lucas; A. Mr. Pretyman, Feb. 21, 756.
"Orion"—Construction, Information as to.
Q. Mr. J. F. Hope; A. Mr. Pretyman, Feb. 20, 584.
Prizes of War, Enactments relating to, Consolidation of.
References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 5.

[cont.

Navy—cont.

Recruiting Notice posted in Berkshire, etc., Authority for.
Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. A. Lee, Feb. 16, 304, 305.

Reform Proposals.
Os. Earl Spencer, Feb. 14, 24; Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, 137.

Reserve.

Batteries on Islands of Skye and Barra, Delay in erection of.
Q. Mr. J. Dewar; A. Mr. Pretyman, Feb. 28, 1468.

Boy Sailor Scheme, see under Merchant Shipping—Boy Sailor Scheme, Rifle, New, Trial of—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 46, 88.

Rosyth Base, Expenditure on.
Qs. Mr. Bright, Mr. E. Robertson, Mr. E. Wason; As. Mr. A. Lee, Fel. 23, 1086.

Submarine Mine fields, Decision as to.
Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. Pretyman, Feb. 28, 1451.

Training Ships, Number of, and of Lads under training in.
Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. Pretyman, Fet. 23, 1085.

Ullapool Reserve Station, Progress made with.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. A. Lee, Fel. 20, 592.

Vessels put out of Commission.
Guns, disposal of.
Q. Mr. Renwick; A. Mr. A. Lee, Feb. 16, 304.

Return Ordered, Feb. 22, 882.

Wei-hai-Wei Station, Expenditure on.
Q. Mr. Bright; A. Mr. Pretyman, Feb. 28, 1452.

Navy Estimates
Presented, with Explanatory Statement, Feb. 21, 753.
Statement, Explanatory, Presented, Feb. 23, 1018.
Supplementary, Amounts of (1873–1904)—Return Ordered, Feb. 21, 755.

Netherlands
Godden, Mr., Decision as to Claim of.
Qs. Sir E. Flower; As. Earl Percy, Feb. 16, 308; Feb. 28, 1459.

Post Office Money Orders—Agreement, etc., Presented, Feb. 14, 54, 95.

Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

New Forest
Polling District, Order altering, Presented, Feb. 14, 60. 97.

New Hebrides
Convention between United Kingdom and France, presented, Feb. 28, 1448.

New South Wales
Sydney, Conviction of Lascar Seamen at, alleged.
Qs. Sir M. Bhownaggree; As. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 28, 1473, 1474.

New Writs and New Members Sworn see under Parliamentary Elections.

New Zealand
Mexico, Postal Rate to—Convention presented, Feb. 21, 722, 754.
Shipping and Seamen's Act, 1903, Delay in Royal Assent to.
Q. Mr. C. Wason; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 27, 1298.

Newcastle Chapter (Amendment) Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 27, 1275.

Newcastle-upon-Tyne
Naval Cadets, Examination Centre for, proposed.
Q. Sir W. Plummer; A. Mr. Pretyman, Feb. 23, 1075.

Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 20, 541.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1273.

Newcastle Emlyn
Explosion in Shop of Ironmonger—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 53, 81.

Newfoundland
Convention between United Kingdom and France Presented, Feb. 28, 1447.

Nigeria
Northern—Annual Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 43, 90.

Southern.

Order in Council Presented, Feb. 14, 63, 101.

Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 43, 90.

Nine Mile Point Railway Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.

2R.* Feb. 21, 721.

Nolan, Col. J. P. [Galway, N.]

Army—Guns—Necessity for Changes in Wagons, etc., Feb. 28, 1450.

Local Government Board, County Council (Galway) Minutes supplied to, Feb. 20, 616.

Poor Rate Collection in Galway, New Regulations for, Feb. 20, 615.

Potatoes, Seed, Grants for, Feb. 16, 326.
Remission of Interest on Loan, proposed, Feb. 20, 618.

Nolan-Farrell Estate
Grazing Lands, distribution of.
Qs. Mr. J. O'Donnell; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 23, 1080, 1081.

North East London Railway Bill
c. 1R. Feb. 20, 575.

North Eastern Railway Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 574.

North Eastern Railway (Steam Vessels) Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 575.

North Metropolitan Electric Power Supply Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 430.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1274.

North Sea
British Trawlers Fired on by the Baltic Fleet.
Commission of Inquiry.
Os. Lord Oranmore and Browne, Feb. 14, 14; Earl Spencer, 21; Marquess of Lansdowne, 29; Mr. Mount, 110; Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, 133; Mr G. Bowles, 148.
References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 3.
Constitution of—Paper Presented, Feb. 14, 92.
Findings of.
Q. Mr. J. Ellis; A. Earl Percy, Feb. 23, 1098, 1099.
Q. Mr. J. Ellis; A. Earl Percy, Feb. 27, 1315, 1316.
Report Presented, Feb. 27, 1274, 1296.
Correspondence Presented, Feb. 14, 54, 93.

North Sussex Gas Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 575.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1294.

Norton, Capt C. W. [Newington, West]
Army.
Artillery — Rearmament Proposals, Delay in carrying out, Feb. 22, 914–916.
Continuous Changes of Policy as to, Disastrous Effect of, Feb. 22, 912.
Reorganisation proposals, Feb. 22, 917, 918.
Rifles, New, Cost of, etc., Feb. 22, 916.
South African War—Unpreparedness of the British Army, Feb. 22, 913, 914.
Telegraph Service—Case of Mr. Soundy, Feb. 22, 895.

Norway and Sweden
see Sweden and Norway.

Norwich Union Life Insurance Society Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 575.

Nottingham and Retford Railway Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 575.

Nottingham Corporation Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 21, 721.

Nurses' Registration Bill
c. 1R.* Fb. 23, 1112.

O'Brien, Mr. P. [Kilkenny]
Inland Revenue and Post Office, Adjustment of Accounts between, in Ireland, Feb. 23, 110.
Piltown Postal Arrangements, Improvement of, Feb. 27, 1335.
South African War—Sentences on Military Convicts, Feb. 21, 770, 771; Feb. 23, 1088.
Coughlan, Private T., Case of, Feb. 28, 1449.

O'Brien, Mr. P. J. [Tipperary, North]
Constabulary, Royal Irish—Charges for Extra Police, Method of Recovery, etc., Feb. 27, 1308.
Local Government Board Public Bodies Order 1904, Withdrawal of, Feb. 27, 1308.

O'Connor, Mr. J. [Wicklow, West]
Avondale Estate Grazing Lands, Letting of, Feb. 16, 321.
Deceased Wife's Sister Bill—Australian Commonwealth letter asking for Legislation, Feb. 20, 620.
Income Tax Collection—Non-payment by Landlord and threat of Distraint on Tenanted Land, Feb. 20, 617.
Local Government Board Public Bodies Order, Withdrawal of, Feb. 16, 322.
Sheep Disease in County Wicklow, Investigation of, Feb. 16, 321.
Tinahely Dispensary District—Inquiry into Charges against Dr. Bolster, Feb. 20, 608.

O'Connor, Mr. T. P. [Liverpool, Scotland]
MacDonnell, Sir A., Conditions of Appointment of, as Under Secretary, Feb. 22, 1004–1010.

O'Doherty, Mr. W. [Donegal, North]
Agricultural and Technical Department Schemes —Regulation as to Appointment of Instructors, Feb. 27, 1304.
Donegal Railway System, Disposal of, Feb. 27, 1302.
Foyle, Lough—Erection of Buoy on Tuns Bank, Feb. 24, 1211.

O'Doherty, Mr. W.—cont.
Londonderry, Telephone Extension to, Delay in, Feb. 28, 1454.
Marine Works, Allocation of Grants for, Feb. 24, 1213.
Poor Law (Ireland) Reform Commission Report, Feb. 27, 1304.

O'Donnell, Mr. J. [Mayo, South]
Ballyhaunis Dispensary District, Maternity Nurse for, Feb. 23, 1081.
Bourke, Isadore, Estate of—Distribution of Grazing Farms, Feb. 23, 1079 .
Erne Estate, Sale of, Feb. 27, 1307.
Mile Hill, Ballinrobe—Purchase of Grazing Lands, Feb. 27, 1306.
Nolan-Farrell Estate—Distribution of Grazing Lands, Feb. 23, 1080.

O'Donnell, Mr. T. [Kerry, West]
Kerry County Council Auditor, Complaint as to, Feb. 28. 1487.

O'Dowd, Mr. J. [Sligo, South]
Beetroot, Encouragement of Cultivation of, in Ireland, Feb. 24, 1212.
Land Purchase.
Future Tenants, Purchasing Powers of, Feb. 20, 609.
Sligo—Refusal of Landowners to sell, alleged, Feb. 20, 614.
Larkhill School, Provision for Education of Roman Catholic Children at, Feb. 27, 1324.
Sligo County, Councils — Views as to Public Bodies Order, 1904, Feb. 27, 1326.

O'Kelly, Mr. J. [Roscommon, North]
Bahr-el-Ghazal, Missions in, Feb. 27, 1297,
Land Purchase, Compulsory Power for, Proposed, Feb. 15, 177.

Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 430.

Odessa
Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 39.

Oldham and Saddleworth District Tramways Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 430.

Omagh
Urban County District—Order Presented, Feb. 14, 58, 95.

Onslow, Earl of—President of the Board of Agriculture Committees, Appointment of Chairman of.
Qs. Marquess of Landsowne, Earl Spencer, Feb. 16, 286–290.

Orange River Colony
Bloemfontein—Loss by fire in Military Stores.
Q. Mr. Whitley; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 28, 1469.
Garrison in, Cost of.
Q. Mr. Whitley; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 20, 595.
Representative Government for.
Delay in Granting.
Qs. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Feb. 14, 135; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 155.
Discussing in Parliament, Opportunity for.
Qs. Dr. Macnamara, Mr. S. MacNeill, Mr. S. Buxton, Mr. Bryce; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Mr. Speaker, Feb. 23, 1094–1096,
Revenue, Information as to.
Q. Mr. Buchanan; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 20, 591.
War Contribution, Provision for Payment of.
Qs. Mr. G. Bowles; As. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 16, 315–317.

Oranmore and Browne, Lord
Commerce and Industry, Ministry of, Feb. 14, 18.
Electoral Areas, Anomalies in Arrangement of, Feb. 14, 17.
King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 14, 11–18.
Local Government Board, and Board of Trade, Improvement in Status of, Feb. 14, 18.
North Sea Incident, Appointment of Commission of Inquiry into, Feb. 14, 14.
Scotland—Free Church Property, Dispute as to Administration of, Feb. 14, 15.
Tibet Expedition, Feb. 14, 12–14.

"Orion," H.M.S.
Construction, Information as to.
Q. Mr. J. F. Hope; A. Mr. Pretyman, Feb. 20, 584.

Ormsby-Gore, Mr. S. F. [Lincoln, Gainsborough]
Foreign Lighthouses maintained at cost of British Government, Feb. 27, 1316.
King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 28, 1556–1562.
Sugar, Working of Brussels Convention, Effect on Prices, etc., Feb. 28, 1556–1560.

Orpen Estate Proceedings
Arrests, Private Inquiry by Magistrate, etc.
Q. Mr. Flynn; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 21, 777, 778.

Orphan Working School and Alexandra Orphanage Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.

Osaka
Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Osborne
Rules under Parks Regulation Act, Presented, Feb. 16, 283, 296.

Osborne Estate Act (1902) Amendment Bill
c. 1r.* Feb. 27, 1346.

O'Shaughnessy, Mr. P. J. [Limerick, West]
Income Tax Collection—Non-payment by Landlord and Threat of Distraint on tenanted Land, Feb. 20, 617.

Otley Gas and Improvement Bill
c. 1r.* Feb. 20, 575.
2r.* Feb. 28, 1445.

Outlawries Bill
c. 1r.* Feb. 14, 80.

Oxford University
Statutes, Amendment of, Presented, Feb. 14, 64, 101.

Oxfordshire
Navy Recruiting Notice posted in, authority for.
Q. Mr. S. MacNeill; A. Mr. A. Lee, Feb. 16, 304, 305.

Pacific Cable
Cost of—Colonial Contribution, Recovery of.
Q. Mr. G. Bowles; A. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 16, 314.

Palmer, Sir W. [Salisbury]
King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 27, 1412–1418.
Sugar—Working of Brussels Convention, Effect on Prices, etc., Feb. 27, 1412.

Panama
Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Parker, Sir G. [Gravesend]
Transvaal—Importation of Chinese Labour, Feb. 17, 500–506.

Parkes, Mr. E. [Birmingham, Central]
Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in, Feb. 15, 236–238.

Parliament
Committees, see that title.
Date of Summoning.
Os. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Feb. 14, 121, 157; Mr. A. J. Balfour; 157.
House of Commons.
Journal—Sessional Order, Feb. 14, 80, 81.

Parliament—cont.
House of Commons—cont.
Ventilation.
Progress made with improvements in.
Q. Mr. Wylie; A. Lord Balcarres, Feb. 22, 883.
Report on, Presented, Feb. 22, 881; Feb. 23, 1018.
Votes and Proceedings—Sessional Order, Feb. 14, 80.
Witnesses, Tampering with—Sessional Order, Feb. 14, 79.
House of Lords.
Accumulation of Business at the end of the Session, Time allowed for Consideration of Bills, etc.
Os. Lord James of Hereford, Marquess of Lansdowne, Feb. 16, 290–292.
Bills, see that title.
Black Rod, Gentleman Usher of—Appointment of Sir H. F. Stephenson, Feb. 14, 1.
New Peers introduced.
Bangor, Bishop of, Feb. 14, 5.
Bristol, Bishop of, Feb. 27, 1273.
Offices Committee, Appointment of, Feb. 24, 1206.
Roll of the Lords, Presented, Feb. 14, 5; Feb. 17, 430.
Sat First.
Brandon, Duke of, After the death of his kinsman, Feb. 27, 1273.
Clinton, Lord, after the death of his father, Feb. 14, 5.
Hardwicke, Earl of, after the death of his nephew, Feb. 14, 5.
Ridley, Viscount, after the death of his father, Feb. 14, 5.
Tollemache, Lord, after the death of his grandfather, Feb. 16, 277.
Took the Oath—Lord Ranfurly, Feb. 14, 5.
Houses of, Approaches to—Sessional Order to Metropolitan Police, Feb. 14, 79.

Parliamentary Constituencies
Electors, etc., Particulars as to—Return Ordered, Feb. 15, 173; Presented, Feb. 21, 753.

Parliamentary Elections
Bribery and Corrupt Practices—Sessional Order, Feb. 14, 79.
General Election, see that title.
Members returned for two or more places—Procedure, Feb 14, 65.

[cont.

Parliamentary Elections—cont.
New Members Sworn
Cheetham, Mr. J. F., for Borough of Stalybridge, Feb. 14, 65.
Harmood-Banner, Mr J. S., for Borough of Liverpool (Everton Division), Feb. 28, 1492.
Lawson, Col. H. L. W., for Tower Hamlets (Mile End Division), Feb. 14, 65.
Marks, Mr. H. H., for Kent (Isle of Thanet Division), Feb. 14, 65.
O'Connor, Mr. J., for Kildare (North Division), Feb. 16, 329.
Richards, Mr T., for Monmouth, (Western Division), Feb. 14, 65.
Turnour, Viscount, for Sussex (North Western or Horsham Division), Feb. 14, 65.
Wills, Mr. A. W., for Dorset (Northern Division), Feb. 14, 65.
New Writs.
Bute, County of, Feb. 17, 469.
Dorset (Northern Division), Feb. 14, 65.
Kent, (Isle of Thanet Division), Feb. 14, 65.
Kildare (Northern Division), Feb. 14, 65.
Liverpool (Everton Division), Feb. 15, 169.
Monmouth (Western Division), Feb. 14, 65.
Stalybridge, Feb. 14, 65.
Sussex (West or Horsham Division), Feb. 14, 65.
Tower Hamlets (Mile End Division), Feb. 14, 65.
Westmoreland (Northern or Appleby Division), Feb. 16, 329.
Peers, Interference of—Sessional Order and Motion.
Os. Sir W. Lawson, Feb. 14, 66; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 67, 74; Mr. Dalziel, 71, 74.
Polling Districts, see that title.

Parliamentary Procedure
Blocking Notices Precluding Discussion of Urgent Matters—Amendment of Standing Orders relating to.
Os. Mr. J. Ellis, Feb. 27, 1340, 1342; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 1340, 1341; Mr. G. Bowles, Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Sir G. Bartley, 1341; Mr. S. MacNeill, Mr. Speaker, 1342, 1343.

Partington, Mr. O. [Derbyshire, High Peak]
Sugar, Beet and Cane — Information as to Production, Feb. 28, 1460.
Tea, Indian and Cingalese, Russian Import Duty on, Feb. 24, 1211.

Patent Law
Foreigners taking out Patents in England, Regulations as to.
Os. Sir E. Durning-Lawrence, Feb. 16, 361.

Patents, Designs and Trade Marks
Patent Rules, Presented, Feb. 15, 172; Feb. 16, 284.

Pauperism
see Poor Law—Paupers.

Pease, Mr. H. P. [Darlington]
Fiscal Policy—Preferential Trade with Colonies—Terms of Mr. Churchill's Motion, Feb. 27, 1343.

Pease, Mr. J. A. [Essex, Saffron Walden]
Business of the House, Course of, Feb. 28, 1585.

Peel, Mr. W. R. W. [Manchester, South]
Army.
Re-organisation Proposals, Feb. 23, 1159.
Rifles, New Pattern—Committee, Freedom of Action allowed to, Feb. 23, 1158.
Militia, Foreign Service for, Proposals as to, Feb. 23, 1159.
Volunteers—Re-organisation Proposals, Feb. 23, 1158.
War Office, Re-organisation of, Feb. 23, 1157.

Pemba
Slavery in, Correspondence Presented, Feb. 14, 51, 92.
Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 39.

Penal Servitude Acts 1853 to 1891
Licences Granted Conditionally—Presented, Feb. 14, 59, 60, 98. 99.

Percy, Earl—Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs [Kensington, South]
Bagdad Railway, Progress made with, Feb. 23, 1077.
Congo Free State, Belgian Administration of.
De Tiege, M., Case of, Feb. 15, 177.
Inquiry into, Information as to, Feb. 16, 311.
Missionaries, British, Treatment of, Feb. 20, 596.
Van Calcken, M., Case of—Publication of Papers proposed, Feb. 20, 597.

[cont

Percy, Earl—cont.
Egypt.
British Garrison in, Maintenance of, Feb. 28, 1476.
Infant Mortality in, Feb. 23, 1098.
Pilgrims, Treatment of, at Suez, Feb. 21, 773.
Protection, etc., of, Feb. 22, 894.
Hague Tribunal Reports, Date of Issue of, Feb. 24, 1210.
King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 27, 1373-1385, 1386, 1387, 1388.
Macedonia, Condition of, Progress made with Reforms, etc., Feb. 27, 1373-1385.
Netherlands—Claim of Mr. Godden, Decision as to, Feb. 16, 308; Feb. 28, 1459.
North Sea—British Trawlers Fired on by Baltic Fleet—Findings of Commission of Inquiry, Feb. 23, 1099; Feb. 27, 1316.
Soudan—Missions in Bahr-el-Ghazal, Feb. 27, 1297.
Uganda, Belgian Domination in, Feb. 27, 1315.
United States—British Brandy, Import Duty on, Feb. 16, 310.
Venezuela, Claims against—Hague Tribunal Award, Feb. 24, 1210

Persia
Bagdad Railway, see that title.
British Trade Prospects in — Report Presented, Feb. 14, 48, 85.
Import Duties on British Goods—Statement Presented, Feb. 14, 52, 85.
Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 39, 40.

Perth
Motor Car Traffic, Orders Prohibiting, Presented, Feb. 17, 432, 468.
Prison Visiting Committee, Rules for, Presented, Feb. 28, 1447.

Peru
Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Peterhead
Harbour Report Presented, Feb. 14, 48, 90.
Prison Visiting Committee, Rules for, Presented, Feb. 28, 1447.

Pharmacy Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 480.

Pharmacy (Ireland) Acts, 1875 and 1890
Order approving regulation, Presented, Feb. 14, 58, 94.

Physical Deterioration
Causes of.
Os. Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 14, 142-145.
Committee of Inquiry, Report and Recommendations of.
Os. Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 14, 141-145; Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 23, 1143-1145.
Adoption of.
Qs. Dr. Macnamara; As. Mr. A. Douglas, Sir W. Anson, Feb. 21 775, 776.
Carrying out of, Steps towards.
Qs. Sir J. Gorst, Dr. Macnamara; As. Mr. A. Douglas, Mr. Long, Sir W. Anson; Feb. 27, 1316-1318.
Discussion in Parliament, Opportunity for.
Q. Dr. Macnamara; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 23, 1094.
State Maintenance of Children, proposed.
Os. Sir J. Gorst, Feb. 14, 144.
Underfed Children, Provision of meals for, see under Education — Underfed Children.

Piers and Harbours
Bills, etc., Relating to Harbours—Report on, Ordered, Feb. 23, 1072; Presented, Feb. 24, 1209.
Board of Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 28, 1442, 1447.
Ireland—Burtonport Harbour, Dredging of.
Q. Mr. H. Law; A. Mr. V. Cavendish, Feb. 24, 1212.

Pilkington, Lt.-Col. R. [Lancashire, Newton]
Alien Immigration, Legislative proposals as to, Feb. 14, 146.
Altcar Rifle Range, Protest against closing of, Feb. 28, 1470.
Commerce and Industry, Ministry of, proposed Establishment of, Feb. 14, 147.
Electoral Areas, Redistribution of, Feb. 14, 146.
Underfed Children, Meals for, Feb. 14, 145.
Volunteers—Future of the Force, Decision as to, Feb. 23, 1136-1138.
Workmen's Compensation Acts, Amendment of, Feb. 14, 147.

Piltown
Postal Arrangements, Improvement of.
Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 27, 1335, 1336.

Pirie, Mr. D. V. [Aberdeen, North]
Dudley, Lord, Resignation of Lord Lieutenantcy of Ireland by, Feb. 23, 1109, 1110.

Plummer, Sir W. R. [Newcastle-on-Tyne]
Coal—Remission of Export Duty, Feb. 28, 1462.
Naval Cadets, Newcastle proposed as an Examination Centre for, Feb. 23, 1075.

Plural Voting Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 475.

Plymouth
Dockyard Port Regulations, Order amending, Presented, Feb. 14, 62, 100.

Police
Constabulary, Royal Irish, see that title.
Metropolitan.
Houses of Parliament, Approaches to —Sessional Order, Feb. 14, 79.
Report (1903) Presented, Feb. 14, 46, 82.

Polling Districts
Alterations in—Orders Presented, Feb. 14, 60, 97.
Fareham Division (Sarisbury District) Order altering, Presented, Feb. 21, 722, 753.
Lancaster—Chorley Division, Alteration in—Order Presented, Feb. 17, 431, 468.

Poor Law
Ireland.
Ballyhaunis Dispensary District, Maternity Nurse for.
Qs. Mr. J. O'Donnell; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 23, 1081, 1082.
Dispensary Doctors, Salaries of.
Q. Mr. Hemphill; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 17, 471.
Pentland, Dr., Case of.
Q. Mr. Farrell; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 613.
Reform Commission.
Interim Report, Issue of, proposed.
Q. Mr. O'Doherty; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27. 1304.
Report, date of Presenting.
Qs. Mr. Sloan, Captain Donelan; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 23, 1079.
TinahelyDistrict—Inquiry into charges against Dr. Bolster.
Q. Mr. Jas. O'Connor; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 608.
Officers, Superannuation of—School Attendance Officers, Regulations as to.
Q. Mr. Duncan; A. Mr. W. Long, Feb. 23, 1102.

Poor Law—cont,
Paupers.
Deportation of, to Ireland.
Q. Mr. Farrell; A. Mr. W. Long, Feb. 27, 1337.
Relief—Monthly Statement ordered, Feb. 16, 298.
Return Presented, Feb. 17, 468.
Statements Presented, Feb. 20, 720.
Unions—Accounts and forms, date of Order prescribing system of.
Q. Mr. Flynn; A. Mr. W. Long, Feb. 23, 1101.
Simplification of Workhouse Accounts—Recommendations of Committee.
Q. Mr. Bright; A. Mr. Long, Feb. 27, 1319.

Port Talbot
Sea-fishing boats, Order in Council as to registry of, Presented, Feb. 14, 62, 102.

Portree
Channel Fleet, Visit of, suggested.
Q. Mr. J. Dewar; A. Mr. Pretyman, Feb. 28, 1452.
Mail Service delays at.
Q. Mr. J. Dewar; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 22, 883

Portugal
Arbitration Treaty with Great Britain.
Presented, Feb. 14, 45, 92.
Reference to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 3.
King and Queen of, Visit of, to Great Britain.
References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 2.
Os. Marquess of Winchester, Feb. 14, 6; Earl Spencer, 19.
Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 39, 40.

Post Office
Postmaster-General—Lord Stanley.
Country Officers, exhibition of Notices of Volunteer Parades, etc., at.
Q. Mr. C. Allen; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 22, 895.
Engineers, Promotion of.
Q. Mr. Schwann; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 28, 1455, 1456.
Ireland.
Adjustment with Inland Revenue Department, Arrangement as to.
Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. V. Cavendish, Feb. 23, 1110, 1111.
Belfast, see under that title.
Dublin, see under that title.
Mail Service, see that sub-heading.
Piltown Postal Arrangements, Improvement of.
Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Lord Stanley; Feb. 27, 1335, 1336.
[cont.

Post Office—cont.

Mail Service.

Australian—Terms of New Contract.
Qs. Sir M. Bhownaggree, Mr. C. Wason; As. Lord Stanley, Feb. 28, 1479, 1480.

Ireland, North of—Additional Mail, proposed.
Q. Mr. T. W. Russell; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 20, 584.

Scotland—Delay at Portree.
Q. Mr. J. Dewar; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 22, 883.

Money Orders.

Colonies, Agreements with, Presented, Feb. 14, 95, 96.

Foreign Countries, Agreements with, Presented, Feb. 14, 54, 95.

Postal Orders, see that subheading.

Night Messengers in the Provinces, increase in pay of.
Qs. Mr. J. Campbell, Mr. Nannetti; As. Lord Stanley, Feb. 27, 1318, 1319.

Postal Orders.

Clerical work on Irish Orders, transfer of, to Dublin, proposed.
Q. Mr. Field; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 28, 1453.

Colonial—Regulations Presented, Feb. 16, 283.

Postal Telegraph Clerks' Association, Official dissuasion of clerks from joining, alleged.
Q. Mr. Bell; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 22, 884.

Postmasters.

Irish Language—see that subheading under Ireland.

Postmen.

Keane, E., dismissal of, from Limerick.
Q. Mr. Lundon; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 22, 902.

Pay of—Decision as to Withington.
Q. Mr. Schwann; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 20, 601, 602.

Wages, Bradford Committee on—Tabling Correspondence, proposed.
Q. Mr. Bayley; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 16, 298, 299.

Printing and Stationery Contracts—Employment of Irish firms.
Q. Mr. Field; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 28, 1454.

Savings Bank, see that title—Post Office.

Telegraph and Telephone Services, see those titles.

Wages—Bradford Committee's failure to Comply with terms of Reference, alleged.
Q. Mr. Shackleton; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 28, 1456.

Postmaster-General
Lord Stanley.

Report, Annual, Date of Presenting.
Q. Dr. Macnamara; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 16, 318.

Potatoes

Seed, Grants for.
Q. Col. Nolan; A. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 16, 326.

Remission of Interest on Loan, proposed.
Qs. Col. Nolan, Mr. Dillon; As. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 20, 618, 619.

Power, Mr. P. J. [Waterford, East]

Waterford—Army Horses, Outbreak of Epizootic Lymphangitis among, Feb. 23, 1087, 1088.

President of the Board of Agriculture
Earl of Onslow.

President of the Board of Education
Marquess of Londonderry.

President of the Board of Trade
Rt. Hon. G. W. Balfour.

President of the Local Government Board
Rt. Hon. W. H. Long.

Preston Corporation (Ribble Navigation) Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 21, 721.

Pretyman, Capt. E. G.—Secretary to the Admiralty [Suffolk, Woobridge]

Admiralty Board—Distribution of Business, Feb. 20, 592.

Battleships, Obsolete, Number of, and cost of Repairs to—Return proposed, Feb. 21, 769, 770.

"Berwick," H.M.S., Flogging on, Feb. 28, 1469.

Cadets, Engineer, Newcastle as an Examination Centre for, proposed, Feb. 23, 1075.

Channel Fleet—Visit to Portree suggested, Feb. 28, 1452.

Cruisers, Armour for, Date of Ordering, Feb. 24, 1210.

"Enchantress," Admiralty Yacht, Cost of Alterations to, etc., Feb. 22, 890.

Establishment, Discharges from, Feb. 27, 1311.

Flogging.

"Berwick," H.M.S., on, Feb. 28, 1469.

Information as to, Feb. 27, 1312; Feb. 28, 1469.

Guns—Decision as to Quick-firing Batteries, Feb. 28, 1451.

[cont.

Pretyman, Capt. E. G.—cont.
- Meritorious Service Rewards for Petty Officers, proposed, Feb. 21, 756.
- "Orion," H.M.S., Information as to, Construction of, Feb. 20, 584.
- Reserve Batteries on Islands of Skye and Barra, Delay in erection of, Feb. 28, 1468.
- Submarine Mine fields, Decision as to, Feb. 28, 1451.
- Training Ships—Number of—and of lads under training, Feb. 23, 1085.
- Wei-hai-Wei Naval Base, Expenditure on, Feb. 28, 1452.

Prime Minister
- Rt. Hon. A. J. Balfour

Prisons
- Borstal—Visiting Committee—Rules Presented, Feb. 21, 722, 753; Feb. 22, 881.
- Convict—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 46, 82.
- Military, see Army—Prisons.
- Scotland.
  - Prisoners, Measuring, etc.—Regulations Presented, Feb. 15, 172; Feb. 16, 283.
  - Visiting Committees, Rules for, Presented, Feb. 28, 1447.
- Stafford Prison Visiting Committee, Rules as to, Presented, Feb. 20, 542, 581; Feb. 21, 753.

Private Bill Procedure (Ireland) Bill
- c. 1R.* Feb. 23, 1112.

Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act (1899)
- Commissioners, Selection of, Feb. 28, 1493
- Provisional Order Bills having the Character of Private Bills, Application of Section 16 to, Feb. 16, 285, 297.

Private Legislation Procedure (Wales) Bill
- c. 1R* Feb. 17, 475.

Privilege, Breach of
- Alington, Lord, Interference by, in Parliamentary Election, alleged.
  - Os. Sir W. Lawson, Feb. 14, 66; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 67, 74; Mr. Dalziel, 71, 74.

Privileges Committee
- Appointment of—Sessional Order, Feb. 14, 64, 80.

Public Entertainment Bill
- c. 1R.* Feb. 24, 1272.

Public Offices Site (Dublin) Act 1903.
- Accounts, Presented, Feb. 14, 104; Feb. 17, 467.

Public Records
- Documents of not sufficient value to justify preservation—Schedules presented, Feb. 16, 284, 298.

Public Revenue
- see Revenue and Expenditure of the United Kingdom.

Public Trustee and Executor Bill
- c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 479.

Purchase of Land (England and Wales), Bill
- c. 1R.* Feb. 22, 911.

Purvis, Mr. R. [Peterborough]
- Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in, Feb. 14, 220–222.
- Ireland, Administration of—Home Rule Question, etc., Feb. 21, 835–837.
- Sugar, Price of, Effect of Beet Sugar Industry on, etc., Feb. 15, 222.

Quarries
- see title Mines and Quarries.

Quays
- see title Docks, Wharves, and Quays.

Queensland
- Sugar Cultivation in, Possibility of developing by means of Tropical Labour.
  - O. Sir W. Thorburn, Feb. 28, 1512.

Quilter, Sir W. C. [Suffolk, Sudbury]
- Arsenical Poisoning, Royal Commission on—Adoption of recommendations, Feb. 28, 1458.

Raglan, Lord
- Army Reorganisation Proposals, Feb. 21, 739–742.
- Militia Reorganisation Proposals, Feb. 21, 739–742.

Railway and Canal Traffic Acts
- Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 17, 431, 467.

Railways
- For Railways elsewhere than the United Kingdom, see names of places, as Gold Coast.
- Accidents—Returns Presented, Feb. 14, 53, 84, 85.
- Bills, etc., relating to—Report on, Ordered, Feb. 23, 1072; Presented, Feb. 24, 1209.
- Cattle, Transit of, see under Cattle.
- Electrification of—Inspection by Board of Trade.
  - Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 21, 776, 777.

[cont.

Railways—cont.

- Engines, Tank, with Passenger Trains—Return as to Accidents, proposed.
  - Qs. Mr. Bell; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 22, 897.
- Ireland.
  - Donegal Railway System, Disposal of, Remission of Guarantee Tax, etc.
    - Q. Mr. O'Doherty; A. Mr. V. Cavendish, Feb. 27, 1302.
  - Statistics Presented, Feb. 14, 48, 86.
- Light—Construction — Orders Presented, Feb. 14, 49, 50, 83.
- Rates and Transit facilities.
  - Agricultural Produce, for, see under Agriculture.
  - Cattle, see that title—Transit facilities.
  - Fish, for, Reduction in, proposed.
    - Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 27, 1321.
  - Foreign Produce, Preferential Rates for.
    - Q. Mr. Field; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 21, 756.
- Scotland—West Highland Railway, Banavie to Mallaig extension—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 61, 99.
- Servants—Hours of Labour—Return Presented, Feb. 14, 52, 85.

Railways (Private Sidings) Act 1904

- Rule as to Applications, Presented, Feb. 14, 61, 99.

Ramsgate Harbour

- Accounts Presented, Feb. 21, 723, 754.

Ranfurley, Earl of

- Military Training for Youths, Necessity for, Feb. 20, 556.
- Took the Oath, Feb. 14, 5.

Rasch, Major Sir F. C. [Essex, Chelmsford]

- Aden Frontier Force, Casualties in, and Rewards to, Feb. 22, 893.
- Agriculture, Condition of, Feb. 24, 1266–1268.
- Army.
  - Artillery, Re-armament of, with Quick-firing Guns, Feb. 22, 959.
  - Cavalry—Adoption of Patterson Equipment, Feb. 22, 890.
  - Reform Proposals, Feb. 22, 959–961.
  - Rifles, New Pattern, Merits of, Feb. 22, 960.
- Indian Army—Cavalry, Patterson Equipment for, Feb. 22, 890.
- Militia Reform Proposals, Feb. 22, 960, 961.

Rathmines and Rathgar Extension and Improvement Bill

- c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 576.

Rathmore, Lord

- Dunraven Devolution Scheme, Feb. 17, 450.

Rating of Machinery Bill

- c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 622.

Records, Public

- Documents of not sufficient Value to justify Preservation—Schedules Presented, Feb. 16, 284, 298.

Reddy, Mr. M. [King's County, Birr]

- Ffrench Estate, Sale of, Feb. 27, 1330.
- King's County—Police Assistance at Seizures for Rent, Feb. 27, 1330.
- Siskin Evicted Tenant, Re-instatement of, Feb. 27, 1330.

Redmond, Mr. J. E. [Waterford]

- Administration of Ireland, Objections to Present System, etc., Feb. 20, 622–632.
- MacDonnell, Sir A.
  - Censure of, by the Government, Reasons for, Feb. 27, 1327, 1328.
  - Conditions of Appointment, Term of Office, etc., Feb. 22, 904–907, 964–978.
    - Motion for Adjournment of the House, Feb. 22, 910.
  - Correspondence with Chief Secretary, Tabling, Feb. 22, 905.

Reformatory and Industrial Schools

- Ireland—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 41, 87.
- Report Presented, Feb. 14, 41, 82.

Reid, Mr. J. [Greenock]

- Sugar—Working of Brussels Convention, Feb. 28, 1548–1550.

Renfrew

- Landward School—Appointment of Pupil Teacher vetoed on ground of Unsuccessful Vaccination.
  - Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 27, 1321, 1322.

Renwick, Mr. G. [Newcastle-on-Tyne]

- Bye-Elections, Loss of, as a Reason for Dissolution, Feb. 15, 241.
- Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in, Feb. 15, 241–246.
- Navy—Vessels put out of Commission—Disposal of Guns, Feb. 16, 304.

Reserve Forces Bill

- l. 1R.* Feb. 16, 285
- 2R. Feb. 24, 1207.
- Com. and Rep., Feb. 28, 1444.

Reval
Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Revenue and Expenditure of the United Kingdom.
Accounts, System of, Commission of Inquiry into, proposed.
Q. Mr. G. Bowles; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 27, 1297.
Appropriation Accounts Presented, Feb. 17, 468.
Deficit, Provision for Meeting.
Q. Mr. McCrae; A. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 28, 1477.
Estimates Presented, Feb. 27, 1295.
Supplementary, Amounts of (1873-1904) —Return Ordered, Feb. 21, 755.
Interception of Public Revenue—Return Ordered, Feb. 21, 775; Presented, Feb. 27, 1295.
Taxes, Collection of—Amount charged and collected, etc.—Return Ordered, Feb. 28, 1447.

Rhodesia, Southern
Educational system—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 47, 88.

Rhondda Urban District Council Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 576.
2R.* Feb. 28, 1445.

Rhymney Railway Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 430.
2R.* Feb. 28, 1441.

Rice Industry
United States, in, Report as to, Presented, Feb. 14, 41.

Ridley, Viscount
Sat first in Parliament after the death of his father, Feb. 14, 5.

Riffey River
Drainage of —Board for district of Cam, etc.
Q. Mr. Farrell; A. Mr. V. Cavendish, Feb. 28, 1490.

Rifle Range
Altcar—Protest against closing.
Q. Colonel Pilkington; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 28, 1470.

Rifles
Army and Navy, see under those titles.

Riga
Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 39.

Rio de Janeiro
Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Ripon, Marquis of
Army Rifle, New Pattern, Feb. 23, 1065.
MacDonnell, Sir Antony, Conditions of Appointment of, Connection with Dunraven Devolution scheme, etc. Feb. 17, 47.
Transvaal—Chinese Labour, Supervision of White Labour by, Feb. 27, 1289-1291.

Ritualistic Practices
Commission on—Date of Publication of Report.
Q. Mr. A. Taylor; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 21, 780.

Riverstown
Petty Sessions—Action of Crown Solicitor
Qs. Captain Donelan; As. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 27, 1343-1345.

Roberts, Earl
Army Rifles, New Pattern, Feb. 43, 1034-1043.

Roberts, Mr. J. H. [Denbighshire, W.]
Afghanistan, British Mission to, Feb. 16, 307.
India.
Administration—Separation of Judicial and Executive Functions, Feb. 23, 1073.
Bengal Excise Bill—Views of Indian Government, etc., Feb. 27, 1314.
Police, Commission on—Date of Tabling Report, Feb. 16, 307.

Roberts, Mr. S. [Sheffield, Ecclesball.]
Alien Immigration, Legislative proposals as to, Feb. 14, 117.
Arbitration Treaty between France and Great Britain, Ratification of, Feb. 14, 115.
Commerce and Industry, Ministry of, Proposed Establishment of, Feb. 14, 119.
Electoral Areas, Redistribution of, Feb. 14, 116.
Scottish Free Church Dispute, Feb. 14, 116.
Transvaal, Representative Institutions for, Feb. 14, 115.
Unemployed, Methods of dealing with, Feb. 14, 117.
Workmen's Compensation Acts, Amendment of, Feb. 14, 118.

Robertson, Mr. E. [Dundee]
King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 27, 1418-1424.
Navy—Rosyth Base, Expenditure on, Feb. 23, 1086.
Sugar—Working of Brussels Convention, Effect on Prices, etc., Feb. 27, 1418, 1426.

Robertson, Mr. T. H. [Hackney, S.]
Corn, Cultivation of, in the Colonies, increasing, proposed, Feb. 15, 252.
Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in, Feb. 15 248–252.
Ireland, Administration of—Home Rule Question, etc., Feb. 21, 841–846.

Robson, Mr. W. S. [South Shields]
Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in, Feb. 16, 368–377.

Roche, Mr. J. [Galway, East.]
Clanricarde Estate Evictions and Reinstatements, Feb. 27, 1326.
Lewis Estate, Ballinagar—Evictions and Reinstatements, Feb. 27, 1326.

Rochester, Earl of
Morley, Earl of, Death of—Tribute to Services as Chairman of Committees, Feb. 27, 1276.

Rollit, Sir A. K. [Islington, S.]
Army—University Candidates, Commissions for, Feb. 23, 1167.
County Court Fees, Reduction in, Feb. 16, 320.
Militia—Submarine Mining Divisions, Decision as to, Feb. 23, 1166.
Transvaal Loan.
  Repayment of, Feb. 28, 1471.
  First Instalment, Date of Issue of, Feb. 22, 891.
Volunteers—Reorganisation Proposals, Feb. 23, 1165, 1166.

Rose, Mr. C. D. [Cambridge, Newmarket]
Transvaal Mines—Receipts from Profit Tax, etc., Feb. 28, 1473.

Ross-shire
Regiments, Depot for, at Dingwall, proposed.
  Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1091.
Schools in, Provision of pure Water Supply for.
  Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 28, 1484.

Rosyth
see under Navy.

Rotherham, Maltby, and Laughton Railway Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 576.

Royal Irish Constabulary
see Constabulary, Royal Irish.

Royal University of Ireland
Accounts and Report Presented, Feb. 15, 173.
Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 50, 87.

Rubber
Gold Coast and Sierra Leone—Reports Presented, Feb. 14, 43, 90.

Runciman, Mr. W. [Dewsbury]
Australia—Import Duty on Price Lists, etc., Feb. 23, 1085.
Chief Secretary for Ireland, Resignation of, Feb. 28, 1586.
King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 28, 1579–1582.

Rural District Councils
Bye-laws as to Building of Cottages—Return proposed.
  Q. Mr. H. Hobhouse; A. Mr. W. Long, Feb. 23, 1076.

Rural Districts, Depopulation of see under Agriculture.

Russell, Mr. T. W. [Tyrone, South]
Administration of Ireland—Sir A. MacDonnell and the Devolution Scheme etc., Feb. 20, 686–698.
King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 20, 686–7, 688–698, 720.
Land Act, 1903.
  Administration—Instructions issued by Commissioners, Feb. 20, 609.
  Estates Commissioners—Date of Presenting Report, Feb. 20, 607.
MacDonnell, Sir A.
  Dunraven Devolution Scheme, Connection with, Feb. 20, 611.
  Term of Office, Conditions of Appointment, etc., Feb. 22, 905, 906.
Mail Service, North of Ireland—Additional Mail proposed, Feb. 20, 584.

Russia
Joint Stock Companies, etc., Agreement as to, Presented, Feb. 14, 45, 92.
North Sea Incident, see under North Sea—British Trawlers.
Sugar Exports to United Kingdom.
  Amount of.
    Os. Mr. Kearley, Feb. 27, 1402, 1406, 1407; Mr. G. Balfour, 1406; Mr. J. Chamberlain, 1407, 1437, 1438; Mr. Lloyd-George, Feb. 28, 1499; Mr. Lawrence, 1504; Sir W. Thorburn, 1511; Mr. B. Law, 1522; Mr. Lough, 1541, 1542; Mr. G. Balfour, 1574, 1575.
    Q. Mr. G. Bowles; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 28, 1460.
  Removal of Prohibition Against, proposed.
    Qs. Mr. Lough; As. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 16, 309, 310.
Tea, Indian and Cingalese, Duty on.
  Q. Mr. E. Wason; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 20, 601.
  Q. Mr. Partington; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 24, 1211, 1212.
Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 39, 40.
War with Japan, see Russo-Japanese War.

[cont.

Russia—cont.
  Warsaw, Alleged Shooting of Workmen Leaders at—Protest by British Government, proposed.
    Qs. Mr. Keir Hardie; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 22, 908.

Russo-Japanese War
  British Vessels, Detention and search of, by Russian cruisers—Information as to "Knight Commander."
    Os. Mr. G. Bowles, Feb. 14, 148.
  Conduct and Progress of.
    Os. Marquess of Winchester, Feb. 14, 6.
  Contraband of War, see that title.
  Intervention by Great Britain, Possibilities of.
    Os. Marquess of Winchester, Feb. 14, 7; Earl Spencer, 20; Marquess of Lansdowne, 28.
  Lessons of the War.
    O. Mr. G. Bowles, Feb. 14, 148.
  Neutrality of Great Britain.
    Os. Mr. G Bowles, Feb. 14, 148; Sir E. Durning-Lawrence, Feb. 16, 366.
    References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 2.

Sadler, Col. S. A. [Middlesbrough]
  Death Certificates, Charges for, Feb. 28, 1458.

St. Helena
  Educational System—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 47, 88.

St. Louis Exhibition
  Iron and Steel Exhibits at, Report Presented, Feb. 14, 41.

St. Lucia
  Military and Naval Works, Expenditure on.
    Q. Mr. Buchanan; A. Mr. V. Cavendish, Feb. 21, 758.
  Military Establishment, Reduction in.
    Q. Mr. Buchanan; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 23, 1073.
  Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 43, 90.

Sale of Bread (London) Bill
  c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 576.
  2R.* Feb. 27, 1294.

Sale of Intoxicants to Children Bill
  l. 1R.* Feb. 27, 1275.

Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Saturdays (Ireland) Bill
  c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 477.

Sale of Intoxicating Liquors (Sunday) Bill
  c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 476.

Salford
  County Court Registrar, R. F. Addie—Order excluding from Private Practice, Presented, Feb. 14, 55, 107.
  Polling Districts, Order altering, Presented Feb. 14, 60, 97.

Salmon Fisheries (Ireland) Acts Amendment Bill
  c. 1R.* Feb. 22, 911.

Samuel, Mr. H. L. [Yorkshire, Cleveland]
  Congo Free State.
    Missionaries, British, Treatment of, Feb. 20, 596.
    Van Calcken, M., Case of—Publication of Papers proposed, Feb. 20, 597.
  King's Speech—Address in answer, Feb. 17, 490–500, 518.
  Transvaal.
    Chinese Labour, Importation of, Feb. 17, 490–500.
      Punishments inflicted by Courts, Feb. 16, 303; Feb. 23, 1084.
      Wages, Rate of, etc., Feb. 16, 305.
    White Labour, Proportion of, Employed in Mines, Feb. 16, 302, 305.
      Witwatersrand, Information as to, Feb. 20, 596.
  United States—Criminal Aliens—Number Sentenced, Number Prohibited from Landing, etc., Feb. 22, 896.

San Domingo
  Sugar, Exportation of — Decision of Brussels Convention, etc.
    Qs. Mr. Lough, Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman; As. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 16, 312, 313.

Sandgate Urban District Council Bill
  l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
  2R.* Feb. 21, 721.

Sarawak
  Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Sardinia
  Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 39.

Sassoon, Sir E. A. [Hythe]
  Brandy, British, Import Duty on, in the United States, Feb. 16, 310.

Savings Banks
  Military, see Army—Savings Banks.
  Post Office.
    Accounts, Irish, Transfer of, to Dublin, proposed.
      Q. Mr. Field; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 28, 1453.
    Balance Sheet, Date of Presenting.
      Q. Dr. Macnamara; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 16, 318.

Savings Banks—cont.
Post Office—cont.
Deficiency, Omission of, from Finance Account.
Qs. Dr. Macnamara, Mr. G. Bowles; As. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 23, 1099.

Deposits, Amount of, Information as to Assets and Liabilities, etc.
Q. Dr. Macnamara; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 16, 317, 318.

Securities, Additional Information as to, proposed.
Q. Dr. Macnamara; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 16, 319.

Seamen's, see under Merchant Shipping—Seamen.

School Board Electorate (Scotland) Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 27, 1346.

Schwann, Mr. C. E. [Manchester, N.]
Post Office.
Engineers, Promotion of, Feb. 28, 1455.
Postmen—Pay of, at Withington, Feb. 20, 601.

Street Traffic in London—Report of Committee, Date of Presentation of, Feb. 28, 1448.

Tilak, Mr., Case of—Tabling Report by Mr. Brewin, proposed, Feb. 16, 301.

Science and Art, Royal College of Regulations, etc., Presented, Feb.14, 47, 88.

Scotland
Secretary—Marquess of Linlithgow.
Lord-Advocate—Rt. Hon. C. Scott-Dickson.
Solicitor-General—Mr. E. T. Salvesen.
See also names of places.

Births, Deaths and Marriages—Annual Report Presented, Feb. 14, 51, 89.

Crofters and Cottars—Inclusion of Leaseholders in Crofters Act—Resolution of Culloden Estate Tenants.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 20, 605.

Deer Forests—Acreage, Names, etc.—Return proposed.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 20, 604.
Return ordered, Feb. 28, 1448.

Free Church Property, Administration of, Commission of Inquiry into.
References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 4.
Os. Lord Oranmore and Browne, Feb. 14, 15; Earl Spencer, 23.
Os. Mr. S. Roberts, Feb. 14, 116; Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, 136.

Scotland—cont.
Highlands and Islands—Medical Officers of Health, Increasing number of, and Re-arrangement of Areas, proposed.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 27, 1322.

Judicial Statistics Presented, Feb. 14, 51, 89.

Kyle, Conveyance of Fish to, from Western Highlands, Facilities for.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 27, 1322.

Lords of Session, Table of Precedence for
Q. Mr. Caldwell; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 20, 606.

Mail Service, see under Post Office.

Motors, Heavy, Order Presented, Feb. 15, 173.

Railways, see that title.

Secretary for, Company Directorships held by.
Qs. Mr. S. MacNeill; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 16, 328, 329.

Sheriff Court Procedure—Committee Report Presented, Feb. 14, 49, 90.

Trawling, see that title; also names of places.
Universities, see names of cities, as Aberdeen.

Seaham Gas Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 576.

Seamen's and Soldiers' False Characters Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 16, 285.
2R.* Feb. 21, 724.
Com. and Rep., Feb. 23, 1019.
3R.* Feb. 24, 1208.

Secondary and Technical Education
see under Education.

Secretary of State for the Colonies
Right Hon. A. Lyttelton.

Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs
Marquess of Lansdowne.

Secretary of State for the Home Department
Right Hon. A. Akers Douglas.

Secretary of State for India
Right Hon. W. St. John Brodrick.

Secretary (Chief) for Ireland
Right Hon. G. Wyndham.

Secretary for Scotland
Marquess of Linlithgow.

Secretary of State for War
Right Hon. H. O. Arnold-Forster.

Seely, Major J. E. B. [Isle of Wight]
- Army.
  - Artillery—Quick-firing Guns, Delay in provision of, Feb. 22, 920.
  - Continuous changes of policy as to, Disastrous effect of, Feb. 22, 919.
  - Recruiting, Conditions of, Class of recruit, etc., Feb. 22, 921.
- Fiscal Policy, Proposed changes in, Feb. 15, 246–248.
- King's Speech, Address in Answer, Feb. 15, 246–248; Feb. 17, 520–522, 531, 532; Feb. 22, 919–924; Feb. 23, 1130, 1131.
- Lightships, Installation of Wireless Telegraph Apparatus on, Feb. 16, 300.
- Transvaal—Importation of, Chinese Labour Feb. 17, 520–522.
  - Limitation of number to be imported Feb. 23, 1093.
- Volunteers—Decrease in numbers, Feb. 22 919, 922–924.

Selborne, Earl of—First Lord of the Admiralty
- Army Reorganisation Proposals, Feb. 21, 751.
- Militia, Foreign Service for, Feb. 21, 751.

Select Vestries Bill
- l. 1R.* Feb. 14, 5.

Senegal
- Trade Report, presented, Feb. 14, 41.

Service of Militiamen Bill
- l. 1R.* Feb. 21, 752.
- Notice of Motion [Earl of Wemyss] Feb. 23, 1018.

Seton-Karr, Sir H. [St. Helens]
- Army Rifles, New Pattern, Merits and Demerits of, Feb. 22, 953–956.

Seychelles
- Educational System—Report presented, Feb. 14, 47, 88.
- Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 43, 90,

Shackleton, Mr. D. J. [Lancashire, Clitheroe]
- Linen Factories, Overtime in—Reason for issuing Special Order, Feb. 17, 470.
- Post Office Wages—Bradford Committee's Non-compliance with terms of Reference, alleged, Feb. 28, 1456.
- Transvaal Labour.
  - Chinese—Information as to Riots, Feb. 23, 1093.
  - White, Discharged from Mines, Feb. 23, 1093.

Shaw, Mr. T. [Hawick Burghs]
- Fiscal Policy, Proposed Changes in, Feb. 16, 395–401.
- Unionist Party, Continuance of, in Office, Feb. 16, 401.

Sheehy, Mr. D. [Meath, South]
- Education [Ireland]—Grants for Technical Instruction, Feb.27, 1307.
- Kildalky Constabulary Force, Dispersion of, Feb. 27, 1305.
- Killadysert Union Accounts, Surcharge on Feb. 27, 1333.
- Singleton Estate, Sale of—Claim of Owen Kirk, Feb. 27, 1331.

Sheep
- Dipping and Treatment of—Report, etc., Presented, Feb. 14, 42, 89.
- Disease in County Wicklow, Investigation of.
  - Q. Mr. J. O'Connor; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 16, 321.

Sheffield University Bill
- l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.

Shepton Mallet Gas Company (Electric Lighting) Bill
- l. 1R.* Feb. 20, 541.

Sheriff Court
- see under Scotland

Shipowners' Negligence Remedies Bill
- c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 472.

Shipping
- see Merchant Shipping.

Shipping and Seamen's Act, 1903
- New Zealand—Delay in Royal Assent, Feb. 27, 1298.

Shropshire and Worcestershire Electric Power Bill
- c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 577.

Siam
- Convention between United Kingdom and France, Presented, Feb. 28, 1448.
- Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Sierra Leone
- Railways—Correspondence Presented, Feb. 14, 45, 91.
- Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 42, 90,
- Rubber, Report on, Presented, Feb. 14, 43, 90.

Sinclair, Mr. L. [Essex, Romford]
- Sugar—Working of Brussels Convention, Feb. 28, 1562–1564.

Singleton Estate
- Sale of—Claim of Owen Kirk.
  - Q. Mr. Sheehy; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1331.

Siskin
- Evicted Tenant, Reinstatement of.
  - Q. Mr. Reddy; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1330.

Sistan
Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 39.

Skegness Water Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 577.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1294.

Skye, Island of Naval Reserve Battery, Delay in Erection of.
Q. Mr. J. Dewar; A. Mr. Pretyman, Feb. 28, 1468.
Road between Portree and Staffin' Construction of, Payment for, etc.
Q. Mr. J. Dewar; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 23, 1104.

Slavery
Zanzibar and Pemba, see those titles.

Sligo
Constabulary, Reduction in.
Q. Mr. Lonsdale; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 608.
Land Purchase in—Refusal of Landowners to sell, alleged.
Q. Mr. O'Dowd; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 614.
Public Bodies Order, 1904, Opinion of Councils as to, etc.
Qs. Mr. O'Dowd, Mr. Farrell; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1326, 1327.

Sloan, Mr. T. H. [Belfast, South]
Administration of Ireland—Dunraven Devolution Scheme and Sir A. MacDonnell, etc., Feb. 20, 682–686.
Aliens, Influx of, into Ireland—Evidence before the Commission, Feb. 28, 1491, 1492.
Belfast.
Post Office.
Learners.
Application for transfer by, Feb. 24, 1210.
School attendance of, Feb. 20, 585.
Medical Officer, Duties of, Feb. 24, 1211.
Memorial from Employees, Preparation of, Feb. 20, 584.
Constabulary, Royal Irish—Belfast—Allocation of Work among Doctors, Feb. 20, 614, 615.
Criminal Appeal, Court of, Decision as to establishment of, Feb. 28, 1480.
Dublin Metropolitan Police—Chief Commissioner, Connection of, with University Education Scheme, Feb. 24, 1213.
Education.
National School Teachers.
Pension Fund, Administration of, Feb. 28, 1485, 1486.
Polling Clerks, Employment as, Feb. 16, 324.

Sloan, Mr. T. H. [Belfast, South]
Education—cont.
Needlework.
Directress, Salary and Duties of, Feb. 22, 887.
Instructress, Manual, etc., Method of testing Qualifications of, Feb. 22, 887.
Lunatics and Lunatic Asylums.
Army Pensioners, Maintenance of, Feb. 16, 327.
Holland, Nurse, Case of, Feb. 24, 1213.
Youghal Auxiliary Asylum, Information as to, Feb. 23, 1107, 1108.
MacDonnell, Sir A., Conditions of Appointment of, Feb. 23, 1110.
Poor Law Reform Commission—Date of presenting Report, Feb. 23, 1079.
Telephone Service — Trunk Telephone Charge, Reductions in, proposed, Feb. 28, 1455.
Westport, Assault by Clergyman at, alleged, Feb. 16, 324; Feb. 20, 615.

Small Dwellings (Acquisition) Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 22, 910.

Small Holders (Scotland) Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 27, 1346.

Small Holdings Bill.
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 476.

Small Holdings (No. 2) Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 23, 1112.

Smith, Mr. S. [Flintshire]
Aden-Bombay Mail Service, Conditions o Work in, Feb. 21, 761.

Smoke Nuisance
Foreign Laws as to—Reports Presented, Feb. 14, 54, 93.

Soames, Mr. A. W. [Norfolk, South]
Army Guns.
Fuse-setters, Automatic, Decision as to, Feb. 20, 593.
Mark I. Guns, Date of Issue of, Number of Batteries armed with, etc., Feb. 20, 593

Soares, Mr. E. [Devon, Barnstaple]
Education (England and Wales)—Grants, Period for Payment of, Feb. 23, 1075.

Society Islands
Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Solar Physics Committee
Work of—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 88.

Solicitor-General
Rt. Hon. Sir E. H. Carson.

Solicitor-General for Ireland
Mr. J. H. M. Campbell.

Solicitor-General for Scotland
Mr. E. T. Salvesen.

Solicitors' Certificate Duty
Amount received from.
Q. Mr. W. Thomson; A. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 27. 1303.

Somaliland Expedition
Despatches, etc., Presented, Feb. 14, 45; 88.
Expenditure on—Estimate Presented, Feb. 23, 1072.
Supplementary Estimates—Date of Presentation.
Q. Mr. Bayley; A. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 21, 774.

Somaliland Protectorate
Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 41.
Troops stationed in, &c.
Qs. Mr. Buchanan; As. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 27, 1298; Feb. 28, 1467, 1468.

Soudan.
Bahr-el-Ghazal, Establishment of Missions in.
Q. Mr. J. O'Kelly; A. Earl Percy, Feb. 27, 1297, 1298.

South African War.
Colonial Contribution towards cost of, see Transvaal—War Loan.
Lessons of.
O. Sir W. Foster, Feb. 22, 948, 949.
Military Convicts, Sentences on.
Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 21, 770, 771.
Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Mr. Speaker, Feb. 23, 1088–1090.
Coughlan, Private T., case of.
Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 28, 1449.
Unpreparedness of the British Army, Shortage in Men, Guns, etc.
O. Capt. Norton, Feb. 22, 913, 914.

South-Eastern and London, Chatham and Dover Railways Bill.
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 430.

South Lancashire Tramways Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 430.

South Metropolitan Gas Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 577.

South Oxfordshire Water and Gas Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 577.

South Suburban Gas Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 577.

South Wales Electrical Power Distribution Company Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 577.

Southampton and Winchester Great Western Junction Railway (Abandonment) Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 577.

Southend and Colchester Light Railways
Order Presented, Feb. 14, 50, 84.

Southend and Colchester Light Railways Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 430.

Southport, Birkdale, and West Lancashire Water Board Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 21, 721.

Spain
Mining, etc., Industries in 1903—Report presented, Feb. 14, 41.

Speaker
Adjournment of Debate, Motion for.
Discussion on, Practice precluding raising of, Feb. 27, 1342, 1343.
Member Moving, precluded from speaking again except by general consent of the House, Feb. 15, 274; Feb. 16, 330.
Closure of Debate, Discussion of, prior to Motion out of order, Feb. 21, 781.
Divisions — Home Rule Amendment Division, discrepancy in record of, Feb. 22, 909.
Documents quoted from by Minister, production of, Feb. 22, 905.
Imputation against Member, Language implying, Feb. 22, 906.
Interruptions to Debate, Feb. 21, 865.
Irrelevant Observations, Feb. 17, 512; Feb. 21, 846; Feb. 22, 970, 988, 1317.
MacDonell, Sir A., Conditions of Appointment of, as Under Secretary for Ireland—Motion for Adjournment of the House, Feb. 22, 910, 970, 971.
Personal matter introduced into Debate, Feb. 24, 1244.
Questions.
Additional Question larger than that on Paper, Feb. 23, 1096.
Answers to, Minister reading, Feb. 23, 1088.
Debate on, Feb. 22, 907.
Discussion on previous Debate not permissible, Feb. 28, 1472, 1473.
Important and urgent, asking after Question time, Feb. 27, 1344.
Irrelevant Observations, Feb. 16, 312, 317.
Notice to be given of, Feb. 23, 1087; Feb. 27, 1328.

Spear, Mr. J. W. [Devonshire, Tavistock]
Agricultural Ratings Act, Renewal of, Feb. 24, 1242.
Agriculture, State of, depopulation of rural districts, etc., Feb. 24, 1239–1242.
Butter Bill, re-introduction of, Feb. 24, 1241, 1242.
Malay States, Federated—Relations with British Government, Feb. 22, 889.

Spencer, Earl
Alien Immigration, alleged evil effects of, Feb. 14, 25.
Army.
Reform Proposals, Feb. 14, 24.
Rifle, new pattern, Feb. 23, 1061-1065.
Commerce and Industry, Ministry of, Proposed establishment of, Feb. 14, 26.
Committees, Chairman of—Resignation of Lord Morley and appointment of Lord Onslow, Feb. 16, 289.
Dunraven Devolution Scheme, Connection of Sir A. MacDonnell with, etc., Feb. 17, 463.
Electoral Areas, anomalies in arrangement of, Feb. 14, 26.
Fiscal Policy—Date of Appeal to the Country, Feb. 14, 27.
France — Arbitration treaty with Great Britain, ratification of, Feb. 14, 21.
Macedonian Reforms, Progress made with, Feb. 14, 20.
Morley, Earl of, Death of — Tribute to services as Chairman of Committees, etc., Feb. 27, 1276.
Navy Reform Proposals, Feb. 14, 24.
North Sea Incident, Feb. 14, 21.
Scotland, Free Church Property, Dispute as to administration of, Feb. 14, 23.
Tibet Expedition, Feb. 14, 22.
Transvaal, Representative Institutions for, Feb. 14, 21.
Unemployed, Question of, Feb. 14, 26.

Spencer, Rt. Hon. C. R. [Northants, Mid]
Green Park, London—Information as to New Pathway, Feb. 20, 604.
Home Rule Amendment Division, discrepancy in record of, Feb. 22, 909.

Stafford
Prison Visiting Committee, Draft Rules as to, Presented, Feb. 20, 542, 581; Feb. 21, 753.

Staleybridge
Parliamentary Election — New writ and new Member sworn, Feb. 14, 65.

Standing Orders
Chairman, Appointment of.
O. Mr. J. Ellis, Feb. 20, 621.
Committees, Appointment of, Feb. 20, 621; Feb. 24, 1206.

Stanhope, Earl of
Military Training for Youths, Necessity for Feb. 20, 554.

Stanley, Rt. Hon. Lord, Postmaster-General [Lancashire, Westhoughton]
Country Post Offices, Exhibition of notices of Volunteer Parades by, Feb. 22, 895.
Engineers, Promotion of, Feb. 28, 1456.
Ireland.
Belfast.
Learners.
Application for Transfer by, Feb. 24, 1211.
School Attendance of, Feb. 20, 585.
Medical Officer, duties of, Feb. 24, 1211.
Memorial from Employees, preparation of, Feb. 20, 585.
Dublin.
Learners, Pay of, Feb. 23, 1111.
Leave, Annual, Arrangements as to, Feb. 20, 620.
Irish Language, Knowledge of, by Postal Officials, Feb. 27, 1337.
Piltown Postal Arrangements, Improvement in, Feb. 27, 1336.
Mail Service.
Australian—Terms of new Contract, Feb. 28, 1479, 1480.
Ireland, North of—Additional Mail proposed, Feb. 20, 584.
Scotland—Delays at Portree, Feb. 22, 883.
Night Messengers in the Provinces, Increase in pay of, Feb. 27, 1319.
Postal Orders—Clerical Work on Irish Orders, Transfer of, to Dublin, proposed, Feb. 28, 1453.
Postmen.
Keane, E., Dismissal of, from Limerick, Feb. 22, 902.
Wages, see that subheading
Printing and Stationery Contracts—Employment of Irish Firms, Feb. 28, 1454.
Savings Bank.
Accounts, Irish, Transfer of, to Dublin, proposed, Feb. 28, 1453.
Balance Sheet, Date of Presenting, Feb. 16, 318.
Deposits, Amount of, Information as to Assets and Liabilities, &c., Feb. 16, 318.
Telegraph Service.
Ireland—Extension to Aghnacliffe, Feb. 27, 1336.
Postal Telegraph Clerks' Association, Official Dissuasion of Clerks from joining, alleged, Feb. 22, 884.
Soundy, Mr., Case of, Feb. 22, 896.

[cont.

Stanley, Rt. Hon. Lord—cont.
Telephone Service.
Ireland—Extension to Londonderry, Delay in, Feb. 28, 1454.
Trunk Telephone Charge, Reduction in, proposed, Feb. 28, 1455.
Wages.
Bradford Committee.
Correspondence of, Tabling, proposed, Feb. 16, 299.
Failure of, to comply with Terms of Reference, alleged, Feb. 28, 1456.
Withington Postmen, Decision as to, Feb. 20, 602.

Statistical Abstracts
British Empire (1889 to 1903), Presented, Feb. 20, 541, 582.

Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge) Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 477.

Stephenson, Sir H. F.
Black Rod, Gentleman Usher of—Appointment, Feb. 14, 1.

Stepney Borough Council (Superannuation) Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 21, 721.

Stevenson, Mr. F. S. [Suffolk, Eye]
Macedonia, State of, Progress of Reform Measures, etc., Feb. 27, 1347–1355.

Stewart, Sir M. J. McT. [Kirkcudbright]
Army—University Candidates for Commissions, Position of, Feb. 23, 1155.
Volunteers — Re-organisation Proposals, Feb. 23, 1154, 1155.

Stockport Corporation Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 578.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1294.

Strabane
Dispensary Doctor, Salary of.
Q. Mr. Hemphill; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 17, 471.
Rate Collector — Appointment of Mr. Torish.
Q. Mr. W. Moore; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 616, 617.

Strachey, Sir E. [Somerset, South]
Dogs Bill, Re-introduction of, Feb. 27, 1320.
Soldiers, Discharged, Disposal of Clothing for, Feb. 28, 1449.

Straits Settlements
Educational System—Report presented, Feb. 14, 47, 88.
Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 43, 90.

Street Betting Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 21, 723.
2R., Feb. 28, 1442.

Streets
Stoppages in, Prevention of—Sessional Order, Feb. 14, 64.
Traffic in London—Report of Committee, Date of presenting.
Q. Mr. Schwann; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas, Feb. 28, 1448, 1449.

Stretford
Polling district, Order altering, Presented, Feb. 14, 60, 97.

Stroyan, Mr. J. [Perthshire, West]
Transvaal, Representative Institutions for, Facilities for Discussion of—Notice of Motion, Feb. 27, 1339.

Sugar
Beet.
Cultivation, Effect of, on sugar cane industry.
O. Mr. Purvis, Feb. 15, 222.
Production, Information as to.
Q. Mr. Partington; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 28, 1460, 1461.
Bounties, Effect of, on the price of sugar.
Os. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 14, 157–159; Mr. D. MacIver, 216.
Brussels Convention.
Debate on Motion [Mr. Kearley], Feb. 27, 1396; Feb. 28, 1494.
Appeal under Article VII., Decision as to, etc., 1422, 1423.
Argentine Exports, Effect of Convention on, 1499, 1517, 1559.
Beet Sugar Crop, Deficit in, 1401, 1414, 1528, 1537, 1551, 1557, 1568, 1775 1576.
Bounties, Question of, 1396, 1435, 1440, 1512, 1514, 1521, 1525, 1532, 1533, 1536, 1545, 1552, 1553, 1559, 1560, 1563, 1564, 1565, 1567, 1570, 1579.
Cane sugar cultivation, 1402, 1417, 1436, 1501, 1502, 1520, 1544, 1562, 1569.
Combination against Great Britain, 1538, 1539, 1547.
Confectionery trade, Causes of depression in, 1578.
Consumpton of sugar, Increase in, on the Continent and diminution in, in Great Britain, 1409, 1416, 1499, 1507, 1508, 1517, 1538, 1557, 1566, 1577, 1580.
Continent, Price of sugar on, 1398, 1401, 1496, 1498, 1530, 1574, 1577.
Countervailing duties, Abandonment of principle of, 1539.
Dumping, Effect on, 1518.

[cont.

Sugar—cont.

Brussels Convention—cont.

Employment, Effect on, 1497, 1500, 1502, 1510, 1511, 1513, 1517, 1530, 1543, 1562, 1579.

Financial result of, 1565–1567.

Fluctuations in price stopped by, 1501, 1506, 1547, 1548, 1552, 1569, 1572.

Free trade argument, 1509, 1513, 1524, 1534, 1572.

Industries using sugar, Effect on, 1404, 1405, 1415, 1420, 1432, 1497, 1500, 1502, 1511, 1513, 1517, 1529, 1542, 1543, 1547, 1549, 1550, 1556, 1558, 1578.

Jam Industry, Condition of, 1549.

Java, Production of cane sugar in, 1403, 1404, 1417, 1503.

Originator of scheme, Mr. J. Chamberlain, alleged, 1407, 1424, 1495, 1510, 1511.

Permanent Commission.

British Representation on, 1538, 1546.

Decisions of, Appeals against, etc., 1539–1542, 1571.

Proceedings of, 1539, 1571.

Prices.

Effect on, 1543–1545, 1549–1551, 1556, 1557, 1559, 1566–1569, 1573, 1574–1578, 1579, 1580.

Rise in, Causes of, 1397, 1399, 1407, 1413, 1426, 1431, 1496-1500, 1503, 1505–1510, 1513-1517, 1522, 1526–1530, 1534–1539

Raw Material, Effect on, 1500, 1509.

Refineries, Business done by, before and since the Convention, 1405, 1549, 1561, 1562.

Retaliation, Convention a model of, alleged, 1411, 1412, 1437, 1519, 1524, 1554.

Russian Sugar, Exclusion of, from British Markets, 1402, 1406, 1407, 1437, 1438, 1499, 1504, 1512, 1517, 1522, 1541, 1542, 1559, 1574.

Switzerland, Price of sugar in, 1523, 1524, 1533, 1549.

Tax on sugar, Necessity for, and Arguments against, 1415, 1419, 1425, 1501, 1553.

West Indies, Condition of, Effect of Convention on, 1402, 1410, 1427, 1428, 1503, 1504, 1514, 1519, 1520, 1521, 1553–1555, 1557, 1558, 1563, 1570, 1580.

Sugar—cont.

Brussels Convention—cont.

Appeal under Article VII., Information as to.
Q. Mr. Lough; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 16, 309.

Cuban Sugar, decision as to.
Qs. Mr. Lough; As. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 16, 313, 314.

Dominican Sugar, Decision as to.
Qs. Mr. Lough, Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman; As. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 16, 312, 313.

Findings and Reports Presented, Feb. 14, 54, 93.

Hayti, Decision as to.
Qs. Mr. Lough; As. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 16, 312, 313.

Operation of.
Qs. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Feb. 14, 131–133; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 156–159.

Prohibitition of Importation, Regulation as to, &c.
Qs. Mr. G. Bowles, Mr. Lough; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 16, 311, 312.

Russian Sugar, Removal of prohibition against, proposed.
Qs. Mr. Lough; As. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 16, 309, 310.

Cane, Production of, Information as to
Q. Mr. Partington; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 28, 1460, 1461.

Imports in 1904—Information as to.
Q. Mr. G. Bowles; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 28, 1460.

Price of, in Great Britain, Argentina, and on the Continent.
Q. Mr. G. Bowles; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 28, 1459.

Russian Exports of, see under Russia.

Sunday Closing (Shops) Bill
l. 1R.* Feb 20, 542.

Sunday Closing (Wales) Act (1881) Amendment Bill
c. 1R.* Feb 17, 479.

Sunderland and South Shields Water Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 578.

Superannuation
see under Civil Service.

Supreme Court of Judicature
see under Law Courts—Judicature.

Sussex
(North Western or Horsham Division), Parliamentary election—New Writ and New Member sworn, Feb. 14, 65.

Swansea Corporation Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 578.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1294.

Sweden and Norway
Arbitration Treaty with Great Britain.
Presented, Feb. 14, 44, 91.
References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 3.
International Copyright Convention, Accession of Sweden to, Feb. 14, 45, 63, 92, 100.

Swine Fever
England, Number of cases in—Revocation of Order as to Irish Swine, proposed.
Qs. Mr. Delany ; A. Mr. A. Fellowes, Feb. 20, 585, 586.
Ireland—Refusal of Dr. Gibbon to slaughter herd.
Q. Mr. Ffrench ; A. Mr. Atkinson, Feb. 28, 1466, 1467.

Switzerland
Arbitration Treaty with Great Britain
Presented, Feb. 14, 45, 91.
References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 3.
Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 41.

Synan's Estate
Sale of.
Q. Mr. Lundon ; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 23, 1106.

Tangier
Trade Report Presented, Feb. 14, 41.

Taxation
Collection of Taxes—Amount charged and collected, &c.—Return ordered, Feb. 28, 1447.
Ireland—Assimilation with procedure in Great Britain, proposed.
Q. Mr. Field ; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 23, 1079.
Local—Re-arrangement of basis of, proposed.
Os. Mr. Spear, Feb. 24, 1241.

Taylor, Mr. A. [Liverpool, E. Toxteth]
Fiscal Policy, Proposed changes in, Feb. 16, 382.
Ritualistic Practices, Commission on—Date of publication of Report, Feb. 21, 780.
Roman Catholic University for Ireland, Attitude of the Government towards, Feb. 27, 1328.
Unionist Party, Continuance of, in Office, Feb. 16, 382–385.

Tea Industry
Caucasus, Cultivation in—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 41.
Condition of.
Os. Mr. Lough, Feb. 15, 224, 225.
Indian and Cingalese Tea, Russian duty on.
Q. Mr. E. Wason ; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 20, 601.
Q. Mr. Partington ; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 24, 1211, 1212.

Tees Valley Water Board Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 21, 721.

Telegraph Service
Accounts Presented, Feb. 14, 103.
Return ordered, Feb. 15, 176.
Aghnacliffe, Extension to,
Qs. Mr. Farrell ; As. Lord Stanley, Feb. 27, 1336.
Postal Telegraph Clerks' Association, Official dissuasion of Clerks from joining, alleged.
Q. Mr. Bell ; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 22, 884.
Soundy, Mr., Case of.
Q. Capt. Norton ; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 22, 895, 896.

Telephone Service
Belfast to Londonderry extension, Delay in,
Q. Mr. O'Doherty ; A. Lord Stanley, Feb 28, 1454.
National Telephone Company, see that title.
Trunk Telephone Charge, Reduction in, proposed.
Q. Mr. Sloan ; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 28, 1455.

Thames Conservancy Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 578.

Thompson, Dr. E. C., [Monaghan, North]
Administration of Ireland, Commission of Inquiry into, proposed, Feb. 27, 1297.
Army Officers transfered to Militia, Mess subscriptions of, Feb. 23, 1083.

Thomson, Mr. F. W. [York, W.R., Skipton]
Solicitors' Certificate Duty, Amount received from, Feb. 27, 1303.

Thorburn, Sir. W. [Peebles and Selkirk]
Agricultural Rating Bill—Date of introduction, Feb. 28, 1458.
Sugar—Working of Brussels Convention, Effect on prices, etc., Feb. 28, 1511–1516.

Tibet Expedition
Agreement, Provisions of.
References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 3.
Chinese Convention of adhesion to.
References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 3.
Os. Earl Spencer, Feb. 14, 23.
Expenditure on.
Qs. Mr. Bryce, Mr. Buchanan ; As. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 16, 306, 307.
Imperial Exchequer Contribution proposed.
Q. Mr. Weir ; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 17, 469.

[cont.

Tibet Expedition—cont.
Lhassa, advance to.
Os. Lord Oranmore & Browne, Feb. 14, 12; Mr. Mount, 112.
Papers Presented, Feb. 14, 46, 83.
Policy of the Government.
Os. Earl Spencer, Feb. 14, 22, 23; Marquess of Lansdowne, 32–34; Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, 134; Mr. G. Bowles, 149; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 154.
Younghusband, Col. Sir. F.
Conduct of Mission by, Tributes to.
Os. Lord Oranmore & Browne, Feb. 14, 13; Earl Spencer, 22; Marquess of Lansdowne, 34.
Government Instructions exceeded by.
Os. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Feb. 14, 134; Mr. G. Bowles, 149.

Tickhill Light Railway (Extension of Time).
Order Presented, Feb. 14, 50, 84.

Tidal Waters
Bills, &c., relating to—Report on, ordered, Feb. 23, 1072; Presented, Feb. 24, 1209.

Tilak, Mr., Case of Report of Mr. Brewin, Tabling, proposed.
Q. Mr. Schwann; A. Mr. Brodrick, Feb. 16, 301.

Tinahely
Dispensary District—Inquiry into Charges against Dr. Bolster.
Q. Mr. J. O'Connor; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 20, 608.

Tipperary, North
Constabulary, Extra, Charges for, etc.
Q. Mr. P. J. O'Brien; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1308, 1309.
Public Bodies Order, 1904, Correspondence with Local Government Board as to.
Q. Mr. P. J. O'Brien; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 27, 1308.

Tobacco
Children, Sale of Cigarettes, etc., to—Legislation proposed.
Q. Dr. Macnamara; A. Mr. A. Douglas, Feb. 21, 775.

Tobago
Report, Annual, Presented, Feb. 14, 43, 90.

Tollemache, Lord
Sat first, after the death of his grandfather, Feb. 16, 277.

Tomkinson, Mr. J. [Cheshire, Crewe]
Agriculture, Condition of, Rural Depopulation, etc., Feb. 24, 1255–1259.
Animals, Experiments on—Supply of Cats—Brockwell Hall case, etc., Feb. 23, 1073.
Fiscal Policy, Proposed changes in, Feb. 16, 388–392,
Unionist Party, Mandate given to, in 1900, Feb. 16, 392.

Tomlinson, Sir W. E. M. [Preston]
Adjournment of debate, Motion for, by Mr. E. Gray, Feb. 15, 274.

Torpoint Urban District Water Bill.
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 21, 721.

Town Tenants (Ireland) Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 473.

Trade, Board of President—Rt. Hon. G. W. Balfour.
Secretary—Mr. A. B. Law.
Status of, Improvement in.
References to, in the King's Speech Feb. 14, 5.
Os. Marquess of Winchester, Feb. 14, 11; Lord Oranmore and Browne, 18.

Trade and Commerce
Accounts—Copy ordered, Feb. 15, 176; Presented, Feb. 16, 296.
British and Foreign—Statistical Tables etc., Presented, Feb. 14, 52, 85.

Trade Reports
Annual Series, Presented, Feb. 14, 39, 93; Feb. 17, 431; Feb. 20, 581.
Miscellaneous Series, Presented, Feb. 14, 41, 93.

Trade Unions
Death Certificates, Charge for.
Q. Col. Sadler; A. Mr. W. Long, Feb 28, 1458.
Report of Registrar Presented, Feb. 17 431, 469.
Status of, Failure of Government to deal with.
O. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Feb. 14, 138.

Trade Unions and Trade Disputes Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 473.

Tralee Urban District Council Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 21, 722.

Tramways
Bills, etc., relating to—Report on, ordered, Feb. 23, 1072; Presented Feb. 24, 1209.

Tramways and Public Companies (Ireland) Act (1883) Amendment Bill
- c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 622.

Trans-Caucasus
- Agriculture in 1904, Report Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Transvaal
- British Indians in, Position of, etc.—Correspondence Presented, Feb. 14, 42, 90.
- Chinese Labour in Mines.
  - Debates [Commons] Feb. 17, 481; [Lords] Feb. 27, 1277.
    - Ability of the Chinaman to look after his own interests, 515.
    - Colonial opinion on, 488–490, 522.
      - Australia, in, 488, 489. 504.
      - Boer, 487, 506, 532.
      - Canada, in, 504.
      - Cape Colony, in, 489.
      - New Zealand, in, 489.
      - Transvaal, in, 486, 487, 499, 500, 521, 522, 533.
        - British working class, Resolution passed by, 487.
        - Meeting in Johannesburg broken up by hired ruffians, alleged, 488.
        - Pledge given by the ex-Colonial Secretary as to, 520, 521, 531, 532.
        - Quin, Mr., Statement by, 519, 533.
    - Compounds.
      - Number of White Labourers employed in erection of, 1277, 1278, 1281, 1289, 1290.
      - System of, Objections to, 491, 506, 514.
    - Conditions of labour, Accommodation provided, etc., 505, 506, 508, 514.
    - Economic aspect of the question, 509.
    - Good qualities of the Chinese, 526, 527.
    - Machinery, Increased orders for, as a result of the importation, 517.
    - Mining Industry, Condition of, Methods of mine owners, etc., 510.
    - Misrepresentations by Liberal Party, alleged, 534–536.
    - Moral and social aspects of the question, 482, 493, 505, 526, 527, 533.

Transvaal—cont.
- Chinese Labour in Mines—cont.
  - Debates—cont.
    - Natives.
      - Death-rate, Decrease in, 498, 501, 503, 530.
      - Position of, since introduction of Chinese, 528, 533.
    - Shortage in supply of, 513.
    - Necessity for the importation, alleged, 513, 514, 522, 523.
    - Ordinance.
      - Enforcement of terms of, Machinery for, 1285, 1286, 1290, 1291.
      - Explaining conditions of, to labourer prior to embarkation, 516.
      - Penalty for evasion of, 529, 1280, 1284.
      - West Indian Coolie Ordinances, Comparison with terms of, 491, 523.
    - Overseers, Appointment of Chinese as, 485, 529, 1279, 1287, 1292.
    - Pledges given by the Colonial Secretary, Non-fulfilment of, alleged, 481–486, 492, 506, 507, 520, 521, 531, 532.
    - Profits made by Mine-owners since importation of Chinese, 497.
    - Prosperity of South Africa dependent on Prosperity of the Rand, alleged, 517, 519.
    - Race question, Complication of, 509.
    - Recruitment, Conditions of—Rev. Arnold Forster, Statements made by, 483, 525, 533.
    - Results of the experiment, 500, 516-518, 520.
    - Riots, and conflicts between Kaffirs and Chinese, 491, 503, 504.
    - Rock - drilling, Supersession of white labour in, alleged, 1277, 1278, 1284, 1286, 1291.
    - Slavery, Allegations as to, 508.
    - Unskilled labour, Restriction to.
      - Penalty for evasion of Ordinance, 529.
      - Pledges given by the Government, Non-fulfilment of, 484, 485, 528.
      - Rock-drilling, Supersession of white labour in, alleged, 1277, 1278, 1284, 1286, 1291.
    - Wages, Rate of, 515, 528.
      - Pledges given by the Government, non-fulfilment of, 484.

[cont.

Transvaal—cont,

Chinese Labour in Mines—cont.

Debates—cont.

White Labour.

Displacement of, as a result of the introduction of the Chinese, 495-497, 501, 1279, 1282, 1287.

Increase in employment of, as a result of the importation alleged, 485, 493, 509, 516, 517, 529, 530, 533, 1278, 1279, 1282, 1283, 1288-1290.

Albu, Mr., statements by, 496, 518

Refusal of whites to work under equal conditions with blacks, 494, 495, 513, 514.

Trade Unions, fear of, on the part of the Mine-owners, 496, 511.

Wives and children, facilities for importation of, 482, 483, 515, 524.

Information as to, not brought to notice of the Chinese, alleged, 483, 525, 526.

Pledges given by the Government, non-fulfilment of, 481, 482, 492, 493, 524.

Compounds.

Number of white men employed on erection and preparation of—Return.

Os. Lord Monkswell, Feb. 27, 1277, 1278; Duke of Marlborough, 1281; Marquess of Ripon, 1289, 1290.

Kaffirs, disturbances with, enforcement of provisions of ordinance as to communications with outsiders, etc.

Q. Sir B. Gurdon; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 24, 1215.

Number to be imported.

Os. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Feb. 14, 136; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 155, 156.

Limitation of.

Qs. Dr. Macnamara, Major Seely; As. Mr Lyttelton, Feb. 23, 1092, 1093.

Number of labourers, death rate, number in hospital, &c.

Q. Mr. Bayley; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb 21, 771.

Punishments inflicted by Courts.

Q. Mr. H. Samuel; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 16, 303.

Q. Mr. Whitley; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 20, 596.

Q. Mr. H. Samuel; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 23, 1084, 1085.

Transvaal—cont.

Chinese Labour in Mines—cont.

Results of experiment.

Os. Marquess of Lansdowne, Feb. 14, 32; Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, 136; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 155, 156.

Riots, particulars as to.

Q. Mr. Shackleton; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 23, 1093, 1094.

Venereal diseases, number of Coolies treated for.

Q. Mr. Bell; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 16. 306.

Wages, rate of, &c.

Q. Mr. H. Samuel; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 16, 305.

Garrison in, Cost of.

Q. Mr. Whitley; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 20, 595.

Labour Question.

Chinese Labour, see that subheading.

Native Labour—Death rate.

Q. Mr. Bayley; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 21, 771.

Statistics as to.

Q. Dr. Macnamara; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 21, 772.

White Labour employed in mines.

Q. Mr. S. Buxton; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 24, 1215.

Discharges from mines, number of.

Qs. Mr. Shackleton, Mr Bayley; As. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 23, 1093.

Proportion employed.

Q. Mr. H. Samuel; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 16, 302.

Qs. Mr. H. Samuel, Mr. Bell; As. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 16. 305, 306.

Witwatersrand, Information as to,

Q. Mr. H. Samuel; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 20, 596

Loan, Repayment of

see also subheading War Loan.

Qs. Mr. G. Bowles, Mr. McCrae; As. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 16, 315-316.

Application of sum repaid.

Q. Mr. McCrea; A. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 20, 600.

Mines

Commissioner, Appointment of

Q. Dr. Macnamara; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 21, 771, 772

Labour in, see subheadings Chinese Labour and Labour Question

Profit tax, receipts from, &c.

Qs. Mr. Whitley, Mr. Rose; As. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 28, 1473

[cont.

Transvaal—cont.
Representative Institutions for
Os. Mr. S. Roberts, Feb. 14, 115; Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, 135; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 155.
Barbados, Constitution of
Q. Master of Elibank; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 27, 1299
Representative Institutions for—cont.
Introduction, Method of, opportunity for discussing, &c.
Q. Mr. Buchanan; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb, 21, 772
Qs. Dr. Macnamara, Mr. S. MacNeill, Mr. S. Buxton, Mr. Bryce; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Mr. Speaker, Feb. 23, 1094–1096.
Qs. Dr. Macnamara, Sir. H. Campbell Bannerman, Mr. Bryce, Mr. S. MacNeill, Mr. S. Buxton; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 27, 1312–1314.
Stroyan, Mr., notice of motion by
Os. Mr. McNeill, Feb. 27. 1339, 1342; Mr. Stroyan, Dr. Macnamara, 1339; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 1340.
Papers, date of publication of
Q. Mr. J. Ellis; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 16. 303.
References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 3.
Os. Marquess of Winchester, Feb. 14, 7; Earl Spencer, 21; Marquess of Lansdowne, 32.
Revenue, Information as to
Q. Mr. Buchanan; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 20, 591.
War Loan.
Condition of granting.
Qs. Sir. A. Rollit, Mr. Whitley; As. Mr. Lyttelton, Mr. Speaker, Feb. 28, 1472, 1473.
First instalment, date of payment of
O. Sir. H. Campbell-Bannerman, Feb. 14, 136.
Qs. Mr. McCrae; Mr. G. Bowles; A. Mr. A. Chamberlain, Feb. 20, 601.
Qs. Mr. McCrae, Sir. A. Rollit, Mr. S. Buxton, Mr. G. Bowles, Mr. Bayley, As. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 22, 891, 892.
Qs. Mr. McCrae, Mr. Whitley; As. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 28, 1471.

Travers Foundation
see Chelsea Hospital.

Trawlers' Certificates Suspension Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 28, 1494.
Trawling, Illegal.
Moray Firth, in—legislation for closing ports of landing for fish, proposed.
Q. Mr. Crombie; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 20, 583.
Penalties for
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 21, 777.
North Sea.
Firing on trawlers by Russians, see under North Sea—British Trawlers.
Protection of Dogger Bank fleet during the passage of Russian third Baltic Fleet.
Q. Sir S. King; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb 22, 890.
Norwegian Trawlers fishing from Grimbsy with English Masters and Crews, right of, to fish in territorial waters.
Qs. Mr. Weir, Capt. Ellice; As. Mr. S. Dickson, Feb. 28, 1484, 1485.

Treasury Chest
Account and Report presented, Feb. 16, 297.

Trinidad
Report Annual, presented, Feb. 14, 43, 90.

Truro Water Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 430.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1274.

Turkey
Affairs of South-Eastern Europe—Correspondence presented, Feb. 14, 48, 93.
Asiatic Provinces—Correspondence presented, Feb. 14, 48, 93.
Import Duties, request for increase of—Application of Surplus, &c.,
Q. Mr. G. Bowles; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour, Feb. 27, 1337, 1338.
Macedonia, see that title.
Reform of, possibilities of—Opinion of Lord Stratford de Redcliffe,
O. Lord E. Fitzmaurice, Feb. 27, 1363, 1364.
Trade Reports presented, Feb. 14, 39, 40.

Tweedmouth, Lord
Army.
Reorganisation Proposals, Feb. 21, 748–751.
Rifle, new pattern, objections to, Feb. 23, 1019–1034, 1070.
Militia, Reorganisation of, Feb. 21, 748–751.

Tynemouth.
Motor Cars, Index marks for—Regulation presented. Feb. 16, 284, 298.

Tyneside Tramways and Tramroads Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 430.

Uganda

Belgian domination in, question of
Q. Mr. C. Wason; A. Earl Percy, Feb. 27, 1315.

Currency—Order in Council presented, Feb. 14, 62, 102.

Educatianal System—Report presented, Feb. 14, 47, 88.

Native population, Decline of, alleged.
Q. Mr. MacVeagh, A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 27, 1300.

Railway and Steamboat Service—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 51, 93.

Report General, Presented; Feb. 14, 51, 92.

Ullapool

Naval Reserve station, Progress made with establishment of.
Q. Mr. Weir; A. Mr. A. Lee, Feb. 20, 592.

Ulster and Connaught Light Railways Bill

c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 578.

Unemployed

Authorities to deal with question of, Establishment of.
Os. Marquess of Winchester, Feb. 14, 9; Earl Spencer, 26; Marquess of Lansdowne, 35; Mr. Mount, 113; Mr. S. Roberts, 117; Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, 138; Sir H. Vincent, 139.

References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 4.

Foreign Countries, Report as to Methods in—Presented, Feb. 14, 50, 85.

London Relief Fund, Exhaustion of—Provision for Additional Funds, &c.
Q. Mr. S. Buxton; A. Mr. W. Long, Feb. 22, 896.
Q. Dr. Macnamara; A. Mr. W. Long, Feb. 28, 1477.

South African War the cause of lack of Employment.
O. Mr. Bright, Feb. 16, 380, 381.

Urgency of the Question.
Os. Mr. E. Gray, Feb. 15, 276; Feb. 16, 333, 334.

Unionist Party

Continuance of, in Office, Alleged violation of the Constitution, etc.
Os. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Feb. 14, 123–126; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 159–163; Mr. Asquith, Feb. 15, 179–182; Mr. A. Chamberlain, 191, 192; Mr. E. Cecil, 232; Mr. J. Ellis, 255–257; Sir E. Grey, 266; Feb. 16, Mr. J. Chamberlain, 334–337; Lord H. Cecil, 351; Sir E. Durning - Lawrence, 363-366; Mr. S. Wortley, 377–380.

Unionist Party—cont.

Position of Members of the Party in their Constituencies.
Os. Lord H. Cecil, Feb 16, 356; Mr. Lucas, 387; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 416–419.

Record of Work done by.
O. Mr. J. Chamberlain, Feb. 16, 335.

Mandate given to, in 1900, exceeded, alleged.
Os. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, Feb. 14, 124; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 162, 163; Mr. S. Wortley, Feb 16, 377, 378; Mr. Tomkinson, 392.

Measures to be passed by, Urgency of.
Os. Mr. E. Gray, Feb. 15, 275, 276; Feb. 16, 333.

United States of America

For particular places see their names.

Aliens, Criminal — Number Sentenced, number Prohibited from Landing, &c.
Q. Mr. H. Samuel; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 22, 896, 897.

Army—Thrift among Soldiers, System of Encouraging.
Q. Sir H. Vincent; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 24, 1214, 1215.

Cuba, see that title.

Import Duties on British Goods.

Brandy, British, Import Duty on.
Qs. Sir E. Sassoon; As. Earl Percy, Feb. 16, 310.

Statement Presented, Feb. 14, 52, 85.

Railways of—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 41.

Rice Industry—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 41.

St. Louis Exhibition, see that title.

Sugar, Brussels Convention Decision as to.
Qs. Mr. Lough; As. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb. 16, 313, 314.

Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 40.

Universities

For particular Universities, see their names.

Irish Roman Catholic University Question, see Ireland — Roman Catholic University.

University College, London (Transfer) Bill

l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.

University Colleges

Reports Presented, Feb. 14, 47, 88.

Vaccination

Exemption Certificates Procedure in Granting.
Qs. Mr. Weir, Mr. G. Bowles; A. Mr. Akers Douglas, Feb. 23, 1100, 1101.

Valuation
Law relating to, Amendment of.
References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 5.
Os. Marquess of Winchester, Feb. 14, 11; Mr. Mount, 114.

Vehicles' Lights Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 474.

Venezuela
Claims Against—Hague Tribunal Award.
Q. Mr. Moon; A. Earl Percy, Feb. 24, 1210.

Vera Cruz (Mexico)
Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 39.

Victoria and Albert Museum
Report Presented, Feb. 14, 88.

Vincent, Col. Sir C. E. H. [Sheffield, Central]
Alien Immigration, Legislative proposals as to, Feb. 14, 139.
Army.
Pay—Statement available for Recruits, proposed, Feb. 22, 888.
Thrift among Soldiers, &c., Encouragement of—System adopted in United States, Feb. 24, 1214.
Government Manufactories, Decentralisation of, Feb. 27, 1338.
King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 14, 138-141; Feb. 22, 924-931.
Unemployed, Methods of dealing with, Feb. 14, 139.
Volunteers
Metropolitan Regiments, Strength of, etc., Feb. 20, 588.
Mounted Infantry Grant, Continuance of, Feb. 22, 887.
Treatment of, by the War Office, Future of the Force, etc., Feb. 22, 924-931.

Vivisection
see Animals—Experiments on.

Volunteers
Camp Allowances, Possibility of Increasing.
O. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1182.
Decrease in Numbers, Treatment of, by the War Office, etc.
Os. Major Seely, Feb. 22, 919, 922–924; Sir H. Vincent, 924–929; Mr. McCrae, 935; Mr. F. Wilson, 944, 945; Mr. Guest, 958; Mr. E. Wason, Feb. 23, 1164; Mr Arnold-Forster, 1180; Mr. W. Churchill, 1197.

Volunteers—cont.
Division of, into two classes, proposed.
Os. Mr. McCrae, Feb. 22, 933, 937; Mr. Wylie, 940; Major E. Gordon, 947; Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1181.
Efficiency, Classification as to.
Os. Col. Pilkington, Feb. 23, 1138; Mr. Peel, 1158.
Establishment, Reduction of, proposed.
Os. Mr. McCrae, Feb. 22, 933, 936, 937; Mr. Wylie, 940; Major E. Gordon, 947, 948; Col Williams, Feb 23, 1119; Col. Pilkington, 1138; Capt. Jessel, 1150; Sir M. Stewart, 1154; Mr. Peel, 1158; Mr. Llewellyn, 1161; Sir A. Rollit, 1165, 1166; Mr. Arnold-Forster, 1179, 1182.
Expenditure on, Proposed reduction in.
Os. Mr. McCrae, Feb. 22, 933, 934; Mr. Wylie, 939, 941, 942; Sir J. Colomb, Feb. 23, 1128.
Future of the Force, Decision as to.
Os. Sir H. Vincent, Feb. 22, 927-931; Sir J. Kennaway, 943; Col. Pilkington, 1136; Sir A. Rollit, 1165, 1166.
Grant to.
Abolition of, Decision as to.
Q. Mr. Fuller; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 28, 1470, 1471.
Increase in, proposed.
Os. Mr. Wylie, Feb. 22, 940, 942; Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1181.
Two Standards of Capitation Grants proposed.
Os. Sir M. Stewart, Feb. 23, 1154, 1155.
Home Defence.
Dependence of, on Volunteers.
O. Mr. McCrae, Feb. 22, 931, 932.
Utilising Volunteers for.
O. Earl of Donoughmore, Feb. 21, 745.
Metropolitan Regiments, Strength of, etc.
Q. Sir H. Vincent; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 20, 588–590.
Mounted Infantry—Continuance of Grant.
Q. Sir H. Vincent; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 22, 887, 888.
Norfolk Commission, Report and Recommendations of.
Os. Sir H. Vincent, Feb. 22, 926, 927, 930; Mr. Wylie, 938, 939.
Notices of Parades, etc., Exhibition of, at Country Post Offices.
Q. Mr. C. Allen; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 22, 895.
Reduction in Number and Increase in Efficiency.
O. Earl of Donoughmore, Feb. 21, 745.
Regulations of 1901, Terms of.
Os. Sir H. Vincent, Feb. 22, 925; Sir A. Rollit, Feb. 23, 1166.

[cont.

Volunteers—cont.
Regulations of 1901—cont.
Stringency of, Necessity for Elasticity of Treatment.
Os. Mr. McCrae, Feb. 22, 935, 936; Sir A. Rollit, Feb. 23, 1166; Mr. Arnold-Forster, 1180.
Shooting, Facilities for, Provision of Ranges, etc.
Os. Col. Pilkington, Feb. 23, 1137; Mr. Arnold-Forster, 1181.
Strength of.
Q. Capt. Ellice; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1091.
Transport Service, Necessity for.
O. Mr. McCrae, Feb. 22, 937.
Value of, as a Fighting Force and in time of War.
Os. Major Seely, Feb. 22, 922, 923; Sir H. Vincent, 925; Major E. Gordon, 946; Sir J. Colomb, Feb. 23, 1128, 1132; Mr. E. Wason, 1164; Sir A. Rollit, 1165; Mr. Arnold-Forster, 1178, 1183.

Voting Disqualification (Poor Law) Removal) Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 480.

Wages Boards Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 479.

Wakefield, Bishop of Introduced into House of Lords, Feb. 27, 1273.

Waldron, Mr. L. A. (Dublin, St. Stephen's Green)
Administration of Ireland, objections to present system, etc., Feb. 20, 632.

Walker and Wallsend Union Gas Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 579.

War Office
Secretary of State—Rt. Hon. H. O. Arnold-Forster
Under Secretary—Earl of Donoughmore.
Financial Secretary—Mr. W. B. Davenport.

War Office
Clerks, Compulsory retirement of.
Q. Sir T. Esmonde; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 20, 582, 583.
Re-organisation of.
Os. Mr. Peel, Feb. 23, 1157; Mr. O. Williams, 1168; Mr. Arnold-Forster, 1170, 1161.

Warner, Mr. T. C. T. [Stafford, Lichfield]
Army.
Artillery, delay in re-armament of, Feb. 22, 963.
Rifles, new pattern, objections to, Feb. 22, 963–4.
Militia Reform Proposals, Feb. 22, 961–962.

Wason, Mr. E. [Clackmannan and Kinross]
Army—Inoculation for Enteric—Results of experiment, Feb. 23, 1164.
Rosyth Naval Base, Expenditure on, Feb. 23, 1086.
Tea, Indian, Russian duty on, Feb. 20, 601.
Volunteers, decrease in number of, treatment by the War Office, etc., Feb. 23, 1164.

Wason, Mr J. C. [Orkney and Shetland]
Canadian Cattle—Removal of restrictions as to importation, proposed, Feb. 16, 320; Feb. 27, 1320.
Fiscal Policy, proposed changes in, Feb. 15, 229–232.
Fisheries – Motor power for fishing boats, result of, inquiry as to, Feb. 27, 1300.
Mail Service, Australian—Terms of new Contract, Feb. 28, 1480.
Motors.
Heavy Car Regulations, Feb. 20, 602; Feb. 28, 1478.
Traffic Regulations in Ayrshire, Feb. 20, 605.
New Zealand—Shipping and Seamen's Act, 1903, delay in Royal Assent to, Feb. 27, 1298.
Uganda, question of Belgian domination in, Feb. 27, 1315.

Water
Supply of, Report on Bills, etc., relating to, Ordered, Feb. 23, 1072; Presented, Feb. 24, 1209.

Weaver Navigation Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 21, 722.

Wei-hai-Wei
Naval base at, Expenditure on.
Q. Mr. Bright, A. Mr. Pretyman, Feb. 28 1452.

Weights and Measures
Metric System, see that title.

Weights and Measures Acts
Fees, Order in Council as to, Presented, Feb. 14, 63, 101.
Standard measure, new, Order in Council approving, Presented, Feb. 14, 63, 101.

Weir, Mr. J. G. [Ross and Cromarty]
Ceylon tea plantations, education of coolie children on, Feb. 28, 1474, 1475.
Congested Districts Act Amendment (Scotland) Bill, date of introduction of, Feb. 20, 605.
Crofters and Cottars—Inclusion of Leaseholders in Crofters Act—Resolution of Culloden Estate tenants, Feb. 20, 605.

[cont.

Weir, Mr. J. G.—cont.
- Deer Forests, Scotland—Names, Acreage, etc., Return as to, proposed, Feb. 20, 604.
- Education (Scotland).
  - Cookery and Household economy, etc. Instruction in, Feb. 22, 900.
  - Renfrew Landward School—Appointment of Pupil Teacher vetoed on ground of unsuccessful vaccination, Feb. 27, 1321.
  - Schools in Ross-shire, provision of pure water supply for, Feb. 28, 1484.
- Egypt.
  - British Garrison in, Maintenance of, Feb. 28, 1476.
  - Infant Mortality in, Feb. 23, 1098.
  - Pilgrims, treatment of at Suez, Feb. 21, 773.
    - Protection, etc., of, Feb. 22, 893.
- Fish, Railway Rates for Carriage of, Feb. 27, 1321.
- Fisheries.
  - Kyle, Conveyance of Fish to, from Western Highlands, facilities for, Feb. 27, 1322.
  - Lochbroom, provision of Motor Cars to facilitate transit of fish from, proposed, Feb. 27, 1323.
  - Moray Firth Fisheries, decline in—Report of Mansfield Commission, Tabling proposed, Feb. 20, 605.
- Highlands and Islands, Medical Officers for, Feb. 27, 1322.
- India.
  - Cancer in, Statistics as to, Feb. 21, 772.
  - Irrigation Schemes, information as to, Feb. 23, 1078.
  - Police, Commission on — date of Tabling Report, Feb. 16, 301.
  - Salt Tax, Reduction of, proposed, Feb. 23, 1077.
  - Secretary of State for—Placing Salary on Estimates, proposed, Feb. 17, 470.
- Lewis, Island of.
  - Sanitation, Inspection of, by Local Government Board, proposed, Feb. 27, 1321.
  - Skigersta Pier Works, Progress with, Feb. 23, 1103.
  - Social Condition, Report on—Adoption of recommendations, Feb. 23, 1103.
- Railways, Electrification of—Board of Trade Inspection, etc., Feb. 21, 776.
- Ross-shire Regiments, depôt for, at Dingwall, proposed, Feb. 23, 1091.
- Tibet Expedition, Cost of—Imperial Exchequer Contribution proposed, Feb. 17, 469.

Weir, Mr. J. G.—cont.
- Trawling.
  - Illegal, Penalties for, Feb. 21, 777.
  - Norwegian Trawlers with English Masters and Crews, right of, to fish in territorial waters, Feb. 28 1484.
- Ullapool Naval Base, Progress made with Establishment of, Feb. 20, 592.
- Vaccination Exemption Certificates, Procedure in granting, Feb. 23, 1100.

Welby, Lt. Col. A. C. E. [Taunton]
- Army Reform Proposals, Feb. 23, 1113–1116.

Wellingborough and District Tramroads and Electrcity Supply Bill
- l. 1R*. Feb. 20, 541.

Wemyss, Earl of
- Army Rifle, new pattern, Feb. 23, 1059–1061.
- Service of Militiamen Bill—Notice of Motion, Feb. 23, 1018.

West Cumberland Electric Tramways (Extension of Time) Bill
- l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 430.
  - 2R.* Feb. 27, 1274.

West Indies
- Coolie Ordinance, comparison of terms of, with those of Transvaal Ordinance.
  - Os. Mr. H. Samuel, Feb. 17, 491; Mr. Lyttelton, 523.
- Educational System—Report Presented, Feb. 14, 47, 88,
- Military and Naval Works, Expenditure on.
  - Q. Mr. Buchanan; A. Mr. V Cavendish, Feb. 21, 758.
- Military Establishment, Reductions in.
  - Q. Mr. Buchanan; A. Mr. Lyttelton, Feb. 23, 1073.
- Sugar Industry, Effect of Brussels Convention on, etc.
  - Os. Mr. Kearley, Feb. 27, 1402; Sir J. Dickson-Poynder, 1410; Mr. J. Chamberlain, 1427, 1428; Mr. Lawrence, Feb. 28, 1503, 1504; Sir W. Thorburn, 1514; Mr. Bryce, 1520; Mr. B. Law, 1521; Mr. Ashton, 1553–1555; Mr. Buxton, 1570; Mr. Runciman, 1580.

West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Bill
- l. 1R.* Feb. 20, 541.

Western Valleys (Monmouthshire) Water and Gas Bill
- l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 430.

Westhoughton
- Polling District, Order altering, Presented, Feb. 14, 60, 97.

Westmeath, Earl of
Dunraven Devolution Scheme, Connection of Sir A. MacDonnell with, etc., Feb. 17, 443.

Westmoreland
Parliamentary Elections—New Writ, Feb. 16, 329.

Westport
Assault by Clergyman at, alleged.
Qs. Mr. Sloan; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 16, 324; Feb 20, 615.

Wexford
Prison, Order as to closing, Presented, Feb. 14, 58, 95.

Weybridge and Walton-upon-Thames Electric Supply Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 579.

Wharves
see title Docks, Wharves and Quays.

Wheat
Bounty on, proposed.
O. Sir C. Rasch, Feb. 24, 1267.
Colonies producing, Effect on, of Preferential Tax.
Os. Mr. H. Craig, Feb. 16, 385–387.

Whitby Urban District Council Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 429.
2R.* Feb. 21, 722.

Whitechapel and Bow Railway Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 579.

Whitley, Mr. J. H. [Halifax]
Africa, South.
Garrison in, Cost of, Feb. 20, 595.
Intercolonial Council Railway Department, Alterations in, Feb. 22, 893.
Agriculture, State of, Evils of present land system, etc., Feb. 24, 1227–1230.
Bloemfontein, Fire in Military Stores at, Feb. 28, 1469.
Income Tax recovery—Decision in case of Messrs. Goerz & Co., Feb. 20, 597.
MacDonnell, Sir A., Appointment of, as Under-Secretary.
Documents quoted from by Minister, Production of, Feb. 22, 905.
Prime Minister's Letter to Chief Secretary, Tabling, proposed, Feb. 28, 1491.
Navy—Obsolete Battleships, Number of, and cost of repairs to—Return proposed, Feb. 21, 769,770.
Transvaal.
Chinese Labour—Punishments inflicted by Courts, Feb. 20, 596.
Mines—Receipts from Profit Tax, Feb. 28, 1473.
War Loan, Repayment of, Feb. 28, 1471–1473.

Whitmore, Mr. C. A. [Chelsea]
Duke of York's School—Disposal of Chelsea site, Feb. 17, 472.
Mall to Charing Cross—Plan, etc., of new roadway, Feb. 20, 582.

Wicklow, County
Sheep Disease, Investigation of.
Q. Mr. J. O'Connor; A. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 16, 321.

Widnes
Polling District, Order altering, Presented, Feb. 14, 60, 97.

Williams, Col. R. [Dorset, West]
Volunteers—Reduction in numbers, Objections to, Feb. 23, 1118, 1119.

Williams, Mr. A. O. [Merionethshire]
Army, Inefficiency of, Unsuitability to the needs of the Empire, Feb. 23, 1167, 1168.

Willoughby de Eresby, Lord
Agriculture, State of, Defects of present land system, etc., Feb. 24, 1230–1236.

Wills, Mr. A. W. [Dorset, North]
King's Speech—Address in answer, Feb. 16, 417.

Wilson, Mr. F. W. [Norfolk, Mid.]
Education—Attendance at Church, Regulation as to counting, Feb. 27, 1303.
Licensing Act, 1904—Increase of Compensation Allowance, proposed, Feb. 16, 299.
Volunteers—Reform proposals, Feb. 22, 944–945.

Wiltshire
Charities, Return as to, Presented, Feb. 20, 582.

Winchester, Marquess of Afghanistan and India, Relations between, Feb. 14, 8.
Alien Immigration, Legislative proposals as to, Feb. 14, 8
Balkan Peninsula, Condition of, Feb. 14, 7.
Russo-Japanese War.
Conduct and Progress of, Feb. 14, 6.
Contraband, Definition of, Feb. 14, 6.
Transvaal, Representative Institutions for, Feb. 14, 7.
Unemployed, Question of, Feb. 14, 9.
Workmen's Compensation Acts, Amendment of, Feb. 14, 10.

Wines
Imports—Return as to quantity and strength ordered, Feb. 27, 1296.

Wire Drawing
Night Work, Order as to, Presented, Feb. 22, 722, 753.

Wireless Telegraphs
Lightships, see under title Lights and Lighthouses.

Withington
Postmen, Pay of.
Q Mr. Schwann; A. Lord Stanley, Feb. 20, 601, 602.

Women's Enfranchisement Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 17, 475.

Woodbridge and Bawdsey Light Railway Order
Order Presented, Feb. 14, 49, 83.

Woods, Forests and Land Revenues
Abstract Accounts, &c., Presented, Feb. 24, 1209.

Woolwich Borough Council Bill
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 579.

Workhouses
Accounts, Simplification of—Carrying out recommendations of Committee
Q. Mr. Bright; A. Mr. W. Long, Feb. 27, 1319.

Working Classes
Compensation for Accidents, etc.
Acts, see Workmen's Compensation Acts.
Schemes, Report of Registrar Presented, Feb. 17, 431, 469.
Unemployed, see that title.

Workington Harbour and Dock Bill
l. 1R.* Feb. 17, 430.
2R.* Feb. 27, 1274.

Workmen's Compensation Acts
Amendment and Extension of.
Os. Mr. S. Roberts, Feb. 14, 118; Col. Pilkington, 147.
Amendment and Extension of.
References to, in the King's Speech, Feb. 14, 5.
Os. Marquess of Winchester, Feb. 14, 10.
Inquiry into, Evidence, etc, Presented, Feb. 14, 44, 82.
Proceedings under—Statistics Presented, Feb. 14, 44, 82.

Workshops
see title, Factories and Workshops.

Worsley-Taylor, Mr. H. W. [Lancaster, Blackpool]
Transvaal, Importation of Chinese labour to, Feb. 17, 513–520.

Wortley, Rt. Hon. C. B. S., Temporary Chairman of Committees [Sheffield, Hallam]
Unionist Party, Continuance of, in Office, Feb. 16, 377–380.

Wrexham Gas Bill.
c. 1R.* Feb. 20, 580.

Wrightson, Sir T. [St. Pancras, East]
Fiscal Policy, Proposed changes in, Feb. 15, 257.

Wylie, Mr. A. [Dumbartonshire]
Parliament—House of Commons Ventilation, Progress made with improvements in, Feb. 22, 883.
Volunteers—Reform Proposals, Feb. 22, 937–943.

Wyndham, Rt. Hon. G.—Chief Secretary for Ireland [Dover].
Achill Island, Distress in—Relief works proposed, Feb. 20. 588.
Administration of Ireland, Attack on, Feb. 20, 646–663.
Agricultural and Technical Instruction Department.
Schemes—Regulation as to Appointment of Instructors, Feb. 27, 1305.
Veterinary Branch Clerks, Position of, Feb. 21, 763.
Armagh County Evicted Tenants, Reinstatement of, Feb. 27, 1331.
Avondale Estate—Grazing Lands, Letting of, Feb. 16, 322.
Beetroot, Encouragement of Cultivation of Feb. 24, 1212.
Bourke, Isadore, Estate of—Distribution of Grazing Farms, Feb. 23, 1080.
Carrickfergus—Award as to Land acquired by Belfast Water Commissioners, Feb. 27, 1306.
Clanricarde Estate Evictions and Reinstatements, Feb. 27, 1326.
Coagh Nationalist Procession, Prevention of, Feb. 24, 1214.
Constabulary, Royal Irish.
Belfast—Doctors, allocation of work among, Feb. 20, 614, 615.
Extra Police, charges for, method of recovery, etc., Feb. 27, 1309.
Kildalkey Force, dispersion of, Feb. 27, 1305.
Reduction of, in King's County and Sligo, Feb. 20, 608.
Cork Lunatic Asylum District—Patients chargeable to local rates, Grievance as to, Feb. 21, 778, 779.
Delmege, Mr., Sale of Estate of, Feb. 23, 1105.
Dernageas Farm, Sale of, Feb. 23, 1109.
Dombsy Estate, Sale of, Feb. 27, 1325.
Drainage Schemes, Funds for, Feb. 27, 1334.
Drummeel Bog — Turbary rights of J. Archbold, Feb. 21, 779.

[cont.

Wyndham, Rt. Hon. G.—cont.
- Dublin.
  - Hackney Carriages.
    - Inspector, Appointment of, Feb. 20, 607.
    - Licence Duty.
      - Period for payment of, Feb. 16, 324.
      - Summer Licences, Refusal of, proposed, Feb. 20, 607.
    - Stands for, Location of, Feb. 16, 323.
    - Metropolitan Police—Chief Commissioner, Connection of, with University Education Scheme, Feb. 24, 1213.
  - Public Works Contracts, Painters employed on, Feb. 23, 1104, 1105.
- Edgeworthstown Loan Fund Society, Failure of—Relief to losers, &c., Feb. 23, 1107.
- Education.
  - Larkhill School, Provision for education of Roman Catholic children at, Feb. 27, 1325.
  - Legislative proposals as to, Feb. 23, 1079.
  - National School Teachers, Employment of as polling clerks, Feb. 16, 324.
  - Needlework.
    - Directress, Duties and Salary of, Feb. 22, 887.
    - Instructress, Manual, etc., method of testing qualifications of, Feb. 22, 887.
  - Technical Grants for, Feb. 27, 1307.
- Erne Estate, Sale of, Feb. 27, 1307.
- Evictions.
  - Drumheel Evicted farm, letting of, Feb. 20, 612.
  - Longford County reinstatement, Feb. 22, 901.
  - Reinstatements, Return as to, proposed, Feb. 22, 901.
- Ffrench Estate, Sale of, Feb. 27, 1330.
- Gloves, grazing farm at, condition of tenantry, etc., Feb. 27, 1326.
- Killadysert Union Accounts, surcharge on, Feb. 27, 1334.
- King's County seizures for rent, Police Assistance at, Feb. 27, 1331.
- King's Speech—Address in Answer, Feb. 20, 646-663, 665, 666, 708, 710; Feb. 22, 978-985.
- Kingston Estate, Sale of, Feb. 22, 902.
- Kinvarra Harbour Works, decision as to, Feb. 27, 1333.
- Labourers' Cottages, Allocation of Grant for, Feb. 23, 1106.

Wyndham, Rt. Hon. G.—cont.
- Land Commission.
  - Administration of Act of 1903—Instructions issued by Commissioners, Feb. 20, 609.
  - Fair Rent Appeals—Kingston Estate second term rents, Feb. 20, 613.
  - Report of Estates Commissioners, date of Presenting, Feb. 20, 607. 608.
- Land Purchase.
  - For particular Estates see subheadings Names of Estates.
  - Advances under Act of 1903, Feb. 27, 1333.
  - Compulsory Powers, proposed, Feb. 15, 177.
  - Future Tenants, Purchasing Powers of, Feb. 20, 609.
  - Labourers, Accommodation for, on Estates, Feb. 27, 1310.
  - Latnadronagh Crosserlough—Quarry Rights of Owen McCabe, Feb. 20, 612.
  - Sligo—Refusal of Landowners to Sell, alleged, Feb. 20, 614.
- Leitrim—Magistrates, etc.—Appointment of Mr. B. J. Youell, Feb. 21, 780.
- Lewis Estate, Ballinagar—Evictions and Reinstatements, Feb. 27, 1326.
- Lights Board, Administratian of, Reason for not lighting Rock Angus, etc., Feb. 21, 762.
- Limerick School, Report on Knitting in—Qualifications of Inspectress, etc., Feb. 27, 1332.
- Lislea National School Manager, appointment of, Feb. 16, 302; Feb. 27, 1306.
- Local Government Board.
  - County Council minutes supplied to, Feb. 20, 616.
  - Public Bodies Order (1904).
    - Necessity for, defects in previous Order, &c., Feb. 22, 885, 886.
    - Withdrawal of, proposed, Feb. 16, 322; Feb. 20, 614; Feb. 21, 764; Feb. 27, 1308.
  - Strabane, Rate Collector—Appointment of Mr. Torish, Feb. 20, 617.
- Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898—Rating of Occupier — Repeal of Sections of Act proposed, Feb. 20, 613.
- Lucan Estate, progress with Sale of, &c., Feb. 20, 587.
- Lunatics and Lunatic Asylums.
  - Holland, Nurse, Case of, Feb. 24, 1213.
  - Youghal Auxiliary Asylum, Information as to, Feb. 23, 1108, 1109.

[cont.

Wyndham, Rt. Hon. G.—cont.

MacDonnell, Sir A.

Censure of, by the Government, reasons for, Feb. 27, 1327, 1328.

Conditions of Appointment, qualifications for post, etc., Feb. 20, 648–652; Feb. 22, 907, 978–985; Feb. 23, 1110.

Correspondence with, production of, Feb. 22, 905.

Dunraven Devolution Scheme, Connection with, Feb. 16, 325, 326; Feb. 20, 610, 611.

Term of Office, Feb. 16, 325.

McGoohan, Daniel, Case of, Feb. 21, 779.

Marine Works, Allocation of Grants for, Feb. 24, 1213.

Mile Hill, Ballinrobe — Purchase of grazing lands, Feb. 27, 1307.

Mountmellick Bog, Sale of, Feb. 27, 1330.

Mullinalaghta—Case of Gillespie, Permission to carry firearms, &c., Feb. 23, 1107.

Newman Estate, Sale of, Feb. 21, 761.

Nolan-Farrell Estate—Distribution of grazing lands, Feb. 23. 1080, 1081.

Orpen Estate Proceedings — Arrests, Private inquiry by Magistrate, &c., Feb. 21, 778.

Poor Law.

Ballyhaunis Dispensary District, Maternity Nurse for, Feb. 23, 1081, 1082.

Galway, Poor Law collection in, New regulations for, Feb. 20, 615.

Mohill—Case of Dr. Pentland, Feb. 20, 613.

Reform Commission.

Report, Date of Presenting, Feb. 23, 1079; Feb. 27, 1304.

Tinahely District — Inquiry into charges against Dr. Bolster, Feb. 20, 608.

Wyndham, Rt. Hon. G.—cont.

Sheep Disease in County Wicklow, Investigation of, Feb. 16, 321.

Singleton Estate, Sale of—Claim of Owen Kirk, Feb. 27, 1331.

Siskin evicted tenant, Reinstatement of, Feb. 27, 1330.

Sligo—Public Bodies Order, 1904, Opinions of County Councils as to, Feb. 27, 1327.

Strabane Dispensary Doctor, Salary of, Feb. 17, 471.

Synan's Estate, Sale of, Feb. 23, 1106.

Taxation—Assimilation of Irish procedure with that of Great Britain, proposed, Feb. 23, 1079.

Westport, Assault by clergyman at, alleged, Feb. 16, 324; Feb. 20, 615.

Yeomanry

Ammunition Allowances, Question of. Q. Sir J. Kennaway; A. Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 28, 1467.

Reduction in Numbers of.
Os. Mr. C. Hobhouse, Mr. Arnold-Forster, Feb. 23, 1122.

Yerburgh, Mr. R. A. [Chester]

Agriculture, Condition of, Small Holdings Question, etc., Feb. 24, 1259–1262.

Youghal

Lunatic Asylum, Auxiliary, Information as to.
Qs. Mr. Sloan, Capt. Donelan; As. Mr. Wyndham, Feb. 23, 1107–1109.

Zanzibar

Slavery in — Correspondence Presented, Feb. 14, 51, 92.

Trade Report, Presented, Feb. 14, 39.